[Charts are not reproducible in the RECORD.]

In 1989, however, the picture is much different. As you can see, atomic defense now makes up 61 percent of the DOE budget, while civilian energy programs make up only 32 percent and general science makes up 7 percent. Essentially, $2.7 billion have been shifted from the Department's civilian energy programs to its military programs. DOE has become a military agency that also carries out a secondary civilian mission.

The 1990 budget continues this trend. As you can see in the third pie on the chart, atomic defense makes up 62 percent of the fiscal year 1990 DOE budget—or about $9 billion. Civilian energy programs, in contrast, make up only 30 percent of the budget—dropping from $4.9 billion in 1981 to a level of just $4.3 billion in fiscal year 1990.

Sadly, the ever dwindling portion of the DOE budget devoted to meeting our Nation's civilian energy needs is misdirected. The DOE budget fails to seriously confront the threat to our global competitiveness posed by our inefficient use of energy.

Today, Japan is twice as energy efficient as the United States—giving them a competitive edge in international markets. Our Government should have been following policies designed to take that edge away. Instead, over the past 8 years, we have abandoned energy conservation as the cornerstone of a sound and effective energy plan.

If you look at the second chart, you will get a clear picture of what has happened to the Federal commitment to conservation. Between 1981 and 1989, spending has fallen from $709 million to $315 million. The results of this 56 percent drop are beginning to show. In the decade following the 1973 OPEC embargo, we were able to reduce energy consumption per dollar of GNP by 21 percent. That success has stalled—efficiency has not increased since 1985 and reports suggest that consumption may even be on the increase. Instead of promoting R&D, commercialization and technology transfer—in short, instead of becoming as energy efficient as the rest of the industrialized world—we are moving in the opposite direction. Our energy policy over the past 8 years has been to ignore the oft-cited and obvious economic, environmental and energy benefits of efficiency. And, the Bush budget plan would cut back even more—dropping conservation funding to only $96 million—an 87-percent cut form 1981 levels.

This same chart also shows that DOE funding since 1981 for solar and other renewable energy sources has been synonymous with missed opportunities. We used to have a goal of achieving 20 percent of our energy needs from renewables in the next century. Rather than pursuing that goal, the past administration slashed support for renewables by 86 percent. While other countries were investing funds in solar cells and renewable technologies, we disinvested. Had DOE stayed the course the United States would be better poised for the combination punch we are being hit with—global warming and increased energy needs. Instead, we have fallen behind.

Energy efficiency and renewable technologies are not the only victims—even the development of our domestic fossil resources has suffered. As the chart shows, the administration's request for fossil energy R&D is 14-percent less than 1989 even with increased clean coal funding. Ironically, President Bush's request for an additional $385 million in clean coal funding for fiscal year 1990 far exceeds the combined funding for energy conservation and solar programs.

The two program areas which have not suffered over the past 8 years are nuclear fusion and fission. In fact, the nuclear fission program would increase under President Reagan's budget. This despite the recognition by Main Street and Wall Street that nuclear power is a bankrupt energy option.

At a time when there is widespread recognition that energy efficiency gives the biggest bang for the buck in reducing energy demand, solving environmental problems, and improving competitiveness—the administration's budget continues to pour money down the nuclear drain. By doing so, we are getting ready to repeat the mistakes of the past 8 years—which have left us without a viable energy policy.

The nuclearization of the civilian energy side of DOE has had disastrous consequences. So too has the increasing militarization of the overall agency. Because the majority of DOE funding is now spent on weapons I am going to concentrate today on the environmental catastrophe that the Department's nuclear weapons production programs have left in their wake.

DOE PRODUCTION FACILITIES

For more than 40 years the Department of Energy and its predecessor, the Atomic Energy Commission, have operated our Nation's nuclear weapons programs in great secrecy—churning out nuclear warheads and nuclear waste, shielded from outside scrutiny by the invocation of national security. If concerns were raised about potential health and safety risks posed by these operations, DOE said "don't worry, we're taking care of it." If questions were asked about the environmental hazards posed by the wastes left behind, DOE said "don't worry we'll take care of it."

But we now know that DOE was not taking care of things. Developing, testing, and producing nuclear weapons drove DOE priorities—health, safety, and the environment took and back seat. While DOE was telling us "don't worry, be happy" it was allowing our Nation's nuclear facilities to deteriorate and dumping millions of tons of radioactive and hazardous wastes into our environment. This is really the ultimate oxymoron—the ultimate contradiction in terms—the Department of Energy was slowly poisoning America in order to defend America.

While the media finally began to focus attention on the crisis at DOE last summer, the problems themselves are not new. DOE has known that its facilities have been polluting the environment and threatening health and safety for years, but it chose either to ignore or minimize these problems.

Two years ago, Dan Arthur, a whistleblower from DOE's Fernald plant, came to the Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Power—which I then chaired—to complain about the horrendous working conditions at the plant. He described a scene of working conditions straight out of Dickens—walking through uranium dust up to his ankles, discovering air filter bags which hadn't been changed for 30 years, finding the DOE orders which were supposed to guide the contractor in running the plant strewn about haphazardly on the floor of the plant's library. Dan Arthur was forced to resign his job as a quality assurance/quality control auditor because he refused to sign off on inadequate safety procedures for processing plutonium at the plant. After the subcommittee's hearing exposed conditions at Fernald Dan Arthur was offered his job and back pay.

After years of foot dragging, DOE has finally been goaded into action by persistent pressure from Congress, devastating findings by independent oversight panels, increasing pressure from Federal regulators, and a grassroots revolt by the States in which DOE facilities are located.

In a report released last December, DOE admitted that 37 of its 45 sites across the Nation require "remedial actions" to cleanup environmental contamination from releases of radioactive and hazardous substances. This involves cleanup the soil, subsurface water, or ground water and stabilizing or removing and treating bulk wastes. According a December 1988 report by DOE, this cleanup will cost $64 billion and take decades to complete.

DOE has estimated that the cost of bringing DOE existing weapons production facilities into compliance with Federal and State environmental, health and safety requirements so that we can continue producing more nuclear bombs into the 1990's century would require an additional $14.2 billion. The cost of decommissioning and decontaminating old production facilities we no longer intend to use and safely managing the wastes resulting from current production activities adds yet another $13.5 billion to the bill. All told, DOE says it will need nearly $92 billion for environmental, safety, and health programs.

An independent assessment by the General Accounting Office conducted last July indicated that the overall costs could be even higher. GAO estimated that the total cost of cleaning up wastes at DOE facilities and bringing the production complex up to proper health and safety standards would cost from $115 to $150 billion.

Let's just take a look for a moment at one of the key elements of that $92 billion—the $64 billion that both DOE and GAO agree will be required over the next two decades to fund the cleanup of existing radioactive and hazardous waste caused by the production of the nuclear weapons we already have.

Here is a table showing the total estimated cost to clean up the soil, the surface water, or the ground water at the 37 waste sites DOE has identified as being contaminated with radioactive wastes or hazardous wastes. This would include cleaning up some of the most contaminated sites: the Fernald plant in Ohio, Savannah River in Georgia, Rocky Flats in Colorado.

On the left you see a thin line representing the original Reagan administration request for these same programs in fiscal year 1990. Despite the urgent need to begin cleaning up these sites, only $315 million was requested for environmental restoration programs in the Reagan budget—that's less than 1 percent of the total amount DOE says is needed.

I wish that I could say that President Bush's revised DOE budget offered a kinder, gentler alternative that matches the President's campaign rhetoric about the environment.

Unfortunately it does not. If you look at the thin line in the middle of this chart you will see the Bush budget for environmental restoration—which provides a total of $415 million or just $86 million more than the Reagan budget and only $242 million more than the 1988 level.

On the current funding schedule, DOE estimates that it will take 5 to 10 years to start cleaning up its hazardous waste sites. DOE projects that funding for the cleanup will rise from the 1988 level of $160 million to $1 billion per year by 1995, to $2 billion per year by the year 2000, and then remain at that level until the cleanup is complete.

So, it took us 8 years to create this problem, and now the administration is proposing we take about 40 years to clean up the mess. This is not kinder or gentler, it is just slower and dirtier.

At the same time, the Bush budget calls for much larger increases in funding for modernizing the weapons production complex—a total of some $52 billions in spending over the fiscal year 1989 level during the next 20 years. Funding for modernizing the weapons complex is slated to rise from $842 million to $1.3 billion in the 1990 budget request—an increase of $471 million or 56 percent.

The Department is asking for a 237-percent increase in funding for development of two new production reactors whose total cost is estimated to be about $6.8 billion. In addition, DOE is also requesting $115 million—an increase of 300 percent over this year's level—for a $2 billion special isotope separation plant that uses lasers to extract plutonium from scrap. In testimony before the House Armed Services Committee yesterday, DOE witnesses identified SIS as a "time-critical and essential" project, despite the fact that former DOE Secretary John Herrington has publicly testified that "We're awash in plutonium. We have more plutonium than we need." If we are awash in plutonium, we should not be wasting billions of taxpayer dollars on SIS. We should be putting this money into cleaning up DOE wastes.

In "Building a Better America," the President states that:

> As President, I will insist that in the future Federal agencies meet or exceed environmental standards: The Government should live within the laws it imposes on others. The problem we have created is so large and so hugely expensive that we cannot expect to correct it overnight, but attack it we will, as rapidly as we can.

I agree with the President's statement, but when I look at the 1990 budget I see the same old "production first" mentality still holds sway at DOE. We have to change that mentality, and what I would suggest we do is freeze growth in the DOE budget for weapons research, development testing, and production and transfer the proposed increases over to the environmental restoration program. Let's take the President's "flexible freeze" approach to budgeting and reconcile it with his stated environmental principles.

This year's DOE budget requests a $712.5 million increase for nuclear weapons research, testing and weapons production and new production reactors. If funding for those programs were frozen at the 1989 level, we would free that money to accelerate waste cleanup at DOE sites without increasing the overall appropriation to DOE. If DOE says that it will need an average environmental restoration budget of between $1 and $2 billion a year to fund the cleanup, then let's start pushing that budget up to that target level; $401 million is clearly inadequate as a first step toward meeting the $64 billion total need, and if we are serious about cleaning up DOE's waste sites, we need to do more.

We face a difficult challenge in trying to clean up the accumulated problems resulting from years of allowing our Nation's nuclear facilities to deteriorate and failing to safety dispose of the wastes resulting from nuclear weapons production. Now we have reached a critical point. Unless we reorient the Department of Energy toward a new way of thinking about its responsibility by redirecting its budget priorities, the environmental and safety crisis cannot be solved.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

The environmental crisis of the DOE weapons facilities is just one of the enormous challenges facing us as we seek to protect the health and safety of our generation and of generations to come. In "Building a Better America," President Bush writes that:

> The protection of the environment and the conservation and wise management of our natural resources must have a high priority on our national agenda. But given sound research, innovative technology, hard work, sufficient public and private funds, and—most important of all—the necessary political will, we can achieve and maintain the environment that protects the public health and enhances the qualify of life for us all.

President Bush has already won high marks for such statements. After the past administration's failure to give even lip service to acid rain and other environmental threats, these statements really are welcome. But ultimately, President Bush's environmental grades will depend not on statements but on deeds. Whether he will truly be considered a proenvironment President will be determined by what he does rather than what he says.

"Building a Better America" recommends few changes in the environmental budget as presented by President Reagan. It does not restore any of the massive cuts proposed for EPA's sewer construction grants and State revolving loan fund under the Clean Water Act. The proposed funding level—$1.2 billion—is just half of the authorized level and less than two-thirds of current appropriations.

It is disappointing that President Bush failed to ask for increases in clean water program funding. But it is ironic that among the environmental victims of the proposed budget is Boston Harbor. Missing is $59 million which Congress authorized for the cleanup of this great port—of a harbor which then Vice President Bush visited in order to point out the need for cleanup action. As the budget debate proceeds, it is my hope that the new administration will be reborn in its commitment to improving the quality of our Nation's water—not only at Boston Harbor but around the country.

This will require not just additional resources under the Clean Water Act but solutions to an old problem—acid rain. I am heartened that the President is going to send Congress clean air, acid rain, and air toxics legislation. I am heartened that our President says that the time for study alone has passed, that the "action we take today * * * is an insurance policy against future disaster."

But I am disheartened by the lack of specifics on that legislation—the specific tonnage reductions and the timeline for those reductions. And, I am disheartened by the implication that this administration may prefer "least cost compliance strategies" instead of the most effective emissions reduction strategies possible. Again, the jury is out and won't give its verdict until the President's proposals are actually on the table.

These are just two of the major environmental challenges facing this administration. I have already discussed how President Bush has failed to increase energy efficiency and renewable energy funding at DOE—a decision which ignores the immediate and very real environmental benefits these energy sources provide. We will soon see whether this administration will set a new course in the implementation of the appliance and automobile efficiency standards. And we will see whether this administration steps into an international leadership role to deal with global warming and reduction of CFC's.

President Bush has encouraged us to believe that the laissez-faire environmental policies of the past will be discontinued. But so far, his budget recommendations suggest more of the same or, if the flexible freeze is invoked, even larger than anticipated cuts in domestic discretionary programs.

REGULATING FINANCIAL MARKETS

While I have been discussing the budget requirements on the energy and environmental fronts, similar impacts will be felt by a wide range of programs. One final budget area I'd like to mention briefly relates to our financial markets. Here, too, the Bush administration has presented worthy goals but not budgetary blueprint for meeting those goals. Modernizing our regulatory structure is as important as any governmental task we face in the 1990's. Yet the administration's flexible freeze plan would not only prevent the construction of such a framework, but would threaten a deep chill for the financial markets and the investing public.

The SEC has the primary responsibility for protecting shareholders and assuring public confidence in our markets. In the 1980's, the challenges confronting the Commission have grown exponentially: a 283-percent increase in sales on U.S. securities exchanges, a 76-percent increase in the number of registered broker-dealer firms; and a 145-percent increase in the number of National Association of Securities Dealers registered representatives. By contrast, SEC staff years devoted to overseeing the securities markets has actually decreased by 2 percent. And, under the flexible freeze, the SEC might receive only a 1- or 2-percent outlay increase—a level that won't even keep pace with inflation.

The effect on the Commission would be devastating. At a time when oversight of our finaicial markets demands far greater attention, the budget proposal would move in precisely the wrong direction. It would prevent the Commission from fulfilling its mandate of ensuring that our markets serve as a source for raising the capital necessary for long-term investment and economic growth.

CONCLUSION

We all agree with the President's goal of building a better America. But we cannot and will not meet that goal by refusing to make the investments necessary to protect our environment, provide safe and affordable energy, and promote fairness and trust in our financial markets. We are all ready to work with the President to make our country even better—but we cannot do so unless our deeds match our words.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARKEY. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding and taking time this afternoon to illuminate as well as he has some of the most critical technical issues of the budget. We heard a very nice speech in this very Chamber a couple of weeks ago by the President which seemed to me at the time it was a kind of good news, bad news. The good news was the speech. The bad news was in the budget.

Increasingly as we read that budget what we see is a very real disparity between the goals the President professes, which many of us agreed with and were glad to have him join us in being for, and the budgets which do not begin to help out.

He had a great deal of talk about the environment. The gentleman from Massachusetts in the well has been a student of the Department of Energy and nuclear matters for a long time, and my sense is that the kind of budgets they are talking about in terms of cleanup, and at the same time with their simultaneous resistance to any type of a negotiated nuclear test ban and an insistence on increasing weapons production at a fairly high level, we will be lucky to stay even in terms of environmental damage from these plants. That is, rather than cleaning up we may be reducing the amount of damage we are doing, but we are certainly not on the track to undo the enormous environmental damage that we have inflicted on ourselves.

Mr. MARKEY. If the gentleman will yield back to me, I would state that my deepest concern and fear is that rather than accepting responsibility for their gross mismanagement at the Department of Energy over the last 8 years of their nuclear weapons program and their civilian nuclear energy programs, and making themselves internally accountable, that they will look to other valuable programs in our economy, to education, to health care, and to long-term investment in other areas, job training, and other things that are also critical to our long-term economic competitiveness, and what they will do is rather than accepting accountability here is that they will ignore the mess which they have created, not want to pay for it, and to the extent to which they are forced to pay for it out of their own internal budgets at the Pentagon and at the Department of Energy they will look to raid other programs that were set aside for other purposes in our society.

My real concern is that at the rate at which they are planning to remedy the environmental disaster which they have created, right now we will have to wait 40 years. It will be the time that has transpired since the dawn of the nuclear age to today if they take from today and went out into the future that they expect to be able to cure these problems. I think that would be an inexcusable lapse of public responsibility for the Congress to be a partner.

Mr. FRANK. If the gentleman will yield further, I think it is important that we put this information out.

There are a couple of points the gentleman may have made, but I would not mind reemphasizing them. One is that they have clearly now been underestimating the cost of the weapons production. They have been sending up budgets talking about how much we were going to spend on the weapons. They were neglecting even the cleanup costs and the $64 billion the gentleman has on the chart at his right-hand side. Correctly that ought to be seen as an additional cost to weapons production, and as the gentleman said, how are they planning to deal with it in the future? The President came and told us we are going to cut Medicare by $5 billion. That is terrible news if you are old and sick, terrible news. He also tells us that he wants to cut $11 billion or $12 billion out of a bunch of programs, including child nutrition, education, important transportation programs. He does not want to specify.

On the one hand we have had people at the White House tell us Congress should not be inserting itself into the Presidential decisions, but when it comes to making tough budgetary decisions, they send us the un-budget. They do not want to choose, but at the same time, what the President has said is that starting after this fiscal year he wants to have the Pentagon budget grow by more than the inflation rate. So we will be cutting medical care, we will be cutting education, and we will be increasing military spending at a time when the Russians are cutting back, at a time when we are letting our allies get away with doing very little, and we are going to spend more and more and more.

I think the point the gentleman from Massachusetts makes is how are they planning ultimately to literally clean up their own mess, those who produce the weapons, and they are planning to do it by increasing weapons spending sufficiently so that they can take away from these important programs.

I think that as a result of these budgetary choices that President Bush glided over that George Bush, as a result of that speech, might be called the great noncommunicator, because the greatness from his standpoint of that speech is in what he did not communicate. It is in what he did not tell us. That is where the most important story lies.

Mr. MARKEY. I would add to the comments of the gentleman from Massachusetts that the mentality inside the Reagan administration for the last 8 years has been that nuclear weapons are in a special category and that the country as a whole should have absolutely no remorse about whatever the consequences are, budgetary, environmental, military, and that we ought to just go forward almost with blinders on deeper into this nuclear age.

This production-first mentality has resulted in all of the consequences which I have outlined here today.

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE FSLIC SCANDAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, the previous speakers, including my colleague from New York, Mr. SCHUMER, have discussed the budget process that is going forward, and I am quite grateful for what I have learned in just the few minutes which I have sat here to listen to their discussion of the budget. Those gentlemen are members of the Budget Committee. They understand the budget process very well.

I want to discuss an aspect of the budget also, just one area in the budget—maybe I should say one nonarea, after listening to Mr. SCHUMER discuss it. That is the savings and loan association scandal. What will be the impact of this scandal on the budget?

I call it a scandal because I do not know enough about it to dress it up. It seems to me that we have a major multibillion-dollar scandal on our hands, unlike anything that the Nation has ever seen. We are told from good sources that about one-third of the savings and loan associations are in trouble and will have to be bailed out. We are told that among that one-third about 80 percent are in the position they are in because of fraud. Whether it is fraud or incompetence, I am greatly troubled by the fact that the taxpayers of this Nation, one way or another, no matter how you finance it, whether you use REFCO, which takes it off the budget and we pay only the interest for a while, or use REFCO which might fail and we would have to pay the interest and the principal; whatever way it is handled, a large percentage of the money to bail out the savings and loan associations will have to come out of the pockets of innocent taxpayers.

Now I am not on the Committee on the Budget, nor on the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. I have questions. I am not going to use my full 60 minutes. I just want to use enough to pose some questions that I would like to see answered before Members of Congress, before this Member of Congress is asked to vote on a plan to bail out the defunct savings and loan associations. I think it is important because we are so organized in this House—we are overorganized sometimes—that I suspect, I am almost certain that when the plan to bail out savings and loan associations comes to the floor, we will not have any more than 1½ or 2 hours to discuss it. This Member not being on the Committee on Banking nor any other relevant committee will certainly not have a moment to discuss it, even, on the floor.

So I want my questions to go forth now. I would like the members of the Committee on Banking, all of the people related to this matter to, in the next few days and weeks between now and the time that I am requested to vote on the budget, answer some of these questions please.

The first question is a broad and general one: Are we dealing with a network of racketeering enterprises which developed in collusion with our own Government regulatory agency? That is what it looks like sometimes.

Are we asking the taxpayers to fill a vacuum that has been created by incompetents and crooks, scoundrels. The difference between a scoundrel and an incompetent is not so easy to tell except in a field like banking it seems to me they do not let too many incompetents in there. Most people who are in the field who are already there, you would assume have some level of competence. I am very suspicious about excusing anybody on the basis of incompetence. I think fraud is at the root of this enormous crisis.

The enormity of the crisis is such that I think every American ought to be asking the same questions which I am asking, not only this year but in the years to come. I heard Mr. SCHUMER say for the next 30 years. For the next 30 years we will be paying off whatever the cost is to bail out these defunct institutions. So no matter how you hide it in the present budget or refuse to deal with it in the budget message, as Mr. Bush failed to do—he did not deal with it forthrightly in the budget message—it is going to have an impact on the budget this year and on the budgets to come for a long time.

This Member has been in Congress 7 years. It has been 7 years of frustration because all of the things which I am most concerned about, which my constitutents need most, I have been told we cannot have it because we have a deficit, we have a deficit. The Government just does not have the money.

We cannot provide decent health care to senior citizens, we cannot provide catastrophic health care without imposing new costs on the senior citizens, surcharges, surtaxes. They must pay a greater part of it because the country just cannot afford it.

I have been told we cannot afford to have a welfare reform program which can provide in that welfare reform program money to provide for education for the people, for the people we want to move off the welfare rolls. Adequate money to provide for education, adequate money to provide for job training, it is not there; we cannot afford it.

I have been told we cannot have job training for people in general. I have been told we cannot pay any greater percentage of the Federal budget out for education.

We recognize that education is a key problem. I serve on the Committee on Education and Labor. Time after time we are authorizing legislation about programs that have already been certified as being workable. There is no debate about the fact that the Head Start Program works. Everybody agrees that it works. There is no debate about chapter 1 programs for remedial reading, remedial education in elementary schools; everybody agrees that chapter 1 works. On and on it goes.

There are some programs where there is no debate about the workability of them and yet we have not been able to fund any more than 20 percent of the eligible Head Start children in this country. Yet we are not able to fund more than 50 percent of the Women, Infants and Children's Program, the WIC Program; everybody agrees that that program works, that it will save the Government a lot of money because it takes care of pregnant women, takes care of young children.

By paying a small amount of money to make sure that the pregnant women is properly taken care of, and paying a small amount of money to make certain that a youngster gets the right nutrition and the right care, that we save enormous amounts on health care bills for Medicaid and Medicare later.

Everybody agrees that it works. Yet 50 percent is all we have been able to get for that program, which is a very modest program.

To fully fund the WIC Program would only cost $2 billion. Two billion dollars would fund everybody who is eligible, it would take care of all the pregnant mothers, all the children who are eligible; $2 billion.

Now you might say $2 billion is a lot of money. Back in my district people cannot think beyond $100 sometimes, and $500 or $1,000 is a lot of money. But let us look at it in relative terms.

Two billion dollars is less than the cost of one aircraft carrier, one nuclear aircraft carrier. One costs $3.5 billion. When you compare $2 million to take care of pregnant women and children, compared to what we are considering now with respect to the bailout of the savings and loan associations, which is $90 billion. Talking about $90 billion of the taxpayers' money to bail out institutions which have gone under because they are corrupt or incompetent, and they were private to begin with. Talking about the introduction of socialism into the banking industry. It is already there. Our Government is running banks right now, running savings and loan associations right now. Large numbers, our Government is making deals, to have bailout banks right now. Large numbers, Danny Wall, and his crew, before December 31, 1988, committed the American people, the taxpayers, to 40 billion dollars' worth of deals. They said they could not do them openly because that would have caused problems. They could not have completed them if they had openly told people what the facts are, saying exactly what Oliver North's lawyer says in defense of him before the American people right now.

You know we have to have these secrets. We are going to hide behind secrets. They say $40 billion we are committed, and we do not know what we are committed for. The American people do not know, and most people on Capitol Hill do not know. Members of Congress, members of the administration do not know. Mr. Bush is talking about an additional $50 billion, totally; $90 billion is the President's conservative estimate. That is the President's estimate. Time magazine had an article saying before it is over, talking $200 billion to bail out the corrupt enterprises, the racketeering enterprises. $200 billion it would cost the taxpayers. A professor at Columbia University estimates $130 billion. All get past $90 billion, and we are talking between $90 billion and $200 billion. The question is how will that impact on everything else we are trying to do? I do not know. Budget members, please tell me how will that impact on the deficit, our attempts to bring the deficit down. How can we add that obligation and remain within the parameters of Gramm-Rudman?

Strange things happen on this Hill. We are told we cannot have more money for the welfare reform bill, cannot have more money for education. We are told we must tax the senior citizens with a surtax. We are told that Social Security must be brought in line. They took away the death benefits from youngsters at age 18, so many poor youngsters could not go to college because the Social Security payments were cut off at 18. When we did our Social Security reform, we are telling the American people in all kinds of ways that we are a poor country, and we cannot afford to maintain basic decencies for the average person. We instituted what they call DRG's, diagnostic related groupings in the hospital, so if a person goes into a hospital with a certain ailment, they are supposed to stay a certain number of days, and if they are not cured by then, the Government cuts off its funding and the hospital personnel pushes the patient out. If they have a complication of some kind, or they are just a person whose body will not mend as fast as the formula says it should have, the patient gets pushed out.

At the same time this Nation practices that kind of medicine, push out medicine through DRG's, we will say we are going to spend or be asked on this floor to vote on some plan which spends billions of dollars to bail out corrupt enterprises, racketeering enterprises. Tell me exactly why we should do this? What is the obligation of the Government? What is the obligation to bail out the racketeering enterprises? We have an obligation to spend up to $100,000 for every depositor because we guaranteed that, and we certainly should do that, and any depositor out there, I am certain our Government will follow through on that. I am certain all of the Congressmen like myself would vote wholeheartedly to live up to that obligation if put to a vote, but it is a legal obligation. We do not have to vote on it. What we will vote on is a plan that attempts to bail out not just the guaranteed depositors but to bail out the owners, shareholders. Everybody involved will be bailed out. That is what Danny Wall, his deals have done. They are deals which attempt to bail everybody out, including the crooks who made the problem. Tell us, why should the Government do this? Why should the Government subsidize bad business, for capitalism prides itself from being separate and apart from the Government.

Capitalism is called creative destruction. When I was in school, they used that formula. Capitalism is creative destruction. Any institution or any business which cannot fend for itself in the marketplace, cannot stand on its feet, that business deserves to be destroyed by some other business or some other institution that comes along and can survive in the marketplace and will increase their profits.

Why are we going socialist and jumping under falling or failing banks, for whatever reason they fail? I would like to know what is the impact on the budget. Can we ever invest any more money in education? Education is at the root of a society that cannot go forward. We all agree to this. Nobody would dispute me when I say we cannot carry them forward unless we have an education indicated populace, and unless we maximize education. We know in our competition of the free world, commerce competition, education is what we need more often in order to maintain our present position and in order to get the education on our competitors in Japan and Germany. We know there is an agreement all over. No one disputes it. We know that education has an impact on national security. No matter what we spend for weapons systems, for guns, bombs, or tanks, it is ultimately the scientists we create, the soldiers, the technicians, the people who will perfect the systems and keep them operating and develop new systems, that is the real resource and the brain power behind our power, commercial power, economic power, military power. There is no power that does not begin with brain power. We ascribe to that. Nobody disputes that.

Yet in our budget the President says he wants to be the education President, has proposed increases on the one hand as we heard from the person who discussed the budget before. Those increases he proposed. The decreases, we will have to deal with when we get through with the increases he proposed, plus the existing programs and the fact they cannot be increased, it ends up being a cut. Education will be cut between $100 and $200 million. That is what the Bush budget did not tell you. The education President will cut the education budget in his first year. Certainly, if there was some truth in budgeting and the increases that the President proposed in education were real, the increases still are paltry, Mickey Mouse beginnings for an education President, proposing $500 million in new programs, comeptitive high schools, scholarships for science teachers, all of which is needed.

We are in a crisis. Inner-city schools, the poorest schools in our Nation, are falling apart completely. They cease to be relevant in the kind of education they are providing. They cannot provide chalk, blackboards. Total chaos remains at many of our inner-city schools in the poorest areas. On the other hand, our best schools are not performing well. Recent tests show when our youngsters are tested against youngsters from Korea, from Canada, from Britain, they score on the bottom most of the time. They score on the bottom in arithmetic, reading comprehension, and science and knowledge. There is a great need to improve, as well as a great need to sort of revitalize and revamp the worst, which is falling apart.

Can there be investment in education? Over the next 4 or 8 years, can we really make a substantial investment in education, if we are going to spend our money bailing out savings and loan associations that were private enterprises, and do not deserve a penny of the American taxpayers' money except to live up to our obligation of guarantee, of course, for $100,000 for deposits that are insured.

Is their suffering for any good reason? Do we have to suffer through 8, 10, maybe 30 years of budget deficits, more budget deficits, or constructed budgets where we cannot spend for the things we need? Are we going to have to run the risk of our economy suffering strains that may throw it out of kilter, and some serious recessions or depressions or overinflation? All kinds of things may happen, all as a result of the Government coming to the aid of the savings and loan association. It is a serious matter, and the first question is why it cannot be discussed more on Capitol Hill.

Why is there such a low profile with respect to the savings and loan associations? With Congress contemplating a pay raise, due to the formula I do want to get into much of the detail as it is not important to mention, but the congressional pay raise would have cost 0.009 percent of the budget; 0.009 percent of the total $1.3 trillion plus budget, I don't know exactly what beyond that amount, but the costs would have been infinitesimal in the total budget, yet we have a cost now of at a minimum, $90 billion, $90 billion as a minimum, that we will obligate ourselves for, and there is very little discussion about it. Taxpayers will have to pay them.

Another broad question I was asked, is everything being done that can be done to get the money in some other way other than going the pockets of the American taxpayer?

Is everything being done? Is everything being done to collect the funds from the incompetents and the crooks who created this problem? I would say that the Government ought to pledge itself, our Government should pledge itself to a policy of fiscal meltdown for all the people involved, for the owners, the stockholders, for the top management. They should be made to shell out every dime they have to fill up the cup. The vacuum is created by them. Somebody took it or loaned it off, irresponsibly or whatever.

People are saying, well, numerous articles begin saying that fraud is not the problem. As I said before, some experts estimate the problem, 80 percent of the problem is fraud. There are articles I have seen in the New York Times where people are involved, the managers say fraud is not the problem, the problem was poor bookkeeping.

The problem was poor bookkeeping, poor recordkeeping. The problem was bad loans. The problem was sloppy management. Is it because people who were responsible for millions of dollars keep bad books and records? I do not believe it.

I was once a New York City bureaucrat, a commissioner responsible for an agency that had 500 different entities that it funded. We had contracts with 500 different groups, and the patterns of fraud and stealing always started with shoddy bookkeeping. If you wanted to steal, you mess up the books. The best cover you have is shoddy bookkeeping, so be careless with your records. That is obvious. It is a barometer of possible stealing.

So instead of saying that the problem was not fraud or it was not criminality, the minute the bookkeeping goes bad, there should be, there should have been, or there still should be an investigation to determine to what degree bookkeeping was done in this way, because the thieves and the crooks have made it so.

I have not heard the word, "thieves," used in reference to the S&L's. They talk about fraud, they talk about incompetence, and they talk about embezzlement, but they do not want to talk about thieves. We are talking about stealing, we are talking about a double standard, we are talking about the possibility that our Government is soft on white-collar crime. They are actually taking a very soft approach on white-collar crime at the expense of the American taxpayer.

When is there a poor loan or a bad judgment loan? When is there thievery? It all depends, and we cannot find out until we investigate. If a man made a bad loan of a few million dollars and he made it to his brother-in-law or he made it to a man who plays cards with him every night, then I would say we have good reason to suspect thievery, not just bad judgment. If he made a loan that later on he derives some benefit from because he was in cahoots with some operation that received a benefit from the loan, then that is thievery, not bad judgment. We do not know until we investigate.

Are we investigating? The President said at the end of his plan to bail out the savings and loans associations that in addition to everything else he was asking in this great and enormous sacrifice by the American taxpayers, he was asking for $50 million for the Justice Department to go in and investigate and to prosecute the crooks. I hope that $50 million is enough. I do not have any way of knowing, but I think that instead of the $50 million for the prosecution of the thieves being an afterthought, it ought to be at the center of the total program.

Let us go in with the idea of prosecuting crooks first. Then a lot of other things would happen that are positive in terms of recovering the money that has been lost. It is quite legitimate to trade off and tell a person, "you face a fine of so many millions of dollars or so many years in prison." It is quite legitimate to do that. We do it all the time. It is one way of recovering money instead of taking it out of the pockets of taxpayers.

But are we soft on high-level crime? I have not heard anybody get on the floor and scream for justice for the American taxpayer. I have not heard anybody say that we should prosecute and make the people who benefited from these corrupt enterprises pay the price.

Oh, yes, in the past I have heard speeches about welfare queens and about people who stole a few hundred or a few thousand of dollars. I have heard all kinds of speeches about their crucifixion and about putting them in jail for life and all kinds of things of that type, but I have heard nothing yet in the discussion of the savings and loan association scandal which equals the level of the problem.

It is a serious problem. It is a problem of many millions of dollars being stolen. One of my constituents told me that they saw something on television about a person from California—I do not remember the name or the situation—a person who was arrested, tried, and convicted, and this was the owner of a savings and loan association. It seems that this man had wanted to buy a house and he could not buy the house because he could not get a loan, but he found out that he could buy a savings and loan association cheaper than he could buy the house. So he bought a savings and loan association and, of course, parlayed that into millions of dollars with investors and depositors, et cetera. So he built himself $1 million house, and he bought himself all the other accouterments that went along with it, including a jet plane. He lived quite a high lifestyle for a while, and after he was tried and convicted, he was given 2 years in prison. With 2 years in prison, as we all know, with good time, you are out in 6 months.

So he was asked by a television reporter, "Do you think they dealt with you in a just manner?"

He was at least decent enough to say, "Well, I am not going to question the judgment of the court. I accept the punishment."

I think that most people in this world would accept that kind of punishment, 6 months in jail, for stealing and spending and enjoying millions of dollars.

How many more patterns like this do we have? We would like to know. I would like to know, and I would like to see a listing of all the prosecutions that have taken place in connection with S&L associations to date, and I do not care who prosecuted them, whether they were prosecuted at the local level or by the Justice Department. Let us have a list before we vote on a solution to the S&L crisis or scandal. Let us have a list that we can see in terms of who is being punished. Let us have a list so we can see who was most incompetent, so that we can in the future insist that certain people who get certified as incompetent are never allowed to work in the banking industry again. Let us deal with this in a serious manner.

Investigations, indictments and prosecutions ought to go forward as not an afterthought but as a key part of the plan to rescue the savings and loan associations.

We have been told that the problem is in good hands now, that Mr. Bush has a great plan. Instead of the FSLIC being in charge, we are going to put FDIC in charge, and they say that FDIC is tougher than FSLIC and will solve the problem.

I put it this way, and I would like to ask the question: Does anybody remember that FDIC started the problem of socialism in the banking industry when they bailed out the Continental Illinois Bank and obligated $4 billion of taxpayers' funds for that deal? Four billion was obligated, and then within the last year FDIC has bailed out another large bank. This was a deal between a bank in North Carolina and a bank in Texas. That was another $4 billion of taxpayers' money obligated to cover the deal.

So FDIC will not be an automatic answer. FSLIC is broke. After so many months they were saying they were $14 billion in the red, so they were out of kilter, and they cannot function anymore. How soon will FDIC be out of kilter and unable to function when they link the two together? We have a monumental problem shaping up as a result of our old friend introduced by the Reagan administration—massive deregulation.

All of these operations have received less attention from the Government and from the regulators than they had received before. The S&L's were deregulated on a massive basis. If they are deregulated and they are on their own, then why should they come crying to the Government and the taxpayers when the whole system collapses?

Is it moral to cut the budget for education? Is it moral to cut the budget for women, infants, and children? Is it moral to make senior citizens pay more for their Medicare in a surtax and at the same time spend the taxpayers' money to bail out private institutions which were deregulated for owners and management who have had a good time fiscally for quite a while? I would like to have these questions answered.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] said that REFCO is being created. REFCO is going to be a new fiscal entity created by Mr. Bush to hide the truth of what is happening with the savings and loan associations from us. Mr. SCHUMER did not say that; I am saying it. It gets it off budget. It keeps it out of our attention for a while, and it will have its own crisis in a few years, because the funding of REFCO and the health of REFCO are dependent on how much money they can recover from a system that is failing. The S&L system is failing, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] said himself the likelihood is that they will not be able to carry their own weight. He also said that as a result of this little trick of moving the crisis from the budget and from the view of the American taxpayers this year to REFCO so we can put the impact of it over to the future—and he is an expert of the Budget Committee—that will cost us at least $2 billion additionally because REFCO will pay a higher interest cost than we would have to pay if it was a regular government institution.

It will cost at least $2 billion, and, as the rates go up, of course it will cost as much as $20 billion more, $20 billion more than the $90 million because we are playing this cute trick of moving it out of sight.

Mr. Speaker, I think these matters are quite serious. I think they are questions that should be answered. I think there are some alternatives to the President's plan.

Mr. Speaker, I am not an expert. I cannot go into detail, but I would like to know why we cannot make a rule that we will do only what we are legally obligated to do. The Danny Wall gang has given out a lot of money already, but why should we go on any further paying off anybody in the S&L situation except the depositors that are guaranteed the money by FSLIC? The Government stands behind that. Every depositor up to $100,000 should receive his money, but no more. No more responsibilities for any other investor or any other person involved. Why can we not expand and intensify our efforts to recover money wherever it is found? And that does not mean we have a bankruptcy situation. We allow the owner of an S&L to plead bankruptcy, but he can keep his home. His home happens to be a ranch and 4 acres, as my colleagues know, along with the ranch. He would be allowed to keep that because it is his home.

Mr. Speaker, we have got to be realistic and force the people who committed this crime to pay. Why can we not have some tradeoffs? Why can we not have some prosecutions and sentences which say, "You pay the money, you raise the money, you spend the rest of your life paying back the money or you go to prison?" I think we would recover large amounts of money if that happened. That is more moral than having the taxpayers who are innocent, have nothing to do with it, pay it off.

Why can we not sue some of the collaborators? Every savings and loan association has to have a certified public accountant. A certified public accountant had to periodically do an audit and certify the conditions of that savings and loan association. Why can we not sue? Every certified public accountant who did not do his job properly should be penalized, and let them pay into a fund for the next 10 or 20 years of their existence.

Mr. Speaker, why can we not stop this softness on professionals and the softness on white-collar criminals? I think we ought to get the socialism out of the banking industry. We are setting precedents that are really going to destroy the American economy. We are setting precedents which will destroy capitalism. If we are going to bail out free enterprise, even deregulated enterprises when they are in trouble, billions of dollars are going to go into bailing them out, and we are setting a precedent. We have no arguments in the future for not bailing out any enterprise that gets into great trouble.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we are saying to the average youngster on the streets, and I am the Representative of the 12th Congressional District in Brooklyn, and among the 435 districts in the country my district ranks as No. 8 in terms of poverty. Poor people live in my district. We have a high crime rate. We have a high drug addiction rate. In 1 precinct in my district, and there are 75 precincts which covers about 125,000 people, there were 108 murders, drug-related murders, last year. I cannot go to those youngsters out there who are part of that drug culture who are killing each other because they are trying to make a fast buck here and there. They set up their own enterprise, and they want to make a fast buck. I cannot go to them and say, as my colleagues know, that crime does not pay. I cannot go to them and say, "Not only might you get killed, but, if you don't get killed by your rivals, eventually the Government is going to catch you, and it just doesn't pay. Don't get involved in this enterprise."

Mr. Speaker, I cannot really go to them and say that, if they look at what is happening with the Oliver North case where he ran a racketeer enterprise in the basement of the White House and he is probably going to get off. And then look at the hundreds of savings and loan associations, their owners, their stockholders, their managers not only walking scot-free, but also the American taxpayers will subsidize them. The American taxpayers will pay for their crimes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a horrendous situation. There are many questions. I intend to keep asking those questions between now and the time that I vote. I hope that somebody will have the guts to answer us, to answer the American people fully.

I hope the talk show hosts, the radio talk show hosts around the country, will understand that this is an issue which impacts on the pocketbooks of everybody in a great way. I hope they understand that and begin to ask the questions also. We should not only focus on trivia. We should look at the matter which is a life-and-death, dollars-and-cents matter which will impact not only upon us, but also our grandchildren to come.

The savings and loan association scandal might represent the greatest scandal in the history of this Nation, and we are not willing to admit that. We must be made to admit it and to deal with it in a realistic way.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. JONES of North Carolina asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 2 of rule XI, I hereby submit the rules of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

RULE I. APPLICABILITY OF HOUSE RULES

The Rules of the House insofar as they are applicable shall be the Rules of the Committee and its Subcommittees.

RULE II. JURISDICTION

As established in Rule X of the House Rules, the jurisdiction of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries is:

(1) Merchant marine generally.

(2) Oceanography and Marine Affairs, including coastal zone management.

(3) Coast Guard, including lifesaving service, lighthouses, lightships, and ocean derelicts.

(4) Fisheries and wildlife, including research, restoration, refuges, and conservation.

(5) Measures relating to the regulation of common carriers by water (except matters subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission) and to the inspection of merchant marine vessels, lights and signals, lifesaving equipment, and fire protection on such vessels.

(6) Merchant marine officers and seamen.

(7) Navigation and the laws relating thereto, including pilotage.

(8) Panama Canal and the maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal, including the administration, sanitation, and government of the Canal Zone; and interoceanic canals generally.

(9) Registering and licensing of vessels and small boats.

(10) Rules and international arrangements to prevent collisions at sea.

(11) United States Coast Guard and Merchant Marine Academies, and State Maritime Academies.

(12) International fishing agreements.

RULE III. FUNCTIONS

(A) General Oversight Responsibilities.—

(1) The Committee shall review and study, on a continuing basis:

(a) the application, administration, execution, and effectiveness of those laws, or parts of laws, within its jurisdiction;

(b) the organization and operation of the Federal agencies and entities having responsibilities in or for the administration and execution of these laws in order to determine whether such laws and the programs thereunder are being implemented and carried out in accordance with the intent of the Congress and whether such programs should be continued, curtailed, or eliminated; and

(c) any conditions or circumstances which may indicate the necessity or desirability of enacting new or additional legislation within its jurisdiction (whether or not any bill or resolution has been introduced with respect thereto).

(2) The Committee shall undertake future research and forecasting on matters within its jurisdiction.

(3) The Committee shall review and study on a continuing basis the impact or probable impact of tax policies affecting subjects within its jurisdiction.

(B) Annual Appropriations.—In its consideration of all public bills and joint resolutions, the Committee shall ensure that appropriations for continuing programs and activities will be made annually to the maximum extent feasible and consistent with the nature, requirements, and objectives of the programs and activities involved. The Committee shall review, from time to time, each continuing program within its jurisdiction for which appropriations are not made annually in order to ascertain whether such program could be modified so that appropriations therefor would be made annually.

(C) Views and Estimates.—On or before March 15 of each year, the Committee shall submit to the Committee on the Budget:

(1) it views and estimates with respect to all matters to be set forth in the concurrent resolution on the budget for the ensuing fiscal year which are within its jurisdiction or functions; and

(2) an estimate of total amounts of new budget authority, and budget outlays resulting therefrom, to be provided or authorized in all bills and resolutions within its jurisdiction which it intends to be effective during that fiscal year.

RULE IV. SUBCOMMITTEES

(A) Applicability of Committee Rules.—Written Rules adopted by the Committee, not inconsistent with the Rules of the House, shall be binding on each of its Subcommittees. Each Subcommittee is a part of the Full Committee and subject to its authority, direction, and Rules.

(B) Standing Subcommittees.—There shall be six standing Subcommittees: the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine; the Subcommittee on Fisheries and Wildlife Conservation and the Environment; the Subcommittee on Coast Guard and Navigation; the Subcommittee on Oceanography; the Subcommittee on Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf; and the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations.

(C) Other Subcommittees.—The Chairman, or a majority of the Committee, may establish, as determined to be appropriations for the conduct of Committee business, other special, select or ad hoc committee.

(D) Subcommittee Membership.—

(1) The ratio of Majority Members to Minority Members on Subcommittees, including Ex Officio Members, shall be no less favorable to the Majority Party than the ratio of Membership on the Full Committee.

(2) A Committee Member may temporarily resign from his Subcommittee assignment to serve on another Subcommittee of the Committee in the event of a vacancy. Members returning to their Subcommittee assignment at the end of the temporary assignment shall return to their original assignment without prejudice to tenure or seniority.

(E) Ex Officio and Other Committee Members.—

(1) The Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member of the Full Committee shall serve as Ex Officio Members of all Subcommittees of which they are not designated as Chairman or Ranking Minority Member. They shall have the right to participate fully, including the right to vote on all matters before the Subcommittees, but shall not be counted in establishing the requirements of, or in determining, a quorum.

(2) Any Member of the Committee may sit with any Subcommittee of which he or she is not a Member during its hearings or meetings (including closed meetings) and participate therein, but may not vote on any matter, or be counted present for the purpose of determining a quorum, or raise points of order, or, except as the Subcommittee Chairman may permit, participate in questioning under the five-minute rule.

(F) Subcommittee Meetings.—

(1) Subcommittees may hold hearings, receive evidence, hear witnesses, and report to the Committee for final action, together with such recommendations as may be agreed upon by the Subcommittee, on such matters as the Chairman may refer to a Subcommittee.

(2) Dates for Subcommittee meetings shall be assigned as a result of consultation between the Chairman and Subcommittee Chairmen and as nearly as practicable in relation to, and in accordance with, workloads.

(3) Subcommittees shall not meet at the same time as the Full Committee without the express permission of the Chairman of the Committee.

(G) Joint Subcommittee Markup.—When two or more Subcommittees meet jointly to take action on any measure or matter, each Member shall be entitled to one vote on each amendment, motion, order, or proposition.

RULE V. MEETINGS

(A) Regular Meetings.—The Committee shall meet at 10 a.m., on the first Wednesday of each month in the Committee Hearing Room, 1334 Longworth House Office Building, while Congress is in session. This meeting may be dispensed with at the discretion of the Chairman, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, if there is no business.

(B) Additional Meetings.—The Chairman may call and convene additional meetings.

(C) Meeting Notices.—

(1) The date, time, place, and subject matter of meetings shall be announced to all Members of the Committee and the public at least one week in advance. If the Chairman, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, determines this is not possible, a public announcement and oral and confirming written notice to Committee Members shall be made at the earliest possible date.

(2) All meeting notices shall be promptly published in the Daily Digest and promptly entered into the Committee scheduling service of the House Information Systems.

(3) All Committee Members shall have adequate notice prior to Committee or Subcommittee investigations or hearings at locations other than Washington, D.C.

(D) Special Meetings.—

(1) Three or more Committee Members may file with the Committee Clerk, a signed, written request to the Chairman for a special meeting of the Committee, specifying the measure or matter to be considered.

(2) If, within three calendar days after the filing of the request, the Chairman does not call the requested special meeting to be held within seven calendar days after the filing of the request, a majority of the Members of the Committee may file with the Committee Clerk their signed, written notice that a special meeting of the Committee will be held, specifying the date and hour of, and the measure or matter to be considered at, that special meeting. The Committee shall meet on that date and hour. Only the measure or matter specified in that notice may be considered at that special meeting. Immediately upon the filing of that notice, the Clerk of the Committee shall notify all Members of the Committee of the special meeting.

(3) The above procedures also apply to Subcommittees, except that the number of Subcommittee Members required to request a special Subcommittee meeting is two, and a majority of the Members of the Subcommittee must file their signed, written notice with the Subcommittee Clerk.

(E) Conflict With Party Caucus or Conference.—When a Party Caucus or Conference of either Party directly conflicts with a scheduled Committee meeting, the meeting of the Committee shall be cancelled. The Clerk of the Committee shall give oral and confirming written notice to that effect to all Committee Members. The Chairman shall reschedule the meeting at the earliest practical time.

(F) Prohibition Against Meeting During the Five-Minute Rule and During Joint Sessions and Joint Meetings.—The Committee may not sit, without special leave, while the House is reading a measure for amendment under the five-minute rule. The Committee may not sit during a joint session of the House and Senate or during a recess when a joint meeting of the House and Senate is in progress.

RULE VI. COMMITTEE PROCEDURE

(A) Applicability of House Procedure.—The procedure in the Committee and its Subcommittees shall follow the procedure of the House.

(B) Referral of Legislation.—

(1) All legislation and other matters referred to the Committee shall be referred by the Chairman to all Subcommittees of appropriate jurisdiction within two weeks, unless by majority vote of the Majority Party Members of the Full Committee or by agreement between or among the Chairman and all the Subcommittee Chairmen to whom the legislation or other matter would otherwise be referred, consideration is to be by the Full Committee.

(2) The Chairman may refer any measure or matter simultaneously to two or more Subcommittees for concurrent consideration, or for consideration in sequence (subject to appropriate time limitations in the case of any Subcommittee), or divide the matter into two or more parts (reflecting different subjects and jurisdictions) and refer each such part to a different Subcommittee.

(C) Power To Sit and Act and Subpoena Power.—

(1) For the purpose of carrying out any of its functions and duties under Rules X and XI of the House of Representatives, the Committee, or any Subcommittee, is authorized:

(a) to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned;

(b) to hold hearings; and

(c) to require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as it deems necessary.

(2) A subpoena may be authorized and issued by the Committee or a Subcommittee under subparagraph (1)(c) in the conduct of any investigation or activity or series of investigations or activities, when authorized by a majority of the Members voting, a majority being present.

(3) The power to authorize and issue subpoenas is also delegated to the Chairman of the Full Committee.

(4) Authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the Chairman of the Committee or by any Member designated by the Committee.

(5) Compliance with any subpoena issued by a Committee or a Subcommittee may be enforced only as authorized or directed by the House.

(6) The Chairman of the Committee, or any Member designated by the Chairman, may administer oaths to any witness.

(D) Presiding Officer.—The Chairman shall preside at meetings. If the Chairman is not present at any meeting of the Committee, the Ranking Majority Member present shall preside.

(E) Quorums for Meetings, Markups, and Hearings.—

(1) Except as provided below, one-third of the Members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum for the purpose of transacting Committee business.

(2) No measure or recommendation shall be reported from the Committee unless a majority of the Committee was actually present.

(3) Testimony may be taken and evidence received in any meeting at which there are present not fewer than two Members of the Committee, one of whom should be, whenever possible, a Minority Member. Unless at least two Members are present, at least one of whom is a Majority Member, the meeting must be adjourned.

(4) Proxies may not be counted for a quorum.

(F) Open Meetings.—Each business meeting, including the markup of legislation, of the Committee and its Subcommittees shall be open to the public, except as provided below.

(G) Closed Meetings.—

(1) The Committee or Subcommittee, by a rollcall vote in open session and with a majority present, may determine that all or a part of the remainder of the business meeting, including the markup of legislation, on that day shall be closed to the public.

(2) If the meeting or markup is closed, no person other than Members of the Committee, and Congressional staff and departmental representatives as the Members may authorize, may be present.

(3) Any meeting that relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters may be closed by the Chairman after consultation with the Ranking Minority Member.

(H) Closed Hearings.—

(1) Each hearing conducted by the Committee or a Subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the Committee or Subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or Rule of the House of Representatives.

(2) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), a majority of those present, if the number required for the purpose of taking testimony are present, may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

(3) The Committee or Subcommittee may by the same procedure, vote to close one subsequent day of hearing.

(4) No Member of the House may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any hearing of the Committee or its Subcommittees, unless the House of Representatives, by majority vote, authorizes the Committee or the Subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its hearings to Members by the same procedures for closing hearings to the public.

(I) Investigative Hearings.—

(1) The Chairman shall announce in the opening statement the subject of the investigation.

(2) Except as provided by the rule for closing an investigative hearing, the Chairman shall receive and the Committee shall dispose of requests to subpoena additional witnesses.

(3) No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the Committee.

(4) At the discretion of the Committee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The Committee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearing.

(J) Closed Investigative Hearings.—

(1) Whenever it is asserted that the evidence or testimony at an investigatory hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person, such testimony or evidence shall be presented in executive session, if by a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the Rules of the Committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony, the Committee determines that such evidence or testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

(2) The Committee shall proceed to receive such testimony in open session only if a majority of the Members of the Committee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

(3) In either case, the Committee shall afford such person an opportunity voluntarily to appear as a witness, and shall receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpoena additional witnesses.

(K) Questioning of Witnesses.—

(1) Committee Members may question witnesses only when they have been recognized by the Chairman for that purpose. All questioning shall be pertinent to the subject matter of the hearing.

(2) After completing his questioning, the Chairman shall recognize the other Members beginning with the Ranking Minority Member and then the Ranking Majority Member, and thereafter, alternating between Minority and Majority, taking into consideration the ratio of Majority to Minority representation on the Committee. Each Member may request up to five minutes in each round of questioning. Additional time may be extended at the discretion of the Chairman.

(L) Minority Witnesses.—A majority of the Minority Members shall be entitled, upon request to the Chairman before the completion of any hearing, to call witnesses with respect to that measure or matter during at least one day of hearing.

(M) Points of Order.—No point of order shall lie with respect to any measure reported by the Committee on the ground that hearings on the measure were not conducted in accordance with the Rules governing open or closed hearings, public notice of hearings, or the requirements for advance filing and summarizing of statements by witnesses; except that a point of order on these grounds may be made by any Member of the Committee if, in the Committee, the point of order was timely made, and improperly overruled or not properly considered.

(N) Ordering of Rollcall Votes.—A rollcall vote may be ordered by one-fifth of the Members present.

(O) Proxies.—

(1) A Member may vote by proxy only on a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining to it; except that a Member may authorize a proxy for all motions to recess, adjourn, or other procedural matters.

(2) In order to be considered a valid and duly executed proxy, the proxy authorization must: be in writing; assert that the Member is absent on official business, or is otherwise unable to be present at the meeting of the Committee; designate the person who is to execute the proxy authorization; and be signed by the Member assigning his or her vote, noting the date and time that the proxy was signed.

(3) For a proxy to be valid in sessions on succeeding days, it must be stipulated in the proxy, and if not stipulated, cannot be voted.

(4) All executed proxies shall be delivered to the Clerk and kept at the desk during the proceedings of the Committee for which they are given and shall be included in the official records of the meeting after they have been voted.

(5) Points of order as to the validity of proxies must be made at the time the proxies are voted.

(6) Proxies may not be counted for a quorum.

(P) Limitation on Floor Action Under Suspension of the Rules.—No bill which directly or indirectly authorizes the expenditure of over $1 million in Federal funds shall be brought to the House Floor by the Committee under Suspension of the Rules if the text of the bill has been changed after it was reported by the Committee unless:

(1) the changes are purely technical and conforming; or

(2) all Members of the Committee have been provided a written copy of the changes at least twenty-four hours prior to the time the bill is considered in the House.

RULE VII. WITNESSES

(A) Advance Testimony Requirements.—A witness shall not be permitted to testify or present evidence, nor will any statement or testimony be included in the Committee hearing record, unless seventy-five copies of the testimony have been delivered to the Clerk of the Committee at least twenty-four hours (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) prior to the meeting. At least ten of these copies must be delivered at least forty-eight hours (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) prior to the meeting. These requirements may be waived only by the Chairman.

(B) Written Summary.—Each prepared statement of ten pages or more shall include a summary which may not exceed five pages in length

(C) Federal and Administration Witnesses.—To the extent feasible, statements and testimony of witnesses from Federal and Administrative agencies shall be accompanied, if not previously received, by fifty copies of the Federal agency report requested by the Committee on the matters pending before it.

(D) Ten Minute Oral Testimony.—Witnesses will be allowed no more than ten minutes to orally summarize their prepared statement. The full statement will be made a part of the record.

(E) Investigative Hearing Witnesses.—

(1) A copy of the Committee Rules shall be made available to each witness.

(2) Witnesses may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights.

(3) The Chairman may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional ethics on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the Committee may cite the offender to the House for contempt.

(4) A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the Committee.

(F) Responses/Information for the Record.—Responses to Members' or staff questions and other information offered for the record, shall be submitted, in triplicate, to the Committee Clerk within forty-five days from the time of the request. One copy will be retained by the Clerk for printing and the remainder transmitted to the appropriate Majority and Minority Counsels.

(G) Availability of Records.—The records of the Committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available for public use in accordance with Rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. The Chairman shall notify the Ranking Minority Member of any decision pursuant to clause 3(b)(3) or clause 4(b) of the rule, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the Committee for a determination on the written request of any Member of the Committee.

(7) The number of television cameras allowed in the hearing or meeting room is at the discretion of the Chairman. If necessary, the allocation among the television media of these positions shall be in accordance with fair and equitable procedures devised by the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Gallery.

(8) Members of the media and their equipment shall not obstruct in any way the space or visibility between any witness and any Member of the Committee nor obstruct unnecessarily coverage by the other media.

(9) No audio-visual equipment will be allowed on the dais without the express prior approval of the Chairman.

(10) Fixed audio-visual equipment shall not be installed in, or removed from, the hearing or meeting room while the Committee is in session.

(11) Floodlights, spotlights, strobelights, and flashguns shall not be used in providing any method of coverage of the hearing or meeting, except that the television media may install additional lighting in the hearing or meeting room, without cost to the Government, in order to raise the ambient lighting level in the hearing or meeting room to the lowest level necessary to provide adequate television coverage of the hearing or meeting at the then current state of the art of television coverage.

(12) The number of still photographers allowed in the hearing or meeting room is at the discretion of the Chairman. If necessary, allocation among this media shall be made on the basis of a fair and equitable pool arrangement devised by the Standing Committee of Press Photographers. Preference shall be given to photographers from Associated Press Photos and United Press International Newspictures.

RULE IX. COMMITTEE RECORDS

(a) Votes.—

(1) The Committee shall keep a complete record of all Committee action which shall include a record of the votes on any question on which a rollcall vote is demanded.

(2) The result of each rollcall vote—including a description of the issue, the name of each Member voting for and against, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those Members present but not voting—shall be available for inspection by the public at reasonable times in the offices of the Committee.

(B) Separate Files.—All Committee hearings, records, data, charts, and files shall be kept separate and distinct from the Congressional office records of the Chairman. These records shall be the property of the House and all Members of the House shall have access.

(C) Permanent Records.—The Clerk of the Committee shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the Committee, together with all evidence taken by the Committee under the order of the House during that Congress and not reported to the House.

(D) Open Hearings.—

(1) Records and transcripts of open hearings before the Committee shall not be available to the public for quotation of any Member until after that Member has had an opportunity to examine and approve them. No more than forty-five days after the conclusion of hearings, the transcript shall be closed and no further changes may be made.

(2) In no instance will the Committee staff distribute, or prepare for distribution, to persons, other than Members and witnesses for the purpose of correction, any open hearing transcript that has not yet been closed and transmitted to the Government Printing Office for publication.

(E) Closed Meetings.—Transcripts and records of closed meetings shall be available to Members of the House of Representatives and Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee staff for inspection in the offices of the Committee, but may not be released or divulged to any other person without the consent of the Chairman or a majority of the Committee. In no event shall executive session transcripts and records be taken from the Committee offices by anyone.

(F) Markup Transcripts.—In no event shall markup transcripts and records be taken from the Committee offices by anyone.

RULE X. COMMITTEE REPORTS AND PUBLICATIONS

(A) Activities Report.—The Committee shall submit to the House, not later than January 2 of each odd-numbered year, a report on its activities under Rules X and XI of the House during the Congress ending at noon on January 3 of that year.

(B) Procedures for Reporting.—

(1) The Chairman shall report or cause to be reported promptly to the House any measure approved by the Committee and shall take or cause to be taken necessary steps to bring the matter to a vote.

(2) The report of the Committee on a measure which has been approved by the Committee shall be filed within seven calendar days (exclusive of days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the Clerk of the Committee a written request, signed by a majority of the Members of the Committee, for the reporting of that measure. Upon the filing of this request, the Clerk of the Committee shall immediately notify the Chairman.

(C) Minority, Supplemental, or Additional Views.—

(1) Members of the Committee must give notice to the Committee Clerk of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views within twenty-four hours after the time of approval of any measure or matter by the Committee (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays).

(2) Members shall be entitled to not less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays) from the time of approval of any measure or matter, in which to file such views, in writing and signed by that Member, with the Clerk of the Committee.

(3) The provisions of subparagraphs (1) and (2) do not preclude—

(a) the immediate filing or printing of a Committee report unless timely request for the opportunity to file supplemental, minority, or additional views has been made as provided by this paragraph, or

(b) the filing by the Committee of any supplemental report upon any measure or matter which may be required for the correction of any technical error in a previous report made by the Committee upon that measure or matter.

(D) Committee Report Requirements.—Committee reports shall be printed in a single volume and include the following:

(1) with respect to each rollcall vote to report any bill or resolution, the total number of votes cast for and against, the name of each Member voting for and against, and whether by proxy or in person, and the names of those Members present but not voting;

(2) the oversight findings and recommendations required pursuant to clause 2(b)(1) of Rule X of the House Rules, separately set out and clearly identified;

(3) the statement required by section 308(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, separately set out and clearly identified, if the measure provides new budget authority or new or increased tax expenditures;

(4) the estimate and comparison prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office under section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, separately set out and clearly identified, if timely submitted;

(5) a summary of the oversight findings and recommendations made by the Committee on Government Operations under clause (4)(c)(2) of Rule X of the House Rules, separately set out and clearly identified, if it has been submitted to allow for the Committee's consideration during deliberations on the measure;

(6) on each bill or joint resolution of a public character, a detailed analytical statement as to whether its enactment into law may have an inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy;

(7) on a bill or a joint resolution repealing or amending any statute or part thereof, in the report or in an accompanying document—

(a) the text to be repealed; and

(b) a comparative print showing by stricken-through type and italic, parallel columns, or other appropriate typographical devices, the omissions and insertions proposed to the statute;

(8) all supplemental, minority, or additional views filed by one or more Members of the Committee; and

(9) on its cover, a recital that any material submitted under subparagraphs (4), (5), and (8) above are included as part of the report

(E) Approval by Chairman.—All Committee or Subcommittee prints and other material prepared for public distribution shall be approved by the Chairman of the Full Committee prior to distribution.

RULE XI. USE OF COMMITTEE FUNDS FOR TRAVEL

(A) Authorization.—All travel of Members and staff of the Committee or its Subcommittees, to hearings, meetings, conferences, investigations, foreign conferences and meetings, and all foreign travel, must be authorized by the Chairman prior to any public notice or the actual travel.

(B) Trip Report.—A substantive report shall be filed with the Chairman within thirty days after any Committee trip or any trip related to matters of Committee jurisdiction which has been approved by the Chairman.

(C) Domestic Travel.—Funds authorized for the Committee under Clause 5 of Rule XI of the House Rules are for expenses incurred in the Committee's activities within the United States.

(D) Foreign Travel.—

(1) Local currencies owned by the United States shall be made available to the Committee and its employees engaged in carrying out their official duties outside the United States, its Territories or Possessions.

(2) No appropriated funds shall be expended for the purpose of defraying expenses of Members of the Committee or its employees in any country where local currencies are available for this purpose.

(3) The following conditions apply to travel outside the United States or its territories or possessions:

(a) No Member or employee of the Committee shall receive or expend local currencies for subsistence in any country for any day at a rate in excess of the maximum per diem rate set forth in applicable Federal law, or if the Member or employee is reimbursed for any expenses for such day, then the lesser of the per diem or the actual, unreimbursed expenses (other than for transportation) incurred by the Member or employee during that day.

(b) Each Member or employee of the Committee shall make to the Chairman of the Committee an itemized report showing the dates each country was visited, the amount of per diem furnished, the cost of transportation furnished, and any funds expended for any other official purpose and shall summarize in these categories the total foreign currencies and/or appropriated funds expended.

(c) All such individual reports shall be filed, no later than sixty days following the completion of travel, with the Chairman of the Committee for use in complying with the reporting requirements in applicable Federal law and shall be open for public inspection.

(4) In carrying out the Committee's activities outside of the United States in any country where local currencies are unavailable, a Member or employee of the Committee may not receive reimbursement for expenses (other than for transportation) in excess of the maximum per diem set forth in applicable Federal law, or if the Member or employee is reimbursed for any expenses for such day, then the lesser of the per diem or the actual unreimbursed expenses (other than for transportation) incurred, by the Member or employee during any day.

(5) A Member or employee of the Committee may not receive reimbursement for the cost of any transportation in connection with travel outside of the United States unless the Member or employee has actually paid for the transportation.

(E) Lame Duck Members.—No local currencies owned by the United States and made available to the Committee, no primary expense resolution, and no additional expense resolution of the Committee may provide for the payment or reimbursement of expenses incurred by any Member of the Committee for travel after the general election in which the Member is not elected to the succeeding Congress, or in the case of a Member who is not a candidate, the earlier of the general election date or the adjournment sine die of the last regular session of the Congress.

RULE XII. COMMITTEE AND SUBCOMMITTEE STAFF

(A) Hiring Practices/Terms of Employment.—The staff members of the Committee—

(1) shall be appointed on a permanent basis, without regard to race, creed, sex, or age, and solely on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of their respective positions;

(2) shall not engage in any work other than Committee business; and

(3) shall not be assigned any duties other than those pertaining to Committee business.

(B) Limitation on Appointing Government Personnel.—The Committee shall not appoint to its staff any experts or other personnel detailed or assigned from any department or agency of the Government, except with the written permission of the Committee on House Administration.

(C) "Clause 5" Appointments.—

(1) From the funds provided for the appointment of Committee staff pursuant to primary and additional expense resolutions—

(a) The Chairman of each standing Subcommittee is authorized to appoint one staff member who shall serve at the pleasure of the Subcommittee Chairman.

(b) The Ranking Minority Member of each standing Subcommittee is authorized to appoint one staff person who shall serve at the pleasure of the Subcommittee Ranking Minority Member.

(c) The staff members appointed pursuant to the provisions of (a) and (b) shall be compensated at a rate determined by the Subcommittee Chairman not to exceed: (1) 75 per centum of the maximum established in paragraph (c) of clause 6 of Rule XI of the House Rules, or (2) the rate paid the staff member appointed pursuant to subparagraph (a) of this paragraph.

(2) Subcommittee staff members appointed under paragraph (1) are subject to the supervision and control of, and shall be responsible to, the Subcommittee Chairman or Ranking Minority Member of the Subcommittee, as appropriate.

(D) "Clause 6" Appointments.—

(1) The Committee shall appoint, by a majority vote, from a list submitted by the Chairman, appropriate professional and clerical staff personnel, in accordance with the provisions of clause 6 of Rule XI of the House Rules.

(2) Each employee on the professional, clerical and investigating staff of the Committee shall be entitled to pay at a single gross per annum rate, to be fixed by the Chairman, which does not exceed the maximum rate of pay, as in effect from time to time, under applicable provisions of law.

(3) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (C)(2), each Committee staff member, other than a member appointed pursuant to the request of Minority Members, is assigned to the Chairman for the purposes of general supervision and control and shall perform such duties as the Chairman may assign.

(4) In the case of staff members appointed pursuant to the request of Minority Members, the Ranking Minority Member shall exercise general supervision and control, subject to the assignments designated by Minority Members in accordance with clause 6 of Rule XI of the House Rules.

(5) When any staff member is assigned directly to Subcommittee staff duties, the staff member shall remain under the general supervision and control of the Chairman of the Committee or Ranking Minority Member of the Committee as appropriate, but under the direct control of the Subcommittee Chairman or Subcommittee Ranking Minority Member, as appropriate, for duty assignment purposes.

(6) The Committee, by majority vote, may terminate the services of any staff member appointed by the Committee and may, from time to time, take appropriate action to fill any staff vacancies.

RULE XIII. COMMITTEE BUDGET

(A) Annual Budget.—

(1) At the beginning of each session, after consultation with each Subcommittee Chairman, the Chairman shall propose and present to the Committee for its approval a budget of the estimated funds necessary for all anticipated activities and programs of the Committee and its Subcommittees, that will be requested under a primary expense resolution submitted in accordance with clause 5 of Rule XI of the House Rules.

(2) In presenting the budget, the Chairman shall ensure that it contains sufficient funds to enable the Committee and each Subcommittee to discharge its responsibilities for legislation and oversight.

(B) Additional Expense Resolutions.—Authorization for the payment of additional or unforeseen Committee and Subcommittee expenses may be procured by one or more additional expense resolutions processed in the same manner as set out above.

(C) Monthly Accounting.—

(1) Once monthly, the Chairman shall require the appropriate staff personnel to prepare a full and detailed accounting of all expenditures made during the period since the last accounting from the amount budgeted to the Full Committee.

(2) Each report shall show the amount and purpose of each expenditure and the budget to which the expenditure is attributed.

(3) Each report shall be available, upon request to the Committee Clerk, to any Member of the House of Representatives.

RULE XIV. CHANGES IN THE COMMITTEE RULES

The Rules of the Committee may be modified, amended, or repealed, by a majority vote of the Committee, provided that two legislative days written notice of the proposed change has been provided each Member of the Committee prior to the meeting date on which the changes are to be discussed and voted upon.

APPENDIX

HOUSE RULE XI(2)(k)—INVESTIGATIVE HEARING PROCEDURES

(k)(1) The Chairman at an investigative hearing shall announce in an opening statement the subject of the investigation.

(2) A copy of the committee rules and this clause shall be made available to each witness.

(3) Witnesses at investigative hearings may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights.

(4) The chairman may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional ethics on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the committee may cite the offender to the House for contempt.

(5) Whenever it is asserted that the evidence or testimony at an investigatory hearing may tend to defame, degrade or incriminate any person.

(A) such testimony or evidence shall be presented in executive session, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2(g)(2) of this Rule, if by a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony, the committee determines that such evidence or testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person; and

(B) the committee shall proceed to receive such testimony in open session only if a majority of the members of the committee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person. In either case the committee shall afford such person an opportunity voluntarily to appear as a witness, and receive and dispose of requests from such person to subpeona additional witnesses.

(6) Except as provided in subparagraph (5), the chairman shall receive and the committee shall dispose of requests to subpoena additional witnesses

(7) No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the committee.

(8) In the discretion of the committee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The committee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearing.

(9) A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the committee.

RULES OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. DE LA GARZA asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD pursuant to the rules of the House a copy of the rules of the Committee on Agriculture, which were adopted at the organizational meeting on February 1, 1989. The rules were agreed to by a unanimous voice vote.

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

I. GENERAL PROVISIONS

a. Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives.—The Rules of the House shall govern the procedure of the Committee so far as applicable, and the rules of the Committee shall be interpreted in accordance with the Rules of the House, except that a motion to recess from day to day, and a motion to dispense with the first reading (in full) of a bill or resolution, if printed copies are available, are nondebatable motions of high privilege in committees and subcommittees. (See Appendix B for the applicable Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives.)

b. Applicability to Subcommittee.—The following rules shall apply to meetings, hearings, and other activities of Subcommittees, which are part of the Committee and subject to its authority and direction, only when specifically so stated.

II. COMMITTEE OR SUBCOMMITTEE BUSINESS MEETINGS

a. Regular and Additional Meetings.—The Committee shall meet on the first Tuesday of each month while Congress is in session. The Committee also shall meet at the call of the Chairman at such other times as he considers to be necessary, subject to advance notice to all Committee members. Insofar as practicable, an agenda for all regular and additional Committee meetings, setting forth all the measures and matters to be considered, shall be furnished each Committee member prior to the meeting. Items may be placed on the agenda by the Chairman or a majority of the Committee. If the Chairman determines that any meeting convened by him need not be held, he shall give all members of the Committee notice to that effect as far in advance of the meeting day as practicable, and no meeting shall be held on such day. See Rule VI. e. for provisions which apply to meetings of Subcommittees.

b. Special Meetings.—If at least three members of the Committee file a written request in the Committee offices that a special meeting be called by the Chairman to consider a specific measure or matter, the Staff Director shall immediately notify the Chairman of the filing of such request. If, within three calendar days after the filing of such request, the Chairman does not call the requested special meeting to be held at a time within seven calendar days after the filing of such request, a majority of the members of the Committee may file in the Committee offices their written notice that a special meeting will be held at a specified date and hour to consider a specified measure or matter. If such a notice is filed, the Committee shall meet on that date and hour. Immediately upon the filing of such a notice, the Staff Director shall notify all members of the Committee that such special meeting will be held at the specified date and hour to consider the specified measure or matter. Only the measure or matter so specified in the meeting notice as filed by the majority of Committee members and transmitted to all Committee members may be considered at a special meeting.

c. Presiding Member.—If the Chairman is not present at any Committee meeting or hearing, the ranking member of the majority party on the Committee who is present shall preside. If the Chairman is not present at any subcommittee meeting or hearing, the ranking member of the majority party who is present shall preside.

d. Committee and Subcommittee Meetings Prohibited.—The Committee or any of its Subcommittees may not sit, without special leave, while the House is reading a measure for amendment under the five-minute rule.

e. Open Business Meetings.—Each Committee or Subcommittee meeting for the transaction of business, including the markup of legislation, shall be open to the public except when the Committee or Subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of the meeting on that day shall be closed to the public. No person other than members of the Committee or Subcommittee and such congressional staff and departmental representatives as the Committee or Subcommittee may authorize shall be present at any business or markup session that has been closed to the public. This clause does not apply to Committee or Subcommittee hearings or to any meeting that, as announced by the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee, relates solely to internal budget or personnel matters.

f. Records and Rollcalls.—A complete record of all Committee or Subcommittee action shall be kept in the form of written minutes, including a record of the votes on any question as to which a rollcall is demanded. A rollcall vote shall be ordered on demand by one-fifth of the members present. The record of such action and the results of the rollcall votes during each session of Congress shall be made available by the Committee, on request, for public inspection during regular office hours in the Committee offices and on telephone request. The information so available on rollcall votes shall include a brief description of the amendment, motion, order, or other proposition; the name of each member voting for and each member voting against such amendment, motion, order, or other proposition; whether such vote was by proxy or in person; and names of those members present but not voting. A stenographic record of a business meeting of the Committee or Subcommittee may be kept and thereafter may be published if the Chairman of the Committee determines there is need for such a record. The proceedings of the Committee or Subcommittee in a closed meeting other than rollcall votes shall not be divulged unless otherwise determined by a majority of the Committee or Subcommittee. See Rule IV. f. for publication of the minutes of meetings.

g. Quorums.—A majority of the members of the Committee or Subcommittee shall constitute a quorum of the Committee or Subcommittee for the purpose of convening meetings, conducting business, and voting on any matter: Provided, That the Chairman of the Committee may determine that one-third of the members of the Committee shall constitute a quorum of the Committee at any meeting for such purpose (other than for the reporting of any measure or recommendation, and voting on the authorization of subpoenas and on the closing of hearings and business meetings to the public) if he gives written notice to that effect to the members prior to the meeting.

h. Proxy Voting.—A member may vote by proxy on any matter before the Committee or Subcommittee other than the issuance of a subpoena pursuant to Rule III. c. The proxy authorization shall be in writing, shall assert that the member is absent on official business or otherwise is unable to be present at the Committee or Subcommittee meeting, shall designate the member who is to execute the proxy authorization, and shall be limited to a specific measure or matter and any amendments or motions pertaining thereto. A member may authorize a general proxy only for motions to recess, adjourn, or other procedural matters. Each proxy to be effective shall be signed by the member assigning the vote and shall contain the date and time of day the proxy is signed as well as the date or dates during which it is to be effective. (See Appendix A for the proxy form required by the Committee or Subcommittee.) In order to be cast in a vote, a proxy shall be filed with the Committee or Subcommittee during such vote and must be placed on file with the Staff Director. Proxies shall not be counted toward a quorum.

i. Location of Persons at Meetings.—No person other than a Member of Congress or Committee or Subcommittee staff may walk in or be seated at the rostrum area during a meeting of the Committee or Subcommittee unless the Chairman or a majority of the Committee or Subcommittee determines otherwise.

j. Consideration of Amendments and Motions.—A member, upon request, may be recognized by the Chairman to address the Committee or Subcommittee at a meeting for not more than five minutes on behalf of an amendment or motion offered by himself or another member, or upon any other matter under consideration, unless he receives unanimous consent to extend the time limit. Every amendment, substitute amendment, amendment to an amendment, or amendment in the nature of a substitute made in Committee or Subcommittee that is substantial as determined by the Chairman shall, upon the demand of any member present, be reduced to writing, and a copy thereof shall be made available to all members present: Provided, That such amendment shall remain pending before the Committee or Subcommittee and may not be voted on until the requirements of this section have been met.

k. Points of Order.—No point of order, other than a point of order that a quorum is not present, against the hearing or meeting procedures of the Committee or Subcommittee shall be sustained unless it is made in a timely fashion either at the commencement of the hearing or meeting or at the time such occasion for a point of order first occurs.

III. COMMITTEE OR SUBCOMMITTEE HEARINGS

a. Power to Hear.—For the purpose of carrying out any of its functions and duties under House Rules X and XI, the Committee is authorized to sit and hold hearings at any time or place within the United States whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned. See Rule VI. e. for provisions relating to Subcommittee hearings and meetings.

b. Announcement of Hearings.—The Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee shall publicly announce the date, place, and subject matter of any hearing to be conducted on any measure or matter at least one week before the commencement of that hearing unless the Committee or Subcommittee or the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee, after consultation with the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee or Subcommittee, as applicable, determines that there is good cause to begin such hearing at an earlier date, in which case the announcement of the hearing shall be made by the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee at the earliest possible date. The Staff Director shall notify the Daily Digest Clerk of the Congressional Record as soon as possible after such public announcement has been made and enter the announcement into the Committee scheduling service of the House Information Systems.

c. Power to Subpoena.—For the purpose of carrying out any of its functions and duties under House Rules X and XI, the Committee is authorized to require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents as it deems necessary. A subpoena may be authorized and issued in the conduct of any investigation or series of investigations or activities by the Committee or by a Subcommittee when authorized by a rollcall vote of the majority of the members of the Committee, a majority being present, except that no proxies may be used to vote on the authorization and issuance of such a subpoena. Authorized subpoenas shall be signed by the Chairman of the Committee or by any other member the Committee may designate. Notice of a meeting to consider a motion to authorize and issue a subpoena shall be given to all members of the full Committee by 5 p.m. of the day preceding the day of such meeting. Compliance with a Committee or Subcommittee issued subpoena may be enforced only as authorized or directed by the House.

d. Scheduling of Hearings and Witnesses.—Except as otherwise provided in this clause, the scheduling of hearings and witnesses and determination of the time allowed for the presentation of testimony and interrogation shall be at the discretion of the Chairman or a majority of the Committee or Subcommittee. Whenever any hearing is conducted by the Committee or Subcommittee on any measure or matter, the Committee's or Subcommittee's minority party members shall be entitled, or request by a majority of them to the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee before the completion of the hearing, to call witnesses selected by them to testify with respect to that measure or matter during at least one day of hearing.

e. Witnesses' Statements in Advance.—Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or Subcommittee shall, insofar as practicable, file with the Staff Director a written statement of the witness's prepared testimony at least two working days in advance of the witness's appearance in order to permit the testimony to be distributed to and reviewed in advance by Committee or Subcommittee members. Witnesses shall provide sufficient copies of their statement for distribution to Committee or Subcommittee members, staff, and the news media. The Committee or Subcommittee staff shall distribute such written statements to all members of the Committee or Subcommittee as soon as they are received as well as any official reports from departments and agencies on such subject matter.

f. Testimony of Witnesses.—The Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee or any member designated by him may administer an oath to any witness. Each witness who has been subpoenaed, on the completion of the witness's testimony, may report in person or in writing to the Staff Director and sign appropriate vouchers for travel allowances and attendance fees. All witnesses may be limited in their oral presentations to brief summaries of their statements within the time allotted to them, at the discretion of the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee in light of the nature of the testimony and the length of time available.

g. Questioning of Witnesses.—Committee or Subcommittee members may question witnesses only when they have been recognized by the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee for that purpose. Each member so recognized shall be limited to questioning a witness (or panel of witnesses) for five minutes until such time as each member of the Committee or Subcommittee who so desires has had an opportunity to question the witness (or panel or witnesses) for five minutes, and, thereafter, the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee may limit the time of further questioning after giving due consideration to the importance of the subject matter and the length of time available. All questions put to witnesses shall be germane to the measure or matter under consideration. Unless the Chairman or a majority of the Committee or Subcommittee determines, otherwise, no person shall interrogate witnesses other than members and Committee or Subcommittee staff.

h. Open Hearings.—Each hearing conducted by the Committee or Subcommittee shall be open to the public except when the Committee or Subcommittee, in open session and with a majority present, determines by rollcall vote that all or part of the remainder of that hearing on that day shall be closed to the public because disclosure of testimony, evidence, or other matters to be considered would endanger the national security or would violate any law or rule of the House of Representatives: Provided, That the Committee or Subcommittee may, by the same procedure, vote to close one subsequent day of hearing. Notwithstanding the requirements of the preceding sentence, a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the Committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony (1) may vote to close the hearing for the sole purpose of discussing whether testimony or evidence to be received would endanger the national security or violate Rule III. k. or (2) may vote to close the hearing, as provided in Rule III. k. In any event, no Member of the House may be excluded from nonparticipatory attendance at any unless the House by majority vote shall authorize the Committee or Subcommittee, for purposes of a particular series of hearings on a particular article of legislation or on a particular subject of investigation, to close its meetings to members by means of the above procedure.

i. Quorum.—The quorum for taking testimony and receiving evidence shall be two members of the Committee or Subcommittee.

j. Record of Hearing.—An accurate stenographic record shall be kept of all testimony taken at public hearings. Any public witness, during Committee office hours in the Committee offices and within two weeks of the close of hearings, may examine the transcript of his or her own testimony and make such grammatical or technical changes as will not substantially alter the nature of testimony given. Members of the Committee or Subcommittee shall receive copies of transcripts for their prompt review and correction for return to the Committee. The Chairman of the Committee may order the printing of a hearing record without the corrections of any member or witness if he determines that such member or witness has been afforded a reasonable time in which to make such corrections and further delay would seriously impede the consideration of the legislative action that is the subject of the hearing. The record of a hearing closes ten calendar days after the last oral testimony, unless the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee otherwise determines. Any person requesting to file a statement for the record of a hearing must so request before the hearing concludes and must file the statement before the record closes. No written statement becomes part of the record and thus publicly available until such time as it has been approved by the Chairman of the Committee or any Committee staff he designates, and the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee or his designee may reject any statement in light of its length or its tendency to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

k. Investigative Hearings.—The Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee at an investigative hearing shall announce in an opening statement the subject of the investigation. A copy of the Committee rules (and the applicable provision of the House Rules set forth in Appendix B) shall be made available to each witness. Witnesses at investigative hearings may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights. The Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional ethics on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; but only the full Committee may cite the offender of the House for contempt. Whenever it is asserted that the evidence or testimony at an investigatory hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person—

(1) such testimony or evidence shall presented in executive session, notwithstanding the provisions of Rule III. h., if by a majority of those present, there being in attendance the requisite number required under the rules of the Committee to be present for the purpose of taking testimony, the Committee or Subcommittee determines that such evidence or testimony may tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person; or

(2) the Committee or Subcommittee shall proceed to receive such testimony in open session only if a majority of the members of the Committee or Subcommittee, a majority being present, determine that such evidence or testimony will not tend to defame, degrade, or incriminate any person.

In either case the Committee or Subcommittee shall afford such person an opportunity voluntarily to appear as a witness; and the Committee or Subcommittee shall receive and the Committee shall dispose of requests from such person to subpoena additional witnesses.

Except as provided above, the Chairman shall receive and the Committee shall dispose of requests to subpoena additional witnesses. No evidence or testimony taken in executive session may be released or used in public sessions without the consent of the Committee or Subcommittee. In the discretion of the Committee or Subcommittee, witnesses may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing for inclusion in the record. The Committee or Subcommittee is the sole judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced at its hearings. A witness may obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized by the Committee or Subcommittee.

l. Broadcasting and Photography.—Television, film making, and live radio broadcasting of all or part of any Committee hearing or meeting shall be permitted only when the Committee by a majority vote agrees or, if the Committee cannot be polled in a timely manner, when approved by the Chairman of the Committee after consultation with the Ranking Minority Member. Except as otherwise determined by the Committee, television, film making, and live radio broadcasting of all or part of any Subcommittee hearing or meeting shall be permitted only when the Subcommittee by a majority vote agrees or, if the Subcommittee cannot be polled in a timely manner, when approved by the Chairman of the Committee or the Chairman of the Subcommittee after consultation with the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee or Subcommittee, Radio broadcasting that is not live and still photography are permitted of any Committee or Subcommittee meeting or hearing unless otherwise determined by the Chairman of the Committee or applicable Subcommittee after consultation with the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee or Subcommittee; Provided, That when such radio broadcasting is conducted, written notice to the effect shall be placed on the desk of each Member. Each Committee or Subcommittee Chairman shall determine, in his or her discretion, the mumber of television and still cameras permitted in a hearing or meeting room. Any broadcasting, electronic recording, film making, or still photography of all or part of a hearing or meeting shall be subject to the provisions of House Rule XI, clause 3(f), which appear in Appendix B.

IV. THE REPORTING OF BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

a. Filing of Reports.—The Chairman shall report or cause to be reported promptly to the House any bill or resolution approved by the Committee and shall take or cause to be taken all necessary steps to bring such bill or resolution to a vote. A Committee report on any bill or resolution approved by the Committee shall be filed within seven calendar days (not counting days on which the House is not in session) after the day on which there has been filed with the Staff Director of the Committee a written request, signed by a majority of the Committee, for the reporting of that bill or resolution. The Staff Director of the Committee shall notify the Chairman immediately when such a request is filed.

b. Content of Reports.—Each Committee report on any bill or resolution approved by the Committee shall include as separately identified sections:

(1) a statement of the intent or purpose of the bill or resolution;

(2) a statement describing the need for such bill or resolution;

(3) the results of the rollcall vote on the motion to report such bill or resolution, including the total number of votes cast for and total number of votes cast against such reporting;

(4) the detailed statement described in section 308(a)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 if the bill or resolution provides new budget authorty (other than continuing appropriations), new spending authority described in section 401(c)(2) of such Act, new credit authority, or an increase or decrease in revenues or tax expenditures;

(5) the estimate of costs and comparison of such estimates, if any, prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office in connection with such bill or resolution pursuant to section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 and submitted in timely fashion to the Committee;

(6) any oversight findings and recommendations made by the Committee or the Committee on Government Operations or both to the extent such were available during the Committee's deliberations on the bill or resolution;

(7) a detailed analytical statement as to whether the enactment of such bill or joint resolution into law may have an inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy;

(8) an estimate of the costs that would be incurred in carrying out such bill or joint resolution in the fiscal year in which it is reported and for its authorized duration or for each of the five fiscal years following the fiscal year of reporting, whichever period is less, together with a comparison of these estimates with those made and submitted to the Committee by any Government agency (the provision of this clause do not apply if a cost estimate and comparison prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office under section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 has been timely submitted prior to the filing of the report and included in the report;

(9) the changes in existing law (if any) shown in accordance with Rule XIII, clause 3, of the House Rules;

(10) the determination required pursuant to section 5(a) of Public Law 92-463, if the legislation reported establishes or authorizes the establishment of an advisory committee; and

(11) such other matter as the Chairman of the Committee determines to be useful for public understanding of the intent and effect of the bill or resolution.

c. Supplemental, Minority, or Additional Views.—If, at the time of approval of any measure or matter by the Committee, any member of the Committee gives notice of intention to file supplemental, minority, or additional views, that member shall be entitled to not less than three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) in which to file such views, in writing and signed by that member, with the Staff Director of the Committee. All such views so filed by one or more members of the Committee shall be included within, and shall be a part of, the report filed by the Committee with respect to that measure or matter. The report of the Committee on that measure or matter shall be printed in a single volume, which shall:

(1) include all supplemental, minority, or additional views that have been submitted by the time of the filing of the report; and

(2) bear on its cover a recital that any such supplemental, minority, or additional views (and any material submitted under subdivisions (C) and (D) of paragraph (l)(3) of House Rule XI, clause 2) are included as part of the report.

This clause shall not preclude the immediate filing or printing of a Committee report unless timely request for the opportunity to file supplemental, minority, or additional views has been made as provided by this clause or the filing by the Committee of any supplemental report on any bill or resolution that may be required for the correction of any technical error in a previous report made by the Committee on that bill or resolution.

d. Availability of Printed Hearing Records.—If hearings have been held on any reported bill or resolution, the Committee shall make every reasonable effort to have the record of such hearings printed and available for distribution to the Members of the House prior to the consideration of such bill or resolution by the House.

e. Committee Prints.—All Committee or Subcommittee prints or other Committee or Subcommittee documents, other than reports or prints of bills, that are prepared for public distribution shall be approved by the Chairman of the Committee or the Committee prior to public distribution.

f. Publication of Minutes.—The Chairman of the Committee, in consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, shall cause to be published as a Committee Print on a periodic basis (and insofar as practicable on a semiannual basis) the minutes of all business meetings and hearings of the Committee and any of its Subcommittees; and such minutes shall include a record of the attendance of members, all recorded votes, and the action on all amendments and motions relating to legislation.

V. OTHER COMMITTEE ACTIVITIES

a. Annual Appropriations.—The Committee shall, in its consideration of all bills and joint resolutions of a public character within its jurisdiction, ensure that appropriations for continuing programs and activities of the Federal Government and the District of Columbia government will be made annually to the maximum extent feasible and consistent with the nature, requirements, and objectives of the programs and activities involved. The Committee shall review, from time to time, each continuing program within its jurisdiction for which appropriations are not made annually in order to ascertain whether such program could be modified so that appropriations therefor would be made annually.

b. Budget Act Compliance: February 25. (See Appendix C).—The Committee shall, on or before February 25 of each year, submit to the Committee on the Budget (1) its views and estimates with respect to all matters to be set forth in the concurrent resolution on the budget for the ensuing fiscal year (under section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974) that are within its jurisdiction or functions, and (2) an estimate of the total amounts of new budget authority, and budget outlays resulting therefrom, to be provided or authorized in all bills and resolutions within its jurisdiction that it intends to be effective during that fiscal year.

c. Budget Act Compliance: Subdivision of Allocations (See Appendix C).—As soon as practicable after a concurrent resolution on the budget for any fiscal year is agreed to, the Committee (after consulting with the appropriate committee or committees of the Senate) shall subdivide any allocations made to it in the joint explanatory statement accompanying the conference report on such resolution, and promptly report such subdivisions to the House, in the manner provided by section 302 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

d. Budget Act Compliance: Recommended Changes (See Appendix C).—Whenever the Committee is directed in a concurrent resolution on the budget to determine and recommend changes in laws, bills, or resolutions under the reconciliation process, it shall promptly make such determination and recommendations, and report a reconciliation bill or resolution (or both) to the House or submit such recommendations to the Committee on the Budget, in accordance with the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

e. Conference Committees.—Whenever in the legislative process it becomes necessary to appoint conferees, the Chairman shall determine the number of conferees he deems most suitable and then recommend to the Speaker as conferees, in keeping with the number to be chosen, the names of those members of the Committee who were primarily responsible for the legislation and, to the fullest extent feasible, those members of the Committee who were the principal proponents of the major provisions of the bill as it passed the House and such other Committee members of the majority party as the Chairman may designate in consultation with the members of the majority party. Such recommendations shall provide a ratio of majority party members to minority party members no less favorable to the majority party than the ratio of majority members to minority party members on the Committee. In making recommendations of minority party members as conferees, the Chairman shall consult with the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee.

f. Committee Records.—All Committee or Subcommittee hearing materials, records, data, charts, and files shall be kept separate and distinct from the congressional office records of the member serving as Chairman, and such records shall be the property of the House with all Members of the House having access thereto. The Staff Director shall promptly notify the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of any request for access to such records.

g. Archiving of Committee Records.—The records of the Committee at the National Archives and Records Administration shall be made available for public use in accordance with rule XXXVI of the Rules of the House of Representatives. The Chairman shall notify the Ranking Minority Member of any decision, pursuant to clause 3(b)(3) or clause 4(b) of the rule, to withhold a record otherwise available, and the matter shall be presented to the Committee for a determination on the written request of any member of the Committee.

a. Number and Composition.—There shall be such Subcommittees as specified in clause b of this rule each of which shall be composed of the number of members set forth in such clause, including ex officio members.[1] The Chairman may create additional Subcommittees of an ad hoc nature as he determines to be appropriate.

b. Jurisdiction.—The Subcommittees shall have the following general jurisdiction and number of members.

Commodity subcommittees

Cotton, Rice, and Sugar (18 members, 11 majority and 7 minority).—Cotton, cottonseed, rice, and sugar matters, generally.

Livestock, Dairy, and Poultry (18 members, 11 majority and 7 minority).—Livestock, dairy, poultry, and bees, generally.

Tobacco and Peanuts (13 members, 8 majority and 5 minority).—Tobacco and peanut matters, generally.

Wheat, Soybeans, and Feed Grains (20 members, 12 majority and 8 minority).—Wheat, soybeans, feed grains, oilseeds not otherwise assigned, dry beans, peas, and lentils, generally.

Operational subcommittees

Conservation, Credit, and Rural Development (18 members, 11 majority and 7 minority).—Soil and water conservation, small watershed program, commodity futures, agricultural credit, and rural development matters, generally.

Department Operations, Research, and Foreign Agriculture (15 members, 9 majority and 6 minority).—Foreign agricultural programs, agency review and analysis, research, and pesticides, generally.

Domestic Marketing, Consumer Relations, and Nutrition (11 members, 7 majority and 4 minority).—Marketing orders, domestic marketing, food stamps, nutrition, and consumer programs, generally.

Forests, Family Farms, and Energy (15 members, 9 majority and 6 minority).—Family farming, forestry, and energy matters, generally.

c. Referral of Legislation.—In the case of any measure or matter not specifically described above, or that includes the jurisdiction of two or more Subcommittees, the Chairman may, unless the Committee by a majority vote decides otherwise, refer such measure or matter simultaneously to two or more Subcommittees for concurrent consideration or for consideration in sequence (subject to appropriate time limitations in the case of any Subcommittee), or divide the matter into two or more parts reflecting different subjects and jurisdiction and refer each part to a different Subcommittee, or refer the matter to an ad hoc Subcommittee appointed by him for the specific purpose of considering that matter and reporting to the Committee thereon, or make such other provisions as may be appropriate. The Chairman, with the approval of a majority of the Committee, shall have authority to discharge a Subcommittee from further consideration of any bill, resolution, or other matter referred thereto and have such bill, resolution, or other matter considered by the Committee. All legislation and other matters referred to the Committee shall be referred to all Subcommittees of appropriate jurisdiction within two weeks unless, by majority vote of the members of the Committee, consideration is to be by the Committee.

d. Service on Subcommittees.—The Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member shall serve as ex officio members of all Subcommittees and shall have the right to vote on all matters before such Subcommittees, but shall not be counted for the purpose of establishing a quorum. Any member of the Committee may have the privilege of sitting with any Subcommittee during its hearings or deliberations and participate therein, but shall not have authority to vote on any matter, nor be counted present for the purpose of a quorum for any Subcommittee action, nor, except as the Subcommittee Chairman or a majority of the Subcommittee may permit, participate in questioning of witnesses under the five-minute rule, nor raise points of order unless such member is a member of such Subcommittee.

e. Subcommittee Hearings and Meetings.—Each Subcommittee is authorized to meet, hold hearings, receive evidence, and report to the Committee on all matters referred to it or under its jurisdiction. Subcommittee Chairmen shall set dates for hearings and meetings of their Subcommittees, after consultation with the Chairman of the Committee and one another, with a view toward avoiding simultaneous scheduling of Committee and Subcommittee meetings or hearings whenever possible. Notice of all such meetings shall be given to the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member of the Committee by the Staff Director. No Subcommittee shall hold meetings or hearings outside of the House unless permission to do so is granted by the Chairman, or a majority, of the Committee. If a vacancy should occur in a Subcommittee chairmanship, the Chairman of the Committee may set the date for hearings and meetings of the Subcommittee during the period between the date of the vacancy and the date the vacancy is filled. The provisions of Rule II. a. regarding notice and agenda of Committee meetings and of Rule II. b. regarding special meetings shall apply as well to Subcommittee meetings.

f. Subcommittee Action.—Any bill, resolution, recommendation, or other matter ordered reported to the Committee by a Subcommittee shall be promptly reported by the Subcommittee Chairman or any Subcommittee member authorized to do so by the Subcommittee. Upon receipt of such report, the Staff Director shall promptly advise all members of the Committee of the Subcommittee action. The Committee shall not consider any matters reported by Subcommittees until two calendar days have elapsed from the date of reporting, unless the Chairman or a majority of the Committee determines otherwise.

g. Subcommittee Investigations.—Except for the Subcommittee on Department Operations, Research, and Foreign Agriculture, no investigation shall be initiated by a Subcommittee without the approval of the Chairman of the Committee or a majority of the Committee.

[1] The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee (See clause d. of this Rule).

VII. COMMITTEE BUDGET, STAFF, AND TRAVEL

a. Committee Budget.—The Chairman, in consultation with the majority members of the Committee, shall for each session of the Congress prepare a preliminary budget. Such budget shall include necessary amounts for staff personnel, travel, investigation, and other expenses of the Committee and Subcommittees thereof. After consultation with the Ranking Minority Member, the Chairman shall include an amount budgeted to minority members for staff under their direction and supervision. Thereafter, the Chairman shall combine such proposals into a consolidated Committee budget, and shall take whatever action is necessary to have such budget duly authorized by the House.

b. Committee Staff.—The staff of the Committee shall perform such duties as are authorized by law and shall be under the general supervision and direction of the Chairman. Staff assisted to each Subcommittee shall perform such duties as are authorized by law and shall be under the general supervision and direction of the Chairman of the Committee and the Chairman of the Subcommittee. Committee members seeking assistance from the staff shall make their requests through the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member. The Chairman shall ensure that each Subcommittee is adequately funded and staffed to discharge its responsibilities.

c. Committee Travel.—Funds authorized for the Committee under clause 5 of House Rule XI are for expenses incurred in the Committee's activities within the United States; however, local currencies owned by the United States shall be made available to the Committee and its employees engaged in carrying out their official duties outside the United States, its territories or possessions. No appropriated funds shall be expended for the purpose of defraying expenses of members of the Committee or its employees in any country where local currencies are available for this purpose; and the following conditions shall apply with respect to their use of such currencies:

(1) No member or employee of the Committee shall receive or expend local currencies for subsistence in any country at a rate in excess of the maximum per diem rate set forth in applicable Federal law; and

(2) Each member or employee of the Committee shall make an itemized report to the Chairman within 60 days following the completion of travel showing the dates each country was visited, the amount of per diem furnished, the cost of transportation furnished, and any funds expended for any other official purpose, and shall summarize in these categories the total foreign currencies and appropriated funds expended. All such individual reports shall be filed by the Chairman with the Committee on House Administration and shall be open to public inspection.

VIII. AMENDMENT OF RULES

These rules may be modified, amended, or repealed, by a majority vote of the Committee, provided that two legislative days written notice of the proposed change has been provided each member of the Committee prior to the meeting date on which such changes are to be discussed and voted upon.

OATH OF OFFICE, MEMBERS, RESIDENT COMMISSIONER, AND DELEGATES

The oath of office required by the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States, and as provided by section 2 of the act of May 13, 1884 (23 Stat. 22), to be administered to Members, Resident Commissioner, and Delegates of the House of Representatives, the text of which is carried in 5 U.S.C. 3331:

> I, A B, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

FUTURE OF THE FEDERAL OCS PROGRAM

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, during his State of the Union Address, President George Bush announced his intention to delay leasing activity on certain Federal OCS lands off the coasts of California and Florida.

Mr. Speaker, after years of moratoria and other delays, it is time for the Federal OCS Leasing Program to move forward in the balanced manner that Congress required in the OCS Lands Act Amendments of 1978.

As the ranking minority member of the Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf Subcommittee, I have thoroughly reviewed every aspect of the Federal OCS Program. There is no question that Federal lands off our coast, which belong to all Americans, can be explored and developed in an environmentally sound manner. After all, the Federal OCS is our Nation's safest energy extraction program. In fact, there has never been an oil spill resulting from a blowout in any of the more than 6,000 exploratory wells drilled in U.S. waters.

Unless we have a viable OCS Program, our Nation will continue to become more and more dependent on foreign oil. In fact, it has been estimated that without new and significant oil resources, we will be importing 60 to 75 percent of our petroleum needs by the year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, I find that prospect totally unacceptable and strongly believe that offshore leasing must go forward with due regard for environmental protection.

With that goal in mind, I am today submitting for the RECORD outstanding testimony presented by Mr. John R. Huff, the president and CEO of Oceaneering International of Houston, TX. Mr. Huff testified on Tuesday, February 9, before the Subcommittee on Interior and Related Affairs on behalf of the National Ocean Industries Association, the International Association of Drilling Contractors, the International Association of Geophysical Contractors, the Offshore Marine Service Association and the Petroleum Equipment Suppliers Association. I would urge my colleagues to review this excellent testimony and to contemplate, as I have, the consequence of this Nation importing 75 percent of our petroleum needs. I would remind my colleagues that a disruption of less than 6 percent of our energy supplies in 1978–79 led this Nation down the disastrous road of double-digit inflation, high-interest rates, negative productivity, and massive unemployment.

History need not repeat itself if we have a sound and rational energy policy that includes the development of our Federal OCS lands including those off the coasts of California and Florida.

The text of Mr. Huff's testimony follows:

TESTIMONY OF JOHN R. HUFF, PRESIDENT AND CEO OCEANEERING INTERNATIONAL

Chairman Yates and members of the subcommittee. I am John R. Huff, President and CEO of Oceaneering International of Houston, Texas. Oceaneering, together with its affiliate companies, is the world's largest publicly-owned underwater services contractor to the petroleum industry. We operate in 24 countries and employ approximately 1,500 workers worldwide.

Today, I am testifying on behalf of the National Ocean Industries Association which represents over 325 companies engaged in all aspects of offshore oil and gas exploration and development. My statement is supported by the International Association of Drilling Contractors, the International Association of Geophysical Contractors, the Offshore Marine Service Association, and the Petroleum Equipment Suppliers Association. These groups represent companies which provide the equipment, services, and support required for offshore energy development. Together we represent approximately 2,200 companies and 250,000 employees. We come before this subcommittee to state our opposition to the insertion of OCS leasing and drilling moratoria in the FY90 Interior appropriation bill not only because they directly impact our industries' economic livelihood, but also because they affect our nation's overall energy supply.

MORATORIA IS LIKE AN UNCONTROLLABLE CANCER

This subcommittee is no stranger to the offshore oil and gas leasing controversy. Since 1981, you have chosen to block leasing on an annual basis in areas off California, Florida, and New England. Last year, you expanded the New England moratorium and took the unprecedented action of banning exploratory drilling on existing leases off the coast of Florida which certain companies spent $108 million to obtain. This year you are under pressure to do more of the same. In addition, you can expect to hear calls for moratoria off Oregon, Washington, New Jersey, and North Carolina, and for a drilling ban on existing leases off Alaska. To avoid these yearly battles, some who are opposed to offshore leasing are now calling for 10 year moratoria, and in some cases, permanent moratoria.

What began as "just one more year of moratoria to keep pressure on Interior to settle our differences" has turned into an uncontrollable cancer which threatens the energy supply of the United States. If not stopped, it will soon spread to other areas as well until there will not be any new domestic leasing or drilling where the smallest bit of opposition exists. There seems to be a foolproof formula to stop offshore development:

Leasing/Drilling Proposal + Coastal Opposition + Media Coverage + Local Official Response = Congressional Moratoria

I wonder whether these public officials are aware that the decisions they are making today will affect our energy supply 5–10 years from now? Can they be that confident we will have an adequate energy supply? If so, where do they think it will come from?

Something must be terribly misunderstood about our nation's offshore oil and gas leasing program for it to be in such serious trouble. Consider the facts: 25 percent of our domestic natural gas and 12 percent of our oil is produced on the OCS in an environmentally sound manner; the OCS program contributes an average of $2.6 billion annually to the United States treasury since 1954; the offshore industries employ thousands, not only in Louisiana and Texas but in Ohio and Pennsylvania; we created and support a high tech industry in which America leads the world; and the OCS leasing program is supported by the courts time after time. Certain individuals in coastal communities choose to ignore these facts and instead, do whatever it takes to make enough noise and controversy to prevent the opportunity to find additional energy supplies for our nation.

WE'RE ALL ENVIRONMENTALISTS, BUT NOT EXTREMISTS

No one questions today's renewed commitment to environmental protection. I, like George Bush, am a environmentalist. This concern for the environment and safety should not surprise anyone. The people who make up the offshore industries are the last ones in the world to tolerate a polluted ocean because we physically work out in the ocean every day. We dislike oil spills just as much as anyone else. Don't you think I care about the environment which my employees dive in to perform underwater inspection work? Yes, we are environmentalists, but that does not mean we don't support offshore oil and gas development.

We believe we can have both development and environmental protection. Offshore drilling is not what our opponents make it out to be. Perhaps those fighting against offshore development can be "kinder and gentler" with their arguments by using scientific, rational, and balanced reasoning instead of extremist, emotional arguments. For example, they speak of using more natural gas because it is clean to burn, but do they realize much of that natural gas will come from the offshore? They say we can't have offshore development because of the chance of an oil spill. They cite oil spills off Washington State and in the Antarctic as reasons to stop drilling. But they ignore our exceptionally safe record and equate tanker spills with drilling. Actually, the truth is, if we produce less oil domestically, there will be more tankers bringing in imported oil which will increase the risk of oil spills. Some Californians say we shouldn't have drilling off their state because it pollutes the air but, at the same time, they allow fishing and pleasure boats to go unregulated and drive their over 20 million cars 215 billion miles a year. Medical wastes wash up on beaches and it's suddenly a reason not to have offshore drilling. They want alternative energy sources but don't speak of the economic reality of developing them. They demand conservation, but what do you do in the meantime? Have you ever fueled your car with conservation? I can go on and on with these arguments. I do not mean to dismiss them but want merely to point out they must be discussed in a more rational manner.

There are justified environmental concerns with offshore drilling. That is why there are stringent safety rules and regulations in place, lengthy federal, state, and local permitting processes, and extensive environmental studies. We support reasonable regulation to ensure environmental safety, but we must not go beyond reason in an attempt to create a zero-risk society. I can't swear that an oil spill won't occur from exploratory drilling, but I can say the likelihood of a spill is extremely remote and if one did occur, it would be cleaned up. Does that mean we shouldn't have offshore drilling? No one can guarantee the plane you fly in won't crash, the car you drive won't be in an accident, or you won't be struck by lightning on the golf course, but that does not stop you from participating in these activities. The same logic should be used for offshore drilling.

WON'T STOP UNTIL NO LEASING IS PROPOSED

This subcommittee has addressed the OCS leasing issue for the past seven years. During that time, how many times have you heard moratoria supporters come up with an acceptable solution to allow drilling to occur? What has happened instead have been one-sided compromises by the Department of the Interior in the form of massive acreage deferrals, sale delays, and cancellations. It seems every time Interior gives in a little, they want more. Currently, 75 percent of the California OCS is off limits to leasing. That, they say, is still not enough. What exactly will please them? The answer is they won't be pleased until no leasing is proposed. This is their true goal. There is even legislation in both the House and Senate to turn offshore California into an Ocean Sanctuary which would ban all OCS leasing and drilling forever. Is this their idea of a kinder, gentler nation?

It appears to be the same old tactics which only serve to polarize the issue.

AN INDUSTRY HEADING FOR FRIENDLIER SHORES

As described above, the offshore oil and gas industry is not welcomed in many parts of this country. The only predictable area to operate offshore in the United States is in the Central and Western parts of the Gulf of Mexico where over 90 percent of all OCS drilling has taken place. There is more oil and gas to be found in the Gulf, but there are huge deposits of oil and gas thought to be elsewhere on the OCS, especially off California. Unfortunately, access to those areas has been stymied. Frankly, the climate to operate in the United States is worsening. Compared to other nations, the United States is already a high-cost area in which to operate. Implementation of moratoria make it even more expensive and less attractive.

Consider what an oil and gas company must be going through today. Once a lease sale is proposed on the Five-Year Program, time, money, and people are invested in preparation for that sale. Years ahead of a sale, geological information must be gathered and analyzed and drilling and production technology developed. Because companies have limited budgets they must examine all available areas and then decide what looks best for them considering their budget and what their competitors are doing. If Congress enacts a moratorium in an area, all that work is put on the shelf, and the time and money is wasted and no new oil and gas is found. Then consider if a lease sale is held and the company bids several million dollars for the right to apply for a permit to explore a tract but Congress places a drilling ban on that area. This continues year after year and spreads to other areas until there is no certainty or predictability. If I were an oil company official, I would not choose to invest in these areas. I would go somewhere else.

Well, that somewhere else is abroad. The United States must compete with other nations of the world for the billions of dollars invested each year by the oil industry. Since the domestic investment climate is worsening, companies are spending more and more of their money outside the country. As money for drilling leaves, so do companies in the oilfield service industry, taking with them jobs, technology, and investment capital. Historically, one-third of the sales of the United States oilfield industry were foreign, today it is up to one-half. Recently, for the first time, the international rig count was higher than the U.S. count. Ironically, we pay twice for the loss; not only do we lose domestic investment, we pay billions of dollars a year for the oil found abroad as it is imported into the country. It's amazing to examine the differences between the U.S. and other nations. Other countries want drilling so badly they are granting royalty holidays and improved contract terms with new tax and financial incentives.

TIME FOR A SOLUTION

This controversy has been going on long enough. We are allowing a few vocal coastal residents to override our nation's need to develop dependable energy resources. Members of Congress from interior states have been deferring to their coastal colleagues far too long. What we need now is a solution. Under the leadership of George Bush and Manuel Lujan it is our hope we can end these yearly moratoria battles. We agree with Secretary Lujan who said at his confirmation hearing, "We must lower our voices so we may hear each other." Continuing the moratoria battle will not solve the problem or quiet the controversy, but only serve to perpetuate the conflict. Wouldn't our energies be better spent on finding a rational solution to this problem?

In 1978, after the first oil crisis, Congress amended the OCS Lands Act to call for the expeditious development of the outer continental shelf. Unfortunately, impediments such as moratoria prevent the execution of that mandate. It is Secretary Lujan's job to implement that law now. He has a very difficult challenge ahead of him for he must balance two seemingly divergent goals—development and protection. As you know, anytime you reach a balance, neither side is going to be 100 percent satisfied. We must accept we will not get everything we want, and leasing opponents should be prepared to accept the same. Given this understanding, there should be no need to perpetuate these moratorium battles. Let's allow the Secretary of the Interior the opportunity to carry out the law so we can develop energy resources for the nation and protect the environment.

IN HONOR OF ENGINEERS WEEK

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a group of fellow countrymen that have been a vital part of making this Nation a true world power, the engineers who have led our country from a small agrarian nation to an international technological and economic leader.

Every year, the week containing George Washington's Birthday is officially declared "Engineers Week" by the National Society of Professional Engineers. That week was chosen in honor of our first President, because George Washington is said to be the first American engineer and land surveyor.

Throughout the country during the week of February 19–25, there will be a series of events intended to cast light on the importance of engineers and scientists in this country and throughout the world, on their past achievements, and their future aspirations.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that we recognize the importance of the engineering field to our country's future. In a time when we are faced with ever-increasing foreign competition, it is an absolute necessity that we give our fullest support to the promotion of technical education and research in the United States.

In a small way, let us begin today by paying tribute to those who have undertaken this honorable profession, and let us keep in mind the further support and encouragement we can provide from our seats in Congress. To the engineers of America we extend to you our sincere appreciation and admiration for a job well done.

FEDERAL RETIREES FAIRNESS ACT OF 1989

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing today a bill to expedite the processing of retirement applications of Federal employees. This legislation will help Federal employees who wish to retire by requiring both the Federal agencies where they are employed and the Office of Personnel Management [OPM] to process retirement applications in a more timely manner.

There are currently over 2.6 million Federal workers in the United States, and over 74,000 Federal workers in my home State, New Jersey. About 200,000 annuity and refund applications will be sent to the OPM from various Federal agencies this year, and it is only fair that these individuals receive their payments promptly.

Before I discuss the need for this bill and its specific provisions, I want to thank my colleagues in the House who have joined me as original cosponsors. I know that, with almost 50 original cosponsors, a large number of us have heard from constituents regarding the unconscionably late payment of pension benefits to Federal retirees. Members on both sides of the aisle would like to ensure that these retirees are treated fairly by the Government that they have faithfully served.

Particularly, I would like to thank my distinguished colleague and chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, ED ROYBAL, for his support and assistance on this legislation.

Also, I commend Senators HEINZ and GRASSLEY for introducing this legislation today in the Senate. Mr. HEINZ is committed to improving the current system which does not serve our Federal retirees adequately.

Mr. Speaker, last year this legislation was introduced in the House and received the cosponsorship of 75 Representatives, and it was broadly supported in the Senate, as well. The bills were introduced at the end of June and because of the committees' very full schedules and with so little time available on the floor, consideration of this important measure was postponed. It is my sincere hope, however, that the 101st Congress will move this bill quickly through committee and demand action from Federal agencies by passing this legislation.

I am pleased to state that my legislation is also supported by the OPM, the National Association of Retired Federal Employees, the American Federation of Government Employees, and the National Federation of Federal Employees. I am not aware of any opposition to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the basic objective of this legislation is to direct all Federal agencies to do a better job of processing the applications and supporting documentation of employees who plan to retire, request refunds, or who die and have families with rights to certain benefits. This is necessary because we have discovered a very poor record of agency timeliness and effectiveness. In fact, many retirees wait 6 months or more for their first retirement check to arrive. It's obvious that for most individuals, a delayed retirement check would be as difficult to handle as a delayed pay check. Individuals who do not receive retirement checks on time are often forced to use savings; borrow from family, friends, or financial institutions; or go without some necessities.

The agencies retirement statistics that we have obtained show that the delays that many retirees experience are not the fault of the OPM. As I understand the process, the OPM must wait for each retiree's agency to provide his or her retirement records and supporting documentation before they can authorize the first annuity check, refund or death benefits. When this has been done, the Treasury Department processes the check, and the Postal Service delivers it—usually within 20 days.

The data that the OPM has recently provided to us shows that in December 1988 only 61 percent of the retirement applications made by all Federal agencies were received by the OPM within 30 days after the retiree left the agency. Some 25 percent were received between 31 and 60 days of separation, and 14 percent were received after 60 days. Although these figures represent some improvement from December 1987, the past year has revealed fluctuating percentages within a consistently poor performance record for most agencies. In addition, these statistics do not show the number of applications and documentations that were incomplete and could not be processed. We simply cannot be proud of this record of service and the difficulties caused to so many retirees.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that two tables which show the performance of Federal agencies in providing applications to the OPM be included in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, my bill amends title 5 of the United States Code to mandate that Federal agencies take corrective action to improve their performance. To begin, agencies are instructed to provide, in a consistent and timely manner, retirement counseling to advise retirees of the necessary procedures that they must follow to collect benefits. I believe it is necessary to instruct agencies to carry out this task within 4 months of the intended date of separation, at the very latest.

Second, this legislation requires that once a Federal agency has been notified by an employee of his or her intention to retire, that agency must take the necessary steps in anticipation of the employee's separation to expedite the processing of the application and other paperwork. This process must occur 4 months prior to the planned retirement date, at the latest.

Third, the bill requires Federal agencies to ensure that, within 180 days of the date that an employee joins the agency, each new employee's personnel file is up to date. I think it is essential that agencies verify information in an employee's file subsequent to hiring, to prevent time-consuming investigations that must take place prior to retirement when mistakes in personnel files are discovered years after they have been made.

Fourth, my legislation requires the OPM to make annual reports to Congress on Federal agency processing of retirement, refund, and death benefit applications. The OPM must also report on the time it takes the OPM to process the applications and authorize the annuity payments. This should provide Congress with a better record of good and poor performance in the future.

Fifth, this legislation mandates that agencies with poor records of providing retirement, refund, and death benefit applications to OPM, will have to prepare a corrective action plan, which specifies actions that will be taken by the agency to correct the problems creating delays. Each agency's inspector general will review its corrective action plan and work with the agency to improve the application process.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to state that this bill will not cost any money. I am informed that Federal agencies have the personnel to process applications in a timely manner. If we learn that improvements are not possible because resources are the reason for delays, then at least Congress will be informed and can make decisions on other ways to correct this unacceptable situation.

Mr. Speaker, this is the beginning of a new Congress and I look forward to working with the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and particularly the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits, Mr. ACKERMAN, to move this bill through the legislative process. It is only fair to Federal retirees, for Congress to act immediately to correct this serious problem.

SALUTING THE VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATION OF THE INLAND COUNTIES

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, February 19 to 25, 1989, has been designated "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week." I would like to ask my colleagues to join me in saluting the nurses, aides, therapists, social workers, and support staff who comprise Visiting Nurse Associations, for their valuable contributions to their communities.

The more than 500 Visiting Nurse Associations around the Nation are made up of health care professionals and volunteers who make vital home care available to the neediest of our citizens. Visiting Nurse Associations provide a wide range of services, including home health care, hospice, personal care, and occupational, physical, and speech therapy. Home care aides also assist the disabled and the infirm with homemaking, meal preparation, shopping, and other domestic duties.

As my colleague, Congresswoman MARY ROSE OAKAR, said upon introduction of the legislation to designate "National Visiting Nurse Associations Week," many patients would not be able to choose the preferred option of home care if it were not for community based, nonprofit, visiting nurse associations."

I would especially like to salute the Visiting Nurse Association of the Inland Counties [VNAIC] and its affiliate, Ramona VNA and Hospice. They have been providing home health care to the citizens in my district for more than 58 years. The VNAIC is a nonprofit, United Way member organization dedicated to providing quality care in the comfort and convenience of the home setting. In addition to traditional home health, the VNAIC offers programs in home maintenance for seniors, as well as programs on hypertension, education, health insurance advocacy, and early intervention to maintain infants' health.

On March 6, the VNAIC steff will host a "Loving Care Award" presentation to recognize the mothers, wives, husbands, volunteers, and attendants from San Bernardino and Riverside Counties. These are the people who, working with the VNAIC staff, cope with the difficulties of providing a safe environment for a loved one. I will not be able to join my friends from the VNAIC on that day, but I wanted to recognize their efforts and share their stories of courage with my colleagues. Thank you for joining me in expressing our appreciation to these dedicated professionals and volunteers.

TRIBUTE TO DR. THEODORE VON KARMAN

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay a tribute to one of our Nation's brilliant scientific minds, Dr. Theodore von Karman, who was the founder of modern American aerodynamics. Dr. von Karman passed away in 1963, shortly after President John F. Kennedy awarded him the first National Science Medal. Yet, today there is little recognition for the contributions of this scientific pioneer.

I would like to submit to the record a brief story by Dr. Michael H. Gorn on Dr. von Karman. Dr. Gorn is the author of "Harnessing the Genie: Science and Technology Forecasting for the Air Force, 1944–1986." He received his Ph.D. from the University of Southern California in 1978 and is presently researching the life of Theodore von Karman. His tribute follows:

TRIBUTE TO DR. THEODORE VON KARMAN

(By Michael H. Gorn)

On May 11, 1989 all people interested in the origins of powered flight should observe the 108th anniversary of the birth of one of America's greatest scientific minds, a pioneer researcher in aircraft design, propulsion, and rocketry. Theodore von Karman, born in Budapest, Hungary on May 11, 1881, was the son of Maurice von Karman, distinguished Professor of Education at the University of Budapest. Past generations of Karmans had simple Jewish roots; his paternal grandfather had been a tailor for Hungarian noblemen. Maurice von Karman received his title of nobility for sweeping reforms he instituted in the Hungarian school system. Although Theodore showed genius in mathematics at a very early age, his father insisted he receive a liberal education before narrowing his sights on the sciences. After several years of home tutoring and matriculation at an elite gymnasium, he studied at the Budapest Royal Polytechnic Institute, and in 1902 took a degree with the highest honors in mechanical engineering. For the next four years he taught at his alma mater.

Von Karman then pursued the study of aerodynamics under one of the discipline's founding giants, Professor Ludwig Prandtl of Gottingen University, Germany, and received the doctor of philosophy there in 1908. Von Karman's brilliant mathematical inquiries on aerodynamic drag and on the buckling strength of straight columns had a profound impact on the designs of aircraft, ships, and bridges. He published profusely. With a reputation second only to his mentor's, in 1912 he was invited to organize an aeronautics institute at Aachen, Germany and taught there until World War I, when he acted as director for research for the Austrian Air Service. Between the end of the war and 1929, he served as Director of the Aachen Aeronautics Institute and pursued research in the frictional resistance of fluids. By the end of the decade he had equalled Prandtl's stature as a research aerodynamacist, attracting students from every part of the world.

Von Karman's fame spread to America, where the science of aeronautical research had not yet reached the degree of sophistication it had in Europe. To remedy the situation, in 1926 Harry Guggenheim, President of the Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, established the Danial Guggenheim Aeronautical Laboratory at the California Institute of Technology (GALCIT). Cal Tech President Robert A. Millikan invited von Karman to come to Pasadena to lecture and advise on GALCIT curricula. The trip persuaded Millikan that von Karman must be GALCIT's first director. Millikan and Harry Guggenheim were deeply impressed by his intellect, practical wisdom, and administrative experience. His charm and humor also won converts and in 1928 he began to divide his time between California and Aachen. Finally, in 1929 he accepted the GALCIT directorship, both to escape the Nazi tide at Aachen and to take advantage of Guggenheim's generosity.

During the 1930s von Karman exerted a significant influence over aeronautical research and development in his adopted country.[1] Due largely to his efforts, Cal Tech came to rival Gottingen and Aachen as centers of advanced aviation studies. Indeed, Southern California became the hub of the nation's aircraft industry thanks in part to the brainpower assembled by von Karman in Pasadena. At the request of the Army Air Corps, in 1938 he and his students undertook a project to develop liquid and solid rocket engines for jet-assisted take-off of aircraft. The solid rocket motors proved so successful that in 1942, unable to interest any existing firms in rocketry, von Karman and five colleagues formed Aerojet Engineering (forerunner of the Aerojet General Corporation). Two years later, Cal Tech received a contract from the Army Ordnance Departmernt to develop tactical ballistic missiles, resulting in the official restructuring of GALCIT as the Jet Propulsion Laboratory (JPL). Von Karman served as JPL's first director.

His crowning service to the nation began in fall 1944, at which time he agreed to act as scientific advisor for the commanding general of the Army Air Forces, Henry H. Arnold. At Arnold's urging von Karman assembled a select group of scientists to tour the world and issue a report on the future of military aeronautics. Von Karman capsulized the predictions in a famous study known as Toward New Horizons, and in the process of compiling it, launched the first of the permanent peacetime science advisory groups, the United States Air Force Scientific Advisory Board.

Von Karman devoted the last decade of his life to founding and chairing the NATO Advisory Group on Aeronautical Research and Development. In February 1963—just three months before his death—President John F. Kennedy awarded him the first National Science Medal. Twenty-five years later the name von Karman still resonates in the minds of colleagues, students, and friends with memories of his kindness, wit, and extraordinary genius for the science of flight.

AN NLRB DECISION IN THE SAM McCULLUM CASE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last month, like millions of Americans, I watched the San Francisco 49ers' exciting Super Bowl victory over Cincinnati. The game had particular interest to me since Candlestick Park, the home of the 49ers, is just outside my congressional district. While watching San Francisco wide receiver Jerry Rice make his usual unbelievable, acrobatic catches, I thought about another wide receiver, Sam McCullum, whose football career took a different turn.

Last July, Sam McCullum, testified before the Government Operations Subcommittee on Employment and Housing, which I chair, at an oversight hearing on delays by the National Labor Relations Board [NLRB] in deciding cases. His outstanding testimony helped dramatize the impact that inordinate delays by the NLRB in deciding cases have on people's lives and careers.

Sam McCullum, a veteran wide receiver with the Seattle Seahawks football team, was discharged by the Seahawks in September 1982, allegedly because of his union activities. His case was fully investigated by the general counsel's office of the NLRB and a decision to issue a complaint was made within 2 weeks. Following a hearing and the submission of briefs, an NLRB administrative law judge needed only 3½ months to issue a decision. In November 1983, the administrative law judge ruled that McCullum had been discriminatorily discharged by the club because of his union activities. The administrative law judge directed that Mr. McCullum receive "immediate and full reinstatement to his former position" as well as backpay. The judge's decision was appealed to the five-member Board here in Washington where at the time of the subcommittee hearing it had been pending for almost 5 years.

The average career of a professional football player is less than four seasons. Yet, incredibly, Mr. McCullum's case has spent more than five seasons before the Board.

In professional football there is a 5-yard penalty for delay of game. If we were to impose a similar penalty against the Board for delay of case, the Board would probably be backed up to the Golden Gate Bridge.

Mr. McCullum's case does not involve hot cargo agreements, secondary boycotts, or other complex sections of the act which labor lawyers sometimes have trouble interpreting. This case involves the discharge of one individual. The National Labor Relations Act protects the right of workers to engage in union activities whether their job is catching footballs in the NFL or catching sides of beef at IBP.

I am pleased to report that last week, finally, after almost 5½ years, the Board issued a decision in the Sam McCullum case. The Board affirmed the administrative law judge's ruling that the Seahawks football club unlawfully discharged Sam McCullum in September 1982 because of his union activities.

Sam McCullum put his faith in the system and risked his career. Although he eventually won the case, he lost because of the inordinate delay by the NLRB in deciding his case. Backpay cannot compensate him for those lost seasons.

We have reached a point where legal rights given to workers to organize are in jeopardy because of the NLRB's failure to issue timely decisions.

I am deeply troubled by the system in place at the Board for processing and deciding cases. There appears to be no logic, order, rhyme or reason, and no deadline as to when a case will be decided. Accordingly, I have asked the General Accounting Office [GAO] to undertake a major study and analysis of the system in place at the Board level for processing and deciding cases. I hope to find out, with GAO's assistance, why workers are being forced to wait years before cases affecting their livelihood and the economic well-being of their families are decided by the NLRB.

VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS TAX CREDIT ACT OF 1989

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing the Volunteer Firefighters Tax Credit Act of 1989 today, which will provide a tax credit of $100 to volunteer firefighters or volunteer rescue squad members.

Since the inception of this Nation in the 18th century, volunteer firefighters have played a critical role in the daily fabric of American life. For over 200 years, Americans have been able to rest assured that should tragedy strike, their neighbors serving in the local volunteer fire department would be there to put the fire out, deliver the stricken family member to the local hospital or rescue the cat at the top of the elm tree. Today, volunteers provide fire protection to three-fourths of the geographical area of the United States.

Yet the safety net provided by our neighbors in volunteer fire departments is fraying unbeknownst to many of us. For a variety of socio-economic reasons, the ranks of volunteer fire departments are dwindling. While a recent study prepared on volunteer firefighters concludes that the overall number of volunteers appears stable, a spokesman for the National Volunteer Fire Council points out that neighboring departments can be in radically different positions with regard to the number of volunteers. Because of a smaller percentage of farmers and shift workers in the United States, the number of people who were formerly available to volunteer during the day has fallen. Volunteers must also travel further distances from the workplace to either the firehouse or directly to a fire. The bottom line is that something must be done to encourage new volunteers to join, if Americans want to continue to receive fire protection from volunteer departments.

As a means of assisting departments in recruiting new members, the Volunteer Firefighters Tax Credit Act of 1988 will provide volunteer firefighters and rescue squad personnel with a $100 Federal tax credit. This credit will also help to defray the often unreimbursed costs that volunteers incur as a result of their service. For instance, a volunteer may often respond to a call directly from work, without being able to stop at the firehouse to change into gear. As a result, street clothes may often have to be cleaned or replaced.

Volunteer fire service enjoys a long history in this Nation. It counts George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Ben Franklin among its founding members. It is a form of public service that embodies the American values of democracy and patriotism. My legislation seeks to continue this tradition and ensure continued protection of our property and safety.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25 the following new section:

"SEC. 25A. CREDIT FOR ACTIVE VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—In the case of an individual who is a volunteer firefighter, there shall be allowed a credit of $100 against the tax imposed by this chapter.

"(b) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'volunteer firefighter' means any individual who—

"(1) for the taxable year is an active member of a qualified volunteer fire department (within the meaning of section 150(e)(2)), and

"(2) receives no compensation for services performed as a member of such volunteer fire department."

(b) The table of sections for subpart A of Part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25 the following new item:

"Sec. 25A. Credit for active volunteer firefighters."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

NEW ARMAMENT FOR THE WAR ON DRUGS

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, in the "War on Drugs", the bad guys have no difficulty in obtaining their weapons of choice: AK47's, Uzi machine pistols, et cetera. The good guys have had a tough time of it. Effective weapons in fighting the craving for drugs have been few and far between.

I am exicited, therefore, about a promising new medication for use against the terrifyingly difficult to treat addiction to cocaine. I would like to share with my colleagues excerpts from the Washington Post, February 17, 1989, regarding the use of carbamazepine in cocaine addicts.

Research is beginning to pay off. I am encouraged, and urge my colleagues to vigorously support efforts to implement these new treatments effectively.

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 17, 1989]

MEDICATION MAY REDUCE COCAINE ADDICTS CRAVING

PRELIMINARY STUDY YIELDS DRAMATIC RESULTS

(By Larry Thompson)

Physicians believe they may have found a drug that can dramatically reduce the craving for cocaine and could lead to successful treatments for cocaine addiction.

A preliminary, unpublished study by psychiatrists at the University of Minnesota School of Medicine in Minneapolis showed that carbamazepine, a drug long used to prevent seizures and treat certain forms of depression, can control cocaine cravings well enough for addicts to benefit from more traditional forms of treatment. With traditional therapy alone—withdrawal from the cocaine and psychotherapy—more than 80 percent of addicts go back to using cocaine within a year after leaving treatment.

"Cocaine treatment fails because patients are trapped by craving, by a compulsion to use cocaine," said Dr. James Halikas, codirector of the chemical dependency treatment program at the University of Minnesota and study director. "We feel that we may have found [a drug] . . . that cures or that eliminates craving."

Many drug-abuse researchers think that cocaine, which activates the brain's pleasure centers, is the most addictive of regularly abused drugs.

"This is the first drug where the preliminary evidence suggests . . . this level of reduction in cocaine craving," said Dr. Frederick K. Goodwin, director of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration, the federal agency that leads the public health battle against drug abuse. "With any uncontrolled trial, one has to be cautious. But . . . I was struck by the extremely hard correlation between compliance with carbamazepine and the rather dramatic decrease in cocaine abuse."

Of the addicts in the study, 13 were men and eight were women. Their average age was 34, and they had abused drugs an average of 18 years and cocaine specifically for more than six years. Eleven received methadone treatment for heroin use. On the average, this group of addicts had been arrested 10 times and spent nearly 20 months in jail.

Of the 13 who stayed with carbamazepine, six virtually stopped using cocaine and seven reduced their cocaine use by nearly two-thirds.

At this point, physicians do not know how long an addict will have to continue taking carbamazepine, but Halikas said he does not believe it would be lifelong, as methadone treatment appears to be for many patients. People may be able to quit taking carbamazepine after two years, he said. Its side effects can include dizziness, rashes and, rarely, a reduction in white blood cells.

Halikas got the idea for using carbamazepine from basic research conducted in animals by Drs. Robert Post and Susan Weiss at the National Institute of Mental Health, who discovered that low doses of cocaine given to animals cause a condition called kindling in which brain neurons can begin to fire spontaneously, causing a seizure. Pretreatment with carbamazepine for a period of time could block the kindling and the danger of seizures.

THE CLOSING OF THE WATERTOWN ARSENAL

HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY II

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, the Base Closure Commission has recommended the closure of the Army Materials Technology Laboratory in Watertown, MA, and has recommended the distribution of the mission to systems commands in Michigan, New Jersey, and Virginia. An exhaustive study of the Watertown facility was made during 1986 and 1987, in the context of a formal realignment study being conducted by the Army. The conclusions of that study were expressed in the following statements by members of the administration to Congress and the public.

On March 26, 1987, Paul Johnson, Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Army for Installations and Housing, wrote Congressman LES ASPIN, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, that the "most promising alternatives—for the much needed upgrade of the facilities—included modernization of the laboratory at the existing Watertown, MA, site of collocation of the laboratory with the Natick Research and Development Engineering Center in Natick, MA."

On May 15, 1987, James Ambrose, the Under Secretary of the Army, wrote to the Secretary of Defense, and publicly announced at a meeting of the Watertown Town Council, that the Army had determined that the most economical alternative was to retain and upgrade the Watertown site, a choice which "makes the best use of experienced personnel, and keeps an important Army mission in an area with ready access to private sector technology."

Also on May 15, 1987, John Shannon, Assistant Secretary of the Army for Installations and Logistics, wrote to Senator DIXON of the Senate Armed Services Committee, that "retaining the lab at Watertown is in the best interest of the Government," and asked for financial support for the modernization of the facility.

In June 1988, the Office of Technology Assessment published its study, "Advanced Materials By Design." The study describes the nature of advanced materials development as highly interdisciplinary, that is, requiring a multidisciplinary team, such as now exists at the Watertown Laboratory.

All of these statements and studies were based on the agreement that materials R&D work is a unique and essential mission that deserves a proper facility. The Army itself dismissed the idea of dividing up the work among other installations as a false economy and as inconsistent with the interdisciplinary nature of the work. It has been, and remains, the position of the Army laboratory command that the Materials Laboratory should remain intact.

This recent history raises questions as to why and how the Commission arrived at its recommendation of closure and redistribution, which is completely inconsistent with prior statements and studies regarding this facility.

Furthermore, I am advised that the figures used to justify this closure are questionable; for example, it appears that the sale price of the land was about half of the figure estimated by the GSA 2 years ago. A higher profit from the sale of the land would have allowed the Army's previously preferred option, a move to Natick, to fall within the 6-year payback period. The cost of the cleanup, though not included in the formula, appears to be about half of the common estimates. Therefore, I have the following specific questions about the methodology in recommending the closure of the Watertown Laboratory.

While the R&D managers have clearly maintained that the work is a single cooperative, coherent mission, why did the Commission elect to break it up?

Since the Commission admitted that it did not have time to review the entire complex subject of the military laboratories, why did it recommend closure of one and the task force to study all the rest?

Since the Commission "recognized that the numerous laboratory activities of the Department of Defense are important to maintaining necessary technological competence," why did it make a recommendation which was led by housing and installation considerations, to the detriment or perhaps destruction of the mission? The current work comprises about seven disciplines and six special functions; how can the Commission divide the current work into only two disciplines and one function?

Since the work cannot efficiently be divided as specified in the Commission report and since any division of the technical team would result in a severe loss of efficiency, how does the Commission explain its comment that its recommendations for MTL would "enable the research to be performed more efficiently?"

The most commonly-heard estimate for cleanup of the property—removal of the residual structural materials from the deactivated nuclear reactor, removal or scrubbing of the depleted-uranium processing facilities, and routine cleanup of whatever petrochemical traces exist in the soils—is $100 million, twice the figure reportedly used by the Commission. It is my concern that there is not, and will not be, enough money in the Defense Environmental Restoration Fund to clean up the Watertown site. The town of Watertown and I are naturally concerned that a good neighbor, MTL, is being exchanged for a fenced wasteland. What assurance can I give the town that they will not be saddled with an environmental mess for decades to come?

On February 15, 1989, I requested from the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs a report detailing the Base Commission's numbers, calculations and assumptions in reaching its decision. That report may, or may not, address some of my concerns about the Commission's decision on the Watertown arsenal. But I am also seeking clear, detailed and satisfactory answers to the questions and concerns outlined above. I need to be able to assure the town of Watertown that these matters have been carefully considered and that the Watertown arsenal and the important functions it performs are not being sacrificed in a rush to close bases.

WILLIE WELLS—A HALL OF FAMER NOT YET RECOGNIZED

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, a few years ago I joined with many others in urging the selection of Willie "Devil" Wells to be inducted into baseball's Hall of Fame. In his day he was recognized as the best shortstop in baseball and his record proved it—a .358 lifetime batting average and 111 home runs.

Because he performed at a time when major league baseball was not integrated, Willie never got the chance to play in the big leagues—yet among his peers he played the game to perfection. Despite his outstanding record and the legacy he left behind, his friends and advocates have never been able to get him into the Hall of Fame. Willie Wells deserved to be recognized for his achievements during his lifetime. Sadly, we no longer have that opportunity, because he died January 24.

Mr. Speaker, the name and accomplishments of Willie Wells should be resubmitted to the Hall of Fame's veterans selection committee and that committee should posthumously induct him into the hall, so that future generations of baseball fans will know about his excellence and marvel at his achievements. I ask that the text of an article from the Austin American-Statesman be reprinted immediately following my remarks and that copies be sent to the Baseball Hall of Fame and members of the veterans selection committee.

[From the Austin American-Statesman, Jan. 24, 1989]

HEART FAILURE CLAIMS FAMED SHORTSTOP WELLS

(By Kirk Bohls)

Austinite Willie Wells, once described as "the greatest living shortstop not in the Hall of Fame," died of congenital heart failure on Sunday. He was 82.

The proud, dignified gentleman spent nearly a quarter of a century in the Negro leagues playing baseball better than all but a handful who had ever put on a glove—and the next 44 years explaining without rancor why he wasn't being honored for it.

His daughter, Stella Wells of Austin, said his final days in a local hospital did nothing to change that pristine attitude.

"He had heart trouble all his life," said Wells, a retired nurse. "But he never did complain about a lot of things. You never knew if he was in pain."

His omission from baseball's Hall of Fame frustrated but never angered her father, she said, and he forever carried with him an uncompromised love for the game.

Only 11 Blacks from the Negro leagues have been inducted into Cooperstown, although many prominent baseball figures — including Hall of Famer Monte Irvin, one of three Blacks who serve on the hall's 20-member veterans selection committee—have said that at least twice that many should have their place in history reserved. It was Irvin, a former player under Wells for the Newark Eagles, who paid tribute to Wells as the "greatest living shortstop not in the Hall of Fame."

He told me one day: 'Baby, I'm not going to be in the Hall of Fame till I die. You'll find out,'" Stella Wells said. "I said, I sure hope it doesn't happen that way. I would love to see him get in.

"He was never bitter about it, but he did talk about it. He loved to talk about his ball. He ate it and breathed it. If you didn't talk about ball, he didn't have time for you."

If Wells was resentful of not receiving an honor so many thought he deserved, he didn't let it show.

"It doesn't make any difference," he said in an interview in June. "I know what I did."

In his career, Wells had a life-time batting average of .358, the fifth-highest in the Negro leagues, and 111 home runs, the sixth-most in history. He hit 27 homers in the 88-games season in 1926 to set what then was the Negro leagues' single-season record.

He was nicknamed "Devil" for his relentless, competitive style, and he was given much credit for teaching the game to Jackie Robinson, who shattered the color barrier in the major leagues. It was Wells who taught Robinson how to pivot on the double play.

Wells has tried to train his son, Willie Wells Jr., but his daughter said his son didn't have the same appreciation for the game.

"He was pretty good, but he wasn't as good as his daddy," said Stella Wells.

Raised as one of three sons of a woman who earned a modest income by washing and ironing laundry, Wells first signed to play for the paltry sum of $400 at age 17. When he decided to end his career in 1945 and return home to care for his seriously ill mother, he was making $2,800 a month, a paycheck that pales in light to today's $2 million annual salaries.

Satchel Paige, baseball's eternal pitcher, called Wells "one of the greatest who ever lived." Former Chicago Cubs scout Buck O'Neil said Ozzie Smith, the St. Louis shortstop who is unmatched on defense, "could have played with Wells. But he couldn't hit with Wells."

The tributes were as abundant as Wells' stories about his days in the Negro leagues. Yet, no bitterness lingered.

"God has given me so much," Wells said last summer, "My life has been beautiful, just beautiful."

Besides his two children, Wells is survived by a brother, Nathaniel Wells, of San Mateo, Calif. The funeral will be at 2 p.m. Friday at the First Baptist Church, 4805 Heflin Lane.

DR. CHARLES BROWN RETIRES

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues the retirement of Dr. Charles Brown from the Ventura Unified School District after 16 years service in the district.

Dr. Brown received his education from Kansas State Teacher's College, Pittsburg, KS, where he earned a B.S. degree in 1954 and an M.S. degree in education in 1955.

While attending Kansas State he was elected to Kappa Delta Pi, honorary society in education; and Phi Alpha Theta, honorary society in history.

From 1956 to 1962 Dr. Brown attended Claremont Graduate School, earning a California secondary administrative credential and the pupil personnel services credential. He was also elected to Phi Beta Kappa Organization Claremont Campus Chapter.

From 1966 to 1970 Dr. Brown attended the University of Southern California earning an Ed.D. degree in personnel administration with a supplemental field in secondary curriculum.

Positions held by Dr. Brown include: elementary teacher, Cherokee County, KS; elementary teacher, Kingman, KS; junior high teacher, San Bernardino, CA; senior high teacher, San Bernardino, CA; senior high counselor, Palos Verdes High School, Palos Verdes Estates, CA; assistant principal, Rolling Hills High School, Rolling Hills Estates, CA; staff assistant, Palos Verdes Unified School District; and from 1972 until retirement, assistant superintendent/personnel services, Ventura Unified School District, Ventura, CA.

Professional and other memberships include Ventura Administrators Association; Association of California School Administrators; American Association of Personnel Administrators; representative to ACSA Personnel Administrators Committee; chairperson for ACSA Employer/Employee Relations Committee; board of directors, ACSA Region 13; and program chair, North Ventura Charter, ACSA.

I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing Dr. Brown a very happy retirement, which he has earned many times over in his many years of service to our children.

SUGAR SUPPLY STABILIZATION ACT

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join today with Congressman DOWNEY in reintroducing the Sugar Supply Stabilization Act and urge my colleagues to join us in support of this important legislation.

The imperative to reform the Sugar Program has not eased since the Sugar Supply Stabilization Act was first introduced in 1987. American consumers still pay significantly higher prices for sugar than the world market price. Last April, the Commerce Department completed a study which supports the assertion of many private economists that the Sugar Program costs American consumers an additional $3 billion annually in added and unnecessary food costs.

In addition, in spite of the small, aberrational increase in the import quota due to the drought last summer, the program still limits access to the U.S. Market. This continues to exacerbate our relations with crucial friends and allies of the United States, particularly the Philippines and many Central American and Caribbean states, who have traditionally supplied the United States.

Not only does the sugar program continue to distort international trade patterns, but it also continues to distort growing patterns in the domestic farm economy. Due to the comparatively high rate of return guaranteed by the program, significant increases in domestic production have occurred over the last few years that bear no relation to market demand. Existing producers have expanded their sugar operations and other farmers have been encouraged to switch to sugar production. It is a rational and understandable economic choice on their part, but at the expense of consumers and our foreign policy.

Enactment of the Sugar Supply Stablization Act would serve as the foundation of a more rational sugar policy. The bill would establish a more reasonable and competitive price for sugar. Price supports would be adjusted to accomplish this end. The legislation mandates a gradual reduction in the nonrecourse loan rate of 18 cents for raw cane sugar by 1.5 cents per year until it reaches a level of 12 cents.

Regarding quota administration, the bill provides for a gradual and measured increase in import quotas to maintain demand while easing the economic pressure on traditional suppliers to the American market. The bill urges the Secretary of Agriculture to increase import quotas by 500,000 tons per year. However, unlike the previous version of the legislation, while quotas would increase under the bill, the Secretary would retain the flexibility to raise the quota less than 500,000 tons in order to preserve the no net cost mandate of the program.

In my view, the legislation we are proposing offers the best opportunity to correct a policy that is harmful to American consumers and contradicts our foreign policy objectives. This bill would not eliminate the Sugar Price Support Program. American farmers would still receive support for their sugar crop, but by guaranteeing a more reasonable level of price support, the Sugar Program would no longer distort agricultural production or the patterns of international trade. The long-term interests of all concerned with this issue would, I believe, be best served by enactment of the Sugar Supply Stabilization Act.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CIVILIAN ESPIONAGE PENALTIES AMENDMENTS ACT

HON. JAMES A TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to extend the death penalty to any American civilian convicted of espionage or treason against the United States.

Over the past 2 years spy scandals have shocked Americans and caused great damage to our national security. These scandals underscored the sad reality that America remains highly vulnerable to foreign espionage. Although the United States-Soviet relationship is changing, the Soviet Union remains a real threat to America. United States intelligence officials estimate that one out of every three Soviet officials in this country is involved in espionage or intelligence activity.

In all too many instances, American civilians who have access to top secret and sensitive information dealing with our national security have been tempted by foreign bribes to betray their country. These despicable traitors must be put on notice that if caught, they will face the ultimate penalty.

The legislation I am introducing today is similar to current statutes dealing with military personnel who are found guilty of espionage against the United States. Under my bill the death penalty would apply for those civilians convicted of: First, another offense involving espionage or treason for which either a life or death sentence was authorized; second, knowingly creating a grave risk of substantial damage to national security; or third, knowingly creating a grave risk of death to another person in the course of engaging in espionage activity.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps one way to deter treason is to ensure that those who betray America are put to death. The safety and security of our Nation is at stake and the Congress should use every available tool to protect our national secrets from our enemies.

I urge all my colleagues to strongly support this legislation, the full text of which is as follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Civilian Espionage Penalties Amendments Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF PENALTIES.

That section 794 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

"(d) Except as provided in subsection (e), if the accused is found guilty of an offense under this section that directly concerns—

"(1) nuclear weaponry, military spacecraft or satellites, early warning systems, or other means of defense or retaliation against large scale attack;

"(2) war plans;

"(3) communications intelligence or cryptographic information; or

"(4) any other major weapons system or major element of defense strategy; the accused shall be punished by death or life imprisonment.

"(e)(1) No person may be sentenced to death under subsection (d) unless—

"(A) a jury, in a separate sentencing proceeding, unanimously finds, beyond a reasonable doubt, at least one of the aggravating factors set out in paragraph (4) of this subsection; and

"(B) that jury unanimously determines that any extenuating or mitigating circumstances are substantially outweighed by any aggravating circumstances, including the aggravating factors set out in paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(2) Findings under this subsection may be based on—

"(A) evidence introduced on the issue of guilt or innocence, if the jury is the same jury for the issue of guilt and the sentencing proceeding;

"(B) evidence introduced during the sentencing proceeding; or

"(C) all such evidence, to the extent properly before the jury.

"(3) The accused shall be given broad latitude to present matters in extenuation and mitigation.

"(4) The aggravating factors referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection are as follows:

"(A) The accused has been convicted of another offense involving espionage or treason for which either a sentence of death or imprisonment for life was authorized by statute.

"(B) In the commission of the offense, the accused knowingly created a grave risk of substantial damage to the national security.

"(C) In the commission of the offense, the accused knowingly created a grave risk of death to another person.

"(5) If the accused waives a jury, the functions of the jury under this subsection shall be performed by the judge."; and

(2) redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (f).

WESTINGHOUSE RECOGNIZES NEW JERSEY TALENT

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would now like to call members' attention to a group of outstanding students from my home State of New Jersey. These six high school students have been selected by the prestigious Westinghouse Science Talent Search for 1989 as outstanding scholars and researchers who show great promise for the future. They now join an impressive group of nationally and internationally recognized scientists, educators and researchers, including five winners of the Nobel Prize.

I would like to include in this record a description of the Science Talent Search as it appears in the 1989 Honors List, as well as the names of the honorees from New Jersey and their individual areas of research.

SCIENCE TALENT SEARCH

The Science Talent Search was the pioneering endeavor to discover and encourage high school seniors with the ability to be tomorrow's outstanding scientists and engineers. It has succeeded far beyond the hopes of its founders.

Aided over the years by millions of dollars in Westinghouse scholarships and similar aid from educational institutions eager to have such talented students, many of those discovered by the Search have gone on to distinguished careers. Many have received major recognition, including five who have won Nobel prizes.

The Search itself has become an institution, a prestigious tradition widely approved and supported by the academic community.

Westinghouse Electric Corporation has made a notable contribution to the advancement of science in America by financing the Science Talent Search through the 48 years of its existence.

Science Service, engaged in the interpretation and public understanding of science on a broad front, is proud of administering the annual Science Talent Search. From the educators, journalists, scientists and engineers of America there has been enthusiastic cooperation in this annual activity that means so much to high school seniors interested in science and engineering.

This year's honorees from the state of New Jersey are:

Divya Chandler is Hillsdale, Matrix-Driven Translocation as a Possible Mechanism for Gastrointestinal Invasion by Salmonella typhimurium.

John Michael Ballato of Long Branch, Digital Refractometry: A New Way to Measure the Index of Refraction of Optical Materials.

Philip David Cofield of Middletown, Mechanical Analog of the Rutherford Experiment.

Sandra Chang of Millburn, Agglutinating Effects of Seed Lectins on Animal Erythrocytes.

Maria Rose Servedio of Oakland, Cloning of Tandem Repeats.

David Isaac Kaiser of West Orange, Working Apparatus for Determining Metal's Rates of Corrosion.

ESTONIAN INDEPENDENCE

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, February 24, 1989, will mark the 71st anniversary of the declaration of Estonian independence from the Soviet Union.

The past year has witnessed an unprecedented increase in support for the fight for Estonian independence. The movement has taken dramatic strides to emphasize that resistance to continued Soviet occupation of Estonia will be met with strong opposition. To that end, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my voice to those offering support and encouragement to the cause of Estonian freedom.

The courage demonstrated by the Estonian people in their efforts to break the domination of continued Soviet rule has provided inspiration to many others throughout the world.

Estonian independence fighters have been in the vanguard of the movement to create economic and political autonomy for the Baltic Republics. Indeed, their courage in adopting an amendment to the constitution declaring Estonian as the official language of the Republic sent shockwaves throughout the Soviet political structure.

Perhaps we truly can look forward to the day, not so far off when the Estonian people can enjoy the economic, cultural, and social advances which they enjoyed during their days of independence.

The remarkable Estonian spirit could not be broken by the brutal dictatorship of Joseph Stalin. Today, that indomitable spirit has shown that a people's perseverance can indeed pay off. The strong resistance to Soviet domination has been felt by people not only in Estonia but by the many Estonian-Americans with whom we share the dream that one day soon we will together celebrate Estonian independence.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH 1989

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, the theme this year for Black History Month, "The Role of African-American Churches in Economic, Political and Social Development at Home and Abroad," has special meaning for me. I have spent a lot of time in black churches throughout my career, not simply because of my involvement in the civil rights movement, but because of the unique role the black church plays in the community.

Early in my career, I learned that if you want to reach the black community, the church is the first place to go. More than any other organization within the black community, the churches are where you find the activities, the leaders, the people who want to be informed and involved.

Regardless of denomination, the church is unrivaled in the United States as the major institution of black Americans. It is easy to see why. During times in our history when there were no black labor unions, no lodge balls, no school auditoriums and no community groups where blacks could gather, the church was the focal point. Often built right in the center of the town or the neighborhood, the church was big enough to hold large gatherings of people. So it follows naturally that if you were black, and wanted to call a meeting or have a dance or organize a boycott, you'd meet at Big Bethel, or a Tabernacle, or at Ebeneezer.

Dr. Carter G. Woodson, considered by many to be the Father of Black American History, wrote in his book, called "The History of the Negro Church," that in addition to the church itself, the black preacher has been the cornerstone of the black community.

The historian, W.E.B. DuBois, described the black preacher and his importance when he wrote:

> The preacher is the most unique personality developed by the Negro on American Soil. A leader, a politician, an orator, a boss, an intriguer, an idealist,—all these he is, and ever, too, the centre of a group of men, now twenty, now a thousand in number.

As the most enduring facet of black life in America, the church has been the natural catalyst for political activism and community leadership. And since the basis for American politics is the local community, it follows naturally that from the church have come many of our finest black American leaders. The Reverend Richard Allen, founder of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, is also considered the first national black leader. Allen was responsible for organizing the first black convention, held in Philadelphia in 1830. Former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, and currently the mayor of Atlanta, Andrew Young, is a minister. There are also the Reverend Jesse Jackson, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, and, of course, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., all men whose commitment to public service and call to leadership had its root in the church.

I was personally acquainted with the Reverend Adam Clayton Powell, Jr., who was pastor of Harlem's Abyssinian Baptist Church, and the first black man elected to Congress since Reconstruction. That was in 1944. In addition to chairing the House Education and Labor Committee for 6 years, Reverend Powell was the leading black spokesman in Congress throughout the 1950's and 1960's. He was also personally responsible for desegregating Capitol Hill facilities, such as the barber shops and restaurants.

For Adam Clayton Powell and other black leaders, the church has been a sort of springboard. Reverend Powell's congregation eventually grew so large that it spanned nearly the full length of a congressional district; that congregation ultimately elected him to Congress. Without his support in the Abyssinian Baptist Church, Powell would probably never have made it to Washington.

There is another institution which historically has opened doors for black Americans. I am referring, of course, to the military. From our earliest days as a nation to the present time, blacks have played a major role in the United States Armed Forces. While the military's record on treatment of its black soldiers is far from untroubled, by and large the Armed Forces have forwarded the cause of black Americans.

From the Revolutionary War to Vietnam, black soliders have participated in every conflict the United States has ever fought. There were black minutemen at the battles of Lexington and Concord in 1775. Crispus Attucks, a fugitive slave, was one of the first Americans to die during the Revolutionary War. He and four others were killed by British soldiers at the Boston Massacre in 1770. One of the most famous black Americans from that period was Peter Salem, who fought at the Battle of Bunker Hill. Salem is believed to have fired the shot that killed Maj. John Pitcairn of the Royal Marines, the second in command of the British forces in Lexington.

Of course, this period was not without its troubles. Once the Continental Army was formed, black soldiers were not allowed to enlist. That didn't change until the British put out a notice freeing all the slaves and encouraging them to join the King's army. The fear that slaves would run away and join forces with the English finally convinced the Americans to let black men enlist. Almost 5,000 blacks eventually fought with the Revolutionary Army. Two black soldiers accompanied Washington when he crossed the Delaware on Christmas Day in 1776.

Although our history books today tell us that the Civil War was fought to free the slaves as well as preserve the Union, black men were barred from enlisting in the Union Army.

Of course, that didn't stop courageous blacks from contributing to the war effort. Maybe some of you know the story of Robert Smalls, a seaman and slave from South Carolina. Smalls served on the Confederate gunboat, the Planter, which, except for three white officers, had an entirely black crew.

One night, in 1862, when all the white officers went ashore, Smalls and the rest of the crew smuggled their families aboard, and prepared to get away. In order to pass the heavily guarded fortifications of Charleston Harbor, they had to act as if the ship were on a routine run out to sea. If the plan failed, they vowed to drown themselves, even the children, before returning to slavery.

At about 3 o'clock in the morning Smalls and his men fired up the engines and cast off the lines. As they passed the port barriers they gave all the appropriate signals, and were cleared. As soon as they were out of range of Fort Sumter, they lowered the Confederate flag, hoisted a white bedsheet and headed for the Union blockade. The story goes that when Robert Smalls handed the ship over to the Union captain, he said, "I thought the Planter might be of some use to Uncle Abe."

Well, 1 year later Uncle Abe signed the Emancipation Proclamation, which as we all know declared all slaves free. It also stipulated that freed men should be accepted into the Union Army.

Nearly 200,000 black troops participated in the Civil War. The historian, John Hope Franklin, has estimated that the mortality rate for black soldiers was 40 percent higher than for white soldiers. Forty percent higher—during a war where the number of dead exceeds the totals from all the other wars the United States has fought, combined. W.E.B. DuBois writes that one reason for this high death rate is that blacks were "repeatedly and deliberately used as shock troops, when there was little or no hope of success." Despite the fact that black soldiers demonstrated their bravery daily, and gave their lives, there was still a long way to go on the path to equality.

During the two world wars blacks continued to perform with distinction, and continued to confront discrimination.

Among the most famous American troops in World War I was the 369th infantry, known as the "Harlem Hell Fighters." They were attached to the French Army, and were the first Allied troops to reach the Rhine. Nearly 1 million blacks served during the Second World War; but, as I know from personal experience, the military did not make full use of the talents and abilities of its black soldiers.

My roommate at UCLA was a young black man who enlisted in the Air Force during World War II. Although he was trained to fly, he was placed in an all-black squadron which never flew in combat. It was a great source of frustration to him that he was not given the chance to fight for his country.

As the war progressed, blacks eventually were used as replacements, and served with distinction. Largely because of that record, in 1948—a little less than 20 years before the Civil Rights Act—President Harry Truman signed an order integrating the U.S. Armed Forces. When our men went to Korea, a universal integrated military policy was in effect.

I saw for myself how difficult those early years of integration were for the black recruits. I was stationed at Fort Benning, where we had the first black officer trainees. Those guys had it tough. Training is difficult for everyone, as you know, but the trainers, the noncoms, absolutely harassed the young black men.

When we look at the host of black officers and generals in the Armed Forces today, many who flew combat in Korea and Vietnam, it is a tribute to the courage and determination of those men and women who endured so much for so long in our country. It is because of them that today we have a Brig. Gen. Sherian Grace Cadoria, the highest ranking black woman in the military, and one of only four female Army generals. It is because of them that President Reagan appointed the first black National Security Adviser, Lt. Gen. Colin Powell. Currently a three-star general, Colin Powell is slated to become a four-star general in April, when he assumes the forces command at Fort McPherson, GA.

I look forward to the day when, just as it is common knowledge that Paul Revere rode through the night to warn that the British were coming, we know that Crispus Attucks was the first American to die in the Revolutionary War. Just as our children know that Christopher Columbus discovered America, they'll know that the first man to reach the North Pole was a black man, Matthew Henson.

I salute those black Americans, who, in the words of Frederick Douglas, "cleared the road, went forward and continued the race in enriching our American history."

REMEMBERING THE BLACK COWBOY

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, millions of Americans tuned in to watch the CBS-TV miniseries "Lonesome Dove," a gripping classic of the western frontier spirit that in many ways epitomizes our Nation's great traditions. The miniseries, without a doubt, was a terrific production.

With the success of Lonesome Dove still fresh in the minds of many viewers, I thought it would be appropriate during Black History Month, to provide some information on the life and times of the black cowboy, who like their white counterparts shared in the adventure and yore of the Old West.

In a fascinating book entitled "Black Cowboys," by Paul Stewart and Wallace Yvonne Ponce, unsung black heroes of the West are profiled. Historians have estimated that the number of cowboys during the period after the Civil War was 35,000. Of this amount, about 1 out of 4, or about 8,000 were black. Here are a few short biographies about some of the bold and daring black heroes of the Old West:

Mary Fields was a stagecoach driver who ran a stageline through the dangerous Montana territory. Carrying her double-barreled shotgun and packing a .38 caliber pistol she became the second woman in American history to deliver the U.S. mail.

Willie Kennard, applied for the job of U.S. marshall in Yankee Hill, CO, which was quite bold for a black man in 1874 beginning at age 42. His first assignment was to arrest the town villain, Barney Casewit, who was a rapist and a murderer. In a classic western confrontation, Kennard faced the outlaw Casewit and said, "I'm saying it just once more, you're under arrest, so drop that gunbelt and be careful how you move those hands." As Casewit made his move, Kennard shot the guns from Casewit's hands and then went over and arrested him.

Some of the more famous black cowboys include Nat Love, alias "Deadwood Dick," and Bill Pickett both well known for their cattle roping skills and sure-shot marksmanship. Samuel Steward lived in the Colorado territory and served as deputy sheriff and deputy U.S. marshall. He spoke American Indian, French and Spanish dialects which helped him significantly in his law enforcement duties.

James Arthur Walker was the originator of the "Hollywood Hop" which was later made famous by several Hollywood cowboy stars. He invented the trick one day when he rode into his yard at full speed, jumped to the ground, then hopped back upon the horse while it was still moving.

The Black 10th Cavalry patrolled the high plains of the Old West for over 50 years. They served on isolated posts located in Texas and the Southwest—building roads, stringing telegraph wire, escorting groups crossing Indian territory, and scouting hostile tribes. During this period, 12 blacks won Congressional Medals of Honor for their bravery in battle.

There are countless other documented stories of the brave exploits of blacks during the western frontier era, and many others which were never recorded historically. As we celebrate the month of February as "Black History Month," we recognize the richness and diversity of our American heritage. As we continue this celebration each year, it will continue to strengthen the fabric of this great Nation.

LEGISLATION IS NEEDED TO REFORM THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEE DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT PROCESS

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, with a number of our distinguished colleagues, I recently introduced H.R. 1012, a bill to improve Federal employee discrimination complaint procedures under the Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. I was joined in introducing this bill by Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois, Mr. FAUNTROY of the District of Columbia, Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts, Mr. HAWKINS of California, Mr. LELAND of Texas, Mr. MARTINEZ of California, Mrs. MORELLA of Maryland, Mr. MCEWEN of Ohio, Mr. NELSON of Utah, Mr. OWENS of New York, Ms. PELOSI of California, Mr. SABO of Minnesota, Mrs. SCHROEDER of Colorado, and Mr. WEISS of New York.

The bill contains only minor revisions from H.R. 5112, which I introduced in the 100th Congress. Our bill implements recommendations made in the report unanimously adopted by the Committee on Government Operations: "Overhauling the Federal EEO Complaint Processing System: A New Look at a Persistent Problem."

The committee report found that the present system of handling Federal employee complaints of discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religion or national origin is "an embarrassment to the Federal Government. It is a system that Rube Goldberg would have been proud of. It lacks all appearance of fairness" and "it is unnecessarily complex and inordinate lengthy."

Under the present system of handling discrimination complaints, the Federal agency against which a complaint is made has the responsibility of investigating that complaint and then making a decision about whether the complaint is valid. This means that the agency involved—one of the parties in the dispute—investigates and then judges itself. As our report noted, this is akin to putting the fox in charge of the henhouse.

Our bill will eliminate this built-in conflict of interest caused by agencies investigating themselves and then deciding discrimination charges against themselves. This legislation will transfer the process from the individual Federal agencies to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC], while allowing the employing agencies 45 days of counseling in order to resolve the problem before administrative proceedings begin.

The EEOC is to determine within 90 days whether there is reasonable cause to believe that the charge is true. If so, it will attempt conciliation. If this fails, the complainant may either sue in district court or request adjudication by an administrative law judge [ALJ] of the Commission. The ALJ will hold a hearing with full procedural safeguards under the Administrative Procedures Act. Either the individual or the agency may appeal the ALJ decision to the Commission itself. If the Commission affirms the decision or fails to act within the specified time, the individual may appeal to the court of appeals for a review on the record. Time limits are established for each stage of the process.

The legislation provides for the issuing of orders, which may include backpay for up to 2 years, attorneys' fees and costs with interest, reinstatement or hiring, and other equitable relief. To enforce such an order, the Commission may require that the responsible official not be paid until there is compliance. In case of noncompliance by an agency, EEOC or the individual may go to district court.

Mr. Speaker, this bill represents a careful balancing of the need for a speedier, simpler system for handling discrimination complaints with the need for an equitable system with procedural safeguards. It makes the system for Federal workers closer to the one in effect for employees in the private sector. In addition it provides an option for administrative processing as an alternative to costlier lawsuits in district courts. I truly believe that it will be a giant step to overcome the frustration and despair voiced by thousands of Federal employees over the years.

I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this much needed reform of the Federal employee discrimination complaint process.

THE SUGAR SUPPLY STABILIZATION ACT OF 1989

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, as Congressman GRADISON and I reintroduce the Sugar Supply Stabilization Act, I feel a bit like Arnold Schwarzenegger in "The Terminator" when he utters his now famous line, "I'll be back."

We are "back" with the Sugar Supply Stabilization Act of 1989 for a very simple reason—the domestic Sugar Program, which costs U.S. consumers about $3 billion a year and has drastically slashed imports of foreign sugar into the United States, is still a bad program and it must be changed. Of course, someone has been benefiting from this sugar program, even if it's not the consumer. About 10,000 domestic sugar growers just love the current arrangement because it guarantees them an artifically high price for their product and insulates them from outside competition. As a consumer, I find this kind of hidden consumer tax unjustifiable.

The bill that we are introducing today sets forward a sensible and gradual approach to restructuring the U.S. Sugar Program. The bill would put in place a gradual phase down of the current nonrecourse loan rate of 18 cents per pound. The phase down will total a reduction of 1.5 cents per year until the loan rate reaches 12 cents. While the loan rate is decreasing, the import quota will see a gradual increase. This measured increase in import quotas will maintain domestic demand while easing the economic pressures that have mounted on friends and allies who have seen their sugar exports to the United States slashed over the last several years.

To those of our colleagues who might respond to our renewed efforts to reform the Sugar Program with an equally famous Clint Eastwood line, "Go ahead, make my day," Congressman GRADISON and I can assure you that we'll keep coming back until we have succeeded.

ROBERT BALL ON THE MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, on February 9, 1989, Robert Ball, Commissioner of Social Security from 1962 to 1973 and one of the leading experts on retirement programs in the Nation, testified before the Ways and Means Committee on budget issues.

I would like to share part of his excellent statement with the rest of the Congress:

I don't know that there is much more to be done immediately about holding down Medicare cost increases. At one time I would have suggested a reduction of the general revenue financing of Part B of Medicare since, it has seemed to me, that a 75 percent subsidy to this program was not justified for the group of beneficiaries that are relatively well-off. However, the income-related premium in the Catastrophic Health Protection Act of 1988 effectively dealt with this problem by charging the well-off beneficiaries more than the catastrophic protection is worth, and thereby effectively reducing their Part B general revenue subsidy.

I know the income-related premium has become controversial, but it seems to me that the theory was right. In one way or another, relatively well-off Part B beneficiaries ought to be paying more of their own way under Medicare, considered as a whole. They have no basis for being upset because they are paying "too much" for a new addition to the program when they are being heavily subsidized for the old Part B benefits. I would hope the Committee does not spend money to relieve the relatively well-off from what they are required to pay for catastrophic protection, unless at the same time you introduce a way to have them pay more for the old Part B benefits. Looking at Medicare as a whole, the well-off are well treated, as is everyone else. Moreover, I think many of those protesting are failing to take into account that their supplementary Medigap protection should cost less than it would otherwise because of the addition of catastrophic coverage to Medicare.

In the long run, there are certainly savings to be made in Medicare and health care generally. The fact that, even with great gaps in coverage, we are currently paying 11.3 percent of our gross national product for health care—more than any other nation—tells us there is fat to trim. Increased efforts to control unnecessary services are clearly worthwhile. So are efforts to prevent illness from occurring in the first place.

CHILDREN'S DAY

HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY II

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution that will celebrate the second Sunday of October as National Children's Day. Children's Day will serve as national recognition of our great country's most valuable asset: our children. Our children represent the future, the hope and the inspiration of our Nation. Children's Day will stress the importance of the role of the child within a family, just as we recognize the importance of mothers and fathers every year. It is not intended to represent a commercial extravaganza for the local toy stores. It is intended to emphasize the significance of family life, education and religion. By encouraging schools and communities to hold appropriate celebrations and events, Children's Day will focus our Nation's attention on the positive possibilities open to our youth. When our youth believe that their contributions are valued, they will continue to follow their dreams.

During these times when modern society and economic needs place a heavy strain on family life, it is important that we as a nation keep alive the conviction in our children that enables them to change what is wrong, to keep what is right and to distance themselves from the improprieties of the world. I hope my colleagues will join me by supporting this resolution which will provide our Nation with a golden opportunity to instill hope and pride in the youth of America.

MARXIST PEACE PLOY IN EL SALVADOR

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the Marxist guerrillas in El Salvador [the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front] or FMLN, on January 24 put forth a peace plan to forgo violence and join in government-run elections—under certain specified conditions. The plan was designed to encourage both the new Bush administration and Salvadoran President Duarte to be more flexible in their approach to the rebels. Initially, President Duarte rejected the FMLN offer, but the U.S. Department of State was more conciliatory, saying the proposal deserved a closer look.

Few observers questioned the FMLN's motives in offering this peace initiative 6 weeks before the long-scheduled Salvadoran elections. Leading American newspapers editorialized that the FMLN offer was constructive and worth considering.

Former Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick was one of the few opinion-makers who reacted negatively to the FMLN proposal. In a February 6 column, "The Marxists' Game in El Salvador," published in the Washington Post, Ambassador Kirkpatrick maintains, in her usual trenchant style, that the FMLN peace plan is just another ploy to buy time for the Marxist rebels and undercut President Duarte and the Christian Democrats.

A recent editorial in the Omaha World-Herald entitled "Desperation in El Salvador" also reflected considerable skepticism that the FMLN is truly interested in a democratic solution to El Salvador's problems.

Meanwhile, in the days since the peace plan was offered, there has been a resurgence of political violence from both the left and the right in El Salvador. In fact, belying the peaceful intentions of the FMLN, leftist gunmen on February 17 assassinated Miguel Castellanos, the highest ranking guerrilla commander to defect and publicly work with the government.

The stakes in this game are high for both the United States and El Salvador. I urge my colleagues to read Ambassador Kirkpatrick's column and the Omaha World-Herald editorial before deciding if the FMLN offer is genuine and worth pursuing, or if it is simply another tactic designed to aid the rebels and delay the resolution of El Salvador's decade-old civil war.

THE MARXISTS' GAME IN EL SALVADOR

(By Jeane Kirkpatrick)

From time to time, it has seemed as though democracy and peace have come to El Salvador. But El Salvador's Marxist guerrillas have never lost faith in their ultimate victory.

"We have time," FMLN commander Ferman Cienfuegos has said of their 15-year-long struggle to win power over Central America's smallest, most overcrowded, deeply divided country. "All the time it takes."

Now, six weeks before El Salvador's presidential election, the FMLN has launched a new "strategic ofensive." The FMLN representative to Cuba, Farid Handal, explained that their struggle had entered a new phase. Now the guerrillas would simultaneously accelerate military activities and enter the electoral arena "but without making any electoral commitments." Each tactic reinforced the other: the strategic offensive targeted mayors and the accompanying "peace proposal" promised that—for a price—the murder of mayors could be called off.

By the time the so-called peace proposal was offered (Jan. 24), several dozen mayors had already been killed and more were resigning daily in the face of deadly serious threats—three in Usulutan Department on Jan. 18 after being given 48 hours to leave their posts or die, several more in Ahuachupan Department, and another in Santa Ana, where the lives of the mayor's family were threatened along with his own.

"The resignation of mayors in serveral of our country's municipalities is nothing more than an expression that the FMLN is an alternate power in El Salvador," guerrilla spokesman Javier Castillo bragged.

But the FMLN is not just interested in murder. Out of respect for the "current trend in the international field" where "most wars are being solved by negotiations," El Salvador's guerrillas announced that they would not kill mayors who refused all cooperation from the government. The FMLN would "respect those who abandoned resistance."

As further proof of their flexibility, the five commanders of the FMLN also offered in their Jan. 24 proposal to participate in national elections providing the presidential elections be postponed for six months, from March 19 to Sept. 15, and held under a new electoral law adopted by consensus by a new electoral commission in which the FMLN would be represented.

During this six-month period El Salvador's army would be required to cease all attacks on guerrilla forces in return for which the FMLN would observe a five-day cease-fire (from two days before the election until two days after).

No prescience was required to see that this was an offer that no government could accept.

"The president's term is set by the constitution," El Salvador's President Napoleon Duarte commented on Jan. 26. "It is not possible to extend the presidential term of office by a single day. I am not going to stay one day more in the presidency, so this document that proposes I remain in the presidency is neither valid nor acceptable at all."

Opposition leader Alfredo Cristiani struck a similar note. "The people do not want a mere two days of truce before and after the elections. If the FMLN is seeking peace it should declare its decision and accept a permanent and verifiable cease-fire."

Duarte's chosen successor, Christian Democratic candidate Fidel Chavez Mena, agreed. Like Duarte, he welcomed the fact that for the first time ever the FMLN had spoken of elections, but he said the proposal raised insurmountable legal problems. "If they agree in supporting the elections, why not do it now, without waiting any longer?"

Why indeed? Because the FMLN—like the PLO—understands how to pursue power by violence and propaganda: seeking now to terrorize, now to legitimize its own intentions, now to delegitimize existing processes and opponents.

Speaking always of peace while making war confuses the easily confused and provides a fig leaf for those who would like to see the Marxists win. Meanwhile, the violence is spilling across the borders of the region.

The same day Duarte rejected the FMLN proposal, Honduran Gen. Gustavo Alvarez Martinez and his driver were shot dead in Tegucigalpa. Within 15 minutes, the Cinchonero Peoples Movement had claimed credit for his murder. "The execution of Gustavo Alvarez Martinez was assigned to our heroic Lempira command. Long live our martyrs, their ideas and their practices! Let us all organize better to wage the people's revolutionary war! Those who know how to die always win."

Meanwhile in Managua, Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega offered a visitor from the German Democratic Republic a tour of the Karl Marx Hospital and transmitted revolutionary congratulations to comrade Heng Samrin, Vietnam's puppet ruler of Cambodia.

And the slow slide to a Marxist Central America continues.

DESPERATION IN EL SALVADOR

A recent wave of terroristic attacks by Marxist rebels in El Salvador suggests both desperation and callous indifference to the suffering of their countrymen.

The Farabundo Marti Liberation Front guerrillas, who have been unable to win their long war with the U.S.-backed government of El Salvador, are now resorting to the assassination of village mayors and other civic officials who represent the democratic government.

The leadership of the rebels is largely made up of former teachers and professors who have an intellectual loyalty to Marxist theories. Like the crazed revolutionaries who emptied Cambodia's cities and slaughtered a quarter of the nation's population in the 1970s, the Marxists of El Salvador have offered only a theoretical blueprint for what they would do if they came to power.

The economic and political failures of virtually every Marxist regime in the world have apparently not impressed them. They persevere as only theory-intoxicated fanatics can, sure that if they can destroy El Salvador's fledgling democracy they will overcome the extreme right and the military and finally come to power. What happens to the country in the meantime doesn't seem to trouble them.

El Salvador will have a presidential election in March in which candidates connected with the guerrillas will be allowed to run for office—a considerable test of the fragile democratic regime of President Jose Napoleon Duarte, who is dying of cancer. Political participation sometimes leads to moderation. Instead, the Marxists are intensifying the violence.

The civil war in El Salvador has killed an estimated 70,000 people and made half a million people homeless. It has disrupted the economy and increased the poverty of the masses whom the guerrillas claim to represent. Communications have been severed.

When the guerrilla leaders sought contact with elected officials in other Latin countries, they were told to seek peace negotiations with the Salvadoran government. Their response has been the campaign to kill provincial government leaders.

The ranks of the rebels are not growing. The movement is no closer to victory today than it was six or seven years ago. Unable to accept the obvious, the rebels are showing the world and the people of El Salvador that seizing power is what really matters to them. The suffering of the people of El Salvador is apparently a minor matter; the rebels will go to any lengths to destroy democracy.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FAIR AND EQUITABLE CARGO ALLOCATION ACT OF 1989

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, during the last Congress, more than 30 gulf coast representatives and I proposed legislation to repeal an onerous feature of the Food Security Act of 1985 known as the Great Lakes Cargo Set-Aside Program.

The goal of the set-aside was to temporarily help Great Lakes ports retain access to a certain portion of our Public Law 480, title II cargoes; its effect has been to adversely affect other ports throughout our Nation.

The Food Security Act of 1985 unambiguously stipulates that the Secretary of Transportation shall administer the set-aside program "without detriment to any port range".

Mr. Speaker, sadly, the program has not been administered in that manner. During the past 3 years, the Great Lakes Set-Aside Program has been a financial nightmare for ports in the east, west, and gulf coast regions of this Nation.

It has created a system whereby Great Lakes ports have become the only coastal range in the United States that don't have to adhere to the principle of lowest landed cost. Unlike other ports, Great Lakes ports have no incentive to be cost competitive, because they are guaranteed Government cargo regardless of their handling costs.

Let me share with my colleagues several examples of what has happened since the enactment of the set-aside program.

First, the Waterman Steamship Co. in 1988 transported between 80,000 and 100,000 long tons of Public Law 480, title II cargo from the Port of Chicago. Without this set-aside requirement, none of this cargo would have been transported from Chicago or any other Great Lakes port facility. In fact, it would have been handled by ports on either the west or the gulf coasts at a savings to taxpayers of $17 to $20 per long ton—or approximately $2 million.

Second, our Government was forced to pay excessive handling costs to ship bulgur wheat to Haiti and India. Because of the set-aside, it cost our Government $143,000 more in freight charges, a figure which could have purchased an additional 1 million tons of wheat for some needy nation.

Third, in April 1987, our Government purchased for export to Senegal, Africa, 5.1 million pounds of cornmeal from the Lauhoff Grain Co. of Danville, IL. The cornmeal was shipped from the Port of Milwaukee on a foreign-flag vessel at a landed cost of $464,887.

Without the set-aside, the Department of Agriculture could have bought the cornmeal for the same price from the Lincoln Grain Co. of Atchison, KS, and shipped it from Corpus Christi, TX, on a U.S.-flag vessel at a landed cost of $439,311. By so doing, it would have saved taxpayers $25,576 which could have purchased an additional 300,000 pounds of cornmeal for the starving people of Senegal.

Mr. Speaker, these are but three examples of how the Great Lakes Set-Aside Program has damaged other ports, taxpayers, our U.S.-flag fleet, and even starving people around the world.

To make matters worse, since no Federal funds have been appropriated to pay for the additional Great Lakes transportation costs, they have been deducted directly from the Public Law 480, title II budget. This has caused a serious reduction in the amount of cargo provided under Public Law 480, title II and a further loss in the availability of cargo for east, west, and gulf coast ports.

Mr. Speaker, the Great Lakes Set-Aside Program has been a total disaster. It has caused real detriment to all of our port ranges by denying them access to some 300,000 metric tons of cargo; it has cost our taxpayers an additional $4.3 million; and it has resulted in the loss of tons of cargo for starving people throughout the world.

Interestingly, this provision is not even popular among Great Lakes ports' representatives. The U.S. Chairman of the International Association of Great Lakes Ports, Mr. Davis Helberg, has publicly stated that "the set-aside simply hasn't worked. It was a sop to the Great Lakes to wean us off the Government programs. Gulf ports have been highly critical of the set-aside. We agree."

At the same time, one Great Lakes representative, Congressman JIM OBERSTAR of Minnesota, already has introduced legislation in this Congress, H.R. 597, to repeal the set-aside program. In his introductory statement, Congressman OBERSTAR noted that "in the 3 years that these provisions have been in effect, they have created only dissatisfaction and objection on the part of the Great Lakes port authorities. Great Lakes port communities are intensely dissatisfied."

Mr. Speaker, we along the gulf coast share that dissatisfaction. I look forward to working with Congressman OBERSTAR to repeal the set-aside program, which is the only feature of the cargo preference compromise of 1985 that I don't support, and to ensure that this misguided policy is not extended beyond its sunset date of December 31, 1989.

In the final analysis, it is clear that the Great Lakes Set-Aside Program is bad for our Nation's ports, bad for our Nation's taxpayers, bad for our U.S.-flag fleet, bad for the Public Law 480, title II program, and even bad for Great Lakes ports which have no incentive to become more competitive. Without this set-aside, all ports will be given the opportunity to bid on Government cargo on an open, fair, and competitive basis.

Mr. Speaker, that is how the system has historically worked and, with that goal in mind, I am today reintroducing, along with more than 20 of our colleagues, the Fair and Equitable Cargo Allocation Act of 1989.

I urge my colleagues to join with us in supporting this repeal legislation and I am hopeful that Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee Chairman WALTER B. JONES soon will hold hearings on this most important issue. We must end this highly discriminatory reservation system which is having such a detrimental effect on ports throughout the east, west, and gulf coast port ranges.

THE CIRCLEVILLE PHILOSOPHER

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, in central Texas Henry B. Fox, the "Circleville Philosopher," was as well known as Mark Twain, and he often got even better chuckles. His published articles and books were avidly and pleasantly read, and everyone—liberal and conservative alike—could laugh at the truisms in his commentaries.

Henry came from a large family whose members had varied political philosophies, but he staked out his claim and never waivered from his outlook as a progressive philosopher. I have personally been on the receiving end of his barbs and his compliments, but as far as a reasonable stance on the issues Henry Fox was the most consistent person I have ever known—he was against everything, or he was for everything, at one time or another. Those of us who knew him recognized Henry as a wise and learned commentator on his times.

Earlier this month, we buried Henry Fox and many residents of Williamson County and central Texas noted his passing and mourned his loss.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the text of an article from the Austin American-Statesman on the death of Henry Fox be printed in the RECORD immediately following these remarks.

SERVICE SCHEDULED TODAY IN TAYLOR FOR 'CIRCLEVILLE PHILOSOPHER' FOX

(By Linda Latham Welch)

TAYLOR—Services will be today for H.B. Fox, a writer and humorist known as the "Circleville Philosopher," who died Tuesday at Johns Community Hospital in Taylor.

Fox, 78, once wrote, "All I know is that being alive is fun." He lived on a ranch near Circleville in rural eastern Williamson County.

A memorial service will be at 4 p.m. at Condra Memorial Chapel at Condra Funeral Home, 503 Talbot St. in Taylor.

Fox began writing a syndicated humor column 45 years ago. Called The Circleville Philosopher, the column ran weekly in 50 Texas newspapers and other papers nationwide.

Newspaper articles about him said readership of the column was more than 1 million.

A published statement from his family said the column was believed to be the longest-running column in the country.

Though best known for his column, Fox wrote three books: The 2,000-Mile Turtle, and Other Episodes from Editor Harold Smith's Private Journal; Dirty Politics is Fun; and Murder in a Small Town—Perhaps.

Fox's books were full of disgressions in which his characters made observations about the world. In one book, a newspaper editor faced with a power outage said, "You can publish a newspaper without talent, education, writing ability, correct spelling, moral fiber, fairness or intelligence, but not without electricity."

Fox was born in Granger. Like all seven children in his family, he was a graduate of Southwestern University in Georgetown.

After graduation, he lived for a year in New York City and wrote of that time: "All I saw up there were writers trying to get rich enough to buy a house and move to the country. I saw a shortcut and figured, why not move to the country in the first place and to hell with getting rich?"

Fox moved back to Texas, ran two weekly newspapers for awhile, sold them, and in 1949, bought a ranch in Circleville, where he said he raised Republican cows.

Fox is survived by his wife, Marie Fox of Taylor; daughter, Carol Fox of Austin; and son and daughter-in-law, John and Diann Fox of Taylor.

Other survivors include his sisters, Mary Elizabeth Fox of Temple and Frances Smithers of Huntsville; brothers, Howard Fox of Hearne and Bryan Fox of Granger; and five grandchildren.

RETIREMENT OF SGT. ROGER L. KERR

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me today in congratulating Sgt. Roger Kerr on his retirement from the Ventura County Sheriff's Department.

Sergeant Kerr joined the department October 2, 1967, and has worked in various details. He is a trained, experienced major crimes investigator whose experience extends to arson, explosives, robbery, homicide, and property crimes.

He has been a member of the Ventura County Sheriff's bomb team for 15 years, polygraph examiner since 1977, certified forensic hypnosis investigator, and member of the International Association of Bomb Technicians and Investigators as well as the California Homicide Investigators Association.

Sergeant Kerr has been recognized by Federal, State, and local agencies for excellence in his public service. He was Officer of the Year of the Thousand Oaks Kiwanis Club in 1970.

Prior to joining the sheriff's department Roger worked as a supervising psychiatric technician for 11 years. Because of his expertise in this field he was appointed by the Ventura County Board of Supervisors to serve on the mental health advisory board and served in that capacity until August 1984.

Again, please join me in congratulating Sergeant Kerr and wishing the very best in his retirement years.

IN MEMORY OF VINCENT G. KENNELLEY

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge the loss of a respected civic leader and dear friend, Vincent G. Kennelley, the mayor of Fairport, NY. Vinnie died on January 22, 1989, much too soon. I am deeply saddened by his death, and I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to a man who served as mayor of the village of Fairport for 8 years.

Vinnie Kennelley was devoted to his family, his country, and his village. He was an unfailing public servant who dedicated his life to working for others. Vinnie had the courage to stand up for what he believed in, and he always put the needs of the people first. He worked relentlessly to make our community a better and safer place to live, and his devotion to Fairport will long be remembered.

I remember Vinnie on cold Fairport mornings, manning his volunteer post as a crossing guard. For 10 years, he and his wife Noreen helped keep the children of the village safe on their way to school. I remember how he loved talking about his days working on the New York Central Railroad. I remember how he lobbied me in Albany for his volunteer firemen and the VFW. I remember how Vinnie was determined that the village would keep its public power system that gave us the lowest electric rates in the country.

Perhaps the fondest memory I have of Vinnie is of the last Fourth of July Parade. Vinnie had the plaque at the War Memorial altered to include Korean and Vietnam veterans. When we gathered at the monument, Vinnie asked all the veterans of the Vietnam and Korean wars to come forward. At first there was reluctance, and then, one by one, relinquishing the hands of their children, the veterans approached the memorial. Men who had served together met for the first time others who had been their comrades in battle. Wives, and the rest of us, found ourselves trying to hide our tears. Children looked at their fathers with awestruck eyes. Many who were new to the village found a common bond with older veterans. Only Vinnie could have brought them together.

Vinnie first won elective office in 1956 when he became a trustee for Fairport Village. He was reelected countless times until in 1981 he was appointed to the office of mayor. He was elected to the office of mayor in 1982, and again in 1986.

For over 30 years Vinnie Kennelley served the village of Fairport, and everything about the village was a part of him. He refurbished local bridges, revamped the village business district and fought for safer school crossings. Many of his efforts were recognized with awards like the 1985 Perinton Chamber of Commerce Citizen of the Year Award and a Bronze Star from the U.S. Army for his valiant and dedicated service in World War II. He was a past commander and life member of the Perinton Memorial Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Words do not pay homage to a man who accomplished so much. No one has played a greater role in the life of Fairport than its mayor, Vinnie Kennelley. Little League opening day, Memorial Day celebrations, parades, Fairport Fire Department meetings, public meetings and local sporting events—no matter what the occasion—Vinnie was always there.

When he died, thousands came to his wake. More than 900 in one evening stood in the cold for the chance to pay their respects. Mounted sheriffs watched over the grieving crowd. At his funeral a passing train blew a last salute, and the fire siren sounded a mournful tribute.

Mr. Speaker, Vinnie was a dear friend and adviser whom I will miss, as will the people of his village. I share the grief I know his family suffers, but I know they are comforted by the fact that he was respected and loved. Vinnie Kennelley was a thoroughly honest man who dedicated his life to his wife, his children, his church, his friends, and his village. There is no greater representative of the words community and devotion than Vinnie Kennelley, and we will not see his like again. His death is truly a loss to us all.

THE S&L BAILOUT

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, President Bush has put forth a positive plan to resolve the S&L crisis. Congress should give expedited consideration to his plan. Continued delay serves only to add significantly to the cost of what is already a huge taxpayer burden.

I am glad that the focus of the debate has shifted somewhat from budget considerations to another key policy question; namely, how to ensure that nothing like this even happens again. Nevertheless, the budget treatment of the bailout is not insignificant, and I take issue with that part of the President's proposal.

I am not naive as to the political desirability of off-budget treatment. But I believe that honest budgeting requires on-budget status. If my colleagues find that argument less than compelling, perhaps they will consider a cost argument. The fact is that off-budget status will raise significantly the total cost of the bailout. Each basis point above the Treasury borrowing rate adds $5 million a year to the cost of borrowing $50 billion, so that a spread as low as 25 basis points means an added, and unnecessary, cost of $125 million a year.

This cost implies a windfall to those who purchase the bailout bonds and a burden on whoever pays the interest, whether S&L's or taxpayers.

The following article from today's Wall Street Journal by Alan Murray illustrates this issue. I commend it to my colleagues.

BUSH S&L BAILOUT CREATES ILLUSION OF DEFICIT CUT THAT CONGRESS QUESTIONS BUT WANTS TO BELIEVE

(By Alan Murray)

WASHINGTON.—The savings-and-loan crisis looks like a bonanza when viewed through the strange prism of President Bush's fiscal 1990 budget.

It shows government spending on deposit insurance declining by $14 billion from the current year. That's enough to pay for the president's new spending initiatives three times over.

The $14 billion windfall, of course, is a mirage. Government spending on insolvent savings and loans will actually increase substantially in the year beginning Oct. 1. But, with some accounting sleight of hand, that huge liability has been turned into a sizable asset, easing the administration's budgetary squeeze.

"I'm amazed, amused and bemused," says Carol Cox, director of the bipartisan Citizens for a Responsible Federal Budget. "Would you believe the thrift crisis is going to save us money and reduce the deficit? Well that's just what the budget says!"

The deposit-insurance artifice, involving off-budget financing, is the biggest in a bag full of tricks that Budget Director Richard Darman used this year to pull off a remarkable budgetary coup. His proposal included a far sparser rise in overall government spending than any Reagan budget. But it is skillfully packaged to emphasize spending increases and obscure painful spending cuts.

As a result, it's the first budget in eight years to escape the fate of being declared "dead on arrival" by Congress. Concludes Ms. Cox: "Dick Darman is the smartest person I've ever observed."

The reduction in budget outlays for the saving-and-loan rescue stems from the administration's plan to create a new company called the Resolution Financing Corp., which will borrow $50 billion over the next three years by selling long-term bonds. The company will be modeled after other government-sponsored but privately owned enterprises, such as the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae). And like Fannie Mae, the new corporation won't be part of the federal budget.

The money borrowed by the new corporation, however, will simply be handed over to the government, and will appear on the federal books as a "receipt." Thus, rather than increasing the budget deficit, the scheme actually reduces it.

Defenders of this artifice argue that the bond sale should be off-budget because it doesn't have the same economic effects as most types of deficit spending. While borrowing to finance government spending drains the nation's pool of available capital, borrowing to rescue thrifts doesn't. Instead, it merely transfers capital from bond buyers to thrift depositors.

Budget experts say the new borrowing ought to be counted in the budget. "It gets to be a murky legal issue," says Rudolph Penner, former director of the Congressional Budget Office. "But conceptually, forgetting the intricacies of accounting, I really do think it should be counted as federal borrowing."

Moreover, by creating a new borrowing agency, the government will be forced to pay a higher interest rate than it would on straight government debt, increasing the taxpayers' cost by anywhere from $2 billion to $8 billion over the life of the bonds.

"This is not just an arcane, inside-the-beltway bookkeeping dispute," says GOP Rep. Willis Gradison of Ohio. "The Treasury plan is a highly creative accounting shell game which gives a windfall to the purchasers of $50 billion of new debt in order to be able to argue that the FSLIC rescue should be off-budget. That's a mighty high price to pay for appearances."

Budget accounting rules, established by a federal commission in 1967, allow an organization to be taken off the budget if it is privately owned. Administration officials argue that the Resolution Financing Corp. passes that test. They say it isn't any different than the Financing Corp. set up two years ago to raise money for recapitalizing the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. Both the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office agreed that that corporation could be treated as an off-budget entity.

But Financing Corp., or FICO, bonds were financed totally by money from the S&L industry. In the case of the new corporation, two-thirds or more of the interest payments on the bonds would be paid by Treasury, making it difficult to argue that the corporation isn't part of the government.

Thomas Stanton, a Washington lawyer who specializes in government-sponsored enterprises, says the new corporation "clearly and unambiguously fails the private-ownership test." And the Congressional Budget Office sent a memo to the House Ways and Means Committee last week that said putting the new corporation off-budget may damage "the integrity of the unified budget, the meaning of the budget deficit, and deficit-reduction efforts."

Mr. Darman, however, doesn't share that view. "Some people will make the argument, including perhaps some in the Congressional Budget Office, that the payment of interest by Treasury changes the budgetary treatment," says a spokesman for the White House budget office, "We do not accept the administration's legerdemain. That's because, like the White House, members are anxious to meet the Gramm-Rudman law's deficit-reduction targets this year, without facing the political pain of excessive spending cuts or tax increases.

Rep. Gradison has proposed, as an alternative, putting the borrowing for the S&L bailout on budget, but exempting it from the Gramm-Rudman targets.

IN RECOGNITION OF NATIONAL VOCATIONAL EDUCATION WEEK

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I stand today in order to pay tribute to a very special branch of our educational system, the vocational education systems of the United States, in celebration of National Vocational Education week that took place last week.

The vocational education system of our country provides for a truly diverse educational experience for our high school students. The vocational education system provides an opportunity for those students who want to supplement their traditional education with those skills that will lead them down a track towards a vocation of their choice while still in high school. The value of a vocational education in preparing these students for a successful career in the business world is immeasurable.

Mr. Speaker, I think I speak on behalf of all of us who are fortunate enough to represent school districts with vocational education systems, when I ask that we take a few minutes to express our gratitude for a job well done. Please join me in congratulating the vocational education systems of our country on their many years of educational success. May their programs continue to flourish in the future.

CHILDREN DELIVERING DRUGS—NOT NEWSPAPERS

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, the prevalence of drugs in the United States has reached epidemic proportions. Drugs have touched every segment of our society. Drug dealers have taken over our streets and are corrupting our children.

I would like to share a personal example about how our children are being tainted by the prevalence of drugs in our society. I visited a school in Camden, NJ, and a teacher came to me and asked how she can teach values to children who are carrying $200 in their pockets? When I was a boy, I delivered newspapers and learned about the work ethic. Today, children are being used by drug dealers as delivery men and lookouts. Children are being exploited by the drug kingpins.

Soon, I plan to introduce legislation which will increase the penalties for persons who use minors in their drug operations. We are fighting a war against drugs in the United States but the drug traffickers and dealers are hiding behind an army of children. We must punish the people who are profiting from corrupting our society and our children.

The following Courier Post article "Ten-Year-Old Boy Used To Run Drugs, Police Say" may be of interest to my colleagues:

[From the Camden (NJ) Courier Post, Feb. 1, 1989]

TEN-YEAR-OLD USED TO RUN DRUGS, POLICE SAY

(By Louis T. Lounsberry)

CAMDEN.—A 20-year-old man surrendered to police yesterday and was charged with using a 10-year-old boy as a drug runner to make deliveries in return for a quarter or a toy car.

Arrest warrants had been issued Friday for Roy Lee Shinsholster, of the 1400 block of Kenwood Avenue, in connection with the incident that police said began in late December and continued into the first week of January.

Shinsholster surrendered to Detective Sgt. Al Handy yesterday afternoon after he learned through family members that the warrant had been issued.

He was charged with endangering the welfare of a child and using a child in a drug trafficking operation. He also was charged with burglary, theft and harassment in connection with the same incident.

Police, who were withholding the name of the family involved to shield the child's identity, gave the following account of their investigation:

The boy's mother first met Shinsholster in mid-September when she had told him to stay away from her 14-year-old daughter. Since that time, the mother said Shinsholster had exchanged words about the incident but neither knew the other by more than their first names.

During this time, unknown to his mother, the 10-year-old was befriended by Shinsholster.

Then earlier this month officials at the Lincoln School, where the boy attends fourth grade, notified his mother that her son was having absentee problems.

The boy said that he had made friends with a man named "Roy" and that Roy had asked him to do favors for him. He was given boxes wrapped in either Christmas or birthday wrapping paper and told to go to a store in the vicinity of Kenwood and Euclid Streets. The boy was either given a name or shown a photograph of the person to whom he was to deliver the package, which police suspect contained cocaine.

The meetings took place sometimes inside the store and on other occasions outside the store. Police said the storeowner was not aware that drug trafficking was taking place at his establishment.

The person that the boy met would in turn give the boy an envelope which he would return to Roy. When his job was complete, the boy would be rewarded with a quarter or a small toy car, said Detectives Gary Miller and Edwin Figueroa, who investigated the case.

The deliveries continued until one day when the boy became curious and opened one of the packages in the basement of his home. He became ill after tasting its contents, which he threw away, police said. After that he didn't make any more deliveries for his friend, police said.

Soon after that, the woman learned that "Roy" was looking for her son.

Then last Tuesday, the woman received a telephone call at work from a friend who said someone was trying to break into her home in the 1500 block of Greenwood Avenue. The family has since moved to another location in the city.

When she arrived at her house, she saw a man later identified as Shinsholster leaving from a basement door carrying a bow, a quiver with arrows, clothing and a television set, taken from the home.

It is believed that the items were taken as payment for the drugs that the boy was supposed to deliver on the day he opened the box and threw out its contents, police said.

The mother learned Roy's last name and notified police, who investigated the case.

The suspect was sent to the Camden County Jail to await bail hearing and arraignment today.

TRIBUTE TO BROOKDALE COMMUNITY COLLEGE

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. PALLONE . Mr. Speaker, in 1986, President Reagan began the tradition of February as National Community College Month. This tradition has taken hold, and communities around the country extend special recognition during the month of February to the contributions made by their community colleges.

I wish at this time to pay special tribute to an excellent institution located in my legislative district: Brookdale Community College. With its main campus in Middletown, NJ, and satellite facilities located in nearby communities, Brookdale provides a wide range of educational services to more than 30,000 people each year. Brookdale students range in age from 18-year-olds right out of high school to senior citizens seeking to develop new interests and skills. Like the many other fine community colleges located all across our Nation, Brookdale provides transfer education, 2-year degree programs, certificate programs, for employment, basic skill education, continuing and community education, career development, and job search assistance.

Community colleges are an invaluable resource in that they provide their students with high-quality education at a reasonable cost within commuting distance of their homes. During this month of February—and throughout the year—we should recognize the contribution made by our community colleges, and make every effort we can to support their continued growth and development.

HAVE YOU READ YOUR GUNS AND AMMO MAGAZINE THIS MONTH?

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, glancing through my March 1989 Guns and Ammo magazine yesterday afternoon, I came across a particularly well-written "letter to the editor" from a police officer from Bakersfield, CA. If any of my colleagues missed the article, or haven't had a chance to sit down with their G&A yet, I thought I'd share the letter with you:

FOOD FOR GUN THOUGHTS

Being that yours is a California-based firm, I am sure that you are aware of the California law that prohibits the delivery of newly-bought handguns into the hands of the purchaser until a period of 15 days has elapsed. This is to allow local law enforcement and the Department of Justice some time in which to check the purchaser for a criminal record or record of mental problems or history of drug abuse. This statute has been in effect for several years.

Being a police officer who has reviewed these "applications to purchase handguns," I am pleased to announce that the system actually works. I have seen many handgun purchases denied because of a purchaser's past criminal record.

I am somewhat disheartened by the NRA's recent battle against the 7-day waiting period proposed in recent Federal legislation. The [Brady] bill was backed by several police and pro-police organizations as a way of monitoring who was buying handguns. As you are well aware, the bill was defeated in the Halls of Congress. Score this one as a victory for the crooks.

DIPLOMATIC SUCCESS IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest diplomatic triumphs of 1988 for the United States and the Reagan administration was the signing on December 22, 1988, of agreements between South Africa, Cuba, and Angola providing for the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola and the independence of Namibia. These agreements represented the culmination of 8 years of hard work by Secretary of State Shultz and Assistant Secretary Chester Crocker, who masterminded and shepherded this settlement from the battlefield to the bargaining table.

The signing of this agreement would not have been possible without the strong and continuing U.S. commitment to the negotiations in our role as an "honest broker." It is both rare and noteworthy when such patient negotiations bear fruit. I urge my colleagues to read a recent editorial, "African Pact a Victory for Diplomacy," published in the Omaha World-Herald, which summarizes the situation in southern Africa and underscores the point that diplomacy can be a powerful tool in the peaceful solution of international problems when it is properly and skillfully applied.

AFRICAN PACT A VICTORY FOR DIPLOMACY

The United States and South Africa, with behind-the-scenes help from the Soviet Union, have helped southern Africa move toward peace. South Africa has signed a U.S.-mediated agreement with Cuba and Angola that will let Namibia become independent and require 50,000 Cuban soldiers to leave Angola.

The Cuban troops have been fighting a Soviet proxy war against the anti-Communist UNITA guerrilla army of Jonas Savimbi. They wouldn't leave on their own, so some kind of trade had to take place. The South Africans, in effect, offered to trade their control of Namibia, also known as South West Africa, for the evacuation of the Cubans.

Namibia was once a German colony. It was seized by the British in World War I and became an appendage of South Africa. When the South Africans gained independence, they held on to Namibia. Despite a 1966 U.N. demand for its independence, Namibia has remained a South African dependency. Twice the size of California, the mineral-rich but relatively barren area has a population of only a million people.

Angola agreed to the trade-off because it was eager to see the South Africans withdraw from adjacent African territory. The other "front line" anti-South African states approved. The deal was struck. After one or two diplomatic glitches, signing of the preliminary agreement took place Tuesday.

Hard bargaining, attention to details and a refusal to give away anything without reciprocity proved to be the right tactics for dealing with the Cubans and Angolans. The successful negotiations were a good example of what can be accomplished through international cooperation and diplomacy.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE FEDERAL OCS PROGRAM?

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, after many years of careful consideration and thousands of hours of public debate, Congress enacted the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act Amendments of 1978.

This historic law states that it is national policy of the United States to "expedite exploration and development of the Outer Continental Shelf in order to achieve national economic and energy policy goals, assure national security, reduce dependence on foreign sources, and maintain a favorable balance of payments in world trade".

Regrettably, in the 11 years since the passage of this landmark statute, the Congress has repeatedly supported efforts to undermine and destory the positive effects of offshore energy development. In many cases, these efforts have been led by the same individuals who strongly supported the 1978 amendments. Sadly, the U.S. Congress has abdicated its responsibility and, in so doing, has condemned this Nation to an ever-increasing dependence on foreign oil.

By contrast, many of our trading partners, most notably Great Britain, have decided to take a different approach. Unlike the United States Congress, the British are encouraging offshore driling by offering royalty holidays and improved contract terms with new tax and financial incentives. As a result, many U.S. companies are now allocating a growing portion of their exploration budget for drilling in international waters.

Mr. Speaker, can we really blame them? After all, last year the U.S. Congress even went so far as to prohibit drilling on certain tracts in the eastern Gulf of Mexico already legally obtained by exploration companies at a cost of more than $100 million.

Mr. Speaker, this postlease sale prohibition has had a chilling effect on the OCS Program for it demonstrates that the Federal Government is an unreliable partner willing to unilaterally change the rules at any time.

Mr. Speaker, it's time we follow the British example and time for Members of this body to read the excellent article by internationally respected oil expert, Mr. Paul L. Kelly. In his article entitled "Abdicating Our Energy Leadership", Mr. Kelly predicts that "unless we move decisively to provide incentives to drill in the United States, there will not be enough industry infrastructure left to manage the energy crisis which is sure to follow from our current malaise and lack of leadership".

I urge my colleagues to listen to Mr. Kelly's sound advice and to allow our Nation's OCS Program to go forward in the balanced manner required by the OCS Lands Act Amendments of 1978. The text of Mr. Kelly's article, which was printed in the January 1st Houston Chronicle, follows:

[From the Houston Chronicle, Jan. 1, 1989]

ABDICATING OUR ENERGY LEADERSHIP

(By Paul L. Kelly)

As the curtain opens on 1989, U.S. imports of crude oil and oil products have increased sharply to about 8 million barrels a day or about 50 percent of domestic consumption. By contrast, a new study in Great Britain concludes that self-sufficiency in oil in that country will extend until the end of the century.

Crude oil production in the United States fell 361,000 barrels a day in November, the steepest monthly drop in 1988. Drilling activity here is at one of its lowest levels since 1981, and the small number of applications for drilling permits does not offer hope for an upturn in the early months of the new year. Yet the jack-up drilling rig fleet in the British sector of the North Sea is now fully employed even in the face of uncertainty about world oil prices.

The difference in outlook highlights a growing divergence in national energy policy between the United States on the one hand, and Britain and our other Western allies on the other. Cecil Parkinson, Britain's secretary of state for energy, has just published a bill to abolish royalties for post-1982 oil and gas fields in the Southern Basin of the North Sea and onshore. The elimination of the royalty (normally 12.5 percent) is part of a package of measures announced in the Thatcher government's budget which "are designed to make the North Sea fiscal regime more responsive to the economics of individual fields and encourage the development of new fields in the Southern Basin." Lest there be any doubt about the short-term sacrifices Britain is willing to make to stimulate domestic energy prodcution and assure long-term energy supplies, in 1987-88 the government received over 1 billion pounds (about $1.8 billion) from royalties.

This is not the first time Britain has adjusted its fiscal policies to spur domestic production. The government's latest action follows tax incentives adopted in 1987 to stimulate exploration in marginal fields and reflects policies of the European Economic Community as a whole.

Meeting in 1986 to approve new long-term energy objectives for 1995, EEC foreign ministers said, "considering the major changes which have taken place in the oil and natural gas markets since 1980, the more relaxed state of the markets has released some of the pressure. However, the change is not without danger. The temporary surpluses . . . together with pressure toward lower prices, could, in the short term delay or undermine the decisions required to ensure that long-term needs are covered. The effect of a depressed market on the situation of the energy industries could prevent investment." Besides pursuing energy alternatives and conservation policies, EEC member-states should "maintain suitably balanced legal and financial inducements in favor of prospecting for and production of oil within the Community."

Following the EEC ministers conference at a meeting of the International Energy Agency in Paris in 1987, U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington tried to convince other industrialized nations to follow the U.S. example of building large volumes of emergency oil stocks as protection against a revival of OPEC's price-fixing clout. For the most part, the Europeans found U.S. reliance on its strategic petroleum reserve by itself to be a rather weak defense against potential supply disruptions. They rejected Herrington's call and suggested the United States try harder to expand domestic production, improve energy efficiency and diversify fuel sources. Alick Buchanan-Smith, the chief British delegate to the meeting, told reporters that no one doubted the wisdom of maintaining an emergency reserve of crude oil. But he said, "this should not be an end in itself" and that there was "some question" about the U.S. government's readiness to cope with a crisis in world oil supplies.

The Europeans are not the only U.S. allies concerned about America's inability to cope with an oil supply crisis. Last year the Canadian House of Commons Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources urged a higher level of exploration and development activity for light crude oil in the non-OPEC world so that more oil would be available to importing countries in the event of another embargo or disruption in OPEC supply. The committee said: "It is particularly important that the United States solve its worsening supply problem, given its central position in the world economy and its pivotal role in Western security."

One of the realities of the world petroleum arena is that governments compete with each other for the limited exploration and development dollars spent by major oil companies and large independents. This competition comes in the form of adjustments to royalties, contract terms, tax and other financial incentives. Britain's bold moves to attract oil investment are not the only foreign government actions taken to attract exploration dollars. Since the oil price collapse, more than 25 countries have made changes which recognize the high costs and risks involved in petroleum exploration and, in one way or another, reduce the government's take. Australia, Indonesia, Canada, Ecuador, Gabon and China are among the latest to act. As a matter of fact, among the non-OPEC oil-producing countries the United States is notable for its inaction.

Spending by American oil companies is now shifting from the United States to international exploration and production. Lower finding costs, more untested basins and the potential for larger discoveries create a natural attraction to invest overseas. Add to these factors inducements such as those Britain and other countries are now providing, and the pace of foreign investment quickens. The United States needs to wake up to these realities and make itself more competitive.

As oil imports cross the 50 percent mark, it is clear that the United States is abdicating its leadership role in energy policy in the Western alliance. The oil patch depression of the past five years already has done irreparable harm to the domestic petroleum industry and our production capability. One of the results of declining U.S. production and the ongoing shift from domestic to foreign investment by American oil companies is likely to be further efforts to trim U.S. overhead costs. This could mean another round of job cuts in 1989. Another result will be a continued worsening of the oil trade deficit.

We should really take a hint from our good friends, the British, and follow their example. Unless we move decisively to provide incentives to drill in the United States, there will not be enough industry infrastructure left to manage the energy crisis which is sure to follow from our current malaise and lack of leadership.

UNIVERSITY OF TEXAS OLYMPIC TRAINER

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, on February 6 we buried Frank Medina in Austin, TX, and we mourn the loss of one of the great University of Texas sports figures of our time.

Frank wasn't a sprinter or hurdler; he didn't run the mile or leap in the broad jump—he was a world-class trainer who taught hundreds of young athletes how to train and excel. He knew how to inspire his athletes and how to be a friend to them. For four decades Frank was part of our athletic program and every athlete who represented the University of Texas remembers him with love and affection.

Frank was such a caring and thoughtful man that most athletes who knew him felt that he alone was the counselor best suited to advise them. After graduating and going on to compete in professional life, these athletes would often come back and seek Frank's counsel regarding all their dealings.

Few sports fans fully recognize just how much Frank contributed to training and conditioning techniques. His expertise was so highly valued that he was named the U.S. Olympic team's trainer three times.

It was my privilege to visit with Frank here in Washington as well as in Austin and to share his hopes and aims. We have lost a gentle and caring person who greatly enriched the University of Texas and athletics everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the text of an editorial from the Austin American-Statesman memorializing Frank Medina be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The editorial follows:

UT SIDELINE HERO LEFT LASTING LEGACY

Frank Medina, a Cherokee Indian who contributed mightily to the University of Texas sports program, was buried today. Medina, 73, died Thursday after almost 40 years of work with UT.

Standing near the coaches of many sports events at the campus, Medina was familiar to the hundreds of thousands of fans who have attended games at UT. Yet few of those fans knew the tremendous contributions Medina made through his sports training and conditioning. So valued were his skills he was three times the U.S. Olympic team's trainer.

What Medina did for UT sports was as important as any wishbone invention or new defensive set. An unsung hero. Medina went about his business with diligence and integrity and retired only after he was sidelined by a stroke. He will be missed.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM E. REPASKY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor that I stand today to pay tribute to one of the most distinguished, dedicated and respected citizens of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio, Mr. William E. Repasky.

Mr. Repasky is an outstanding man who has dedicated his life to public service. Prior to his appointment as Mahoning County Recorder in 1981, he had served 30 years in city and county government. From the beginning of his service when he was a deputy sheriff, until the end of his service as Mahoning County Recorder, William Repasky has continuously left behind a legacy of excellence and achievement.

Mr. Repasky has also graciously and most honorably dedicated himself to community service. He has voluntarily served on fund raising campaigns for the March of Dimes, Muscular Dystrophy and the American Cancer Society. In addition, he has been a lifelong member of St. Matthias Church, and has served as church councilman for 16 years and is a past officer of its Holy Name Society.

William Repasky has also been very actively involved in the Democratic Party both on the local as well as State level. Locally, he has held the post of district leader and party treasurer. On the State level, he has served as a State officer of the Young Democrats of Ohio.

I would like to congratulate William Repasky for his service to the people of the Mahoning Valley. He has done a most admirable job. It is with great pride that I stand here today to pay tribute to William Repasky and to wish him well in all future endeavors.

FREE TRADE ARRANGEMENT WITH JAPAN

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill for the purpose of authorizing the negotiation of a free trade arrangement with Japan. The idea hardly originated with me, rather it has the support of a number of highly esteemed experts in the area of United States-Japanese relations, including the former United States Ambassador to Japan, Mike Mansfield.

As the possibility of an FTA with Japan became more and more the subject of discussion, the International Trade Commission was requested to explore the advantages and disadvantages of such an undertaking. The report, revealed a large universe of positive ideas about such an agreement, and as experts reflect further, the possibility of improving the bilateral relationship seems to be gaining in popularity. Consequently, I am determined to move the process closer to reality.

As our second largest trading partner, with total two-way trade exceeding $100 billion, developing a long-term trading relationship with Japan has never been more important. A free trade arrangement would provide us with the opportunity to develop that relationship. By eliminating all trade barriers in both the United States and Japan and establishing new mechanisms for resolving trade differences, the United States will profit considerably. The removal of trade tension and the overall feeling of goodwill, which generally accompanies an agreement of this nature, will finally provide the United States with our long-desired free access to the Japanese market place.

My bill draws on the positive features of the ITC report and derives from it a very basic set of objectives necessary for the negotiation of a United States-Japan FTA. Chief among the negotiating objectives set forth in my bill are the removal of formal and informal trade barriers, the creation of new mechanisms for dispute settlement, and most importantly, the improvement of market access in both countries as a means of stabilizing the bilateral balance of trade. My bill also would allow both countries to determine the initiation date for negotiations by mutually agreeing to the forum, structure, and timetable. This would assure that both countries plan to oblige themselves to reciprocal trade disciplines. Success in these areas will ultimately lead to the improvement of the United States-Japanese political atmosphere, increased economic benefits, and the advancement of other United States trade objectives.

Rather than continue trade negotiations with Japan in the ad hoc manner with which we have become accustomed, an FTA offers both countries the opportunity to improve our political atmosphere. It is likely that a dispute settlement mechanism would eliminate the friction we now experience under our current system. The special trade relationship that we have gained with Israel and anticipate we will achieve through the United States-Canada FTA, will increase our willingness to reach mutually desired goals.

The principal reason for entering into a free trade agreement is the economic benefits it will provide to the manufacturers and consumers in the signatory countries. Open markets increase competition, thus eliminating inefficiency, which ultimately results in lower costs to the consumer. There is no reason to believe that a United States-Japan FTA will have anything less than the desired result.

Additionally, an FTA will advance other U.S. trade objectives. Our trading partners will see clearly that the U.S. intends to pursue the most open and mutually advantageous trade arrangements that are possible, whether it be through multilateral or bilateral agreements. Rather than sit idly by watching the enormous economic progress of nations engaged in free trade, hesitant nations will likely learn the value of joining progressive trade efforts and of contributing to improved trade disciplines worldwide. The bilateral process, therefore, can enhance the multilateral process.

My purpose of exposing the advantages of an FTA is not to misrepresent the ITC report, as indeed, it too explored the disadvantages of such an agreement as well. Admittedly, the differences in our languages, customs, and business practices present some difficulties. However, the hurdles we must overcome shrink in comparison to the enormous benefits we will gain as a result of our endeavor to create a free trade area with Japan.

TRIBUTE TO BILL WILLOUGHBY

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay special tribute today to Bill Willoughby, the president of Cleveland Track Material Inc. Four short years ago, Bill began a business venture in Cleveland. Since then, he has proved to be a classic successful American entrepreneur: full of creativity, self-confidence and determination.

In large part, his success is the product of a well-conceived, ambitious business plan. Bill took his expertise as a division manager for Alloy Engineering Co. and used that as a base for his new enterprise. From there, he turned quickly to his long-range plan—the production of standard and specialized rail joint bars.

We in Congress could learn a lot from Bill's judicious use of resources. Bill, realizing he was in a competitive business, kept expenses down. He has bought most of his metalworking machinery at auctions for a fraction of the cost of new equipment and has not hesitated to make money-saving purchases all over the country and across the globe.

I think Bill should be especially proud of the jobs his business has spawned. A 1,200-percent increase in employment over decade would be a remarkable achievement. Bill's company has accomplished this feat in only 4 years.

In addition to his many business responsibilities, Bill is also the area coordinator for the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, NY. He enjoys working on the admissions process with hundreds of students and their families, and with Army friends. As a graduate of West Point, Bill exemplifies many of the characteristics needed for an Academy appointment: leadership, integrity and outstanding intellect.

I am fortunate to have Bill as a friend and adviser. I want to extend my best wishes to him for an even more prosperous 1989. He is certainly one of Greater Cleveland's finest.

SCENIC BYWAYS: OUR NEXT FEDERAL HIGHWAY PRIORITY

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, we are a nation on wheels. Americans drove some 2 trillion miles last year. We have 3.9 million miles of roads, including nearly 43,000 miles of Interstate Highways. Forty-three percent of Americans in a recent survey listed pleasure driving as a primary form of recreation. Twenty-two million Americans own or use recreational vehicles and there are 7.4 million RV's on the road today.

Construction of the Interstate Highway System has been our top Federal highway priority for over 30 years. We have invested $95 billion constructing an intricate network of high-speed highways linking our major cities from coast to coast and border to border. The Interstate Highway System—the largest public works project in history—is now 99 percent complete. Only 794 miles are yet to be built, and 495 of them are currently under construction. We now face the question of what our highway priorities will be in the post-Interstate era.

The legislation we introduce today addresses that question. It would direct the Secretary of Transportation to identify scenic and historic roads throughout the country, and develop methods for creating a system of scenic byways to complement the Interstate System.

Unlike Interstate highways, which provide high-speed, point-to-point travel, scenic byways would take travelers away from the main corridors and into the mountains, forests and countryside, along the lakes, rivers and seashores of our great country. Instead of bypassing towns and villages, scenic byways would take the traveler into America's rural communities—to eat, to shop, perhaps to experience a different way of life. Interstate highways are a means of getting to a destination; scenic byways are a destination in themselves.

Unlike the Interstate System, scenic byways would not be an interconnected network. The scenic byway system would consist of many, unconnected roads—in many cases just segments of roads—with scenic or historical significance. Most of these roads already exist—as Federal, State and county roads. A national scenic byways program would create a system to enhance, protect, and promote these roads and give them special designation and signage.

The Great River Road is a prime example of the scenic byway concept. Starting in Minnesota, the Great River Road winds some 3,000 miles along the Mississippi River to Louisiana. Passing through 10 States, the road incorporates Federal, State and county highways and spurs, carrying travelers to, through or near 1,583 historical sites, 217 wildlife areas, 90 registered landmarks, 36 locks and dams, 288 river towns and 72 State parks. The familiar green and white Great River Road sign lets the traveler know he is on a very special route, and scenic overlooks along the way provide panoramic views of the country's mightiest river. A national scenic byways program can expand this concept to nearly every state.

A scenic byways program would not be a roadbuilding program of the same scope of the Interstate Program. It would require relatively little acquisition for right-of-way and new construction. It would, however, provide a cooperative program between the Federal, State and local governments, private industry and concerned individuals to develop and preserve a valuable resource: our scenic and historic sites and roads.

Such a program would place a special emphasis on preservation—of the environment, of historical sites and landmarks, of the natural charm of the small town. It would allow States and local governments the flexibility to determine the best way to develop their scenic and historic roads in ways best suited to their unique history and geography. It would stimulate the tourism industry and provide new business for motels, restaurants, and services away from the Interstate corridors.

In 1991, the current Surface Transportation Assistance Act expires, and, unless Congress acts, the Highway Trust Fund with it. Now is the time to begin planning for our highway priorities in the post-interstate era. The legislation we introduce today is the first of many steps in the creation of a scenic byways system. This bill has bipartisan support here in Congress and broadbased support outside of Washington.

Driving for pleasure and leisure is a preferred American pastime, and this country is full of scenic wonder. Scenic byways would help Americans know and preserve our environmental and historical heritage.

SSI FOR CHILDREN

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Mr. MATSUI, Mr. DOWNEY, and Mr. ROYBAL as an original cosponsor of an important legislative package, including H.R. 866, H.R. 867, and H.R. 868 to make the Supplemental Security Income Program [SSI], which provides needed income assistance to low-income disabled children, adults, and the elderly, fairer and more responsive to those it is intended to serve.

I am especially pleased to support H.R. 868, the "SSI Disabled and Blind Children Act of 1989," to correct grave inequities in SSI eligibility determination for as many as a million disabled children.

Every year about 50,000 children with chronic conditions such as muscular dystrophy, spina bifida, and organic brain syndrome are denied SSI assistance because their conditions were not thought to be serious enough by the Social Security Administration, and individual assessments for these children, which take into account the need for extraordinary medical care or family support services, have consequently never been conducted. Serious and often fatal conditions affecting children, such as cystic fibrosis, are not even included in the highly restrictive "Listings of Impairments" which are used to define eligibility.

As a result, only a quarter of all disabled low-income children living at home are enrolled in the SSI Program. Testimony presented to the select committee by families with disabled children demonstrated that when these disabilities or illnesses are chronic, and repeated visits to the doctor or hospital are the norm, the economic and emotional outcomes for the family can be devastating. For poor families who must also forfeit income to stay home and provide life-saving care for their children, income supports become critical.

In addition to denying these critical cash benefits available through the Supplemental Security Income Program [SSI], to hundreds of thousands of low-income children with disabilities, in most States where automatic Medicaid coverage is tied to SSI eligibility, these children are also denied essential medical care. For children with serious chronic illness, a stable, regular source of health care protection can be life saving.

As the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families has learned, debilitating illness or disability does not discriminate on the basis of age. And today, the frightening reality is that more children are unprotected than ever before.

Poor disabled children are especially vulnerable. Only half of all poor children and 60 percent of low-income disabled children are covered by Medicaid. For low-income families, the cost of routine medical care or care for a minor illness or surgery can be catastrophic. And without adequate insurance, the only alternative often becomes more costly institutionalization.

The legislation we introduced earlier this month would correct the highly restrictive disability, income and asset limitations which currently exclude most eligible children from the SSI Program, and as a result Medicaid. The bill would require the Social Security Administration to conduct individualized assessments of each child, assume presumptive disability for children age 3 or younger with congenital or genetic problems, require the Secretary to immediately publish the childhood mental impairment listings and review all childhood listings so that they take into account the age of the child. The bill also makes important modifications in the way family income and resources are counted to ensure that children and families in need are adequately served.

In addition, many impoverished elderly and disabled adults are excluded from the SSI Program because the allowable asset limit is very low. Even when an individual is deemed eligible, the current level of Federal assistance does not provide recipients with an income that even brings them up to the poverty line.

H.R. 866, the SSI Benefit Improvements Amendments of 1989 raises the SSI Federal benefit standard level to the poverty line and raises the asset limit to reflect inflation. H.R. 867, the SSI Technical Amendments of 1989 makes eligibility determination less stringent by easing up on bureaucratic obstacles and unfair asset and income limitations.

I would like to thank the National Center for Youth Law in San Francisco, the California Rural Legal Assistance Program, Community Legal Services of Philadelphia, and the National Mental Health Law Project for their tireless efforts to bring these important issues to our attention.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and assure its timely passage. These measures provide one way to ameliorate poverty among disabled elderly and disabled adults, and to reduce the traumas of childhood disability and assure that families are given every opportunity to stay together.

SUPREME COURT'S RICHMOND RULING UNDERMINES AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court's recent decision to overturn a Richmond, VA, set-aside program strikes a severe blow to the struggle for racial justice in our country. Affirmative action efforts such as Richmond's have been indispensable to ongoing efforts to correct the economic and social inequities which centuries of racial discrimination have engendered.

A recent exceptionally thoughtful editorial in the Kalamazoo Gazette exposes the illogic and insensitivity of the Supreme Court's recent majority opinion and, in my view, is deserving of the attention of my House colleagues.

RICHMOND RULING BLOW TO AFFIRMATION ACTION

It would be great if this were a colorblind society. But no bending of rose-colored glasses can produce that effect, no matter how U.S. Supreme Court justices might wish it were so.

The Supreme Court decision last week overturning a Richmond, Va., affirmative action plan designed to aid minority contractors has placed an unfortunate cloud over efforts to remedy the still-present effects of past racial discrimination. Although the decision dealt specifically with a municipality's set-aside program, it places all other similar efforts, whether public or private, in doubt.

Like it or not, the nation's highest court was probably speaking for many Americans when it, in effect, declared by fiat that the playing field is, indeed, level. And, further, that affirmative action can only be applied when it is a specific remedy—"give that contractor a job"—to a specific set of proven acts of discrimination—"on such and such a date, this contractor was wrongfully denied a job." It cannot take into consideration the reality that if there is little potential of getting jobs, the contractor won't be in business at all.

Reality is on the side of Justice Thurgood Marshall, who said in his dissent that "A majority of this court signals that it regards racial discrimination as largely a phenomenon of the past and that government bodies need no longer preoccupy themselves with rectifying racial injustice. The battle against pernicious racial discrimination or its effects is nowhere near won."

Like Henry L. Marsh, former Richmond mayor, we believe affirmative action laws like that tossed out by the Supreme Court have been one of the best ways to assure that blacks share in the American economic dream. "One of the best ways to cut black unemployment is to build up black businesses and we were doing that, making real progress. A court decision like yesterday's is very, very damaging," Marsh told The New York Times.

Before the Richmond ordinance was passed, black contractors were getting less than one percent of the city's business. After it was passed, black contractors got the required 30 percent. But as soon as the lower courts threw out the ordinance, officials say, the percentage once again dropped to less than one percent.

Michigan officials are hoping that the state's affirmative action law will stand. The set-aside program requires that 7 percent of all purchasing and construction grants go to minority-owned business and 5 percent go to businesses owned by women. State contracts awarded to women and minorities increased from $34 million in 1982 to $114.6 million in 1987.

Righting the wrongs of racial discrimination remains one of this nation's most difficult, agonizing problems. The cancer of racism has its tentacles deep in the vital organs of our society and economy. And its ravages can be seen in the continued exclusion of many minorities from the mainstream of American life, including its economic life.

In 1965, former President Johnson spelled out the need for affirmative action to begin to redress past actions: "You do not wipe out scars of centuries by saying 'now you're free to go where you want and do as you desire,'," he said. "You do not take a person who for years has been hobbled by chains and liberate him, bringing him up to the starting line of a race and then say 'you're free to compete,' and justly believe that you have been completely fair."

The race-consciousness of affirmative action plans is much like chemotherapy—a necessary step to rid our democracy of an illness that threatens our very life as a nation. Like chemotherapy, affirmative action can be difficult to swallow. Like chemotherapy, it's only something you'd take if you are sick. Affirmative action is an antidote to rid the body of a toxin before healing can take place.

It is hard to argue with Justice Antonin Scalia's assertion that "The difficulty of overcoming the effects of past discrimination is as nothing compared with the difficulty of eradicating from our society the source of those effects, which is the tendency—fatal to a nation such as ours—to classify and judge men and women on the basis of their country of origin or the color of their skin. A solution to the first problem that aggravates the second is no solution at all.

Certainly there is a dynamic tension between the 14th Amendment to the Constitution—the equal protection clause—and affirmative action. And yet those programs were devised to heal a society which, by its actions and inactions, did not allow the Constitution to function as it was written.

To declare that this is a colorblind society, is to whistle in the dark. To pretend that the cancer of racism that has embedded itself in our national soul isn't there is eqully fallacious.

Despite the ruling, efforts to open the economic mainstream to all must continue. More than ever, public and private institutions and employers must remain committed to battling the complex and subtle lingering effects of racism. The quest to level the playing field must go on.

And some day, this society could become truly colorblind.

A TRIBUTE TO DONALD RIGGS

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, it gives me tremendous pleasure to have this opportunity to stand before my colleagues here in the House of Representatives and pay tribute to a close personal friend, Donald Riggs.

On February 28, 1989, the Myasthenia Gravis Association of western Pennsylvania will present Donald Riggs with the 1989 Art Pallan Humanitarian Award for Community Service and Volunteerism.

This award was established on May 4, 1982, in the name of Arthur E. Pallan in recognition for distinguished community service. The award proclaims:

Acknowledging that Art Pallan exemplifies the essence of integrity, sincerity, and commitment that are needed by the people to unify our ability to change and to endure. * * * And honoring Art Pallan because of his personal warmth, depth of belief and strength of character which have led him to serve as an affirmative advocate, supporting individual rights and dignity, providing impetus to the caring services, and enriching communication between the people.

It is certainly true that Don exhibits similar extraordinary personal qualities and exemplary public service. The Pittsburgh community has benefited greatly from Don's professional and volunteer contributions. Not only has Don assisted the Myasthenia Gravis Association of western Pennsylvania, but has contributed his time, talent and resources to multiple community and human service agencies, such as the Spina Bifida Association and Special Olympics.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me in saluting Donald Riggs. His boundless dedication to his community is a fine example for us all. It is clearly evident that Donald Riggs is a most outstanding and deserving recipient of the Art Pallan Humanitarian Award.

REV. ARTHUR LIBBY ALBERS—A LIFE OF DEDICATED COMMUNITY SERVICE

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it was in 1955 that Rev. Arthur Libby Albers moved to St. Petersburg, FL to start a Lutheran mission and since his arrival, the people of Pinellas County have been blessed by his more than 30 years of unselfish public service to our community.

Upon his arrival in St. Petersburg, Reverend Albers delivered his first sermons in the recreation hall of a trailer park. The Garden of Peace Lutheran Church he founded now serves more than 480 families and the beautiful sanctuary which is now its home was designed by Reverend Albers.

In addition to his work with the church and his service as chaplain in the U.S. Navy Reserve, Reverend Albers found time to serve on the Pinellas County School Board for 16 years. He has served on the boards of the YMCA, United Way, little league baseball and football associations, the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign War, Kiwanis Club, Pinellas Association of Retarded Children, and the St. Petersburg Junior College. He also helped found and manage three highrise residential Lutheran retirement centers in Pinellas County and was the founder and is still the chaplain of the Swanholm Nursing Home in St. Petersburg.

Following my remarks, I would like to include a recent article by Jeanne Pugh of the St. Petersburg Times which chronicles Reverend Albers' years of community services and commemorates his retirement as pastor at the Garden of Peace Lutheran Church. The article reassures his friends and neighbors that although he is retiring, Reverend Albers will be no less active. He plans to continue his work as chaplain at Swanholm, he will become headmaster and chaplain of the Garden of Peace preschool he founded 32 years ago, and he is even thinking about returning to Stetson Law School to finish work on a law degree.

Mr. Speaker, the dedication Reverend Albers has shown over the years to improving the quality of life of the people of Pinellas County can be an inspiration to other community leaders throughout our Nation. It is that spirit of service I want to share with my colleagues today in addition to wishing Reverend Albers and his wife Doris all the best in their retirement years.

[From the St. Petersburg Times—Dec. 31, 1988]

ARTHUR LIBBY ALBERS' YEARS IN ST. PETERSBURG HAVE BEEN DEDICATED TO COMMUNITY SERVICE

(By Jeanne Pugh)

When the Rev. Arthur Libby Albers, 63, looks back on his 33 years in St. Petersburg, the images that come to mind do not just concern his long pastorate at Garden of Peace Lutheran Church.

He remembers, for instance, the day in 1966 when he was persuaded to enter politics.

"I was at a meeting at the YMCA, and Congressman (C.W.) Bill Young suggested that I run for a seat on the School Board," he recalled last week. "I said no—but then I started thinking about it. So I called the woman who was chairman of the School Board at the time and asked her what it involved. I'm afraid I was misled. She said there was nothing to it. All you do is visit schools and, once in a while, you have a ribbon-cutting. Then you have coffee and punch. I decided that, if that was all there was, I should go for it and get to know more people. So I filed (as a candidate) and was fortunate enough to win."

Within a year, the Pinellas County School Board was involved in a bitter teachers' strike that placed the board members "between a rock and hard place, right between the teachers on one side and the parents on the other," he said.

"Suddenly, I realized that we weren't playing games and that this was not just ribbon-cutting." "There were meetings day after day, night after night. My telephone rang at all hours. I felt sympathy for the teachers, but I had to do what I felt was right.

The strike was not settled amicably. The School Board fired the striking teachers and hired substitutes. "We had to hold our ground," Albers said. "and I know the teachers did not agree with that, but it had to be done."

That crisis had barely passed when a federal court ordered the School Board to begin busing students to integrate the schools. During that period. Albers was elected chairman of the board.

"I felt that, as God-fearing people, we had to comply with the law, which was morally right," he said. "I believed firmly that there had to be equality in the schools and that busing was the way the courts wanted it done."

The ensuing conflict proved to be even more bitter than the teachers strike, he said. "My car tires were slashed, my house was egged, they burned my front lawn with tire tracks. They put up signs labeling us—the School Board members—as skunks. And they harassed my children—even though our three youngest were among the first to be bused from the north side to the south side of town."

Albers served 16 years on the board, including five as chairman. But in 1982, he was defeated by a fellow Republican in the primaries. By then, he had won back the confidence of the teachers and was endorsed by the Pinellas Classroom Teachers Association. But his opponent. Wally Voege, who won in the general election, defeated Albers by charging that Albers was too strong an advocate of busing, that he was opposed to teaching creationism and permitting organized prayer in the schools and that he was not sensitive to school needs in northern Pinellas County.

Albers laughs about it now. Back then, he admits, the defeat hurt. "But it was a blessing in disguise," he said. "I didn't realize how much I needed to relax."

One benefit, he said, is that a neuromuscular problem in his right leg has disappeared. He also thinks his family—his wife, Doris, and their four sons and four daughters—came out of all the controversy stronger individuals.

Albers acknowledges that he probably became too much involved in community service during the last three decades, but he thinks that was part of his duty as a minister. In addition to his service on the School Board, he has served on the boards of the YMCA, United Way, Little League baseball and football, American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Kiwanis Club, Pinellas Association for Retarded Children and St. Petersburg Junior College.

He also served for many years as a chaplain in the U.S. Navy Reserve and helped to found and manage three high-rise residential centers for Lutheran retirees—two in St. Petersburg and one in South Pasadena. He was the founder—and remains the chaplain—at Swanholm, a nursing home in west St. Petersburg.

Such an eclectic life was far from his mind, he said, when he was growing up on a farm near Flatville, Ill., and preaching sermons to the cows. All he wanted to do then was be a Lutheran minister. After graduation from Capital Theological Seminary in Columbus, Ohio, he served as pastor of a church in Steubenville, Ohio for three years before entering the Navy as a chaplain.

His introduction to Florida came after his release from active duty two years later, in 1955, when he was asked by the American Lutheran Church to start a mission in St. Petersburg.

The denomination had acquired some land in what is now the Tyrone area of St. Petersburg, in an area that "was nothing but cattle ranches and pig farms," he recalled. "I preached my first sermons in the recreation hall of a trailer park that was located just about where the Sears store is now in the Tyrone Square Mall."

He eventually was able to sell the land that the church had acquired and buy a tract in a better location—amid a growing new residential district—at 6161 22nd Ave. N. The Garden of Peace Lutheran Church is still on that property, although if has grown from a tiny congregation to one serving about 480 families.

The current sanctuary, built in 1967, was designed by Albers. It is octagonal in shape, with a pulpit on a raised platform in the middle of the room. The motorized pulpit, Albers said, "can move 180 degrees while I'm preaching my sermon." The plan has since been copied by a number of churches.

Albers, whose retirement becomes effective today, does not intend to stop working. He has taken the required courses for certification as a preschool administrator, and next week, he will become the headmaster and chaplain of Garden of Peace's 100-student preschool, which he founded 32 years ago. He also will continue to serve as chaplain at Swanholm, and he is toying with the idea of returning to finish his studies at Stetson College of Law—a project he began a number of years ago but had to give up because of his other activities. He also hopes that he and his wife will have the time to visit their grown children and seven grandchildren who are now scattered throughout the United States.

But they won't be moving from St. Petersburg. "We've had 33 beautiful years here," he said, "and, as far as I'm concerned, this will serve as paradise until the real one comes along."

TRIBUTE TO MR. CHARLES "BUD" KNUTSEN

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my admiration, respect, and gratitude for a good friend and outstanding leader of the Democratic Party, Mr. Charles "Bud" Knutsen, who will be recognized by the North Valley Democratic Club for his service as president. Although Bud is stepping down as president, he will undoubtedly continue his long record of involvement.

Bud Knutsen is one of the most involved, dedicated, persistent, and effective leaders of Democratic politics in the San Fernando Valley. His hard work and efforts have had a major impact on the grassroots movement within local and statewide Democratic Party activities. Bud's exemplary leadership in Democratic causes has been characterized by a deep commitment and strong sense of idealism. He is a strategist and political thinker and shows every sign of enjoying his work.

Thoughout his career, Bud has always shown a willingness and desire to give freely of his valuable time to aid organizations and causes important to the Democratic Party. At present, he is Chair of the Democratic Party of the San Fernando Valley and Chair of the 39th Assembly District Committee. He is also a member of the North Valley, Burbank, Chatsworth, Sherman Oaks, and Valley West Democratic Clubs. He is an active member of the Los Angeles County Democratic Central Committee, member of the executive board of the California Democratic Party, and a member and delegate for the California Democratic Party.

Bud Knutsen is a native of Minneapolis, MN. At age 16, he joined the U.S. Army to help defend his country. He attended Long Beach State University where he received his baccalaureate of arts and his master of arts, and has been happily married for many years.

It is my distinct honor and pleasure to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Mr. Charles "Bud" Knutsen, an outstanding member of our community and truly dedicated citizen.

TRIBUTE TO REV. NEVIN L. KERSHNER

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Rev. Nevin L. Kershner, the Pastor Administrator of the Philadelphia Protestant Home. With his guidance, this fine facility has become a leader in long-term care for the elderly.

Reverend Kershner has been Pastor Administrator since 1969. In the two decades of Reverend Kershner's tenure, there has been remarkable change at the Philadelphia Protestant Home.

Twenty years ago, when Reverend Kershner was a young man, there were 160 women and men living at the home. Today, the facility is home to more than 550. Twenty years ago, there were only two buildings. Now, there is a bustling campus.

The challenge of Reverend Kershner's ministry at the Philadelphia Protestant Home lies in the responsibility for the lives of the residents, the people who care for them and the buildings which house them. For 20 years, Reverend Kershner has met that challenge with joy and enthusiasm.

Mr. Speaker, the Philadelphia Protestant Home will celebrate it's 100th anniversary this year, an event you will hear more about from me later this spring.

I believe it is fitting that Rev. Nevin L. Kershner will usher in the centennial of the Philadelphia Protestant Home and lead the home into it's next century. I congratulate him and wish him continued success.

TAX INITIATIVE TO IMPROVE MANAGEMENT AND UTILIZATION OF PRIVATE TIMBER LANDS

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today that puts our tax policy on the side of jobs, wildlife conservation and proper timber management—where it always should have been in the first place.

My bill will restore to tens of thousands of small woodlot owners the right to deduct reasonable business expenses in managing their nonindustrial private timberlands.

Incredibly, IRS recently stripped woodlot owners of this favorable tax treatment—even though it would cost states like Oregon an untold number of timber industry jobs and undercut proper forest management.

IRS claims its new ruling is consistent with the 1986 tax reforms. But we say here today that it is entirely inconsistent with the intent and will of Congress in enacting that legislation.

I'm proud to be joined by my cosponsors—Representatives THOMAS, CALLAHAN, and MORRISON—who have worked very hard with me in crafting the "Farm and Woodland Owners Tax Simplification Act," which affects owners of 275 million acres of timberland.

As a result of the IRS ruling, our small woodlot owners lost an incentive and our public lost an insurance policy for proper management of our Nation's timberlands. Most woodlot owners are now unable to meet the stringent new rules for material participation, the test that separates passive investors from active managers.

That means they can't even use professional foresters to manage their lands without endangering their active management status—and the more favorable treatment that active management allows.

This bill addresses a timber management and conservation issue which touches all concerned with our Nation's forests, public and private.

Discouraging proper, professional planning for private timber lands encourages their mismanagement. And that means less timber at a sustainable, high-yield level. Some of these lands may even be transformed to nontimber uses, as owners search for better tax advantages.

As a consequence, wildlife habitat and watershed maintenance will suffer. At the bottomline, even more pressure will arise to harvest timber from public lands to satisfy demand from our wood products mills and plants.

In Oregon, we've got something in excess of 3.3 million acres in small woodlot ownership. Our state forecasts on future timber need already have earmarked these acres as an increasingly important source of trees for our mills. Already, these woodlands account for about 9 percent of the total tree harvest—public and private—in Oregon.

These woodlots account for real dollars, and real jobs. Discouraging tree farming activities such as these will have real, long-term, adverse effects on employment and consequently, on IRS tax collections.

No less a conservationist organization than our own 1,000 Friends of Oregon has sued the IRS, asking that the agency reconsider its regulations in this area.

Here is a partial list of groups supporting this legislation:

Alabama Forestry Association, American Paper Institute, American Pulpwood Association, Association of Consulting Foresters, American Forestry Association, Audubon Society, Florida Forestry Association, Forest Farmers Association, Forest Industries Committee on Timber Valuation & Taxation, Georgia Forestry Association, Louisiana Forestry Association, National Woodland Owners Association, National Association of State Foresters, National Christmas Tree Association, National Forest Products Association, North Carolina Forestry Association, One Thousand Friends of Oregon, Oregon Forestry Association, The Sierra Club (Oregon chapter), The Society of American Foresters, Tennessee Forestry Association, Texas Forestry Association, and Virginia Forestry Association.

INTRODUCTION OF PUBLIC PENSION PARITY ACT OF 1989

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, today I reintroduced legislation that I first introduced in the 98th Congress to rectify a serious tax inequity facing retired public employees. The time has come to bring this bill's goals to fruition.

Most public sector retirees receive a pension in lieu of the Social Security benefits received by private sector retirees. These retirees—people who have committed their careers and lives to public service—deserve equitable taxation of their retirement benefits. In general these benefits are the equivalent of a private sector retiree's Social Security benefits, however, they are not treated like Social Security benefits under the Internal Revenue Code. My legislation would tax public pension benefits on a parity with the preferred tax treatment of Social Security benefits.

The principle of this legislation is simple—treat public sector in the same manner as private sector retirees for purposes of taxation. It is fundamentally unfair to tax the retirement benefits of public employees differently than the Social Security retirement benefits of private sector employees. The full taxation of public pension benefits effectively penalizes these retirees for having worked in public service rather than the private sector.

The Public Pension Parity Act would amend the Internal Revenue Code so that a public retiree could deduct that portion of his or her governmental pension up to the maximum Social Security retirement benefits for an individual or couple from their gross income. Under the current law, individuals earning up to $25,000 and couples earning up to $32,000 receive full tax exemptions for their Social Security benefits. The maximum exemption for a 65-year-old retiring in 1989 is $10,795.20.

This legislation became increasingly important because of the repeal of the 3-year basis recovery rule in the Tax Reform Act of 1986. I urge my colleagues to join me this year in my efforts to correct this inequity in the tax treatment of public retirees' benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I submit a copy of this bill for the RECORD:

H.R. —

A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide an exclusion from gross income for that portion of a governmental pension received by an individual which does not exceed the maximum benefits payable under title II of the Social Security Act which could have been excluded from income for the taxable year.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Public Pension Parity Act of 198 ".

SEC. 2. EXCLUSION FOR CERTAIN PENSIONS AND ANNUITIES UNDER PUBLIC RETIREMENT SYSTEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to items specifically excluded from income) is amended by redesignating section 135 as section 136 and by inserting after section 134 the following new section:

"SEC. 135. CERTAIN PENSIONS AND ANNUITIES UNDER PUBLIC RETIREMENT SYSTEMS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Gross income does not include any amount (otherwise includable in gross income) received by an individual as a qualified governmental pension.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—The aggregate amount excluded under subsection (a) for the taxable year shall not exceed—

"(A) the maximum excludable social security benefits of the taxpayer for such year, reduced by

"(B) the social security benefits (within the meaning of section 86(d)) received by the taxpayer during such year which were excluded from gross income.

"(2) SERVICE REQUIREMENT.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to any qualified governmental pension received by the taxpayer during the taxable year unless the taxpayer (or the spouse or former spouse of the taxpayer) performed the service giving rise to such pension.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED GOVERNMENTAL PENSION.—The term 'qualified governmental pension' means any pension or annuity received under a public retirement system to the extent such pension or annuity is not attributable to service—

"(A) which constitutes employment for purposes of chapter 21 (relating to the Federal Insurance Contributions Act), or

"(B) which is covered by an agreement made pursuant to section 218 of the Social Security Act.

"(2) MAXIMUM EXCLUDABLE SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS.—The term 'maximum excludable social security benefits' means an amount equal to so much of the applicable maximum benefit amount for the taxpayer for the taxable year which would be excluded from gross income if such benefit amount were treated as social security benefits (within the meaning of section 86(d)) received during the taxable year.

"(3) APPLICABLE MAXIMUM BENEFIT AMOUNT.—The term 'applicable maximum benefit amount' means—

"(A) in the case of an unmarried individual, the maximum individual social security benefit,

"(B) in the case of a joint return, 150 percent of the maximum individual social security benefit, or

"(C) in the case of a married individual filing a separate return, 75 percent of the maximum individual social security benefit. For purpose of the preceding sentence, marital status shall be determined under section 7703.

"(4) MAXIMUM INDIVIDUAL SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFIT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'maximum individual social security benefit' means, with respect to any taxable year, the maximum total amount (as certified by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to the Secretary) which could be paid for all months in the calendar year ending in the taxable year as old-age insurance benefits under section 202(a) of the Social Security Act (without regard to any reduction, deduction, or offset under section 202(k) or section 203 of such Act) to any individual who attained age 65, and filed application for such benefits, on the first day of such calendar year.

"(B) PART YEARS.—In the case of an individual who receives a qualified governmental pension with respect to a period of less than a full taxable year, the maximum individual social security benefit for such individual for such year shall be reduced as provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary to properly correspond to such period.

"(5) PUBLIC RETIREMENT SYSTEM.—The term 'public retirement system' means any pension, annuity, retirement, or similar fund or system established by the United States, a State, a possession of the United States, any political subdivision of any of the foregoing, or the District of Columbia."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 86(b)(2) of such Code (defining modified adjusted gross income) is amended by inserting "135," before "911".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code (relating to items specifically excluded from income) is amended by redesignating the item relating to section 135 as section 136 and by inserting after the item relating to section 134 the following new item:

"Sec. 135. Certain pensions and annuities under public retirement systems."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

WEEKSVILLE PRESERVATION PROJECT

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Speaker, this Black History Month I rise to pay tribute to the Society for the Preservation of Weeksville and Bedford-Stuyvesant History in Brooklyn, NY, and its executive director, Joan Maynard. They have dedicated much time and effort to restoring the remaining wood-frame houses which were once part of Weeksville, one of New York's first settlements of free African-Americans.

The restoration project began in 1968 when two African-American students at the renowned art college in Brooklyn, Pratt Institute, decided to do research on Weeksville. Encouraged by their professor, historian Jim Hurley, Dolores McCullough and Patricia Johnson began the work that would lead to the discovery of the four wood-frame houses—the only structures remaining of Weeksville.

When Hurley learned that a site close to the center of what was once Weeksville was about to be cleared for low-income city housing, he asked city authorities to allow an archeological dig on the site before the city began its wrecking work. Much of the Bedford-Stuyvesant community became involved in the project to save the houses, particularly the children at P.S. 243, a school which was built on land where one of Weeksville's first institutions, Colored School No. 2, once stood. In 1971, the year that the society was formed, the children of P.S. 243 raised nearly $1,000 to start the restoration project. Since then, additional funding for the project has come from city, Federal, and private sources, including numerous African-American organizations. The society, a member of the African American History Museums nationally, recently received a National Endowment for the Humanities grant to conduct a self-study on its restoration project.

In addition to the restoration work, the society conducts free tours of the landmark houses 5 days per week for all who are interested.

It has a slide program and lecture on the restoration project and on Weeksville's history which it presents in public schools, colleges and hospitals throughout New York City and New York State. And the society has produced a booklet about Weeksville and the restoration project for children entitled "Let's Make a Landmark" which features a cutout of a wood-frame Weeksville house that children may put together themselves.

The society's executive director Joan Maynard says the project is not only crucial in preserving the history of Weeksville, but in helping to build a sense of continuity, self-knowledge, self-esteem and self-worth for present and future generations of Brooklyn's African-Americans. She feels that young African-Americans in particular will have a better understanding and deeper appreciation of their strengths and abilities once they know of their Weeksville ancestors and the incredible odds these first settlers faced.

Life was not easy for Weeksville's citizens, for even the "freedom" of these African-Americans had severe limitations. Weeksville, named after stevedore James Weeks who purchased two lots from the old John Lefferts farm, was founded in 1838, only a little over a decade after slavery was abolished in New York. But despite the end of slavery there, free African-Americans faced racial discrimination in housing, education, employment, and voting. Even skilled African-Americans in Weeksville were frequently restricted to menial and domestic work. Because slavery persisted in the South until the end of the Civil War, free African-Americans were always under the threat of being kidnaped by hired "slave catchers" who also snatched those who had never been slaves in their hunts in the North for fugitives. And because the African-Americans of Weeksville were primarily poor, many lost the ownership of their property when it was confiscated for nonpayment of taxes or debt.

Despite these odds, the people of Weeksville were always ready to lend a helping hand; there are indications that Weeksville was a way station in the underground railroad which assisted African slaves fleeing the South for freedom in the Northern States and Canada. And during the 1863 draft riots when white males in Manhattan protested conscription into the Civil War which they felt the slaves had caused, Weeksville assisted free Africans from Manhattan who sought protection from white gangs.

Weeksville continued to thrive as a community until about 1920 when its residents began to spread out to other communities. The first African-American policeman of what was then the city of Brooklyn, Moses Cobb, lived in Weeksville. One of the earliest free African-American churches in Brooklyn, the Bethel AME Church, was founded in Weeksville in 1848. In later years, Weeksville had a newspaper, an orphanage, a senior citizens' home, and its own baseball team.

Mr. Speaker, the legacy of Weeksville's free African-Americans is a legacy of courage and commitment. Thanks to the restoration work of Joan Maynard and the Society for the Preservation of Weeksville and Bedford-Stuyvesant History, generations of Brooklyn residents will continue to learn from, and be inspired by, that history.

NATIONAL WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, today, with my esteemed colleague Congresswoman SNOWE, I am honored to introduce National Women's History Month.

Women's History Month has been proclaimed by Congress each year since 1980. Congressional Members from both parties have come together to recognize past and present women leaders and their contributions to our society.

This bill provides the opportunity for teachers, historians, librarians, and Members of Congress to educate the public about the role women have played in the economic, social and cultural life of our country. We want to honor women such as Susan B. Anthony, Clara Barton, Harriet Tubman, Amelia Earhart and Sally Ride, as well as women whose everyday experiences give our younger generation the strength and encouragement to pursue their dreams and aspirations.

By expanding the focus of "history lessons" to include the contributions of women, our students can gain a deeper understanding and appreciation of American history. Women leaders of the past and the present serve as important role models to our sons and daughters as they begin to vision their future. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this bill. Thank you.

PADEREWSKI SINGING SOCIETY OBSERVES 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. HENRY J. NOWAK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Speaker on March 4, the Ignace Jan Paderewski Singing Society in Buffalo, NY, will celebrate its 50th anniversary.

It is with great pride and pleasure that I recognize the society for its many achievements. For the past 50 years, it has promoted the very rich Polish cultural traditions indigenous to the Greater Buffalo metropolitan area, which I am privileged to represent. In addition to sponsoring concerts and an annual ball, many members participate in other civic organizations, further enhancing the quality of life in our community.

The society has also been actively involved nationally in the Polish Singers Alliance of America, which is observing its 100th anniversary this year.

Mrs. Adeline Wujcikowski, cochairman of the anniversary committee, has forwarded me a brief history of the Ignace Jan Paderewski Singing Society, which I would like to insert in the RECORD at this point:

PADEREWSKI SINGING SOCIETY,
Buffalo, NY.

Congressman HENRY J. NOWAK,
Rayburn Building, Washington, DC.

HONORABLE CONGRESSMAN NOWAK: This year marks the 50th Anniversary of the Ignace Jan Paderewski Singing Society No. 275 member of the Polish Singers Alliance of America, Buffalo, New York.

Saturday, March 4, 1989 we will begin our memorable year with a Jubilee Mass to be offered at St. Adalbert's Basilica at 4:00 p.m. followed by a Banquet and Ball scheduled at Hearthsone Manor, 333 Dick Road, Depew, New York. Starting with cocktails at 6:00 p.m. to be followed by dinner, program and dancing.

Our choral group has lived up to its aims and goals in the promulgation of song and music.

We, the committee, for this auspicious occasion humbly request Congratulations and or a Citation from the President of the United States, Honorable Goerge Bush, and we sincerely hope you will be able to intervene for us in securing some recognition which will be presented at the banquet March 4, 1989. We, wish also to request this occasion be included in the Congressional Records. Attached is a brief history of our organization.

If this is possible please mail any correspondence to the Cochairman of the committee Miss Adeline Wujcikowski, 327 Sweet Ave., Buffalo, New York 14212

Thank you in advance for your consideration and cooperation, we remain,

Sincerely,

ROSE M. RICHTER,

President.
THEODOSIA BUCZKOWSKI,
Cochairman.
ADELINE WUJCIKOWSKI,
Cochairman.

Enclosure.

I.J. PADEREWSKI SINGING SOCIETY CELEBRATES ITS 50th ANNIVERSARY

The I.J. Paderewski Singing Society had its beginning on March 3, 1939 at St. Adalbert's Basilica, where on March 4, 1989 we will be present at the 4:00 p.m. Mass to commemorate this milestone and to honor its deceased members over the past 50 years.

It was through the inspiration of the late Rev. Anthony J. Krawczyk, the late Walter Kotowski and the director emeritus Michael C. Slominski who combined the voices of the St. Theresa's Young Ladies Sodality of the Parish and the Holy Name Society to form the I.J. Paderewski Singing Society. At that time Maestro Ignace Jan Paderewski was still alive and a letter was written to him asking permisison to use his name for the society. Maestro Paderewski personally granted the society permission to use his name for our choral group, which was only days prior to his death that this telegram was received.

Michael C. Slominski was not only its organizer but was the group's first Choral Director until just a few years ago when he had to resign due to personal reasons. The late Walter Z. Kotowski was its first president, a post he held for 18 years.

The society held its first concert October 13, 1940 at the St. Adalbert's Auditorium. The organization throughout its 50 years presented annual concerts and ball. Aside from sponsoring concerts annually the society remained faithful to its goals by promoting polish culture and our heritage participating in various manifestations of fraternal organizations, provided liturgical enhancement at many of Polonia's Parishes.

The singing group has joined the Polish American Singers Alliance a National organization in September 1947 and has been very active participating in its Tri-Annual international conventions. We celebrate a dual anniversary the 50th or our organization and the 100th Anniversary of the Polish Singers Alliance of America, this year 1989.

The society's faithful and devoted president is Mrs. Rose M. Richter who has been president of the group for several years. The present choral director is Donald Jenczka. Two of the charter members remain active within the group Theodosia Buczkowski and Adeline Wujcikowski and who are co-chairing the Society's 50th Anniversary.

The society has had a spiritual leader and for the past several years Rt. Rev. Msgr. John R. Gabalski has been the Chaplain of the Paderewski Singing Society.

The society participated in the International Conventions of the Polish Singers Alliance of America taking part in the choral competition at each of these conventions. The group was victorious in several of the competions placing third in the Mixed group category in 1953, 1956, 1965 and 1986.

Several of the members have been distinguished at the National Convention having been bestowed Honorary Membership to the Polish Singers Alliance of America. Among the honorees are Michael C. Slominski, the late Walter Z. Kotowski, Adeline S. Wujcikowski, Theodosia Biczkowski, Daniel J. Kij, Edwin V. Doruszewski, Rose Wieckiewicz, Florence B. Oleszek and Wanda Slominski.

TRIBUTE TO THE REVEREND GEORGE CHAUNCEY

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to the Reverend George Chauncey who will retire on March 1, 1989, having completed 36 years of service in the Presbyterian Church. George was the first director of the Washington Office of the Southern Presbyterian Church, [U.S.A.]. Since the formation of the reunited Presbyterian Church [U.S.A.] in 1983, he has served as deputy director of the Washington office.

I had the good fortune to become acquainted with George as he made the rounds of Congress representing the views of the Presbyterian Church on U.S. policy toward Central America. In my opinion, the church could not have found a more compelling voice to speak about the human tragedy occurring in Central America. He sought to inspire rather than berate by calling those of us in this body to stand for a U.S. policy that would embody the best of U.S. tradition and values.

George's compassionate vision will be missed on Capitol Hill. He deserves our thanks for the many years that he has helped to hold before Congress issues of social and economic justice. We have been served by his fortitude in advocating the perspectives of the church. I wish him the best as he begins his well-earned retirement.

JOE NIXON WILL BE REMEMBERED

HON. JIM JONTZ

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. JONTZ. Mr. Speaker, Joseph H. Nixon, of Wabash, IN, will be greatly missed by many of us in the Hoosier State. A community leader and newspaper executive for decades, Joe Nixon was a dedicated civic activist who worked tirelessly to improve the lives of his Hoosier friends and neighbors.

Joe Nixon was chairman emeritus of Nixon Newspapers, Inc., which publishes the Wabash Plain Dealer and the Peru Daily Tribune in my congressional district, as well as nine other newspapers in Indiana, Illinois, and Louisiana.

Joe Nixon served our community in many ways, including terms as president of both the Peru and Wabash Chambers of Commerce. During his tenure with the Peru Chamber, he successfully convinced the Navy to build the Bunker Hill Naval Air Station near Peru. Today, that facility is the site of Grissom Air Force Base, a key link in our Nation's air defenses.

Joe Nixon worked for world peace on trips to South America, Europe, Russia, the Middle East, Asia, and Africa. His efforts for flood control resulted in construction of the Mississinewa, Salamonie, and Huntington Reservoirs in our State.

Joe Nixon began his career in the newspaper business in 1934, as a reporter for the Michigan City Dispatch. He served the Indiana journalistic community for 54 more years, including service as director of the Inland Daily Press Association and president of the Hoosier State Press Association.

Joe Nixon was honored for his public service by many civic groups. The distinctions that he has earned include the Wabash Chamber of Commerce's Distinguished Citizen Award, the Peru Kiwanis Club Community Service Award, the Wabash Valley Association Pioneering Award, the Indiana Council of Churches Christian Service Citation, and the Sagamore of the Wabash.

Joe Nixon devoted his life to serving the communities of northern Indiana, and he will be remembered by all whose lives he touched.

HON. JOSEPH CARRIGG

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, it is with great regret that I bring to the attention of my colleagues the death earlier this month of Joseph Carrigg, a former Member of this House. After reapportionment took place in 1952, Joe Carrigg was first man to serve as Congressman from the newly formed 10th District of Pennsylvania.

Those of us from my region of the country remember Joe Carrigg for his 20-year political career which began in 1938 when he began service as District Attorney of Susquehanna County. He was elected mayor of Susquehanna and chairman of the Susquehanna County Republican Committee in 1950.

His congressional career began in 1951 when he won a special election to fill a vacancy in the former 14th Congressional District. Following reapportionment, his victory in 1952 made him the first representative of the 10th District, which encompassed Lackawanna, Wayne, Pike, Wyoming, Susquehanna, and Bradford Counties. He was reelected in 1954 and 1956 before being narrowly defeated in 1958.

President Eisenhower appointed Carrigg as an Assistant to the General Counsel of the Treasury Department in 1959 and later that year as Director of Practice for the Internal Revenue Service. He served as Administrative Assistance to William W. Scranton during Scranton's term in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Carrigg retired in 1971 after serving as head of the Workmen's Insurance Fund in Scranton. He died February 6 at the age of 88.

Joe Carrigg's contribution to this body and the betterment of northeastern Pennslyvania cannot, of course, be measured by a mere repetition of his resume. Those who knew him were familiar with his high principles and dedication to improving this country and serving his constituents. I am proud that he served as one of my predecessors, and I know that my colleagues will join with me in celebration his life and mourning his passing.

FAMOUS KENTUCKY EDITOR EMERITUS DIES AT AGE 100

HON. WILLIAM H. NATCHER

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, James Saunders Moran, the elder statesman of central Kentucky journalism, died at the age of 100, on February 13, 1989.

Mr. Moran, editor emeritus of the Springfield Sun, began his distinguished journalism career at the age of 10 when he wrote a community column for the Valley Hill area of Washington county, KY, under the pen name, Uno. He worked at the Sun as the editor and publisher until it was sold in 1966, at which time he became editor emeritus.

J.S. Moran, reputed across the country to be the Nation's oldest active journalist, witnessed and wrote about a great many of the world events that took place during his 100 years. He was honored on many occasions during his career for his writing on such diversified subjects as agriculture, government, education, and conservation. In 1985, he was among the first to be inducted into the Kentucky Journalism Hall of Fame.

He was a newspaper man in every best sense of the word and a gentleman of high caliber. He always believed that the basic function of a newspaper is to keep its readers intelligently informed and thus prepare them to better share their civic and moral responsibilities.

To him, his newspaper was far more than a profession, more than a trade, and more than a business. It was his way of life and his way of living his life.

He knew during his 90 years in journalism that a newspaper cannot be better than the people who establish it and determine its policy. I have lost a true friend and Kentucky has lost an outstanding citizen. Prior to his death, J.S. Moran wrote his last editorial opinion, with instructions that it not be opened until his death. His editorial, as printed in the Springfield Sun on February 15, 1989, is as follows:

"30"—THIS IS THE CONCLUSION OF OUR OPINIONS

(By J.S. Moran)

This is it. In newspaper terminology, this editorial simply means "30" or the end of the chapter.

The years I have spent among the fine folk of Springfield and Washington County have been enjoyable. Associations have been pleasant. My greatest pleasure has been in serving. How well we served is better known to you than the writer.

It was an honest, sincere effort to please, and to accomplish something worthwhile for the community as a whole. I endeavored through the years to promote the welfare of our town and our county; we tried, insofar as it was possible, to avoid controversial subjects that might engender racial, political or religious hatred. We have never compromised our position, however.

I conceded to everyone the rights and privileges we demanded as our own, and respected their opinions, though, as often has happened, we could not agree. I have tried, always to disagree without being disagreeable; our efforts at all times have been for the moral and progressive advancement of the community. It has been our constant endeavor to live up to a covenant made with the businessmen of Springfield over a half century ago to devote our time and effort toward one ultimate goal, that the providing for them, and for the county as a whole, a newspaper worthy of their support, one of which they could be proud, and that fact I enjoyed their confidence, and their loyal support these many years not only justified our faith in them but gives us reason to believe we have not failed utterly, and the thought fills us with pride, a pardonable pride, we sincerely hope.

It is not altogether pleasant to approach the end of a public career which has been blessed with such pleasant associations as we have enjoyed, yet there is much satisfaction in the thought we may have run a good race, thanks to the assistance we had from those whose support we proudly acknowledge.

As we view the descending sun on the western horizon, realizing that we are rapidly approaching the final dissolution, we rejoice in the thought that we found along life's pathway many pleasures others may not have known. We were able to see in the full blown rose something aside from beauty and fragrance. We found atop the tallest mountains in Eastern U.S. the beauty and grandeur of a brilliant sky above the clouds, there realizing the insignificance of man compared with the handiwork of his Creator. We saw tiny rivulets as they wended their way down mountainsides into the rich valleys below, providing life for the blankets of green that nature so bountifully provided, finding a resting place, finally, in the bosom of the sea from whence it arises as a vapor to replenish the earth again and aid in the resurrection of the flowers, and trees, and grasses, symbolical of the life-cycle of we mortals who, after an allotted time, must lay down the working tools of life and stand before the eternal judge beyond for a final accounting.

In conclusion, we are convinced that with all the burdens we must bear there is a power above which makes life worthwhile, which inspires us with the thought that we should always be proud to be alive but so live that we need not be afraid to die.

As we place the duties and responsibilities of our organization upon the shoulders of others to carry on, we sincerely hope they will find the same joy in serving it was ours to know. We hope, also, that the history we have recorded in these columns may be beneficial to the generations to follow. Our town and county are rich in actual and traditional history. Our citizenship is the finest to be found anywhere; our town one of the best of its size in the whole world, and in this great setting we have lived and loved and learned, and served, thanks unto Him who gave to us so bountifully the joys, the pleasures, the good health, the friends, the loved ones that helped make life more pleasant for us than we deserved, perhaps, and we depart with the eternal hope that something we have said; something we have done as we passed down the highway of life among you may be beneficial; that we may not have lived in vain, and that memory of one as humble as the writer may not fade into forgetfulness with the reading of these words, the last it has been our good fortune to pass along to you, and may the richest blessings of Heaven be and abide with each of you now and forever.

THE CHILD AND FAMILY DEVELOPMENT ACT, H.R. 120, AND THE CHILD CARE COORDINATION AND INFORMATION ACT, H.R. 133

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, in recent years, family structures have changed to greater degrees than ever before in history. Progressively more families include two working parents or only one parent who must work as well as raise a family: Over 55 percent of all women work outside the home and over 60 percent of them have children under 18; nearly 50 percent of American mothers return to work before their baby's first birthday; 70 percent of mothers of school age children are working or looking for work; if current trends continue to 1995, two out of every three preschool children will have mothers in the work force.

Recognition of these facts go hand-in-hand with the recognition that our children's development is as good as the care which they receive. Child care and day care centers are regularly relied upon for care during the working hours of the day. But unfortunately, these facilities are often too expensive for many families to afford, particularly when a family has more than one child. And often, those who are able to afford only the least expensive care have found the quality of the care to be inadquate and sometimes even dangerous.

The benefits yielded by adequate child care programs are manifest. In addition to the obvious benefits to the children involved, Fortune magazine reported that "In some cases child care is as strong an influence on workers performance as the number of hours worked, the relationship with a supervisor, and even job security." The article went on to say that "Problems with child care are the most significant predictors of absenteeism and unproductive time at work."

The need for a stronger Federal presence in the realm of child care is manifest. At the onset of the 101st Congress, I reintroduced two bills (known as H.R. 120 and H.R. 133) which address the quantity, quality, and cost of child care services. The features of the Child and Family Development Act, H.R. 120, include: Preparation of a comprehensive plan for covering all child care needs in the country, including consideration of the needs for children of all ages and family circumstances; distribution of Federal child care funds in a way that gives priority to providers who emphasize serving needy families and who have well-structured, high quality programs; calling on the States to furnish child care services and assist to the maximum extent possible, and offering funds to the States for training and the coordination of their efforts; establishment of a reasonable fee schedule for services; and offering subsidies, loans, and grants to certain facilities as an incentive to establish effective services.

erally funded services to describe their services, clientele, costs, and the length of their waiting list; establishing and maintaining a clearinghouse for child care information; and conducting a comprehensive study on the need for an availability of child care services in the United States, including the impact of present programs and recommendations for the future.

The aim of these two bills is for the Federal Government to take a lead on the child care issue by actively steering national policy and doing so in a way that benefits the most needy families. Thus, my bills would accomplish what tax credits would not. The various tax credit proposals are based on the assumption that a family can afford to first pay for child care and then reap a windfall through tax savings a year later. Furthermore, a tax break of this kind only benefits those who have a tax liability—and hence an income—high enough for there to be something to offset. The active, guiding role which would not be taken through a tax credit system would thus be supplied through my bills.

For example, in my district in urban and suburban Chicago, there is an overwhelming need for additional child care services. But most of the demand is from low-income families who need somewhere to leave their children while pursuing job or educational opportunities. And even my constituents who are not in the lower income brackets find it very difficult to find child care that is both affordable and of high quality.

Mr. Speaker, without an immediate Federal response, countless families face a harsh choice: give up educational opportunities and needed second jobs or leave their children with inadequate care, if any at all.

THE MORTGAGE-INTEREST DEDUCTION: A WRITEOFF WHOSE TIME IS PAST

HON. SAM GIBBONS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, because we are getting so much mail generated by the realtors and homebuilders, and perhaps others, concerning the home mortgage interest tax deduction, I thought that my fellow Members and those who answer form-letter mail would be interested in the article that appeared in the Washington Post this morning under the byline of Jerry Knight. I hope you will find it as illuminating as I have and perhaps you may wish to share it with your constituents.

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 7, 1989]

THE MORTGAGE-INTEREST DEDUCTION: A WRITEOFF WHOSE TIME IS PAST?

(By Jerry Knight)

There are a lot of bastard ideas on Capitol Hill, but none that have as much trouble finding a father as the thought of tinkering with the federal income tax deduction for home mortgage interest.

Any politician worthy of the name would just as soon campaign against the flag and motherhood as champion an assault on the homey grail of writing off the interest on the mortgage.

The home mortgage deduction is so popular that two members of the House have introduced a resolution to protect it at any cost and are busy signing up cosponsors. Several powerful trade associations have teamed up on a campaign to save the home mortgage deduction and already are piling up PAC money. Some lenders mailed out letters with the year-end statement of mortgage interest warning homeowners their tax deduction is threatened unless they grab pitchforks and march on the Capitol.

What's curious about all that is that the home mortgage tax deduction is not being threatened by anyone.

Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) of the House Ways and Means Committee has said it is sacred, and his press aides will gladly play the tape for any doubters. The only House member who ever even mentioned the remote possibility of taking it away has since issued a stirring retraction. The entire Bush administration quacks in unison at the question of whether cutting the mortgage deduction would meet the "duck test" for new taxes.

The mortgage tax deduction is a duck all right—a sitting duck. Fat to the point where it can no longer fly, the home mortgage writeoff is waiting to be knocked off, or at least knocked down, and the people scurrying to its defense know it.

What was once an effective inducement to home ownership for all Americans has become the number one tax shelter for the rich. Deducting the interest on a mortgage is increasingly irrelevant to lower income Americans as their dream of home ownership is left behind by soaring house prices.

Part of the reason prices are going up so fast is that the tax deduction encourages families to spend more on housing. For upper-income families, the ability to write off interest payments is an irresistible incentive to buy a bigger house and make bigger mortgage payments. Where else will the government give you $1 back for every $3 you spend? The deduction encourages overinvestment in housing and drags down the nation's savings rate, many economists believe.

What was once a boon to homeowners is now a boondoggle for homebuilders and lenders.

In the name of encouraging home ownership, Congress has been conned by the argument that if one home is good, two homes are better. There are more families in America that can't afford to buy one house than there are who really need two, but tax code now subsidies the latter and ignores the former. Once-bucolic beaches are now crowded with condominiums that would not exist if the tax law didn't subsidize second homes. Mountain resorts from the Blue Ridge to Colorado are monuments to the mortgage deduction for second homes.

It is the builders of these houses, time shares and condos who are clamoring to protect the deduction—in the names of the carpenters, cleaning crews and ski instructors whose jobs depend on them—not the two-home families who know they can claim few favors from the government.

It is the lenders who are leading the fight to save the income tax writeoff for home equity loans, a loophole that was poked open when Congress was knitting the simplified tax code a couple of years back.

In order to bring down overall tax rates, they eliminated a lot of little deductions, including the one for interest on consumer loans. The mortgage interest deduction, of course, was sacred, and so was the deduction for home improvement loans and second mortgages. Faster than you could say "business opportunity," banks began pushing home equity lines that could be used like a MasterCard. "Credit cards in drag," as some critics call them.

In parts of the country where house prices have escalated nearly every year—the Washington area and all of the Northeast, California and Florida—homeowners are buying cars and sending kids to college and using charge cards on home equity lines and getting a tax deduction just like in the good old days.

In places like Des Moines, Denver and Dallas, where house prices are stable if not declining and homeowners generally have less equity, for fewer families are able to slip through the loophole for home equity loans. Inequity loans, they ought to be called, because they favor some regions over others, homeowners over non-homeowners and those with a lot of equity in their house over those with little.

The homebuilding, lending and real estate industries—which do the talking on these issues in Washington—defend equity loans on the ground that they are pro-homeownership because they make houses a better investment. If Congress begins to search for revenue, however, the lobbyists will be willing to sacrifice the second home and home equity loans first, and then the deduction for real estate taxes—a Republican favorite because it hits hardest at high-tax Eastern, Democratic states—before giving ground on the sacred mortgage deduction.

Congress took the first bite out of the basic mortgage deduction just over a year ago, but almost no one noticed. In conference, House and Senate tax writers agreed to limit the deduction to the interest on mortgage of no more than $1 million.

That $1 million ceiling won't bring in a lot of money, but it sets a precedent. Once you have a ceiling, it's easy to lower it. Scrunching the ceiling down to an interest deduction of $20,000 a year on a joint return or $12,000 a year for a single person would raise $10.3 billion in new revenue over five years, the Congressional Budget Office calculates.

At today's interest rates, $20,000 a year represents the interest on a mortage of about $180,000—the loan on a $225,000 house with a 20 percent down payment. In places like Washington where house prices are high, such a ceiling would have an enormous impact, in effect adding 33 percent (the amount of the tax deduction for top-bracket buyers) to the price of houses with mortgage interest payments of more than $20,000 a year. Nationwide, however, a $20,000 ceiling on mortgage interest deductions would affect only ½ of 1 percent of all taxpayers—a tiny constituency, but one with a lot of loud voices.

It's not homeowners who lobby Congress on these issues, it's the real estate industry, and their interests aren't always the same. Last time around, the real estate industry sold out homeowners in favor of real estate investors. Looking for a little revenue, Congress targeted "like-kind exchanges," in which the owner of, say, an old apartment building swaps it for a shopping center and avoids paying taxes on the profits.

But the real estate lobbyists persuaded the tax writers to protect that deal and instead to put the $1 million cap on deductible mortgages. The decision set the procedent for what could happen next time Congress write a tax bill.

PRESIDENT BUSH'S BUDGET PROPOSAL

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington report for Wednesday, February 22, 1989, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In his February 9th budget, President Bush proposed many new programs but very little extra spending. The budget clearly shows the problem that Washington faces: without a tax increase or sharp cuts in defense or social security, there is very little money for new programs. In addition, while the Bush budget emphasizes where he wants to spend more money, it gives scant attention to where he wants to spend less.

Total budget outlays in 1990 under the Bush budget would be $1.160 trillion and total receipts would be $1.066 trillion. That would yield a deficit of $94 billion compared to $170 billion in 1989. The key elements of the Bush budget are a "freeze" on defense spending with no real growth for one year, an estimated $86 billion in new revenues arising from economic growth, and a series of new spending initiatives.

The President has laid out the most pressing domestic needs for the country, with an emphasis on increasing productivity, investing in people, and ending the scourge of drugs. He has proposed new programs to alleviate the shortage of child care, guarantee poor mothers access to health care, prop up the eroding public educational system, house the homeless, redevelop urban slums and declining rural areas, expand drug education and interdiction efforts, extend the frontiers of space, and clean up the air, water, and contaminated nuclear energy plants.

His priorities are sound, but his budget does not indicate how he is going to reach his objectives. The President has generous rhetoric but penny-pinching proposals. For example, while he wants to be known as the "education President," his innovative education proposals total only $58 million, less than $1.50 for every child in our public schools. It is hard to see how so little additional money will help us recover from the deterioration of public education in the country. He recognized his dilemma when he said that "there are many areas in which we would all like to spend more than I propose, but we cannot until we get our fiscal house in order." One risk to the President's approach is that his sweeping language can unleash pent-up demands for much larger spending programs.

On the tax side, the President proposes generous tax breaks for investors, independent oil and gas drillers, computer companies, and inner-city manufacturers. He proposes reinstating a tax deduction for adoption expenses and giving low-income families up to $1000 in tax credits or cash for the cost of caring for young children. Chief among his proposals is his plan to cut the top capital gains tax rate from 33 percent to 15 percent for assets held 1 year or longer. He claims that would yield $4.8 billion in additional revenues because investors would sell their stocks in order to take advantage of a more generous tax rate. Economists disagree over whether cutting the capital gains tax rate will produce more revenue.

The President seems committed to reversing one of the proudest achievements of the Reagan administration: Tax reform. He not only proposes reducing the capital gains tax, which erodes the reform principle that earned and unearned income should be taxed equally, he has proposed a large number of special interest tax breaks that the 1986 tax reform act was designed to curtail.

The budget illustrates how policymakers are boxed in. The President's position on taxes has made tax increases virtually impossible, Yet the huge budget deficits, strictly legislated deficit targets, and festering problems like the savings-and-loan bailout and the cleanup of nuclear weapons plants, all but rule out any major spending increases. The President and the Congress are more constrained on the budget than any President or Congress in recent times.

To his credit, the Bush budget takes steps to smooth out some of the rougher edges of the Reagan budgets to make it kinder and gentler. Its new directions are ones that are popular in the Congress, such as more attention to education and the environment. It eliminates various traditional Reagan proposals that were nonstarters and made many of his budgets dead on arrival. President Bush's call for bipartisan cooperation and his conciliatory language were well received in the Congress.

A major concern in the Congress about the President's budget is that it lacks detail. His budget is replete with proposals expanding government programs but gives little attention to the difficult political task of where to cut federal spending to meet mandated deficit targets. About half of his proposed cutbacks are spelled out (with the largest savings to come from curbing increases in Medicare and Government worker retirement and health program costs); the rest he leaves to be negotiated with the Congress. At the heart of his spending reduction strategy is the $136 billion pool of popular programs that he would lump together and freeze overall. He makes no specific proposals whatsoever for programs lumped into this black box other than to say that if the Congress wants to increase funding for some, offsetting cuts will have to be made in others. I view this budget as an opening bid by the President for his forthcoming negotiations with the Congress. He certainly is not showing all of his cards.

Moreover, the President's budget is based on rosy economic assumptions that minimize the cuts needed to hit the deficit targets. A major premise of this budget is the theory that the nation can, to a large extent, grow its way out of the deficit. He assumes that strong economic growth will generate an additional $86 billion in government revenue in 1990. With the economy already close to full employment and full capacity use, most economists put the economy's potential growth at about 2.5 percent a year and reject the President's view that the economy can grow at a rate of 3.25 percent per year over the next 5 years.

My concern is that as the President and the Congress maneuver over the budget, they will engage in clever tactics and political symbolism rather than building a budget to meet the needs of the Nation and producing a sound long-range approach to solving our budgetary problems.

HATE CRIMES STATISTICS ACT INTRODUCED

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, today I am joined by over 45 of my colleagues in introducing the Hate Crime Statistics Act, a bill to require the collection and publication of statistics on crimes motivated by hatred of a person's race, ethnic background, religion, or sexual orientation. This legislation is identical to legislation which passed the House on May 18, 1988 by a resounding margin of 383 to 29. And the bill is very similar to legislation that passed the House by a voice vote on July 22, 1985.

I first intoduced a hate crime bill on February 4, 1984 in response to a series of incidents with possible religious overtones, in my district. Sadly, these types of incidents are not uncommon. Each year, hundreds of acts of violence and intimidation are committed against groups and individuals in every region of the country because of their race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnic background. At present, it is impossible to measure the extent of the problem. Without solid information on when, where, and how often these crimes occur, we cannot take the positive steps we must take to end this violence.

Mr. Speaker, the basic idea behind hate crime legislation is simple: The more we know about these crimes of hate, the better chance we have to prevent them. I am convinced that the hate crime data this bill calls for is urgently needed by the law enforcement officials and public policymakers in this country. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this most important legislation.

TRIBUTE TO GEN. CHARLES BOLTE

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday February 11, Gen. Charles L. Bolte, a decorated combat veteran of two world wars, lost that final battle that all of us are destined to lose. I want to take this time to recognize the accomplishments of a man who gave a lifetime of distinguished service to our Nation.

He responded to the call of his country early this century as a company commander in the 4th Infantry Division, seeing action in the St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne, and Aisne-Marne offensives during World War I. After the signing of the Armistice on November 11, 1918, Charles Bolte participated with other units of the American Expeditionary Forces as part of the Army of Occupation in Germany. Future duty would find him sent by his country to the other end of the world, to serve with U.S. Army units stationed in China.

During the 1930's, the country struggled through the ravages of the Great Depression.

An Army too poor to equip its forces with the latest in weapons and equipment and too poor to provide them adequate training, made the best of a tough situation by sending its officers to school. It was during the interwar years, the golden age of military education, that Charles Bolte attended the Infantry School at Fort Benning, the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, and the Army War College. located at that time here in Washington, DC, at Fort McNair. He also served as a member of the faculty or staff of those institutions.

Thus, Charles Bolte and hundreds of his fellow officers were adequately prepared to take on the responsibilities and duties thrust on them at the beginning of World War II—fighting a war on a global scale. During that war Maj. Gen. Charles Bolte saw action in some of the most difficult combat in Europe, as the commanding general of the 34th Infantry Division. The 34th fought in Italy with General Bolte leading it through the Gothic Line, through the winter Appenines campaign, to the taking of the northern Italian city of Bologna. After the war, the general served in a variety of senior staff posts, in Washington and in Europe. His final post, from October 1953 to April 1955, was as Army Vice Chief of Staff, the Army's No. 2 soldier.

I had the great pleasure of meeting General Bolte and his lovely wife, Adelaide, early last year. At that time the House Armed Services Committee Panel on Military Education had just begun its comprehensive study of the 10 intermediate and senior level schools of the professional military educational system. As the chairman of the panel, I took a short car trip to the Alexandria residence of General Bolte, on a cold January morning. Accompanied by three staffers, I wanted to get his views on professional military education. It was the most enjoyable outing of the many I took with the panel and the most memorable.

For a period of about 2½ hours the general, with the help of his wife, gave us personal testimony about how the Army educational system operated during the interwar period. George Marshall, George Patton, Omar Bradley, Joseph Stillwell, and Dwight Eisenhower came up time and again in conversation with the general and Mrs. Bolte. The insights our panel gained from our visit with the general inspired us in our work. In many ways we hope to put into place an educational system in the military that can draw upon the best of an earlier era.

I will always treasure the opportunity afforded me to have met Gen. Charles Bolte. As I left his home last January, I noticed on the mantle a photograph of the general taken while he was the commanding officer of the 34th Infantry Division. It revealed him in open khaki collar with two stars on each collar. He had a determined look about him and seemed to me to reflect every schoolboy's notion of what a general should look like. He was, indeed, the real thing. With the passing of Charles Bolte, the country has lost a fine man, a courageous soldier, and a dedicated citizen. To his family I extend my sincerest sympathies. May God comfort them at this difficult time.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

HON. RICH BOUCHER

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to join with 37 of my colleagues in the introduction of legislation to amend the civil provisions of the Federal racketeering law.

Civil RICO is truly a statute run rampant. It was intended for use against persons involved in organized crime, but its actual use has been almost exclusively against the business community.

The pleading requirements are so minimal that virtually any contract dispute becomes a candidate for civil RICO jurisdiction. If the plaintiff alleges the existence of a contract dispute and can demonstrate that the mails or the telephone were used on several occasions either in forming or breaching the contract and if the plaintiff is willing to allege fraud, as is often the case in commercial disputes, the pleading requirements for a civil RICO case are met.

The statutory treble damages and attorney's fees available to the successful plaintiff are a lure making civil RICO the weapon of choice in modern day civil litigation.

A number of unfortunate consequences flow from this state of affairs:

1. Ordinary and respected businessmen and women, whose reputations are often their principal stock in trade, have been branded as racketeers simply because they have become embroiled in a commercial dispute.

2. The availability of civil RICO treble damages has dramatically upped the ante in commercial litigation and leveraged substantial settlements on less than substantial allegations.

3. Finely crafted State and Federal remedies, such as the Federal securities laws, are being undermined by the extensive use of civil RICO as an alternative to those remedies.

4. The Federal courts are being burdened by civil RICO filings of cases more appropriately handled in State court and under State law. In many of these instances, the sole basis for Federal jurisdiction is the civil RICO claim.

The legislation we are introducing today is an appropriate restriction of civil RICO. In the vast majority of cases, the remedy will be limited to single damages and attorney's fees. Automatic treble damages will be provided to Federal, State and general unit of local government plaintiffs and to plaintiffs who proceed against a defendant previously convicted of a RICO predicate offense.

Actual damages as well as discretionary punitive damages in an amount equal to twice the actual damages may be awarded to special purpose units of local government, plaintiffs injured by violations of the Federal insider trading laws and consumers defrauded in connection with a purchase for personal, household use or investment unless a remedy is available to the consumer under the securities or commodities laws.

Our legislation bears the endorsement of a large number of business organizations, the AFL-CIO and the American Civil Liberties Union. While there are interests opposing our effort, I am confident that the clear need for civil RICO reform and the appropriateness of our amendments will result in the enactment of the legislation during the course of this Congress.

REINTRODUCTION OF THE EARLY RETIREMENT BILL FOR CUSTOMS AND IMMIGRATION INSPECTORS AND IRS REVENUE OFFICERS

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, last Congress, 89 Members joined with me to sponsor H.R. 2532, a bill to bring customs inspectors, immigration inspectors and IRS revenue officers under the same retirement plan as Federal firefighters and law enforcement officers. I am pleased to be reintroducing this bill again in the 101st Congress.

I think it is very clear that the men and women covered by this bill are required to work under extremely stressful and, too often, hazardous conditions. For example, customs inspectors make more felony arrests based on information from the FBI's National Crime Center than all other Federal agencies combined, including over 80 percent of all Customs Service arrests. Immigration inspectors are up against increasingly sophisticated groups that supply illegal aliens with fraudulent documents. This is an increasingly volatile situation, in which violence and arrest-resistance are constant threats. And the job description for IRS inspectors cautions that, "the Revenue Officer is subject to potential physical danger each time an initial field call is made." Threats to revenue officers become especially glaring as tax enforcement becomes a major tool in fighting drugs and organized crime.

The only change to last year's bill is the addition of Customs canine enforcement officers [CEO's] to the early retirement system. CEOs' duties are very similar to those of customs inspectors, but they have the additional burden of controlling an attack dog. CEO's and inspectors enforce the same laws, wear the same uniform, exercise the same arrest authority, and often work side-by-side. Not to give equal retirement rights to less than 200 CEO's now on duty at our Nation's borders would very likely have a "chilling" effect on the ability of customs to fill this skilled position.

We need a young and vigorous workforce to meet dangerous and hazardous challenges facing the Federal Government. In many States, including most border regions, customs and immigration inspectors have also been designated by State law enforcement agencies to act as State peace officers. As such, they are authorized to make arrests under State laws. This duty is on top of their Federal mandate to enforce the laws and regulations of some 40 different Federal agencies.

Our Government has funded aggressive, effective special interdiction teams to combat the incoming flow of drugs, the smuggling of defense-related contraband, and other felonies. In doing so, we have demanded that revenue officers and inspectors serve as a first line of defense to protect the integrity of our borders and insure the vigilant, energetic enforcement of our Nation's laws. If we expect this public mandate to be met, then we need the best people for the job at hand. Without ensuring the enthusiasm and esprit de corps that a young and vigorous workforce will be able to bring to the job, we have not done our best to protect the national interest and the public welfare.

REMOVE SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUND OPERATIONS FROM BUDGET CALCULATIONS

HON. JIM BATES

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will revise the budget treatment of Social Security benefits.

Mr. Speaker, the inclusion of Social Security operations in the calculation of the Federal budget deficit is a poor solution to a serious problem. By doing so, we are deceiving ourselves and creating an insecure financial future which will have serious ramifications for the next generation. While they are now off budget, Social Security operations are included in calculating the maximum permissible Federal budget deficit under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Balanced Budget Act. This legislation will keep all Social Security related items off budget, thereby protecting the benefits enjoyed by Social Security recipients.

If it were not for the Social Security surplus, the budget deficit would be significantly larger. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the Federal budget deficit for fiscal year 1989 would be $199 billion without the inclusion of Social Security operations. However, if the Social Security surpluses are calculated within the Federal budget figure, as they currently are, then the Federal budget deficit figure would be $148 billion. The Social Security surplus is now at $52 billion.

This is poor policy from both an economic, and a demographic standpoint. Economically, by borrowing money from the Social Security trust fund, the Federal Government is better able to pay its bills. However, eventually, the Treasury will have to pay the Social Security trust fund back. At that point, the Treasury will to either borrow the money from another source, or raise revenue through various taxes.

Perhaps more of a potential crises is the intergenerational conflict that is sure to ensure if the current policy is maintained. Ironically, the cause of the current Social Security surplus was foresight. The surpluses were created by the Social Security Amendments of 1977 and 1983 which raised Social Security taxes and modestly reduced benefits. These changes were made to assure today's workers and tomorrow's retirees that future benefits would be paid without reduction and that funds were being set aside to pay those benefits. Unfortunately, with the current formula used to calculate the Federal budget deficit, there may not be enough funds left to pay tomorrow's retirees.

The initial need to set aside funds was a result of demographics, and it obviously still is a need. After the turn of the century, when a large number of "baby boomers" retire, there will be a much lower ratio of workers to retirees and therefore fewer people to pay the taxes needed to cover rising Social Security outlays. The ratio of workers to Social Security retirees is expected to fall from 3.3 to 1 in 1990 to 1.9 to 1 in 2030. This is also partly caused by increased life expectancy coupled with increasingly lower retirement ages. The only way to avoid an intergenerational conflict over pension rights is to make the economy grow stronger. By removing the Social Security trust fund from calculation in the budget deficit, we will take the first step toward doing so.

Social Security trust funds must be removed from Federal budget deficit calculations. Federal budget deficit calculation is a zero-sum game and Social Security recipients are the losers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THOMAS H. KILEY: DISTINGUISHED CITIZEN

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues a distinguished resident of my district, Mr. Thomas H. Kiley.

This year, the Boy Scouts of America will be presenting the Distinguished Citizenship Award to Mr. Kiley, who, as president of the Penn Mountains Council of the Boy Scouts of America, stands as an excellent role model for the youth of our country. This award is presented each year to an outstanding citizen who best exemplifies the qualities fostered by the Citizenship in the Community Merit Badge Program.

Before dedicating himself to helping the youth of the Wilkes-Barre area, Mr. Kiley was an accomplished businessman. He is the former board chairman and chief executive officer of the First Eastern Bank, and has been an important force behind the economic growth in the Wyoming Valley for many years. During his long and distinguished banking career, he helped organize the Wilkes-Barre Chamber of Commerce and numerous industrial ventures vital to the economic stimulation of the region.

Since his retirement from banking in 1974, Thomas Kiley has remained actively involved in many business and civic organizations. He has served as president of the Pennsylvania Gas and Water Co., trustee and board chairman of Wilkes College and the Geisinger Medical Center, and has been a key member of several other important community-based organizations. His contributions to these organizations, and to the entire Wyoming Valley region, have been, and continue to be, most invaluable.

Thomas H. Kiley is genuinely deserving of this recognition of his community service. He has been an important pillar of support and ingenuity in the Wyoming Valley region. His selfless contributions toward improving our area serve as a reminder to all of us that we can make a difference in the communities in which we live; we can work to change things for the better; and, we can make our communities a nicer place to live and grow.

OBSERVING GEORGE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY DURING THE 200TH ANNIVERSARY YEAR OF CONGRESS AND THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

HON. LINDY (MRS. HALE) BOGGS

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, February 20, I had the privilege of addressing the Friendship Veterans Volunteer Fire Engine Association of Alexandria, VA, and the honor of serving as grand marshall of the city of Alexandria's annual George Washington Birthday Celebration Parade. Not only is Alexandria George Washington's "hometown," but our first President was a member of the Friendship Veterans Fire Engine Association which was organized in 1774.

Because today is the actual date of Washington's birth, I would like to include in the RECORD the text of my address to the association Monday.

REMARKS BY LINDY BOGGS

I am very happy to be with you all today to celebrate the birthday of George Washington. I am honored, and touched, that you have selected me to be an honorary life member of the Friendship Veterans Fire Engine Company, an organization that is older than the United States, and one that can claim George Washington himself as a member. When I look over the list of your distinguished trustees and officers and the marvelous group of great Americans who are honorary life members, I can only say that I will try to be worthy of the recognition you have so graciously extended to me.

As you know, it has been my good fortune to be associated with a number of our national historic celebrations including the American Revolution Bicentennial in 1976. More recently I have worn two bicentennial hats one as a member of the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United States Constitution and the other as Chairman of the Commission on the Bicentenary of the United States House of Representatives. Like all of you here I have an abiding interest in keeping alive the rich heritage contained in the story of the development of the United States of America.

The story of America from its colonial origins along the Atlantic seaboard, to the United States of today, a world power second to none extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and up to Alaska and out to Hawaii, is one of the most compelling stories in human history. I expect it will be told for many centuries to come, and I expect new and exciting chapters to unfold in the years ahead of us. The vitality of the American people and the institutions they have created are stronger today than ever before. And I do believe that the best is yet to come.

But the story of our nation needs constant attention. We cannot assume it will be automatically preserved. Each generation has an obligation to pass the memory of the country on the next. Each new generation has to learn history all over again. How well it is learned plays a large role in determining how well the values and the wisdom, and even the foibles, of our ancestors shape our definition of what it is to be an American.

This is why we celebrate our special anniversaries and why we encourage the study of history in schools. It is hard to imagine that this country could ever forget someone of the stature of George Washington, a singular personality who encompasses so much of what we value in our history. But even this great man could fade from memory unless we and future generations continue to make it our business to remember him, to honor him, and to continue to study his life and times.

Just this year, in time for the bicentennial of George Washington's inauguration as our first President, a small team of scholars at George Washington University has published a new edition of "The Diary of William Maclay and Other Notes on Senate Debates," which gives us a rare glimpse into the First Congress. William Maclay was a Senator from Pennsylvania. The Senate met in secret in those days, so if it wasn't for Senator Maclay we wouldn't know very much about the early activity of that body. Maclay was often caustic and sometimes pessimistic in his private journal. He could also be witty and charming. Whatever his mood, he was usually quite accurate and truthful in his observations.

He began his journal the same week that George Washington arrived in New York to be sworn in as our first President. Maclay observed Washington closely on April 30, the day Washington took the oath and delivered the first inaugural speech. He began his entry: "This is the great important day. Goddess of Etiquette assist me while I describe it."

Washington entered the Senate chamber amid much commotion since all the Members of the House and Senate gathered there were conscious that what ever they did would set precedent. After some preliminary words by Vice President John Adams, acting in his role as President of the Senate, Washington stepped out onto the balcony of Federal Hall, in New York City, accompanied by Congress, and took the oath of office, administered by the Chancellor of New York Robert Livingston. (Congress was still months away from establishing the Supreme Court, so there was no Chief Justice of the United States to administer the oath.)

After the oath, the crowd cheered three times and then cheered again when Washington bowed to them. He then went back into the Senate chamber where he delivered his address to Congress. The President took the Chair in the Senate chamber and sat down. The members of the House and Senate took their seats. Then the President stood up to give his address and thinking that they should not be seated while the President stood, the entire assembly rose to its feet and stood while the president spoke.

Maclay observed that the President was nervous and irritable. He wrote in his diary: "this great man was agitated and embarrassed more than he ever was by the levelled Cannon or pointed Musket. He trembled, and several times could scarce make out to read . . ." Washington shifted nervously and held the speech first in one hand and then the other and which ever hand was not occupied holding the speech was thrust awkwardly in his britches. Maclay felt Washington's gestures were ill timed and exaggerated. He was embarrassed by what he saw as a poor performance by a man he respected above all others. "I felt hurt," Maclay wrote, "that he was not first in every thing."

I have a theory about that day and about Washington's performance. We have no reason to doubt the observations of the Senator from Pennsylvania. But I venture that no one in the room fully appreciated what was going through George Washington's mind at the time of his address. This was the pivotal moment in American history up to that time. Washington's oath and his inaugural address marked in a very real sense the final act of the American Revolution and the beginnings of the United States of America.

This man, who led the nation in war against great odds, who presided in Philadelphia when the Constitution was drafted, and who anxiously awaited the Constitution's ratification and the first federal elections, and who was called out of retirement from his beloved Mount Vernon to lead the nation again, was, at the moment of his inauguration, fulfilling the promise of the Declaration of Independence and the genius of the American Constitution, by ushering in the executive branch of government surrounded by the members of the First Congress.

The ship of state was launched at that moment, the dream had become reality. The full weight of all the years of revolutionary struggle and nation building were concentrated into that time and place. If his hand had not shaken, if he was not nervous that day, he would not have been the great leader he was.

On April 30 this year, in honor of the events of 200 years ago, a Congressional delegation will go to New York to take part in ceremonies commemorating Washington's inauguration. New York City plans a gala two days to mark the anniversary with fireworks, a parade, and ships gathered in the harbor. They have invited the President and all the living past presidents to join in the activities. This will be one of the major events of our celebration this year. But it is not the only one, and what I would like to do in the time remaining is give you an idea of how we in Congress will be commemorating the year the Congress began.

March 4, 1789, was the day the Constitution went into effect. It was the day the First Congress met. There has never been a more unique assembly of lawmakers in the history of the country. Their job was to take the great document drafted at Philadelphia in 1787 and make it work. In 1789 there ws still much apprehension in the land about the new government. No one knew for sure if the brilliant work of the Framers of the Constitution could become reality. It was one thing to draft a document that described how government should work, and another matter altogether to make it work.

That great task fell to the First Federal Congress. The Framers left Philadelphia with much work left to be done. The executive and judicial branches were only partially described in the Constitution and had to be fleshed out with legislation. And during the ratification process, many states had demanded constitutional amendments guaranteeing certain liberties.

The First Congress did its work well by presiding over the election of George Washington, establishing executive departments that were the beginning of the President's cabinet, creating a federal court system and the Supreme Court and the Office of Attorney General. Under the leadership of another great Virginian, James Madison, who served in the House of Representatives in the First Congress, a series of constitutional amendments were sent to the states for ratification and became known as the Bill of Rights.

The work of the First Federal Congress breathed life into the Constitution and established the government that has now been in place for two centuries. All of us here are the benefactors of that great assembly.

The Commission on the Bicentenary of the House of Representatives along with the Senate Bicentennial Commission chaired by Senator Robert C. Byrd, has the pleasant assignment of planning for our two hundredth anniversary with a series of exhibits, publications, conferences, and ceremonies. Ours is a year long celebration since the creation of the government was a process not a single event. It is a part of our five-year celebration from the drafting of the Constitution to the ratification of the Bill of Rights.

Several of our major publications are already completed. Last month the bicentennial edition of the Biographical Directory of the United States Congress was published. It contains information on all 11,000 persons who have served in the House and Senate since 1789 and even includes all those who served in the Continental Congress beginning in 1774. The Office for the Bicentennial of the House also conducted a four-year survey to locate the papers of former Members of the House, which serve as basic research collections on the history of the House. The survey, which relied on hundreds of volunteer historians and librarians in all fifty states has been published and we have already heard from scholars around the country who are saying that this will be a boon to congressional studies.

Later this year we will publish biographical studies on "Black Americans in Congress" and "Women in Congress" and a collection of documentary sources on the origins of the House of Representatives. Later this week Senator Byrd's "History of the United States Senate" will make its appearance. This beautiful volume, the first of four, is based on more than 100 speeches on the history of the Senate the Senator has delivered on the floor of the Senate.

On March 2 Congress will hold a joint meeting in commemoration of its 200th anniversary, in addition to the remarks of House and Senate leaders, the Poet Laureate of the United States, Howard Nemerov and the distinguished historian David McCullough will address the assembly. The night before, we will cut the ribbon that opens a major exhibit on the First Federal Congress at the National Portrait Gallery, where some of the finest portraits and artifacts on that period ever assembled will be on display.

On March 13, Congress will attend a world premier of an important documentary film made for television called "The Congress."

The film is the work of the award-winning film maker, Ken Burns, who also did the film on the Statue of Liberty. A week later on March 20 the film will be broadcast over PBS stations nationwide. It will also be made available to schools, with accompanying classroom materials.

On April 4 and April 6 the U.S. Postal Service will issue special commemorative postage stamps, one for the House and one for the Senate, the designs for the stamps will be unveiled at the joint meeting of Congress next month. The First Day of Issue ceremonies will be held in the Capitol Building. On April 30, in New York, a stamp will be issued to commemorate the executive branch bicentennial, and early next year the Supreme Court bicentennial stamp will make its appearance.

The United States Mint is preparing a three coin commemorative set on the bicentennial of Congress. The initial designs are circulating now and we expect a first strike ceremony later this spring. The stamps and coins will help carry the bicentennial message to millions of Americans, and will be permanent keepsakes of this special anniversary.

The Library of Congress has launched a major series of bicentennial programs on Congress. Already open is an amazing exhibit in the Madison Building "The Tides of Party Politics: Two Centuries of Congressional Elections," which graphically portrays every congressional election in American history on 100 maps each representing one congressional election. The exhibit is based on the work of a West Virginia political geographer, Dr. Ken Martis, who spent more than ten years researching the project. In September the Library will present an exciting exhibit and book on 200 years of Congress called "To Make All Laws."

Earlier this month about 40 scholars and students of Congress assembled on Capitol Hill for a conference on "Understanding Congress." From the results of that conference and the remarks of those on the panels, we are on the verge of a new era of interest in political history and the beginnings of some major new studies of Congress in the years ahead. One such study, which has just been funded from by the Commission on the Bicentennial of the Constitution is the Encyclopedia of Congress Project, which in about three years will result in a large one-volume encyclopedia that will condense the best information obtainable on the history and workings of Congress prepared by a network of historians, political scientists, journalists, lawyers, and other scholars all across the country.

These are just some of the events that will take place this year. Our goal has been to combine scholarly activities and public ceremonies, because both are important components in the transmission to the next generation of our rich heritage. It is our solemn obligation to see to it that the citizens of this country know and understand how government works, how it has developed over two centuries, and what its promise is for the future.

Our Founding Fathers knew how important education was and how an informed public was the best guarantee against the erosion of liberty. When our government began it was called "the Great Experiment." Democracy is always an experiment, it is now, and will always be. The minute we cease to see it as a great experiment and take it for granted as something set in stone, we will cease to grow as a nation. As George Washington told the assembled members of Congress in his inaugural address:

"The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty, and the destiny of the republican model of government, are justly considered as deeply, perhaps as finally staked, on the experiment entrusted to the hands of the American people."

I look forward, as I know you do, to the beginning of the third century of the Great Experiment." Thank You.

SSI REFORM PACKAGE

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, on February 6, 1989, Congressman DOWNEY, Congressman MILLER, and Congressman ROYBAL joined with me to introduce three bills, which, taken together, would make the supplemental security income [SSI] program fairer and more responsive to the truly needy it is intended to serve. The following is a section-by-section summary of the provisions of the first bill in this SSI reform package, H.R. 866.

SUMMARY OF SSI BENEFIT IMPROVEMENTS AMENDMENTS OF 1989

TITLE 1. PROVISIONS TO INCREASE THE FEDERAL SSI BENEFIT STANDARDS AND CHANGES IN TREATMENT OF CERTAIN IN-KIND INCOME

Section 101. Increase the Federal SSI benefit standard to poverty level by 1992

This provision provides for the following increases in the SSI benefit standard:

	Individual		Couple
	Monthly	Annual	Monthly	Annual
Present law
1989	$368	$4,416	$553	$6,636
1990	437	5,244	625	7,504
1991	506	6,072	697	8,368

[1] HHS poverty income guideline in 1992.

The provision already in the law which requires the states to pass-through any SSI increases in supplements which the states provide would not be changed. That is, states can not decrease their state supplements when there is an increase in the federal SSI benefit standard.

Section 102. Changes in the treatment of in-kind income received when a person is living in the household of another Present SSI law provides that if an SSI applicant or recipient is "living in another person's household and receiving support and maintenance in-kind from such person", the value of the in-kind assistance is presumed to equal one-third of the regular Federal SSI benefit standard. The Federal SSI benefit standard applicable to the individual or couple is two-thirds of the regular Federal SSI benefit standard. If an individual actually owns or rents the living quarters or contributes his or her pro rata share to the household's expenses, this lower benefit standard does not apply.

By regulation, the Social Security Administration has also provided that the value of any in-kind support or maintenance received (other than in the case of those receiving in-kind assistance by reason of living in the household of another) is presumed to have a maximum value of no more than one-third of the Federal SSI benefit standard plus $20. The individual can rebut this presumption. If it is determined that the actual value is less than the one-third amount, the lower actual value will be counted as unearned income.

Under this amendment, in cases where it is determined that an individual is "living in the household of another and receiving support and maintenance in-kind," the amount that the Federal SSI benefit standard would be reduced would be the lesser of one-third of the regular Federal SSI benefit standard and the actual value of the in-kind assistance received. The actual value would be calculated by determining the amount that the contribution by the individual to the household expenses are deficient in paying his or her pro rata share of household expenses.

This will permit those for whom the actual value of the in-kind assistance received is less than one-third of the Federal SSI benefit standard to have a smaller reduction in their benefits. It will target increased benefits to aged, blind or disabled persons living in low income households; that is, those with low household expenses.

In case of in-kind assistance for support or maintenance where the person is not in the "household of another," the amount that the Federal SSI benefit standard would be reduced would also be the lesser of one-third of the regular Federal SSI benefit standard and the actual value of the in-kind assistance received.

Section 103, SSI status to be deemed for certain persons with in-kind income

This section provides that if an individual or a couple would be eligible for SSI if he or she did not receive in-kind assistance then the individual or couple will be considered to be receiving SSI so that they will be eligible to receive Medicaid. This rule will apply in all states, including those which exercise the § 209(b) Medicaid option. In States where SSI recipients are all eligible for Medicaid and the Social Security Administration administers such eligibility, such an individual or couple will be on the SSI rolls in a non-cash payment status (as in the case of Section 1619(b) work incentive cases) and SSA will be responsible for determining ongoing eligibility.

TITLE II. INCREASES IN SSI RESOURCES LIMITS

Section 201. Increase in SSI resources limit

The current SSI resource limits are $2000 for an individual and $3000 for a couple. Effective 1990, this provision will raise the limits to $4200 for an individual and $6300 for a couple.

TITLE III. ESTABLISHMENT OF A PERMANENT SSI OUTREACH PROGRAM BY THE SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

Section 301. Establishment and conduct of SSI outreach program

This provision requires the Secretary to establish and conduct an ongoing outreach program which is designed to provide people who may be eligible for SSI with information about the program. One specific part of the new program will be notices sent by SSA to Social Security applicants and recipients when they reach age 65 and annually thereafter, when they apply for or are awarded disability insurance benefits, and when they are notified that they are eligible for Medicare Part B benefits.

In addition, the Secretary is required to enter into cooperative arrangements with other Federal, State and private agencies and nonprofit organizations which serve the aged, blind and disabled in order to facilitate outreach services.

Special outreach to disabled and blind children: This section requires the Secretary to establish and conduct an ongoing outreach program to disabled and blind children who may be eligible for SSI. Recognizing that different outreach will be needed here, the section requires cooperation with not only the groups listed above, but also school systems and social services agencies which address the needs of children.

Evaluation of the program/report to Congress: The Secretary would be required to evaluate the effectiveness of the outreach which is conducted and to report to the Congress, annually, on the nature, scope and effectivenss of its outreach efforts.

TRADE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND INDIA

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to reaffirm the shared values that we have with the world's largest democracy, India, and to express solidarity with the struggle of the Indian people against terrorism and secession.

Very recently, elections have been held in some Indian States where Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's Congress Party won in some district, while losing in others. The freedom to hold differing political views was reaffirmed, the people expressed their wishes, and all parties abided by it. However, there has been some violent dissent in India, and we in the House who have been in the vanguard of the protection of human rights, around the world, need to demonstrate our strong opposition to violence.

There is a proposed bill soon to be introduced in the House to deny non-discriminatory trade treatment, or most-favored-nation status, to the products of India. The reasons for denial outlined in the proposed bill are the alleged human rights violations, especially against Sikhs in the Punjab. These allegations include arbitrary arrests, detention of prisoners without trial, torture of prisoners, and the use of progovernment death squads in the Punjab.

The proposed bill is based primarily on the alleged detention of 300 Sikhs without charge or trial in a jail in the Indian city of Jodhpur since 1984. The fact is, however, that 380 people had been originally detained in that jail out of which 188 continue to be held. They are charged and are on trial for waging war against the country and the illegal possession of arms.

India has been a functioning and viable democracy since 1947. It has a rule of law and a constitution that protests the rights of its citizens. And yet a dangerous situation has been created by small groups of terrorists and criminals. A reign of terror has been unleashed in the Punjab in which nearly 2,300 people lost their lives last year. Terrorists in the Punjab have been indiscriminate in their killing; their targets ranging from political leaders to children. A large number of victims of terrorism have been innocent Sikhs themselves, particularly those who have opposed violence and have called for a political dialogue between the Indian Government and responsible Sikh leaders.

Our attention has been drawn to stray cases of violation of human rights in the Punjab. In the massive anti-terrorist operations which are ongoing in that area there may indeed have been cases of misuse of power of miscalculations. Unfortunately, we cannot ignore the fact that innocent and unarmed people in the Punjab have been victims of violence and crime at the hands of a small group of fanatics, secessionists, and criminals. Just as terrorist victims deserve our deepest sympathy, those who are fighting against terrorism deserve support. What they do not deserve is a break in equal trade relations.

I would like to share with my colleagues the State Department's recent assessment of the situation in the Punjab in response to a request for their views on House Concurrent Resolution 343, introduced last August which concerns the human rights of the Sikhs in the Punjab. The State Department responded that "the Indian authorities are attempting to confront a terrorist movement which has claimed over 2,300 victims this year, well over twice the rate of killings in 1987. The terrorists are well-armed with automatic machine guns and rocket-propelled grenade launchers. In many instances, they are better armed that the police units fighting them." It is also the view of the Department that the "harsh police tactics" referred to in the legislation "are in part an attempt to protect innocent lives and property from extremists."

In recent years we and India have enriched our relationship through trade, science, and technology, and narcotics control. Bilateral trade in 1988 reached the $5.7 billion mark. The interaction between the business and industrial communities of India and the United States has continued to flourish under the various agreements on trade and collaboration in advanced technology. A relationship of trust has been built up, which we must continue to support. Any effort to deny nondiscriminatory trade treatment to India will seriously and adversely affect our economic and trade relations between our two countries.

HATE CRIME STATISTICS ACT IS KEY TO FIGHTING BIAS CRIMES

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, Today, February 22, 1989, I reintroduced the Hate Crime Statistics Act, a bill that will aid law enforcement officials in the fight to eradicate hate crimes.

During the past few years, there have been an increasing number of physical and psychological attacks on persons who were targeted solely because of their race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnic origin. They have been carried out by organized groups, as well as by nonaffiliated individuals.

The Hate Crime Statistics Act will require the Department of Justice to annually collect and publish statistics on "crimes which manifest prejudice based on race, religion, homosexuality or heterosexuality, or ethnicity." There are presently no comprehensive, accurate, and up-to-date statistics kept on the national incidence of these crimes. Once available, such statistics could provide the basis of more effective law enforcement efforts in communities throughout the nation seeking to combat hate crimes.

During the 100th Congress, I introduced identical legislation, H.R. 3193—see House Report No. 100-575. That bill passed the House on May 18, 1988, by an overwhelming margin of 383 to 29. It had been endorsed by 30 state attorneys general. A similar bill was favorably reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee but received no further action before adjournment.

The Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, which I formerly chaired, held oversight hearings on antigay violence and anti-Arab violence during 1986, and two hearings on legislation to establish a commission on racially motivated violence in 1988. The Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights held an oversight hearing on anti-Asian violence in 1987, and on anti-Native American violence in 1988. The witnesses at each of these hearings stated that reports of hate crimes received by their organizations are increasing. They also urged that the Department of Justice begin to produce nationwide data about them.

On January 13, 1988, the Center for Democratic Renewal released "They Don't All Wear Sheets: A Chronology of Racist and Far-Right Violence 1980-1986," which provides some statistical data on bias motivated crimes. The Center reports that there were nearly three thousand incidents of hate motivated violence, harassment, and vandalism during the seven year period. This figure is based upon data compiled from press accounts, victim statements, law enforcement agency reports, and information supplied by civil rights groups and government human relations agencies. Its statistical accuracy is limited by the lack of a national reporting system for hate crimes.

In 1987, the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith [ADL] issued a special report entitled "The Hate Movement Today: A Chronicle of Violence and Disarrary" that suggests that there was more criminal violence by extremists during the past 3 years than there has been over the previous two decades.

The ADL released its annual audit of antisemitic incidents during January 1988. The organization reported 1,018 incidents, an increase of 12 percent over last year. Of these, 694 involved acts of vandalism ranging from swastika daubings to arson and pipe bombings. The number of acts of harassment, threat, and assault was 324.

Dramatic incidents like the death of Michael Griffith in the Howard Beach neighborhood of Queens, NY in 1986, or the death of Vincent Chin in Detroit in 1982, capture the attention of the national news media and, as the result of the headlines they generate, pierce the consciousness of most Americans, reminding us that hate crimes are still a reality today.

Few across the Nation, however, will ever know about the thousands of other lesser known incidents unless information about them is compiled and published in the manner provided for in the Hate Crimes Statistics Act.

Participants in the "Brotherhood March" in Forsyth County, GA, on January 17, 1987, were attacked by white hooded Ku Klux Klansmen hurtling rocks, bottles, and racial slurs. This unfortunate incident brought home to many the fact that the Klan is still a visible and active organization, despite a decline in membership. Over the past decade, however, a number of new, more sinister, and more militant extremist groups such as the White Aryan Resistance and the Skinheads have surfaced and engaged in robbery, assaults, bombing, and murder to advance their white-supremacist agenda. Although their leadership has been the target of arrests and successful prosecutions, these groups continue to survive and sow the seeds of racial hatred.

In response to the public's growing concern about hate crimes and the inability of most law enforcement agencies to address the problem adequately, the National Institute of Justice [NIJ] commissioned Peter Finn and Taylor McNeil of Abt Associates Inc. to conduct a study of the effective steps being taken by police and prosecutors to combat them. The study, entitled "The Response of the Criminal Justice System to Bias Crimes," was submitted to NIJ in October 1987.

The authors interviewed 40 individuals, 21 of which represented police agencies or district attorneys offices. They concluded that while there is no accurate data regarding the number of bias crimes committed each year, there is plenty of documentation to suggest that the problem is widespread and increasing. The study indicates that 50 percent of the people arrested for hate crimes are teenagers and young adults between the ages of 16 and 25. The most frequent victims were found to be blacks, Hispanics, Southeast Asians, Jews, and gays and lesbians.

The study further indicates that while most States have enacted some legislation targeting hate crimes, only a few have thus far enacted laws mandating the collection of data on them. Maryland became the first State to collect statistics on hate crimes when in 1981 it required its State Police to collect the data and provide monthly summaries to the Maryland Human Relations Commission. In 1986, Pennsylvania required its police agencies to file monthly reports on hate crimes with the State Police Bureau of Community Services. Connecticut, Illinois, and Oklahoma enacted laws in 1987 requiring the collection of data on hate crimes.

To facilitate the investigation and prosecution of hate crimes, some police departments have established bias crimes units. The New York Police Department uses decoy teams to identify and arrest those who perpetrate such offenses. The action was taken in response to a rise in hate crimes in that city; nearly 500 of these offenses were reported in 1987, twice the number reported in 1986.

In 1985, the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Executives [NOBLE] received funding from the National Institute of Justice to study the police response to racial and religous violence. NOBLE produced two publications, "Racial and Religious Violence: A Model Law Enforcement Response," and "Racial and Religious Violence: A Law Enforcement Guidebook," which recommend policies, practices, and procedures, and emphasize the need for more information and analysis.

The following law enforcement organizations endorsed the Hate Crimes Statistics Act during the 100th Congress: The Police Foundation, the Police Executive Research Forum, the National Black Police Association, and the National Organization for Black Law Enforcement Executives.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Hate Crime Statistics Act".

SEC. 2. ACQUISITION AND PUBLICATION OF DATA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Under the authority of section 534 of title 28, United States Code, the Attorney General shall acquire, for calendar year 1991 through calendar year 1995, data on the incidence of criminal acts that manifest prejudice based on race, religion, homosexuality or heterosexuality, or ethnicity. The crimes with respect to which such data shall be acquired are as follows: homicide, assault, robbery, burglary, theft, arson, vandalism, trespass, threat, and such other crimes as the Attorney General considers appropriate.

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this Act creates a right for an individual to bring an action complaining of discrimination based on homosexuality.

(c) LIMITATION ON USE AND CONTENT OF DATA.—Data acquired under this Act shall be used only for research or statistical purposes and may not contain any information that may reveal the identity of an individual victim of a crime.

(d) ANNUAL SUMMARY.—The Attorney General shall publish an annual summary of the data acquired under this Act.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act for fiscal year 1991 through fiscal year 1996.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section one of the bill provides that the short title of the legislation is the "Hate Crimes Statistics Act".

Section two of the bill requires the Attorney General, under the authority of 28 U.S.C. 534 (which provides for the acquisition, preservation, and exchange of identification records and information, and the appointment of officials) to acquire data on crimes that manifest prejudice based on race, religion, homosexuality or heterosexuality, or ethnicity. The crimes for which data will be collected include homicide, assault, robbery, burglary, theft, arson, vandalism, trespass, and threat. The data acquired can only be used for research and statistical purposes and may not contain information that may reveal the identity of an individual crime victim. A summary of the data is to be published annually for five calendar years, starting with the data for the calendar year 1991.

Section three of the bill authorizes the appropriation for fiscal year 1991 through fiscal year 1996 of such sums as are necessary to carry out the legislation.

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH FIRST HOME SAVINGS ACCOUNTS FOR YOUNG AMERICANS

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, since coming to Congress 15 years ago, working toward ensuring opportunities for young Americans to own their own homes has been one of my top priorities. Yet, recent trends have gone against affordable housing for our young people. The American dream of that first home and the benefits of home ownership must not be cast aside.

Today I am introducing legislation to establish first home savings accounts for young Americans—a savings incentive to help young people realize that dream of owning their first home.

My bill would allow a $2,000 yearly deduction to a first home savings account or, the withdrawal of up to $20,000 without penalty from 401K or IRA savings plans. The first home savings accounts would be capped at $20,000, yet encourage all young Americans to save, a goal which we must meet as a nation.

I urge my colleagues to join me in encouraging savings and home ownership.

SRI LANKA NATIONAL DAY

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 41st anniversary of Sri Lanka's independence this month. Over these years, the United States has actively worked to support Sri Lanka's independence and to promote her political and economic development.

Although Sri Lanka has experienced episodes of violence between the two major ethnic communities, the Sinhalese and the Tamils, over the past few years, a couple of positive developments give hope that lasting peace will come to Sri Lanka. In July 1987, Sri Lanka and India signed a peace accord which has helped to reduce terrorist activity. Late last year, Sir Lanka successfully completed a presidential election in which Ranasinghe Premadasa was elected prime Minister on December 19, 1988. As we congratulate Sri Lanka on their 41st anniversary, I would like to reaffirm the commitment of the American people in assisting Sri Lanka to once again enjoy the benefits of economic prosperity and social tranquility.

To assist in Sir Lanka's development, the United States and Sri Lanka have successfully created mutually beneficial economic links. For example, in 1985 the United States opened a Sri Lanka Business Development Center to assist in the promotion of private enterprise projects in Sri Lanka. This center has been working together with the Sri Lanka Government to shift the economy toward a more decentralized and market-oriented system in which private enterpreneurship, both domestic and international, flourishes. The Government of Sri Lanka has almost completed the $2 billion Mahaweli project, a massive hydroelectric, irrigation, and resettlement program. Accomplished with significant assistance from the United States and other countries, the Manhaweli project will generate 1.7 billion kilowatt hours of electricity through the damming of the nation's longest river.

Through our shared interest in democratic principles, the United States also continues to give firm support to Sri Lanka in her effort to resolve recent episodes of social and political violence. We in the United States have and will continue to support a process of dialog, compromise, and political choice to resolve the genuine grievances that exist. Minority rights should continue to be protected and access to local political institutions should be guaranteed without discrimination. Calls for the partition of Sri Lanka should not be heeded; she should remain unified.

As Sri Lanka celebrates her independence, we join with the Sri Lanka people in looking forward to further progress on their already impressive record of national development. By remaining committed to the upholding of democratic principles and institutions and the guarantee of security for all her citizens, Sri Lanka will once again prosper in an atmosphere of domestic peace and harmony.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. McMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, as we commemorate "Black History Month," I would like to take this opportunity to bring your attention to the rich contributions made to black history by Marylanders. Residents of my State and the Fourth Congressional District have contributed to the achievements, the heritage, and to the character of American history and black history in particular.

As Marylanders, we don't have to look long or far for the accomplishments and great deeds of black Americans from one State. In fact, three of the most noted black Americans in history, Benjamin Banneker, Frederick Douglass and Harriet S. Tubman, all hail from Maryland. Christian Fleetwood, a "free man of color" and college graduate was the recipient of a Congressional Medal of Honor for his bravery during the Civil War. Henry Blair, of the Eastern Shore, inventor of a seed planter, was the first black American to receive a patent from the U.S. Office of Patents.

The list of contributions made by black Marylanders is extensive and due in part to the fact that by 1830, our State had the largest number of free blacks than any State in the Union. By 1860, blacks constituted one-third of the State's population. The Maryland Abolition Society formed in 1789 was only the fourth such society organized in this country. Its work made a significant impact on the dismantling of that system here in our State in 1864, as well as nationally.

There's a great deal of local history in Anne Arundel County as well. Kunta Kinte, made famous through Alex Haley's book "Roots," arrived in the Port of Annapolis on the Lord Ligonier in September 1767. The area we now call Historic Annapolis was the hub of activity for many black artisans and businessmen. Following the Civil War, the former Camp Parole became a popular settlement area for newly freed men and is still one of the most stable and respected communities in the city of Annapolis today.

The first school for blacks in the county, the Freedmen's Bureau, was established in 1865 on Muddy Creek Road in south Anne Arundel County. Supported by Federal funds, it founded the Stanton School in the Parole area of Annapolis in 1867. When the original school closed in 1870, black residents rallied to save the Parole site, purchasing land and moving it to West Washington Street in Annapolis. The original Freedmen's Bureau is now the site of the Ralph Bunche Community Center, and the former Stanton School now a community recreation center. The Free School had the distinction of being the oldest school in continous use for the blacks in the county and was never a part of the public school system.

Over the span of our Nation's history, black Marylanders have made enormous contributions to our heritage. By remembering their achievements over the past 200 years, we are reminded of how far we've come as a nation.

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL ASSOCIATION, INC. CELEBRATES 95TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. FRANK ANNUNZIO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call to the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives that the Ukrainian National Association, Inc., a fraternal organization serving the Ukrainian community in the United States and Canada, celebrates its 95th anniversary on February 22.

During the last 95 years since its founding in 1894, the Ukrainian National Association has grown from its original 13 Ukrainian-American societies with 439 members, to 420 branches with a membership of over 77,000. Over 8,000 members are organized in 27 branches in my home State of Illinois.

This fine organization currently provides insurance coverage of over $150 million, and has engaged in numerous educational, cultural, social, and charitable efforts over the years. It has helped Ukrainians to settle in our country, and has provided scholarships for Ukrainian youth. At this point in the RECORD, I would like to include a statement prepared by the Ukrainian National Association outlining its history and its activities on behalf of the Ukrainian community in the United States and Canada, and a copy of that statement follows:

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

The Ukrainian National Association [UNA], a fraternal insurance organization, was founded on February 22, 1894—George Washington's birthday—in Shamokin, Pennsylvania. The creation of the UNA was sparked by a full first-page article in the fourth issue—November 1, 1893—of Svoboda, the first Ukrainian newspaper printed in the United States. Svoboda first appeared on September 15, 1893 and is the oldest Ukrainian newspaper in the world.

The need for a financial organization in the growing Ukrainian immigrant community was apparent and it was Svoboda's founder and editor, Reverend Gregory Hrushka, who encouraged the idea. Upon the creation of the Ukrainian National Association, Svoboda became its official organ. It still is today.

From its humble beginnings in 1894 with thirteen branches, not unlike the thirteen original States that comprised the United States, the Ukrainian National Association has expanded to its present 420 branches—or lodges—in the United States and Canada. It is the largest Ukrainian-American fraternal insurance organization with over 77,000 members and over $100 million in estimated assets. The UNA currently has branches in 28 states in the United States and 7 provinces of Canada.

In addition to providing for the life insurance needs of the Ukrainian-American community by offering low-cost life insurance protection, the UNA provides its members with a wide range of educational, cultural, social, and charitable benefits. Through its many, diverse programs, the Ukrainian National Association has helped preserve the national traditions and customs of Ukrainians in the United States and Canada, thereby contributing to the richness of American culture.

Through its network of 420 branches, the UNA maintains close contact with its membership. Officers of the branches see to the needs of their members, participate in various Ukrainian local activities, and provide leadership in the Ukrainian-American community.

In addition to publishing Svoboda, a Ukrainian-language daily newspaper, the UNA publishes the Ukrainian Weekly in English and a monthly children's magazine, Veselka (Rainbow). Over the years, the UNA has also financed numerous books on Ukrainian subjects such as the two volume Ukraine: A Concise Encyclopedia—University of Toronto Press—and Robert Conquest's Harvest of Sorrow (Oxford University Press), a highly acclaimed history of the famine in Ukraine during 1932-33.

As part of its fraternal benefit work, the UNA provides over $120,000 in scholarships annually to its members. It operates a retirement home for its senior citizens, provides mortgages to its members, and is a patron of the Ukrainian community's cultural and religious activities. Over the years, the UNA has provided low-interest mortgage loans for the construction of many Ukrainian churches and community centers in the United States and Canada thereby strengthening the religious and cultural bonds of the community.

The Ukrainian National Association also owns and operates "Soyuzivka," a year-round, full-service resort in the Catskill Mountains in New York State. In addition to providing social and cultural activities for its members at "Soyuzivka," the UNA operates children's camps, cultural courses, and sports camps at its resort.

The dedication by former President Dwight D. Eisenhower of a monument to Taras Shevchenko, the national poet of Ukraine, in Washington, DC, in June 1964 was a project unitiated by the Ukrainian National Association. The Ukrainian Congress Committee of America [UCCA] and the Ukrainian American Coordinating Council [UACC] were both established by the UNA in an effort to better coordinate the work of the many financial, cultural, social, youth, and political organizations in the Ukrainian-American community.

While the UNA was established to assist Ukrainians living in the United States and Canada, it has never lost sight of the needs and aspirations of Ukrainians in Ukraine. Throughout its history the UNA has assisted the struggle for a free and independent Ukraine by keeping American policy makers current on events taking place in Ukraine. The UNA assisted the many Ukrainian refugees created by World War II and has aided the victims of natural disasters such as Ukrainians in Yugoslavia in the 1970's and Armenians left homeless by the recent earthquake in Armenia.

Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the 95th anniversary of the Ukrainain National Association, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the officers and members of this organization on their efforts on behalf of Ukrainians, and to extend my warmest best wishes as they continue in their actions which have contributed to the rich diversity in our own American culture.

ESCROW BOND DEAL ABUSES

HON. BRIAN J. DONNELLY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am enclosing for the RECORD an editorial from the Bond Buyer, a respected financial publication. This responsible editorial comments on several billion dollars worth of tax-exempt bond deals rushed to market during consideration of the 1986 Tax Reform Act. Many of these deals appear extremely abusive.

Mr. Speaker, during the 2-year process leading to enactment of the 1986 Tax Reform Act, Congress was considering several restrictions on the ability of tax-exempt bond issuers to earn arbitrage profits. In general, the term "arbitrage" refers to profits earned when bond proceeds are invested in an investment paying a higher yield than the bond itself. The 1986 Tax Reform Act imposed numerous additional—and, I might add, justified—restrictions on the ability of issuers to earn arbitrage profits.

The Bond Buyer editorial references an investigation being conducted by the Securities and Exchange Commission on several bonds issued between 1984-86 which appear to be driven principally to avoid the arbitrage restrictions considered by Congress. The Bond Buyer—and other media sources, including the Wall Street Journal—have discovered that of several billion dollars worth of bond issues in that period, very little in the way of tangible construction has occurred. In fact, in some cases, bond proceeds have been invested in guaranteed investment contracts with 7-year maturities. In these abusive instances, it seems clear that the primary motivation behind the bond issues was high fees for bond lawyers and underwriters. In many cases, there was probably no intention to build tangible projects.

Mr. Speaker, tax-exempt bonds are not a God-given right. They are a gratuity, provided by the taxpayer, to do things in the public interest. In the case of bond transactions where bond proceeds are outstanding up to 5 years after issuance of the bonds and no projects have been built, little in the way of public interest is occurring. Outstanding issues of bonds with no underlying projects place an unconsionable level of debt on local communities. This can not, should not, and will not be tolerated.

I will be writing to the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission on this issue. I will ask Treasury and the Service to not hesitate to collapse bond transactions and declare them taxable if the transactions violate existing law. In my letters, I will also indicate—and let me reiteriate this point there—that legislation on this issue may be forthcoming.

Let me make one final point, Mr. Speaker. I heard a lot of complaints when I introduced legislation imposing additional bond restrictions earlier this year and made the legislation effective on the date of introduction. I did so because I was concerned about a potential rush to market—precisely what happened between 1984 and 1986. Articles such as the one in the Bond Buyer convince me that my approach on tight effective dates is the correct one. Congress has every right to prevent abusive bond transactions from being rushed to market and, quite frankly, situations such as this make it easier to convince my colleagues of the legitimacy of using restrictive effective dates.

The Bond Buyer article follows.

ESCROW PROJECTS PROVIDE A REASON FOR NEW CURBS ON ABUSIVE DEALS

WASHINGTON.—Save a copy of this newspaper.

Then, the next time you get upset because Congress or the Treasury has cracked down with lightning speed on some perceived abuse in the tax-exempt bond market, pull the paper out and reread the story at the far right and its accompanying charts.

As they show, municipal market participants will have no one to blame but themselves if new curbs are proposed.

Based on an investigation by The Bond Buyer into the status of 85 arbitrage-driven escrow projects that were rushed to market in 1985 and 1986 and are under investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission, the municipal market has proved Congress with a prime argument for taking quick action to halt future abusive bond deals.

The research shows that of the 73 projects on the list that can be identified, 46—or 63% of the deals—were never started. More important, those 46 deals account for a gargantuan 86% of the dollar value of the 73 deals, or $2.35 billion. Only a pitifully small $350 million out of an estimated $2.72 billion of projects on the list of 73 were ever completed.

Most of the deals produced nothing—except large fees to the participants and lost revenue for the Treasury.

Here's one example:

Barbourville, Ky., with a population of 1,038, floated $33.9 million of escrow bonds to finance a feasibility study and construction of a plant in the southeastern part of the state that would burn trash to generate electricity.

That's about $32,600 per resident—an unconscionably high amount of debt when the average per-capita amount of state and local debt in the United States is about $2,300.

Not surprisingly, the feasibility study, done after the bonds were issued, showed that the odds of the project being financially successful were only marginal. So the bond issue was collapsed on Aug. 1, 1988—three years after it was issued—when certificates of deposit at Banque Paribas, where the bond proceeds had been invested, came due.

Although nothing was ever constructed, Matthews & Wright Inc., the underwriter, received a fee of $1.186 million.

The bond counsel, Berkman, Ruslander, Pohl, Lieber & Engel, and the underwriter's counsel, tax counsel, and trustee got combined fees of about $339,000.

The city, according, to local officials, profited as well by getting the $694,904 in arbitrage profits that remained after the bondholders were paid off.

The investors, of course, profited by getting tax-exempt interest.

Only the federal government got shortchanged. Not only did the bondholders avoid paying federal tax on the interest they earned, but nothing was built in exchange for the indirect subsidy provided through the tax exemption.

Admittedly, the deals being investigated, which include 33 underwritten by the besieged Matthews & Wright Inc., and 18 by Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp., are probably the worst-case examples among the tens of billions of dollars of bond deals that were rushed to market to beat the arbitrage provisions in the 1986 tax law.

Those provisions, which made such arbitrage deals economically impossible by requiring a rebate of the excess arbitrage earned, applied to private-purpose bond deals done after Dec. 31, 1985, and to public-purpose deals done after Aug. 31, 1986.

The track record for the hundreds of other arbitrage-driven deals might be better, but it is the record of the deals under investigation that Congress will remember.

Unfortunately, that abysmal record gives Congress and the Treasury a strong argument for making any future bond curbs effective immediately, especially if there is any hint that a rush to market similar to those in 1985 and 1986 might occur.

To a certain extent, that happened last month, when Rep. Brian J. Donnelly, D-Mass., introduced legislation to put further curbs on rental housing bonds.

He made the provisions effective as of Jan. 3, 1989—the day he introduced the bill—because he argued that he feared a rush to market would occur if he made the provision effective the day the committee acted on the measure or later.

The Jan. 3 effective date touched off a furor in the housing rental bond market, and Mr. Donnelly last week finally calmed the market down by announcing that he would not oppose a delay in the Jan. 3 date unless there are abuses or a rush to market. So far, there are no signs of a rush or serious abuses, and Mr. Donnelly should be commended for freeing the market.

Retroactive effective dates have always been reserved for curbing rushes to market or serious abuses, such as arbitrage-driven blind pools and pension bonds or fee-driven housing bonds for projects outside an issuer's jurisdiction, which threatened to produce a hugh volume of bonds but little public benefit.

Their use has always been saved for congressional leaders and Treasury officials, and that is how it should stay.

When escrow bonds were being rushed to market in 1985 and 1986, however, issuers and underwriters persuaded congressional leaders to let them finish their deals before the new curbs went into effect.

The grim picture painted by the SEC's escrow bond investigation now shows that many of those deals produced little of value and probably never should have been sold.

But that is not the case for all municipal bond deals. The job ahead for municipal market participants are twofold: to avoid doing deals that have little chance of being completed and to convince Congress that market participants are not all greedy. Otherwise, hair-trigger effective dates might become the norm.

GLOBAL WARMING PREVENTION ACT

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Ms. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, today, I and my colleague Representative GEORGE BROWN are joined by 60 Members of the House in introducing the Global Warming Prevention Act. This comprehensive legislation deals with the threat of rapid climate change resulting from rising atmospheric concentrations of carbon dioxide, chlorofluorocarbons, nitrous oxide, methane, and other infrared trapping aerosols.

Americans witnessed an unusual number of disasters in 1988 that included: the crop-destroying drought that devastated many of America's farms; raging forest fires that spread uncontrollably through our commercial timber and pristine wilderness areas; Hurricanes Gilbert and Helene that ravaged the Caribbean and our southeastern shores, leaving entire communities homeless; the record heat wave that gripped the Nation and intensified the unhealthy effects of urban pollution; and the tragic flooding of Bangladesh that left disease and starvation in its wake.

Scientists lack adequate data to say whether these costly incidents were influenced by the global warming trend. But the scientific community is united in warning us that in the future such disasters will occur with increasing frequency and severity if the rise in greenhouse gas emissions goes unchecked.

Clearly more basic research on climate change is paramount if science is to be able to better predict the many consequences from rising levels of greenhouse gases. Yet, we already know that massive economic dislocations are in store if business as usual continues, as was detailed in the climate impact report recently prepared for Congress by the Environmental Protection Agency. Sea level rise could destroy one-fourth to two-thirds of coastal wetlands, jeopardizing U.S. shellfish and finfish supplies. Significant dieback of southern forests could occur, which currently supply about half of the Nation's softwood and hardwood timber.

An estimated $100 billion will have to be spent on sea walls and coastline protection against rising sea levels. This will still not prevent the loss of some 7,000 square miles of shoreline. Farming would shift northward, as would agricultural pests and pathogens—many resistant to current pesticides—as temperatures and droughts increase. Some regions could suffer crop losses of up to 80 percent. Heat waves will drive up electricity demand, eventually leading to the need for upwards of 400,000 megawatts of extra powerplants at a cost of $325 billion. By 2055, utility bills could climb by as much as $75 billion per year solely to pay for the additional generating capacity.

Temperature increases would speed the reaction rates among chemicals in the atmosphere and prolong their consequences as a result of a longer summer season. This could lead to increased smog in many urban areas. According to the EPA study, an area like the San Francisco Bay could experience a 20-percent increase in ozone concentrations and a doubling of days exceeding air quality standards, even if emissions did not increase from present levels.

Erratic weather patterns could produce dramatic reductions in rain and snowfall, jeopardizing the reliability of hydrodams, irrigation systems, and even river transport, as was experienced on the Mississippi River this past year.

The EPA did not study all possible consequences, and some scientists believe that as global climate models become more sophisticated we are likely to discover more changes, including abrupt ones. This was the message delivered a few months ago by a number of prominent ecologists and biologists at the World Wildlife Fund Conference in the Nation's Capital on the consequences of the global warming on the world's plant and animal species. Profound and widespread biological disruption is likely to occur in the coming decades.

As Dr. Stephen Schneider of the National Center for Atmospheric Research noted, humans are in the process of changing the Earth's atmosphere 10 to 40 times faster than natural climate changes have occurred in the past. The natural rate of change is about 4 degrees Fahrenheit in 1,000 years, while the forcing effect of rising greenhouse gases could warm the global climate 4 to 9 degrees Fahrenheit in the next 100 years.

"Rapid change is the enemy of life," Dr. George Woodwell, director of the Woods Hole Research Center, told the convening scientists. If the warming is not stopped, the changes will be "open-ended, rapid and accelerating." Species extinction will be accelerated. Trees, for example, can only migrate tens of miles per century, whereas the changing climate will force their survival range hundreds of miles northward. Even mobile species capable of shifting quickly are likely to be blocked by cities and other impenetrable manmade barriers.

Such dire consequences have led several of the world's prestigious scientific bodies, including the World Meteorological Union, the International Council of Scientific Unions, and the United Nations Environment Programme, to call for steps to prevent a worsening of the global warming trend. Minimum reductions of 20 percent from current carbon dioxide emissions levels within the next 15 years was the recommendation issued at the 1988 Toronto World Conference on the Changing Atomosphere.

The legislation I and my colleagues are introducing today takes this advice very seriously. We firmly believe that timeless adage, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. At the same time, we are quite aware from the considerable congressional testimony that has been provided in recent years, that the available options for reducing greenhouse gases such as carbon dioxide can vary in cost by tenfold or more. This makes it imperative that the strategy the Federal Government undertakes in formulating global warming prevention policies avoid imposing needless and wasteful expenditures on the Nation's taxpayers, ratepayers, and stockholders.

I believe our legislation lays out just such a strategy. The guiding principle of this bill is to implement a federalwide, least-cost planning process, especially for the energy sector, which produces roughly half the total greenhouse gas emissions.

The bottom line result of this approach is to engender, as much as is possible, a positive sum strategy that cuts greenhouse gas emissions while cutting energy costs at the same time. Indeed, based on the available evidence of what the least cost energy approach offers, we could as well have referred to this bill as the "global competitiveness and U.S. productivity enhancement act." The several dozen policy measures detailed in this legislation should: Help consumers eventually save several hundred billion dollars per year on their energy bills; create high-efficiency, energy-generating, and energy-consuming products and services for export; reduce foreign oil imports and the trade deficit; and, reduce a range of other environmental pollutants in addition to greenhouse gases.

This is the repeated message in testimony delivered by numerous expert witnesses before Congress, who have detailed the preeminent role that energy efficiency has come to play in our economy. Energy efficiency improvements, which flow from scientific advancements and technological innovations that enable more energy services to be delivered with less energy input, have become the key source of least cost energy services.

It is a too little appreciated fact that over the past 15 years investments in improving the efficiency of America's stock of buildings, appliances, vehicles, industrial equipment, and other energy-consuming devices have cut energy consumption by one-third, reduced carbon emissions 40 percent below what they otherwise would have been, and trimmed the U.S. energy bill by a phenomenal $160 billion per year.

Success breeds success, and this is undeniably true about remaining opportunities for saving more money and cutting greenhouse emissions through additional efficiency improvements.

Detailed Government and private studies show that the U.S. economy could maintain robust economic growth while achieving $200 billion per year in energy savings through continued investment in efficiency technologies.

These investment opportunities are on average 2 to 5 times cheaper than conventional fossil and nuclear resource options. Declining levels of greenhouse gas emissions are a derivative, cost-free benefit of the efficiency improvements.

Let me illustrate with one example: lighting. Lighting, and the associated air conditioning needed to remove the heat generated by lights, consumes the equivalent of nearly one-half of all coal burned by utilities. Yet, a rich variety of highly efficient lighting products now make it possible to deliver the same lighting amenities while consuming one-half to three-fourths less electricity. These more efficient lighting products would not only cut carbon emissions by tens of millions of tons annually, but reduce yearly energy bills by several tens of billions of dollars

However, a variety of market imperfections and institutional barriers currently inhibit the timely capture of the low-cost energy options. In particular, public policymaking has failed to keep pace with these technological innovations and new commercial opportunities, nor have any public policy efforts been taken to deal with the threat of global warming. The proposed legislation sets out new, needed changes in Federal policies that reduce a number of the key market barriers.

Again, let me illustrate with another example: vehicles. The current efficiency of the Nation's more than 130 million light cars and trucks averages less than 20 miles per gallon [mpg]. These vehicles consume over 7 million barrels of oil per day, emit their weight per year in carbon emissions, and are responsible for nearly one-third of U.S. greenhouse emissions. Fuel economy standards have raised new vehicle fleet averages to roughly 27 mpg, nearly twice the level of the fleet average when the standards were enacted in the mid-1970's. The standards have cut carbon emissions by millions of tons per year, while accumulating net energy savings for consumers of $180 billion as of 1987.

Unfortunately, since less than a fifth of total driving cost is fuel, consumers have little incentive to purchase vehicles much more efficient than 30 or 35 mpg. This remains the case even at fuel prices 2 to 4 times the U.S. pump price, as found in most European nations. Yet, at least seven manufacturers have already tested cost-effective, high-performance prototype cars getting 65 to 135 mpg, while maintaining crashworthiness, emissions controls, acceleration, and other amenities.

Obviously, from a societal and global perspective, these highly efficient vehicles would greatly reduce greenhouse gases—as well as vulnerable foreign oil imports and our $130 billion trade deficit. There are policy actions that are available to overcome this market failure. This legislation includes three such measures: new, and greatly improved, vehicle energy efficiency performance standards; tax rebates of up to $2,000 per car as an incentive for consumers to purchase more efficient vehicles; and an increase in the current gas guzzler tax on very inefficient vehicles. These three measures are certain to raise the U.S. vehicle fleet efficiency average to 45 mpg for light vehicles and 35 mpg for light trucks by 1999. This will result in preventing the combustion of 8 billion barrels of oil over the next 30 years.

The auto improvements will save consumers tens of billions of dollars at the gas pump, prevent the release of over 1 billion tons of carbon into the atmosphere, improve urban air quality by reducing volatile organic compounds, and continue to save an additional 500 million barrels of oil each year. It is also noteworthy that these modest improvements exceed the combined oil resources that could be extracted from the Pacific coast, Alaska, the Arctic Refuge, and the Atlantic coast. This by no means exhausts the cost-effective efficiency improvements that are available; an additional 8 billion barrels could be saved by achieving light car/truck levels of 60/45 mpg by early in the next century.

Efficiency is not a panacea to the global warming problem, but represents the most important first step this and other nations can take in reducing greenhouse gases in a cost-minimizing manner, while at the same time spurring economic productivity.

The energy savings may offer one of the few sources of investment capital for undertaking additional steps to control greenhouse emissions. The international study by the highly respected End Use Global Energy Project, "Energy for a Sustainable World" (Eastern-Wiley Press, 1988), found that it is cost effective to continue a 3-percent-per-year improvement in energy efficiency for several decades to come. Energy savings would eventually exceed a staggering $5 trillion per decade.

Milking this cash cow is imperative, given the equally staggering debt and deficits that the United States and many other countries face. Without these relatively easy savings, it may well be impossible to finance the billions of dollars of additional research and steps that must be undertaken.

Other vital steps that need to be taken, and that are addressed in this legislation, include: Rapid development of ecologically sustainable renewable energy resources; prevention of deforestation and promotion of reforestation and agroforestry worldwide; eliminating stratospheric ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons [CFC's] and other halocarbons, and reducing other greenhouse gases—for example, methane and nitrous oxide; achieving population stabilization sooner than later through promotion of universal family planning services; and development of adaptive measures for agriculture and other affected parts of the economy that will be impacted by changing climate patterns and sea level rise as the global warming takes its course.

The Global Warming Prevention Act gives high priority to reinvigorating the Nation's energy efficiency and renewable energy R&D program, which have been reduced 50 percent and 75 percent respectively, over the past decade. Research and development of these two nongreenhouse energy options receive a mere $160 million and $150 million, respectively, of the U.S. Department of Energy's [DOE] roughly $15 billion yearly budget.

These low funding levels are unfathomable, given the fact that the Federal energy efficiency R&D program has been a spectacular success. If just seven of its most impressive results had to justify every tax dollar ever expended on energy efficiency R&D, the taxpayers would still realize a $50 return on each dollar. Yet, according to the American Institute of Physics, which pioneered work done on this energy option, this Nation has just scratched the surface of what remains to be achieved. Our legislation reflects this sage advice by maintaining a vigorous, albeit modest, program.

In the case of renewables, which include solar, biomass, hydro, wind, and geothermal resources, the United States has barely tapped its massive reserves, although renewables currently contribute close to 10 percent of the Nation's total energy needs—50 percent more than nuclear power, which currently receives five times more Federal R&D funds than renewable resources.

According to DOE's Energy Research Advisory Board [ERAB] the U.S. reserves of renewable energy resources exceed 80,000 quads. This is 1,000 times the current total U.S. energy consumption, and 5 to 10 times larger than U.S. coal reserves. ERAB estimates that with a modest, but stable-funded R&D program, the Nation could economically extract 85 quads from this resource base, or 75 percent of the energy projected to be needed, within 25 years. This bill takes that advice seriously.

Much of America's garbage wastes represent an untapped renewable resource. This legislation proposes to alleviate a nagging national problem of waste disposal, by including policy measures for spurring greater reliance on recyclable materials. Studies have shown that if the United States increased its recycling rate 10 percent above the projected level by 1992 and 30 percent above the projected level by 2008, the Nation could accumulate savings of $30 billion and 7 quads of energy.

Natural gas can also play an important role as a bridging fuel, since it produces roughly half as much CO_2 as coal. The United States currently has the world lead in high efficiency advanced gas turbines, researched and developed over the past decade for the Air Force for aircraft. They can be modified for use as highly efficient electric and steam generators.

The bill promotes the demonstration of this aeroderivative technology. They can operate 50 percent more efficiently than conventional powerplants, and cost half as much as new coal or nuclear plants. Studies have shown that just using them to replace currently operating gas-fired powerplants would save the Nation a half a million barrels of gas per day and $16 billion in net present value.

Equally important, this technology represents an outstanding export product. An Agency for International Development [AID] study found that this aircraft-derived gas turbine could be used to cost effectively meet the steam-processing needs of the sugar cane factories located in 70 developing countries, while also cogenerating an estimated 50,000 megawatts of excess electricity. This is equal to one-fourth of all electricity currently generated in these countries. Most importantly, the turbines can use sugar cane wastes and renewably cultivated tree crops and other biomass as fuel, instead of depending on the next least-cost fuel, imported coal. Fuelwood plantations also fit nicely with global warming prevention, since trees serve a double function as carbon reservoirs.

Recent congressional testimony indicates that aeroderived turbines also offer an excellent opportunity for U.S. farmers to diversify their income by planting tree crops. The 80-plus million acres of erosive lands that could qualify under the Conservation Reserve Program are capable of growing biomass fuels for these advanced turbines sufficient to replace half of all coal-fired powerplants when they are eventually retired. This idea merits serious attention, including more research on appropriate tree species and ecologically sustainable forest management practices.

In addition to reducing carbon emissions through efficiency improvements, greater reliance on renewable resources, and the use of natural gas as a bridging fuel, further steps can be taken to offset current emissions from coal combustion. The United States extracts over 900 million tons of coal per year, and coal generates over half of U.S. electricity. The legislation before us promotes research to reduce CO_2 emissions from coal. Recent estimates indicate that trees could be planted to offset the carbon dioxide emissions of new coal plants, adding a modest 5 percent to the cost of delivered electricity.

A key provision in the legislation also promotes urban tree planting, which pioneering research by Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory and the American Forestry Association find to be one of the lowest options available for offsetting carbon emissions. Only one tree is replanted in the United States for every four that die or are cut down. As a result of less shaded communities, more fossil fuels are burned to operate air conditioners. An estimated 160 million trees could be selectively planted around buildings and on streets, cooling communities, saving several billion dollars per year in air-conditioning costs, and reducing carbon emissions by tens of millions of tons per year. One tree planted in urban settings has the same offsetting effect as 14 trees planted in rural areas, because of the reduced air-conditioning effect.

The Global Warming Prevention Act addresses other aspects of the greenhouse probe besides fossil fuel combustion. The bill calls for eliminating the use of ozone-depleting chemicals included in the Montreal Protocol by 1995. This is imperative, as underscored by the new scientific findings that, in addition to serious depletion in the Antarctic, ozone depletion in the Arctic Circle is 50 times higher than models projected.

Another problem in need of immediate attention is forest destruction which, according to scientific estimates, contributes 10 to 20 percent of the annual loading of greenhouse gases into the atmosphere. The world's original forest area has declined by 20 percent. Half the remaining forest are in developing countries, where over 25 million acres, or the size of Great Britain, are being destroyed each year. Reforestation is occurring at a miserably slow rate—just a few percent in Africa, 10 percent in Latin America, and about 25 percent throughout Asia and the United States.

Developing countries are also losing 15 million acres of cropland to desertification each year. This is roughly the same area each year that in 10 years time could grow tree crops sufficient to provide the energy necessary to double agriculture output. According to the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, a doubling of output is imperative to feed and clothe the nearly 1 billion new births projected in these countries by the end of this century.

This legislation calls for the establishment of bilateral and multilateral Tropical Forestry and Agroforestry Programs. Well-crafted programs, learning from and avoiding the many mistakes of past projects and assisting widespread replication of the outstanding successes, could greatly spur the food, timber, and energy needs of developing countries in a low cost and ecologically sustainable manner.

There are a formidable set of problems that currently drive deforestation, but the long-term societal cost of this destruction demands our immediate attention and sustained leadership. Such steps make good sense, not only for slowing the global warming peril, or for reducing the rate of species extinction that is coupled to tropical forest loss, but to help eradicate famine and poverty and transform aid-dependent developing countries into prosperous trading partners.

Finally, I would like to recall the findings of a 1981 DOE report on "Energy and Air Quality," that a significant increase in atmospheric CO_2 "is expected to be caused by worldwide increases in population which will increase energy use and speed deforestation, limiting the control of CO_2 by natural processes." As World Bank President Barber Conable recently reiterated, unchecked population growth threatens to overwhelm even the best of development assistance programs. The World Bank and other international organizations have repeatedly stated the imperative of achieving population stabilization through the provision of universal family planning services. Achieving this goal in a reasonable timeframe could stablizie world population at several billion fewer births. The impact on global warming could be as great as the other efforts noted above.

This legislation proposes several policy measures regarding population stabilization, including: establishment of a National Commission on Population, Environment, and Natural Resources; the convening of an international conference on population to examine policies necessary to achieve sustainable world population levels; and, support for the goal of noncoercive, universal family planning services through increased Federal funding for these programs.

As can be seen from my statement, I believe we must act expeditiously and comprehensively to slow the greenhouse warming, and that we can do so in a cost-minimizing manner that bodes well for alleviating a variety of other pressing national concerns and global problems. The public policy measures put forward in this bill recognize a pivotal role to be placed by Federal policymakers in assisting States and communities to undertake appropriate actions at their level, as well as working with other nations to collaborate on achieving international goals.

Preventing a worsening of the world's climate will also turn on the commitment of individuals to take personal responsibility. Take something as simple as recycling paper. No one would look upon paper recycling as monumental, yet paper consumes half of all harvested wood worldwide. Currently, only 25 percent of that paper is reused. Or consider the replacement of a single incandescent bulb with the new, highly efficient compact fluorescent lamp. Over its lifetime, the compact will deliver the same light as an incandescent consuming four times more electricity, but will save the consumer over $25 and prevent the combustion of 1,000 pounds of carbon dioxide and 25 pounds of sulphur dioxide. Dozens of such individual options abound.

Perhaps never before in history have individual actions come to play so great an influence on the course of human events. Prevention pays, and it is incumbent upon each and every one of us to cash in on these opportunities. Failure to do so will be a terrible squandering of our national endowment.

SIDNEY HARMAN AND AMERICAN CONSUMER ELECTRONICS

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. LEVINE of Califorina. Mr. Speaker, Britain's preeminent audio magazine recently published an interview with Sidney Harman, chairman and CEO of Harman International. At a time when the American consumer electronics industry has largely been given up for dead, Harman International is demonstrating that it is possible for Americans to beat our competitors at their own game. Not only is Harman Industries making products of higher quality than their competitors, but the individual companies which make up Harman International are consistently operating on the leading edge of technology in home music reproduction.

I commend Sidney's thoughtful comments to my colleagues. If more American companies were to adopt his successful strategies of manufacturing and marketing I suspect the United States would have a much more vital and successful home electronics industry.

I ask for unanimous consent to the interview with Sidney Harman in the RECORD and urge my colleagues to take a few moments to read and reflect on his comments.

SIDNEY HARMAN AND AMERICAN CONSUMER ELECTRONICS

For 40 years, Sidney Harman has been involved in audio: in the early days, he was one of the prime movers in creating an industry where only a hobby had existed before; now, he is Chairman and Chief Executive of Harman International, which includes Harman/Kardon, Infinity, JBL, Audax and Soundcraft, with sale that topped $325 million in 1987.

His first job out of college (with a BSc in electrical engineering) was with Bogen, which build public address systems. He was quickly moved out of engineering and into management-level administration, though he became friends with the Chief Engineer, Bernard Kardon, and designed turntables and giant speakers for his own use. He and Kardon were instrumental in prodding David Bogen to develop the first amp. He left Bogen along with Kardon in 1953 to start Harman/Kardon; left H/K too a decade later to turn around a failing automotive accessories company but then bought H/K again in 1969, when he also acquired JBL and started building an audio empire which came to be called Harman International.

Then Harman was appointed Under-Secretary of Commerce to the Carter administration in 1977, and Harman International was sold to Beatrice Foods. Just a few years later, having left the government, he repurchased most of the original business. In '85, he was able to buy back Harman/Kardon from the Japanese electronics company Shin Shirasuna, making Harman/Kardon one of the few survivors of the American 'Golden Age' of audio to be still in the hands of its founder. The H/K line has been manufactured in Japan for the past 20 years, but by next year most of it will again be made in America.

Harman International's future is build on two strategies: selling in a world-wide market; and doing its own manufacturing in highly integrated, advanced facilities, using a motivated, skilled workforce. Some 80 percent of Harman's manufacturing sales come from US-made loudspeakers, including some built for the Japanese companies Sharp and Mitsubishi—a twist on the more common Western-designed/Far East-made scenario. This is no assembly operation: the plant makes its own veneer speaker enclosures, mills its own wire, winds its own voice coils, and makes its own precision components. To compete worldwide, equipment is designed for its own specific market in terms of both acoustic 'voice' and visual appearance.

MANUFACTURING

Weaken the linkage between design, manufacturing, and marketing, Harman believes, and you weaken the product. 'Design and manufacturing are stamen and pistil. They must be integrated from start to finish, or the product will soon lose its character and become like everyone else's.

The emphasis is on making your own because in making your own you can control the product, you can generate product differentiation and thus distinction from others—genuine legitimate distinction, not distinction just to be different.

The further away from hands-on that making the product goes, the more diluted, almost by definition, is the control. If your own people are not daily at the business of making the product, certain compromises are inescapable.

Time and again, as we build our own cabinets, the people working the now highly sophisticated machines learn what those machines can do, that even the designers of the machines don't know—what they can do working materials for our kind of product. If they are working in an environment that encourages them to think that their ideas are going to be welcomed, then they feed that kind of information back. That can't happen in an environment that regards the people doing the work as the equivalent of machines. It can't happen as readily when the work is being done 3000 miles away.

You see, the tradition in craft industries, and others, has always been that the design and the manufacturing are conceived together. Henry Ford knew that instinctively. I say it's always been there, it just hasn't been documented, it hasn't been analysed and articulated the way I'm doing now but failure after failure in products, in terms of the effectiveness of the product, in terms of the management of the cost of the product—products costing infinitely more than the designers expected, the marketing people wanted, the customers is ready to pay—failure after failure arises from the separation of the design and the manufacture.

Often the designers sit down and they design the product in terms of the circuitry or its electronics; or the acoustics if it's a loudspeaker, and then, with the product designed from their point of view, they pass it through a transom to the manufacturers and say then to the manufacturing people "Put this into production". Not unusually, the manufacturing people say "It's not possible, we don't have the machines for doing that, we don't have the tooling capacity to do that, and if we went outside to get the tooling capacity, you're asking for things so difficult to tool as to be inordinately costly and you don't need those. You don't need the particular tooling specs that are implicit in this design". And of course the designers say "Mind your own business, take what we've designed." The awkward, unconstructive and frequently unsuccessful process is that arms-length relationship between the designer and the manufacturer.

In real manufacturing, there's almost no separation between the production of the product and the design. You have to design it to be made and you have to have a sense of what the facilities are that you've got. Now if you want a facility for this design that you don't already have, you have to justify getting it.

But company after company has abandoned the manufacturing on the basis that in the first place it's trenchwork, it's hard, difficult, costly, tough work. Anybody can do that, has been the argument, anybody can suff the boards, load the boxes. There has been a certain fashion for the notion (not Harman, but other) that "What we'll do here is separate the two poles of the continuum. We'll do the design and the marketing, we'll farm out the manufacturing to the lowest cost nation or manufacturer in that nation and we will be opportunists and expedient, we will be quick to see when those things change, and if they change, we'll move it from Japan to Korea, and from Korea to Singapore, and from Singapore to Taiwan and from Taiwan to India and so on". Sounds good, sometimes works.

In the long term, the odds are against firms that abandon their manufacturing, that yield the stamen/pistil relationship. Once that decision has been made you clearly have to make compromises with other cultures, and other facilities, and you're not there to make the decisions on capital facilities. You don't live with it day in and day out, you don't have your own people on the production lines, talking with you about "we could do this better if we made this change, we're there all the time, we do it".'

DESIGNING FOR WORLD MARKETS

We know from experience, for example, that the voicing of loudspeakers, the intrinsic behaviour of the loudspeaker acoustically, is regarded in different terms in Europe, the United States and Japan. So we specifically generate acoustic designs that are responsive to those different appetites. In addition to that, we do intend to generate products which in their appearance, within an organic view of design, are also responsive to the market. Clearly, you can use a loudspeaker designed for any country in any other country. You don't even have questions of power supply. But if you want to design loudspeakers which are functionally responsive to the way in which people live, which musically respond to the particular attitudes that are almost generic in that society, you're going to come up with something that is somewhat different in Japan from the United States.

INTO THE LIVING ROOM

Before co-founding Harman/Kardon in 1953, Harman was executive vice-president and Bernard Kardon chief engineer with Bogen, which manufactured public address systems. Largely at their proddings, Bogen marketed the first high fidelity amp in 1948, distributing this through radio parts jobbers. At that time, David Bogen did not recognize it as a harbinger of home audio.

Harman and Kardon were among the very first to recognize that audio was changing from a strictly hobbyist interest and was coming out of the basement and moving into the living-room. This new market demanded a new approach.

The original audio products, the Bogen products and the others of that vintage, really grew out of industrial product attitudes. Bogen was making public address amplifiers and so when we decided we'd make an amplifier uniquely for the purpose of reproducing music at home, no-one paid much attention to what it looked like. It came out looking like a public address amplifier, with somewhat different electrical circuitry.

The first high fidelity shows were typically in hotels—a couple of floors of suites and rooms became exhibit areas. It won't surprise you that the products were mounted on industrial boards, looking for all the world like industrial products in an industrial display. H/K took the view that the purpose of the product was to reproduce music at home and, since it was, it was no more difficult or costly to make the product look attractive.

So the first H/K products used chassis just as others used chassis, but we copperplated them—you have to plate the chassis somehow or other. And against the copper plate we used simple, stark black knobs and we paid attention to form. Fundamentally, the product was the same product others had, except that thinking about it in these terms produced products that at the time looked remarkably attractive and different, and didn't cost any more to do.

And then what we did was to recognize that everyone was trying to sell the same experience in these high fidelity display rooms. As you walked down the corridor, everyone was playing the same record provided to them by the record companies. I remember that at one of those shows I walked down the corridor and everybody was blasting away with Richard Strass's Also Sprach Zarathustra. Why? Because it had relatively high levels of energy, and because the demonstrations seemed comparatively vivid; every room did the same thing.

However, the HK room was a living room, and in that living room, on a nice table, sat this very graceful looking product, and the music you listened to was Frank Sinatra, not Richard Strauss. We knew that a relatively small percentage of the people wandering those halls had experienced listening to Zarathustra very often in reproduced form—or in any other form. A very high percentage of them probably listened to Sinatra on the three-tube radios at home and in their automobiles and so they had a particular Sinatra reference, and no Strauss reference. Thus when they walked into our room, they heard Sinatra played over this, by comparison, remarkably sophisticated system. If you hadn't listened to Zarathustra, how did you know there was any difference?

INTEGRATEDS V. SEPARATES

This debate has been around since high fidelity's beginnings. The fashion seems to be changing once again—whereas a few years ago, no high-end company that wanted to be taken seriously would include an integrated in its line, now more and more are doing just that, particularly in England. Harman/Kardon, however, has recognized its benefits since it introduced its first receiver in 1955.

The initial products arose from people who were engineers interested in music and who had not surprisingly concluded that the conventional way of listening over very modest equipment produced very modest audio results. So the conventional wisdom for these first products was clearly separated components, which is why we speak of component high fidelity.

Take a radio, which typically had incorporated on a small chassis a tuning unit, an amplifier, and a loudspeaker, all in a little box, 6 in square. The original address to this was "Let's break out these components, let's get a tuner that is all tuner, and do everything we can, within the confines of the available technology, to make it the best tuner possible. Let's do the same thing with the preamplifier and the power supply and the power amplifier and the loudspeaker". Thus components, each the optimum expression that the people doing the design were capable of. And that led, not surprisingly, to a series of beliefs, prejudices, which said if they're not individual components, they can't be high fidelity. Thus nobody in the industry dared to do anything that was different from that.

Harman Kardon produced the first receiver. We put an elaborated tuner, an elaborated pre-amplifier, an elaborated power amplifier, and an elaborated power supply on the one chassis. When we first took it around, salesmen in the dealer shops said, "That's ridiculous, nobody will ever buy such a product". Somebody ridiculed it, laughed uproariously, and said "Hang a loudspeaker on that chassis, and my friend, you've got a radio." And H/K at the time said, "You're wrong. In fact, if you'll just take a look at this beautiful brushed copper chassis, you'll see markings on the top that delineate the tuner, the preamplifier, the power supply, and the power amplifier. What we've done is to integrate them, and in the very process of integrating, eliminated some of the problems that components generated." What were the problems? If you separated each of these units, then you had to interconnect them with wiring and cable and the like and the opportunity to introduce distortion that way was increased. H/K moved against the conventional wisdom and of course, the history of this industry makes it very clear that the receiver has been the single most successful high fidelity product of all.

HOBBY TO INDUSTRY

Audio is now a multi-billion dollar industry, where, 40 years ago, it barely existed. Over 80% of American households have stereo systems of some kind. I would say that a quite wonderful thing has happened over a number of decades. I remember very well the early years when the major companies in the country—RCA, CBS, General Electric—were engaged in manufacturing products for reproduction of music at home. And they scorned this industry.

I remember a full-page advertisement by CBS Columbia. Occupying about the top third of the page was a photograph of a maniacal-looking fellow with over 100 electrical components in front of him on a table—transformers and capacitors and tubes and wire and solder—and in his hands a soldering iron and a pair of pliers, and he looked quite mad. Dirty, sweaty. And the caption above the photograph read "High Fidelity for the .025%". Then below it was a picture of a very staid couple, dressed in evening attire, listening in rapture to a phonograph box called, as I remember, the Columbia 360, because, presumably, it distributed sound in approximately a 360 arc. And the caption above the photo was "High Fidelity for the 99.975%". So, it said, this fledging activity is for idiots and maniacs. They scorned the business.

Today, those firms are essentially out of this business and high order of respect and regard is experienced by all the legitimate manufacturers in the business on a fairly broad scale. It is an established industry that did not exist 35 years ago. This is no longer a business for the privileged few. The name H/K and the names JBL and Infinity exceed in their reputation by a long margin the real weight and size of the companies. More than anything else, I would say that this is what is happening to this industry over the years.

IN MEMORY OF JOHN EDWARD ATKINSON

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, in January 1983, I rose to pay tribute to a distinguished citizen of Los Angeles, Mr. John Edward Atkinson, on the occasion of his retirement from the Carnation Co. Today, Mr. Speaker, it saddens me to inform my colleagues that Mr. Atkinson, or Eddie, as we all called him, passed away on December 26, 1988. Those of us who were privileged to know and love Eddie are in deep mourning at the passing of such a great man. I would like to submit for the RECORD, a profile of Eddie's life.

PROFILE OF EDDIE ATKINSON

J. Edward Atkinson—Eddie, as we knew him, was manager of Urban relations for the Carnation Co., Los Angeles, CA, and acted as a liaison officer between Carnation Co. and all minority communities. He was promoted to this position in 1975. Previously, he had served, beginning in 1965, as public relations supervisor, senior public relations supervisor, and assistant director of public relations.

Born in Denver, CO, he received his B.A. degree from Loyola University in Los Angeles. He was the editor and researcher of Black Dimensions in Contemporary American Art, a record of the genius of 50 black American artists, published in 1971, and recognized by Esquire magazine and the business committee for the arts for its outstanding contribution in promoting the arts.

In 1974, Eddie coordinated, edited, and was involved in the promotion and distribution of "Rising Voices"/"Voces Que Surgen". This book includes the inspiring stories of 52 outstanding Spanish-Americans portrayed in vivid words and photos. He has authorized many pamphlets on employment, prenatal care and health, and black history. Distribution of these pamphlets has exceeded 15 million.

In 1958, Eddie was the first black to run for the city council and reach the general election—losing by only 1 thousand votes!

Eddie Atkinson has served as a past national vice president of the National Association of Market Developers, Inc.; as a member of the board of directors of Loyola University Alumni Association; Los Angeles Chapter of the NAACP; Western Region Urban League, and was, at the time of his passing, a member of the Pre-Need board of trustees for the Angelus Corp.

Among his many distinguished awards were: In 1974, Eddie was awarded a "Silver Anvil", for his institutional public relations program on behalf of Carnation. The Silver Anvil Awards are presented by the Public Relations Society of America and are the ultimate honors to public relations professionals.

In 1977, he received an honorary doctorate in humane letters from King Memorial College in Columbia, SC. In 1978, he received the achievement award from the Los Angeles Association of Advertising Women. In 1979, the Governor of Kentucky bestowed upon Eddie the title of "Honorary Kentucky Colonel". In 1981, he received the National Association of Market Developers' Presidential Award.

He leaves to cherish his memories: a wife, Antoinette; two children, Edward Charles and Joy; 3 grandchildren, Katherine, Aaron, and Corine; and a host of friends.

EDUCATION IN THE PRESIDENT'S BLACK BOX

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the Members a brief article from the Montebello Community News. The article notes a few of my concerns about the President's budget proposals and their implications for our Nation's future.

EDUCATION IN THE PRESIDENT'S BLACK BOX

(By Matthew G. Martinez, Member of Congress)

International comparison after international comparison shows that America's best students are as good as any in the world—but most of our students come in last or nearly last on tests measuring what they know. In terms of national security, national prosperity, and national community, is it any wonder that America is becoming A Nation At Risk?

Excellence in education is not free. While the total spending per student has climbed a bit over the years, this statistical average hides huge changes in the demands our schools must meet and in the nature of the students attending our schools. A hundred years ago—at the peak of America's first industrial revolution—only about 6 out of every 100 17 year olds had graduated from high school. The jobs shoveling coal or pumping gas or doing mindless tasks on an assembly line that allowed those dropouts to succeed no longer exist.

Technological wizardry, skyrocketing opportunities in world trade, and major demographic shifts are all making education more important today than ever before. Today, as we enter a new industrial revolution, 73% of our 17 year olds graduate high school, and over half of the graduates go on to some postsecondary education. As the President said in his budget speech, the longer our graduation lines are today, the shorter our unemployment lines will be tomorrow.

Yet America is doing too little to meet this challenge. America has cut the proportion of its economic might that goes toward building educational excellence. The proportion of our economy going toward education has fallen from 7.5% of the GNP in 1970 to 6.7% in 1985. And worse—virtually all this decline in effort has come in elementary and secondary schools. This gap between what we are doing and what we would be doing if we had just maintained our level of effort is roughly equal to all funds going into postsecondary education in 1970. Even when we ignore the changing nature and size of our economy, Federal expenditures for education fell 8% between 1980 and 1988. Clearly, our priorities have been misplaced.

For far less than the price of last year's drought relief for farmers or the Bush savings and loan bailout, our nation could build a true revolution in educational excellence for all Americans. In large part, we know what works but we aren't doing it. Early education is vital. It builds later success in school, and as the kids grow it helps them to find jobs and to keep them out of trouble with the law. Yet Head Start—a program with a proven long term track record in improving the achievement of at risk students—only reaches about one sixth of the poor children who qualify for the program. Despite significant gains by children participating in the program, less than half the eligible children receive Chapter I support for the education of disadvantaged children. Mr. Bush has proposed a $250 million increase in funding for Head Start—but since the program currently serves only one sixth of the eligible children, much more is needed. That is why I have cosponsored legislation to provide $500 million in additional funding for Head Start.

Instead of support for educational programs with excellent track records, we are getting the glitz. Mr. Bush wants to reward a few "merit schools" because they are already doing well. He wants to provide scholarships for outstanding students in science and to increase support for magnet schools. These are laudable programs. Indeed, last year as a member of the House Committee on Education and Labor, I helped craft the Hawkins-Stafford School Improvement Act which sets up a program of "Blue Ribbon Schools" to recognize achievement, and establishes awards for excellence in teaching math science and foreign languages, establishes federal support for gifted and talented education, and strengthens the magnet school program. Spotlighting achievement and diffusing information about what works in building performance is vital.

But we cannot afford to cream the best 1% of our nation's students, and to forget the rest. Japan excels because it has the best bottom half of the class in the world. The Bush proposals ignore most of our students. Mr. Bush talks about avoiding drop outs—but the Bush budget does nearly nothing to prevent dropouts.

The President's budget has been termed a "black box" because while the President has spotlighted where he wants new money, he is playing coy with information on where the cuts required by his "flexible freeze" deficit reduction plan would be made. Because he has taken so many budget items off the table, education is a likely target for cuts. By refusing to state his commitment to defending funding for existing education programs, the President has put funding for existing educational programs at risk.

The President has also proposed a troubling federal grab for power in education. Mr. Bush has put his full weight behind alternative certification of teachers, to allow individuals to enter teaching from other fields. Certification of teachers is not an appropriate role for the Federal government. From the earliest days of schooling in America, establishing requirements for who will be allowed to teach in our schools has been a matter of local and state judgment. This decentralization has been the genius of American education: it is the laboratory of democracy.

The problems are many, and they are serious. Truly, America's future is at risk in our schools today. Let us hope that as our President's plans for education emerge from his black box budget they will begin to include serious efforts to improve our schools.

JENSEN UNIT REPAYMENT CONTRACT

HON. HOWARD C. NIELSON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I rise with my colleagues from Utah, Congressmen HANSEN and OWENS, to introduce legislation to solve a serious problem with the Jensen unit of the central Utah project.

In the late seventies and early eighties, this country experienced great concern over the future energy supply. With the uncertainty of the OPEC oil prices, attention focused on domestic sources. Utah is a State with considerable energy resources including oil shale, tar sands, uranium, oil, and gas. During this furor over energy, the Federal Government saw a need for a water development in the Uintah basin, home of abundant oil shale reserves, in order to meet projected development demands. Since the development of oil shale requires a lot of water the Jensen unit was born.

The project was constructed by the Bureau of Reclamation over the next few years. As the Jensen unit neared completion, the people became concerned because the predicted energy boom had never materialized. How were they supposed to pay for all the municipal and industrial water supplied by the project, one that was built at the Federal Government's insistence?

Last September, the district completed negotiations with the BOR on an amendatory contract. This contract would allow the district to purchase the water it can afford and turn the remaining M&I water over to the United States. If the energy boom should ever occur, the Government can release the surplus water under the terms of the amendatory contract.

My colleagues and I hope that Congress can move quickly on this legislation. Without it the Federal Government will end up with no return at all on the Jensen unit project.

HISTORY OF SHELTER FOR THE HOMELESS

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States, on several occasions, has paid tribute to the spirit and the sacrifice of the American people—the thousand points of light—who give of themselves to improve the quality of life for those who are less fortunate.

In Westminster, CA, the Shelter for the Homeless is a nonprofit community organization that provides food and lodging to the poor, the disabled, and the old. My wife Sallie and I proudly serve on its board of directors. The shelter receives no city, State or Federal aid and relies on the generosity of private contributors. With a meager budget, and with a great deal of love and compassion, the Shelter for the Homeless has provided hope and opportunity to individuals who had no where to turn.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend my friend Jim Miller, the executive director of the Shelter for the Homeless, and all those who have worked on behalf of the homeless in Westminster. As a result of their dedication, the thousand points of light shine bright.

HISTORY OF SHELTER FOR THE HOMELESS

In April, 1984, Jim Miller was motivated to do something positive for the homeless after hearing about local people living in the parks and out of their cars.

Jim made several visits to local shelters to get a better understanding of the needs of the homeless. After spending some weekends and evenings volunteering his services, he recognized the urgent need for more temporary housing and related services. Many of the homeless were being turned away for lack of space to house them.

Shelter for the Homeless was incorporated on May 7, 1985 as a non-profit organization in order to care for the homeless in the community. Local concerned citizens became involved when the needs of the homeless were made known to them.

One of our first projects was to distribute food and clothing to the homeless who were living in our city parks or under the freeway bridge. We started with one park and later expanded our service to several others. As we visited the parks during the Christmas Season, we met families who were still sleeping in their cars. Members of our group opened their homes to them and assisted them in other ways.

In February 1986 we obtained funding from the County of Orange to provide food and shelter to the mentally-ill homeless. The funds would only be paid after the service was provided, so the Board of Directors put in their own money to open our first shelter on Birch street in the City of Santa Ana.

In May 1986 the City of Westminster gave Shelter for the Homeless its first grant of $14,000 to open a shelter in the community and on September 1, 1986 we opened our first family shelter.

On Thanksgiving day we provided over 200 meals to the homeless and lonely of the community at the Blessed Sacrament Church in Westminster.

During the year we provided 44 homeless with 1,555 nights of shelter; delivered 9,190 lbs of food to needy families. This was accomplished by our volunteers who donated over 5,147 hours of service.

On February 1, 1987 we opened another shelter in the City of Westminster to care for homeless families and changed the other house into a shelter for single men.

In April 1987 we were awarded a Community Service Award from Disneyland and received $2,500.

Ever since we started we have continually passed out food to anyone in need and one of our goals is to have no one go to bed hungry. As we passed out food to the homeless living in the park it was pointed out that although it was good food, it was not enough to make a balanced meal out of. So, with the help of the homeless we set out to end hunger.

On May 24, 1987 we rented an old bar that was closed and converted it into a Food Center. The homeless themselves worked day and night painting and repairing the building and on June 24, 1987 we opened our doors to serve the needy. The center is run by volunteers who donate over 200 hours per week and by their actions we are ending hunger in Orange County.

On July 1, 1987 we were awarded our second grant in the amount of $20,000 from the City of Westminster and on September 1st we opened another house for single homeless women or mothers with children.

On Thanksgiving Day we again served over 200 meals to the homeless and lonely. On December 19, 1987 we shared a Christmas dinner with 10 homeless families and Santa was there with presents for all the children.

Each Saturday we go out into the community to deliver food to the hungry who live in motels, apartments and homes. During 1987 we had 342 people who volunteered a total of 19,040 hours helping feed the poor and house the homeless.

During this past year 80.5% of all funds collected went directly to house the homeless and feed the poor. We housed 102 homeless by providing them with 4,298 nights of shelter.

In April, we again won the Community Service Award from Disneyland. Out of 421 applicants we came in second place and received $12,500.

In June, we received a contract from the County of Orange to open a house for people with AIDS. We are the first homeless organization in Orange County that have provided housing to homeless AIDS clients.

During October, we won a Register Charities Award for community service and received $2,000.

On November 1st we opened our first long term housing program for the poor. We call this program "American Lodging". In this program we offer the homeless who have found a job, the disabled and Senior Citizen a clean and decent place to live at the lowest cost possible. This program is supported by the poor themselves and does not receive any government funding.

During the year we provided 1,520 homeless with 7,451 nights of shelter. Our volunteers donated 13,915 hours of service. 77.4% of all funds collected were spent on feeding and housing the poor. We now operate four homes providing temporary and permanent housing.

Each Saturday we are still going out into the community to deliver food to the hungry who are living in motels, apartments and in homes.

WE CAN DO BETTER

HON. CLYDE C. HOLLOWAY

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, millions of senior citizens across this land are puzzled and angered by the prospect of paying much higher taxes for so-called catastrophic health insurance which is no such thing at all. The 100th Congress made a mistake when it approved this plan, which greatly expands the Medicare system at the expense of our senior citizen's pocketbooks. It is up to this 101st Congress to correct that mistake. I'm ready to repeal the so-called catastrophic health insurance plan. It will bring about a significant increase in the premium which our senior citizens must pay for Medicare, part B. What's more, and what's worse, is the 15 percent additional income tax which most seniors must pay for the additional coverage which the new law will provide this year. Those same senior citizens will pay an additional 28 percent income tax by 1993 in order to pay for the catastrophic health care plan.

Mr. Speaker, what they now get in return is an incomplete law. The measure includes no provision for nursing home care—the biggest single health care expense for our senior citizens—and a prescription drug deductible which many older Americans won't exceed. The coverage is inadequate, the income tax increase is costly, and older Americans are rightly upset about this one-sided raid on their wallets.

Mr. Speaker, every senior citizen will be forced to pay for this so-called catastrophic health care, but comparatively few will ever reap its few benefits. Mr. Speaker, this is wrong, this is unnecessary. We can do better. Mr. Speaker, I am proud today to be a cosponsor of legislation to repeal the new catastrophic health care law. It is time to develop a new plan, one which protects older Americans from the astronomical costs of health care without the burden of new taxes.

RETURN OUR LEGAL HOLIDAYS TO THEIR TRADITIONAL DATES

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, today, Washington's birthday, I will introduce a bill to return the observance of legal public holidays to their traditional calendar dates. As a former history professor, it is easy for me to recognize how important it is for our children to be proud of our heritage and the bravery and sacrifices of our Nation's forefathers. By altering the dates to allow the famed "three day weekends" we neglect to acknowledge these valiant individuals and their heroic deeds in our scramble to get out of town.

In their battle to have the dates changed to Monday, the travel industry as well as various other sectors successfully destroyed the meaning of the holidays by equating them to business and profits. In looking at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during the debate in 1968, the arguments that carried the day include absenteeism and money lost as a result, and the closing down and startup costs of some plants and industries.

Since 1971, when the Monday holidays first took effect, the meaning of the special days has become more and more obscure. The Washington Times sums it up best in an article written on February 9, 1971:

The price of these dubious achievements is one more sacrifice of tradition at a time when that commodity is in seriously short supply. Draining holidays of meaning and color, the plan does honor chiefly to the dollar. Obviously it is good for travel agencies, motels, gas stations and chronic weekenders. But if that is all the holidays are to mean, they why even retain their names? They might as well be numbered.

Early this week, we celebrated President's Day, and although I cannot say for sure, I will bet that a large number of Americans are unaware of what we celebrated. And as the years pass, I believe more and more of our Nation's citizens, in their anticipation of the short holidays, will neglect to take the time to pause and remember our Nation's history.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor my bill to return our legal holidays to their traditional dates; thus, returning our heritage to the children of our future.

GIVE SCIENCE ITS DUE IN POLICY

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. EDWARDS. of California. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished California colleague and good friend Representative GEORGE BROWN, JR., has written an insightful article about the need for a science adviser "to help the Nation develop coherent and rational policies for science and technology'." I highly recommend this article to all my colleagues.

The Los Angeles Times article follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Feb. 19, 1989]

GIVE SCIENCE ITS DUE IN POLICY—BUSH NEEDS AN ADVISER IN THIS AREA CRITICAL TO OUR SECURITY

(By George E. Brown, Jr.)

Although President Bush has assembled the major players of his policy-making team, the critical post of presidential science adviser remains unfilled. During his campaign for the White House, Bush vowed to elevate the post in order to help the nation develop coherent and rational policies for science and technology. There are several reasons why he should act promptly to fulfill that commitment.

First, the nation needs a coherent science policy in order to set priorities among the abundance of enticing, yet competing, science projects on our national agenda. The superconducting supercollider, mapping of the human genome and the space station are but a few of the projects that could provide exciting new discoveries about ourselves and our universe.

But there is a fundamental dilemma posed by this wealth of scientific investigations. While these are all admirable enterprises, each has a high price tag. Full funding of but a few of these big-ticket efforts could easily deplete our entire discretionary federal science budget. In the process, these efforts could crowd out smaller yet just as important efforts such as strengthening the nation's science and math education programs, additional unmanned space probes or understanding the complex web of nature's ecosystem. These smaller-scale projects are essential to rebuild our science infrastructure and maintain diversity of scientific inquiry.

The dilemma is made more complex by urgent national and global problems. The greenhouse effect, depletion of non-renewable energy resources, species extinction, environmental pollution and the spread and effects of the AIDS virus are but a few problems that require urgent attention. Each is competing for a piece of the same small funding pie.

Society must decide which of these projects are most pressing and serve the greatest national interest. These decisions must be made at the highest levels of the Administration in conjunction with sound scientific counsel.

Second, a rational technology policy is essential if America is to regain the role it once played on the world economic stage. A quarter of a century ago, this country dominated the world's marketplace, partly because we effectively turned our scientific knowledge into technological products that had great utility.

This is no longer the case, for many reasons. High-definition television technology is one striking example. If the United States is to regain the competitiveness it once enjoyed in international commerce, we must develop better mechanisms for transforming the knowledge of the research laboratory into products useful for society.

We need a system to develop integrated policies for both science and technology, keeping in mind that these enterprises do not operate independently of each other. Science is a method for discovering attributes of the world in which we live. Technology encompasses those activities that follow scientific discovery and lead to useful products. The two are intimately linked, for without science, technology obviously would not exist. The same is true for science; witness, for example, the way a technological innovation such as the computer has advanced the frontiers of so many different scientific disciplines.

In order to develop effective policies for science and technology, it is imperative that the President have advice on these matters just as he has advice on economic and security matters.

Indeed, science and technology, economics and national security are not isolated endeavors, they are deeply intertwined. Science and technology would be difficult in a nation that lacked political security and economic stability. By the same token, science and technology are pivotal to our national security and economic growth.

Dr. Jerome Wiesner, science adviser to Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson, recently decried the paucity of science advice in recent Administrations. He correctly noted that this absence has led to several distortions of priorities in setting a national science agenda.

An effective science-advice apparatus cannot be created de novo but rather must be allowed to evolve and grow under the leadership of a skilled and respected science adviser. This person must have sufficient respect and status within the scientific community that he or she can attract the best people available. Only then can this group begin to address the manifest list of science and technological problems facing our nation.

Before this evolutionary process can begin, however, it is essential that a science adviser be named and given a mandate to begin organizing the structures necessary for a strong and effective science advisory system.

The necessity for this system was concisely stated by President Bush during his campaign.

"The world today is in the midst of a profound transformation—one so far-reaching in its consequences that past revolutions—political, economic or scientific—will all be dwarfed by comparison." Administration structures are now in place to contend with the political and economic consequences of that transformation. It is vital that we now set about addressing its scientific consequences.

CONGRESS SHOULD SUPPORT A PLEBISCITE FOR CUBA

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a sense of the Congress resolution that calls upon Fidel Castro to hold a plebiscite on the continuation of his rule, and to abide by the results of that plebiscite.

Fidel Castro has been in power 30 years, longer than any other currently reigning dictator except Kim Il Sung in North Korea. Castro has never once submitted himself to the test of a free and fair popular election. Isn't it high time that he did? The people of Cuba should be able to decide their own political future. That is their unalienable right.

The broad trend of events in Latin America during the past decade has been toward democracy, with civilian-led governments replacing military dictatorships in Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Suriname. Why should the people of Cuba forever be denied the opportunity to govern themselves?

Fidel Castro claims to support the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the U.N. General Assembly in 1948. The Declaration proclaims that "Everyone has the right to take part in the Government of his country, directly or indirectly through freely chosen representatives." The Declaration further stipulates that the will of the people should be "expressed in periodic and genuine elections." Fidel Castro professes to support the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, but he has honored its provisions on democracy as little as he has honored its provisions regarding freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of religion, the right to strike, and the humane treatment of prisoners.

I believe that the people of Cuba would vote to put Fidel Castro in permanent retirement if they had the chance. Nobdy likes having his basic rights and liberties violated and denied. But take a look at the chapter on Cuba in the State Department's latest Country Reports on Human Rights. The Castro regime is one of the most repressive in the world. Even the celebration of Christmas is expressly prohibited.

It is a safe rule of thumb that governments do not win popular support by grossly mismanaging the national economy. Well, the Cuban economy today is in serious disarray. Despite years of multi-billion dollar infusions of economic assistance from the Soviet bloc, the Cuban economy is stagnant and experiencing negative growth. In fact, some experts estimate that real wages for the average Cuban worker have actually declined by one-third since the 1950s.

It is also a safe rule of thumb, that people are not pleased when their country's blood and treasure are spent on foreign military adventures that serve no legitimate national interest or defensive purpose. Yet Castro has been prosecuting just such foreign military adventures. Indeed, by his own count, Castro has dispatched some 300,000 Cuban soldiers into Angola since 1975, to protect the Communist side in the civil war in that unfortunate country. He also continues to deploy thousands of troops to prop up the genocidal Mengistu regime in Ethiopia.

Finally, I mention that over 1 million Cubans, more than 10 percent of the population, have fled their native land since Castro came to power in 1959. This, surely, is prima facie evidence of widespread popular dissatisfaction with Castro's rule.

Of course, Castro claims to have the enthusiastic support of the Cuban people. But with what right does he make this claim, when he has never held a free and fair national election, and when criticism of the Marxist-Leninist orientation and basic policies of his regime is an offense punishable by imprisonment and worse?

On December 26 of last year, a group of 163 prominent scientists, artists and intellectuals published an open letter to Castro, requesting that he hold a plebiscite in which the Cuban people, by free and secret ballot, could assert with a simple "yes" or "no" whether thay want him to remain in power. The remarkable thing about this letter, Mr. Speaker, is that many of the signers were once admirers of Castro. What the letter shows is that the truth is finally catching up with Castro.

It is time now for the U.S. Congress to do its part in exposing Castro for what he is: a tyrant masquerading as a liberator. More important, it is time for Congress to add the weight of its moral authority behind the damands for Cuban freedom being made by private individuals and groups. I therefore urge all my colleagues to support the resolution I am introducing.

TRIBUTE TO JAMES V. TINO PORTNOY HUMANITARIAN AWARD

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer a tribute to an outstanding businessman from Union, NJ, James V. Tino. He is being honored by the Phil Portnoy Humanitarian Association with its annual award for distinguished service to the community.

Jim Tino has generously supported the Union County Chapter of the American Cancer Society, the Union County Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, the New Jersey Special Olympics, the Union Township Emergency Medical Service, and the Callmen.

In addition to his personal generosity and willingness to extend a helping hand to various charities, Jim Tino has been a major supporter of the Union Festival on the Green, a celebration of our ethnic heritage and cultural achievements. The Union Township Fourth of July Celebration and the Union Mayor's Day Golf Tournament also have benefited from Jim Tino's help.

Recently, a local police officer, Donald St. Amand, was stricken with cancer. Jim Tino came to the aid of the St. Amand family, just as he has for others.

As president of Multi-Chevrolet in Union, Jim Tino has enhanced the reputation of the Union business community for its involvement and support of a wide range of activities that help the people of Union.

Thousands of students in Union have been helped by Jim Tino's support for the Boys and Girls Club, and bicycle safety program, drug education, soccer leagues, bowling and baseball leagues, driver safety education, the soap box derby, and many other youth activities.

Furthermore, his generous nature has extended far beyond the township limits. He regularly contributes to the poor of Appalachia to brighten their holidays. It is an amazing and impressive record of an unselfish and generous friend to everyone, young and old.

When the earthquake struck in Armenia, Jim Tino was among the first to raise funds to aid its victims. The charities that have been beneficiaries of this generous impulse include the Spina Bifida Foundation, Save the Children Fund, Little Sisters of the Poor Greater Newark Christmas Fund, Kidney Fund, Father Flanagan's Boys' Town, Presbyterian Home for the Elderly, Jewish War Veterans, Handicapped Workers, the Children's Liver Foundation, and Union Township PTA.

I am proud to join with my fellow citizens in Union and members of the Phil Portnoy Humanitarian Association in paying tribute to Jim Tino, and to congratulate his wife, Elaine, and their two children, Valerie Motylewski and Jim Tino, Jr., for encouraring and supporting Jim Tino's spirit of being a good and generous neighbor and leader in the community.

TRIBUTE TO LOIS MORRIS

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues in the House in celebrating February as National Black History Month. The many accomplishments of black Americans over our Nation's history make setting aside a month of the calendar to recognize these persons and their accomplishments most appropriate.

As a representative of Louisville and Jefferson County, KY—and a hometowner—I am proud to say that our community boasts many black citizens whose achievements are worthy of recognition and honor during this month.

Mrs. Lois Morris, who recently passed away, was a black American who made a tremendous impact in our community.

Mrs. Morris, the wife of Ralph Morris, an outstanding physician in Louisville, graduated from Clark College in Atlanta and earned a master's degree in international law and political science from Catholic University. She went on to teach at Alcorn College and at high schools in Maryland, Mississippi, and Virginia before coming to Kentucky.

In 1969 Lois was elected to the board of alderman from its 12th ward and went on to win three consecutive seats. While serving as an alderman, Mrs. Morris worked tirelessly for the rights of blacks, women, and the disadvantaged in the Louisville area. She was especially concerned with human rights, public accommodations, and the importance of electing blacks and women to public office.

Not only was Alderwoman Morris active in the political arena, but also in many social organizations. She founded and served as president of the Louisville chapter of the National Council of Negro Women. She also was secretary of the Southern Black Caucus and a board member of the State chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Furthermore, Lois founded and served as executive director of National Black Women for Political Action and was a member of the Louisville Urban League and its women's committee.

With her undaunting spirit and tireless efforts, Lois Morris was an asset to her people and community. She was indeed a black American worthy of recognition during this month when we honor and celebrate such achievements.

WE NEED TO STOP SHIFTING FEDERAL BUDGET BURDENS TO THE STATES THROUGH UNFUNDED MANDATES

HON. DOUG BARNARD, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced legislation aimed at preventing an existing problem with congressional spending from becoming much worse. That problem is the growing tendency to circumvent budgetary controls on new Federal domestic spending by enacting national policy mandates and then requiring State and local governments to pick up the tab.

This tendency is not associated with any one political party or any particular ideological persuasion. Conservatives sometimes support imposing mandates on States and localities as a roundabout way to return domestic responsibilities from Washington. Liberals on occasion see unfunded mandates as the only available avenue for pursuing desirable social objectives. Both in Congress and within the administration, such efforts are often rationalized by comparison of the Federal budget deficit to the relatively sound fiscal condition of States and localities. Of course, virtually all State and local governments are required by constitution or statute to approve and maintain balanced budgets, and it hardly seems fair to penalize them for succeeding where we have so far failed.

This legislation would not flatly prohibit the imposition of new costs on State and local governments, but it would ensure that such actions are not taken without due analysis and debate of the consequences. How many Members were aware that our fiscal year 1986 budget reconciliation bill imposed massive new costs on our constituents back home through mandatory extension of Medicare coverage to new State and local employees? This initiative and many others of the same nature may well be sound Federal policy. My point is that it is fiscally irresponsible to impose such new costs without careful analysis and a guaranteed opportunity to assess and debate the impact on our constituents as State and local taxpayers.

This bill will address both objectives through two simple amendments to the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. The first section creates a point of order, waivable through the normal procedures of each Chamber, against any legislation imposing a new obligation on State and local governments costing on a national basis more than $50 million per year. Sequestrations under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation are specifically exempted from this point of order. The second section beefs up the existing requirement, honored primarily in the breach, that the House and Senate Budget Committees conduct detailed analysis accompanying the budget resolution report of the impact of budgetary decisions on State and local governments. In combination, these two provisions would help guarantee that massive new costs to our constituents would no longer be adopted unintentionally or negligently, buried in the fine print of some fast-moving bill.

Some Members may object that this adds yet another procedural requirement to an already overburdened congressional budget process. I would respond that the fundamental purpose of the budget process is endangered if we fail to recognize efforts to shift costs back to our constituents in the guise of reducing or containing Federal spending. As a former Governor of my State, George Busbee, used to say when he was chairman of the National Governors' Association, "You can't save a buck by passing the buck." Imposing Federal costs on States and localities clearly violates the spirit of the Congressional Budget Act, and this bill would simply place the most minimal safeguards into the letter of the act.

I want to make a special appeal to those Members who have over the years supported termination or reduction in the General Revenue Sharing Program for States and localities. As you know, revenue sharing for States was eliminated back in 1980, and payments to cities and counties ended on October 1, 1986. In my opinion, the best argument for revenue sharing has been that it provides some assistance in offsetting the cost of unfunded Federal mandates, in areas ranging from environmental protection to wage rates on Federal projects. If our position is that we no longer can afford to help pay for existing unfunded obligations, then I think the least we can do is make some effort to ensure that major new obligations are not imposed on States and localities without some compelling national need. Otherwise, Governors, State legislators, and city and county officials, not to mention our constituents, may justifiably conclude that we are indifferent to our entire system of federalism.

This bill is strongly supported by the bipartisan National Governors' Association and National Conference of State Legislatures. I urge Members from both parties to offer immediate support for this legislation, symbolizing a bipartisan commitment to adopt a fresh and honest approach with State and local officials without whom all our efforts toward fiscal responsibility will come to naught.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF THE JEWISH COMMUNITY RELATIONS COUNCIL OF GREATER PHILADELPHIA

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call the attention of the House to an important milestone. This year marks the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Jewish Community Relations Council of Greater Philadelphia. It came into being during one of the darkest periods in the history of mankind. The Depression was already 8 years old and economic dislocation was commonplace. Hitler was in power for 6 years and Czechoslovakia and Austria were already under the hell of Nazi tyranny. In America, the Father Coughlins and the Gerald L.K. Smiths were playing to increasingly receptive audiences. Racist and anti-Semetic expression were acceptable in polite circles, even including the Halls of the U.S. Congress.

It was a time of choice. One could keep a low profile and hope that the ugliness would somehow go away or you could stand up to the evil that was sweeping the world, even if it was only in a small way.

A group of men and women representing 17 Jewish organizations in the city of Philadelphia would not be silent. In the winter of 1939, they came together in one of the first instances of a local voluntary association dedicated to fighting bigotry and improving intergroup relations.

In its 50 years, the record of this organization is indeed remarkable. In the 1940's it was a pioneer in the creation of intergroup training for public school teachers and police officers. In the fifties, it helped draft and played a key role in the passage of State and local fair employment and housing legislation. In the sixties it initiated programs designed to help ameliorate some of the problems of the inner city including a project in which the ownership of neighborhood businesses was transferred from Jewish to minority proprietors. In the seventies it developed a national reputation for its effective advocacy on behalf of Soviet Jewry. In the eighties, interfaith and interracial dialog groups, organized by the Jewish Community Relations Council, functioned in numerous neighborhoods throughout Philadelphia and its suburbs.

These made a major contribution toward improving understanding between individuals of different races, religions, and nationalities.

Throughout these 50 years, the JCRC has been a champion for human rights, for social justice and for the basic dignity of all peoples, regardless of race, religion or ethnicity.

We in Philadelphia consider it to be a major asset in maintaining William Penn's vision of a City of Brotherly Love.

MARION OFFICER

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow and remorse that I announce the passing of a leader in my congressional district.

Marion Officer was a good friend to the people of East St. Louis and southwestern Illinois. He was an asset to the community, a quiet man whose willingness to get involved changed the lives of many in our area for the better.

He sought no public recognition, craved no awards and sought no high honors but with his passing we realize how much of a contribution he made. He kept on changing the lives of many people, working with individuals to help solve problems, pay a utility bill, or just be a good friend.

He was actively involved in his church, and I know that the congregation will miss him. He embodied the best of East St. Louis, its community spirit, sense of history, and fight for constant change.

Mr. Speaker, I want to extend my thoughts to his family, and use this occasion to pay tribute to the memory of Marion Officer.

SUPPORT THE LOW INCOME HOUSING PRESERVATION ACT

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge my colleagues to cosponsor the Low Income Housing Preservation Act, introduced today by Representative DON EDWARDS.

I am proud to join the gentlewoman from California, Representative NANCY PELOSI, as an original cosponsor of this bill, which will greatly help to resolve the housing crisis that our Nation faces.

Contracts with private investors to provide Government-subsidized housing are expiring in the near future, some within the next 2 years.

Unless these units remain in the subsidized housing stock, our country will face an unprecedented increase in the number of homeless Americans as these evicted tenants find they cannot afford housing at market prices and turn to the streets.

In my home district of San Jose, CA, approximately 2,200 units will be lost in the next 2 years. In the years to come, the number could rise to 7,000.

But this is a nationwide problem. At least 300,000 low-income families could be forced out on the streets all over the country.

Homelessness has risen during the last decade because fewer and fewer low-income housing units have been put on the market. In this case we can prevent further increases in homelessness by preserving what we have already.

Representative EDWARDS's bill will allocate $437.5 million in each of the next 3 years to be granted to the States. They in turn will make grants to local governments and nonprofit bodies to purchase the units whose contracts are expiring.

This bill grants maximum flexibility to local organizations, those most responsive to the immediate needs of area citizens.

Most importantly, it allows the Federal Government, a partner in providing low-income housing for our Nation's needy, to preserve our low-income housing stock and keep our promise to the poor to help them find a decent place to live.

We can stave off future misery by taking immediate steps to retain low-income housing.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the bill.

TRIBUTE TO IRWIN SMALLWOOD

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, a good sport is leaving the ranks of good sportswriters, and all of us in the Sixth District will be sorry to see him to. Mr. Irwin Smallwood is retiring as executive sports editor of the Greensboro News & Record. On behalf of the people of the Sixth District of North Carolina, I hope Irwin Smallwood's retirement years will be as fulfilling as his many years of service at the Greensboro News & Record.

He was born in Middlesboro, KY, on February 3, 1926, and his family moved to Greensboro in 1940. While attending Greensboro Senior High School, Irwin began his newspaper career as sports editor and editor of his high school newspaper. He also began working part-time for the Greensboro Daily News while he was still in high school. Following 2 years in the Navy, Irwin received his degree from the University of North Carolina in 1947. While at Chapel Hill, Irwin worked for the student newspaper, the Daily Tar Heel, and also served as a correspondent for the Daily News.

Irwin joined the staff of the Greensboro Daily News full-time in the summer of 1947 and has been with the newspapers as sports writer, associate sports editor, city editor, managing editor, deputy executive editor and executive sports editor. His more than 40 years with the Daily News and now the News & Record will come to an end March 1, 1989.

While he excelled in sports reporting of all kind, Irwin is best known for his love of the game of golf. He was a co-founder and first president of the Carolinas Golf Writers Associations. Irwin was a board member of the Gold Writers Association of America. He was also chairman of the 50th anniversary celebration for the Greater Greensboro Open. He has won numerous awards for his writing about the game of golf and its many personalities. His reporting skills, however, were not limited to gold.

Irwin was named the North Carolina Sports Writer of the Year in 1959. He was a three-time winner of the North Carolina Press Association writing competition. He has won numerous national awards for his writing, also. He is a past president of the Atlantic Coast Conference Sports Writers Association and is still a member of the board of the North Carolina Sports Hall of Fame. Irwin has also tried to improve the quality of life for all residents of our area by his involvement with the Greensboro Sports Council, the Atlantic Coast Conference Service Bureau, and the Jaycees.

Irwin Smallwood has also extended his reputation for writing and editing into the news department, as well. The Daily News staff under his direction was runner-up for the Pulitzer Prize on two occasions. The newspaper twice won the N.C. Press Association Public Service Award during his tenure. He has been an active participant in the social life of our area through his work with such groups as the United Way, the United Church of Christ, and the National Council of Churches. In all aspects, Irwin Smallwood has given much more to his city than he has taken. He has earned the thanks of all of us in the Sixth District for his many years of excellence as a writer, editor, and concerned citizen. Thank you, Irwin.

A LITERARY OASIS

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, there is in my district a most extraordinary bookstore, owned and operated by a most extraordinary woman, Winn Bundy. This is no bookstore in a shopping mall but a bookstore located at the end of a dirt road, several miles off the interstate highway.

As remote as such a location may seem, Singing Wind Bookstore has an extraordinary, diverse collection of books, reflecting the eclectic interests of Winn Bundy. One doesn't go to this bookstore just to find an unusual, out of print title—though you can do that at the Singing Wind. Rather, you go for the intellectual stimulation you are likely to find in a conversation with Winn and to soak up the sense of southwestern history that permeates the floorboards of this ranch, cum bookstore.

I know this to be true because I have been there—and and found myself going back time and again. The Singing Wind Bookstore and Winn Bundy is one of those vignettes that enrich the life of each of our districts. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to share with my colleagues a most engaging article that appeared about Winn Bundy and her passion for books in a recent issue of Arizona Trend.

A LITERARY OASIS

(By Leo W. Banks)

Winn Bundy is sitting at the head of her dinner table at the Singing Wind ranch near Benson. Grace has been said, lunch is in high roar, and as always out here, stories are being told. Over gazpacho, Bundy tells about her bull, Montana.

He weighed close to 3,000 pounds, and when he died it took a powerful derrick to haul his carcass to a nearby alfalfa field. Two months later, as Bundy was herding cows through the field, the animals formed a circle around their giant friend's remains, bent their forelegs in a reverent posture, and howled—a high-pitched, mournful wail. "It sent chills down my spine," she says. "They sounded like Moslem women crying for their dead."

Bundy's guests swallow fresh fruit and nibble cheese crisps as she continues telling stories about life on the ranch. Once, a man drove his son out to Ocotillo Road, stopped at the dirt path leading to the Singing Wind ranch, got out with a shotgun and began teaching the boy how to shoot. Their target? Bundy's mailbox, which to this day is riddled with buckshot holes. Not long ago Bundy's neighbor received an unexpected visit: from a bear, which walked through a chain-link gate. Bundy says bears routinely trundle up from Mexico and cross her 640-acre spread to take a dip in the San Pedro River, 2,000 feet to the east. She sometimes sees them shimmying up utility poles to have a look-see.

But for sheer improbability, the trek of the shimmying bears through Cochise County's outback is nothing compared with the migration of a different breed: the literati. Thousands of them come here every year, from as far away as Canada, Italy, Germany, Japan, New Zealand and Africa. Why they come is even unlikelier: Out of her ranchhouse Bundy runs a bookshop.

Think about that a moment. At a time when people read little except the movie synopsis on videocassette sleeves, people from around the world are flocking to a ranch in the middle of nowhere to buy books. Out here hawks soar, rattlesnakes slither, and huge black turkey vultures swoop overhead in search of food. The ranch is set back from the road behind a cattle gate and concealed by rows of apple and pecan trees, Aleppo pines and craggy mesquites. Even attendants at the gas station off Interstate 10, about three miles away, shrug when lost customers roll in asking for directions.

Only a believer of the bizarre would try operating a bookstore out of this locale, and Bundy, with her tales of mourning bovine, is certainly that. But she's a hard-as-nails businesswoman, too. She depends on the bookstore for her livelihood, she says, but refuses to disclose her sales or volume, saying it's nobody's business. She claims to have, in stock, 150,000 titles—about five times as many as the average bookstore. And though some other booksellers regard that number as a tall tale, Bundy cantankerously responds, "Come down and count them."

Because of its location, there is a tendency to think of the Singing Wind Bookstore as an accident, as wondrous in its own way as a two-headed cow. But the existence of the Singing Wind Bookshop is anything but accidental. The Bundys Winn and her husband Bob, took over the Singing Wind ranch in 1956, got electricity in 1958, and their first phone 20 years after that. They made their living as ranchers, but all the while Winn was nurturing the dream of a bookstore. "I had this all planned out from the start," she says.

Her plan was not especially complicated. She enrolled in the University of Arizona's graduate program in library science, and while pursuing a degree she plugged into a group of people who shared her passion for books. In 1973, a year after receiving her master's degree, she used $600 that she and her husband had earned dog-sitting to stock two shelves in the alcove by the front door. Then she opened for business. "I wouldn't say we took off like a rocket," Bundy recalls. "It was gradual."

Bundy depended exclusively on the least expensive kind of advertising: word-of-mouth. She herself worked endlessly to get out the word, and her fellow U of A library science graduates gave a big hand as well. After taking jobs across the country, they recommended her bookstore to paying customers. Then came a big write-up in Time magazine. Eventually, she developed a steady clientele.

Nowadays, much of her business actually comes from overseas. Her bookstore is listed on a tour guide of southern Arizona, and it isn't uncommon for groups from Germany or Japan to arrive at the Singing Wind ranch. She piles them into her Jeep Cherokee and takes them to see the Cochise Stronghold and other sites in the county. After a day of local color and a night at the ranch—Bundy puts them up, too, free of charge—they binge on books.

Bundy specializes in Southwestern books and Western Americana, although she also carries fiction she considers extraordinary. Don't look for Westerns or romance novels. "Good God, they can just go to a supermarket if that's what they want," she says.

Bundy has enormous energy. A typical day begins at 6 a.m. in the corral, where she tends to the horses and the cows. She used to take bike rides of a hundred miles to Bisbee and back, or go on her own version of an Old West roundup—on her bicycle. But now her bookshelves—some of which she handcrafted herself, out of mesquite—take up all her time. "Usually the phone starts ringing early and I have to run to get it," she says. "Then maybe I get to eat breakfast and maybe I don't."

Eager readers have been known to rap on her door as early as sunup and as late as 11 o'clock at night. Some ride up on horseback. And because of the layout of the long, 13-room house, customers often browse the shelves without Bundy knowing it. When they're done, they stroll into the dining room with an armload of books and say something like, "When you're finished with that sandwich, I'd like to buy these." She obliges, as long as they're not paying with a credit card. "I hate the paperwork," she says.

Time magazine called Singing Wind one of the warmest bookshops on Earth. That may be the case; how many other bookstore proprietors routinely invite customers to lunch? But warmth doesn't keep a business going. Strength does, and Bundy has her share of that. When her husband died almost six years ago, Bundy was left to manage the ranch and the bookshop largely on her own. "It was a little scary," she says. "I married very young and never had to do things myself."

Now, she does everything herself, but not for lack of men willing to help her. Following publication of the Time article, which opened with the words "A lonesome widow," Bundy received offers from men around the country suggesting various arrangements. One man drove all the way from northern Arizona to give Bundy a big howdy-do. Another called from California to say he'd haul his trailer over right away if she'd give him a job. Bundy took down his name and address, saying she'd have the local Mormon bishop research his background to determine whether he'd make a suitable employee. That was the last she heard from him.

No fool, this widow, and not lonesome either, thanks to the company of customers.

INEQUITABLE TREATMENT OF OUR SENIOR CITIZENS

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, once again Federal retirees are being singled out to bear the brunt of Federal deficit reduction in their cost-of-living adjustments [COLA's] by the new administration. As you well remember, the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 eliminated fiscal year 1986 COLA's for civil service, military, railroad, and disability annuitants while guaranteeing a COLA for Social Security and veteran benefit recipients. This decision to differentiate between annuitants with respect to COLA's was contrary to policy decision made by the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, this year it is the same story: President Reagan, in submitting his final budget, called by the elimination of COLA's for Federal retirees in 1990, and the new administration seems willing to follow his lead.

Mr. Speaker, in 1986, I was joined by more than 280 of my colleagues in sponsoring legislation guaranteeing COLA's for all Non-Social Security recipients. This legislation, as passed by the House under suspension of the rules, was amended to ensure that military, tier II, railroad retirement, CIA, Foreign Service, and certain FECA beneficiaries would also receive their COLA's on time. The Senate shortly thereafter passed similar language. Final language was included in budget reconciliation and since that time all retirees have been receiving their yearly COLA.

Mr. Speaker, I believe and think most of my colleagues agree, that it is important that we treat all of our Nation's retirees fairly. But the new administration seems intent on breaking this promise we have made to our senior citizens. Federal budget cuts during the last 8 years have already fallen heavily on Federal workers and annuitants. Annuitants have lost approximately 30 percent on their cost-of-living adjustments. Such reductions fall especially hard on Federal retirees, whose average pensions are $1,146 a month and their survivors, whose average benefit is $552.

We cannot undo the events of the past. However, we can prevent the perpetuation of inequitable treatment of our senior citizens who performed the jobs so essential to making our Government work. I will be introducing legislation that simply provides that these retirees be treated the same as Social Security beneficiaries. It guarantees that our Nation's retirees will be treated equally and that they will be assured of the COLA's we promised them. I ask all my colleagues to sponsor this important legislation.

H.R. —

A bill to provide for cost-of-living adjustments in 1990 under certain Government retirement programs

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. BENEFITS PAYABLE FROM THE CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY FUND.

"§ 8352. Benefits during calendar year 1990

"(a) Any benefits payable from the Fund during calendar year 1990, including any increase in those benefits which is scheduled to become payable during such calendar year as the result of an adjustment under section 8340 or 8462 of this title, shall not be subject to reduction or suspension, either pursuant to statute (other than applicable provisions of this chapter and chapter 84) or Presidential order, during such calendar year.

"(b) For the purpose of this section, 'benefits payable from the Fund' shall be determined solely in accordance with applicable provisions of this chapter and chapter 84.".

(b) CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The analysis for chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to section 8351 the following:

"8352. Benefits during calendar year 1990.".

SEC. 2. MILITARY RETIREMENT AND SURVIVOR BENEFIT PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any percentage adjustment provided by law to be made in amounts payable under military retirement and survivor benefit programs to take effect during fiscal year 1990 shall take effect in accordance with the law providing for such adjustment.

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—During fiscal year 1990, an adjustment described in subsection (a) shall not be subject to reduction or suspension under any provision of law (other than applicable provisions of title 10, United States Code) or any Presidential order.

(c) MILITARY RETIREMENT AND SURVIVOR BENEFIT PROGRAMS DEFINED.—For purposes of this section:

(1) The term "military retirement and survivor benefit programs" means—

(A) the provisions of law creating entitlement to, or determining the amount of, retired or retainer pay for members of the uniformed services; and

(B) the programs providing annuities for survivors of members and former members of the uniformed services, including chapter 73 of title 10, United States Code, section 4 of Public Law 92-425, and section 5 of Public Law 96-402.

(2) The term "uniformed services" has the meaning given that term in section 101 of title 37, United States Code.

SEC. 3. FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT BENEFITS DURING CALENDAR YEAR 1990.

Section 826 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (22 U.S.C. 4066) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h)(1) Any benefits payable from the Fund during calendar year 1990, including any increase in those benefits which is scheduled to become payable during such calendar year pursuant to subsection (a), shall not be subject to reduction or suspension, either pursuant to statute (other than applicable provisions of this subchapter) or Presidential order, during such calendar year.

"(2) For the purpose of this subsection, 'benefits payable from the Fund' shall be determined solely in accordance with applicable provisions of this subchapter.".

SEC. 4. BENEFITS UNDER THE CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY RETIREMENT AND DISABILITY SYSTEM.

The President shall, pursuant to the authority granted in section 292 of the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement Act of 1964 for Certain Employees (50 U.S.C. 403 note), extend the prohibition contained in section 8352 of title 5, United States Code, on reduction or suspension of certain benefits payable from the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund, to apply with respect to benefits payable from the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability Fund.

SEC. 5. RAILROAD RETIREMENT TIER II COLAS.

Section 3(g)(1) of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1974 (45 U.S.C. 231b(g)(1)) is amended by inserting ", shall not otherwise be prevented from taking effect, with respect to benefits paid during calendar year 1990, by any provision of law other than this Act," after "shall not be deferred".

SEC. 6. FEDERAL EMPLOYEE DISABILITY COMPENSATION DURING CALENDAR YEAR 1990.

Section 8147 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d)(1) Any compensation payable from the fund during calendar year 1990, including any increase in those benefits which is scheduled to become payable during such calendar year pursuant to section 8146a, shall not be subject the reduction or suspension, either pursuant to statute (other than applicable provisions of this subchapter) or Presidential order, during such calender year.

"(2) For the purpose of this subsection, 'compensation payable from the Fund' shall be determined solely in accordance with applicable provisions of this subchapter.".

PROPOSAL TO REDUCE THE CAPITAL GAINS TAX QUESTIONS

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, President Bush has stirred considerable controversy with his proposal to reduce the capital gains tax rate to a maximum of 15 percent. He says it will promote savings, encourage entrepreneurial activity and the formation of venture capital, and foster long-term investment. I am sure we all find these to be worthwhile goals, but it is far from clear that the President's proposal will help us achieve them.

I submit for the RECORD two expressions of editorial opinion from sources one might expect to be sympathetic to the President's plan. However, neither The Economist nor Business Week is jumping on the bandwagon.

[From Business Week, Feb. 13, 1989]

BUSH HASN'T PROVED HIS CAPITAL-GAINS CASE

If it could be shown that cutting the capital-gains rate from a high of 33% to 15% would increase the money available for venture capital and other long-term investments, we would be all for it. That argument is what enshrined a capital-gains-rate reduction in George Bush's 1988 Republican platform. Its advocates point to the boom in venture-capital investment when the capital-gains rate was cut in 1978. The problem with the argument today is that the venture-capital market has changed a lot.

As recently as 10 years ago, venture capital still came primarily from wealthy individuals. Today more and more comes from tax-exempt private and public pension funds. Corporations, both U.S. and foreign (especially Japanese), make up the other big source. Indeed, the real problem in venture capital is too much money chasing too few opportunities. Capital gains don't matter to either of these major sources, and corporations have armies of accountants to keep their tax payments down anyway. Even more important, they are investing more for long-term strategic reasons and less for traditional portfolio results.

It's true there are studies showing that cutting the tax rate on capital gains would actually increase Treasury revenues. This notion has the imprimatur of President Bush. Still, there are many studies that show the opposite. Whether or not the Treasury gains or loses money is probably a toss of the coin, depending on the strength of the market, international money flows, and the state of the economy.

Another appealing motive for cutting the capital-gains tax is to encourage long-term investment at a time when the fast-buck mentality holds sway. If that's the aim, though, a better way to attain it would be to index the gains so that only profits in excess of inflation are taxes. This would appeal to the people who care most about capital-gains taxes: individual investors. The present system grossly overtaxes long-range investment.

Institutional investors, who dominate the market, do most of the trading. And a good deal of that business comes from tax-exempt pension funds. The issue is how to guide this money into long-term investment, as in Japan and Germany. It won't be easy, but tinkering with the capital-gains rate is like pouring buckets of water on a burning house.

[From the Economist, Feb. 4, 1989]

ONE STEP BACK

One proposal that will feature in the budget plans President Bush will present to Congress on February 9th is his campaign pledge to cut the top rate of tax on capital gains from assets held for more than one year. The cut—from today's 28% (or, in some cases, 33%) to 15%—would more than reverse the increase from 20% that was part of the 1986 tax reform. Mr. Bush believes the cut would increase, not reduce, revenue by encouraging people to realize gains and by stimulating new investment.

The evidence for such a view is thin. Last year the Congressional Budget Office concluded from an exhaustive look at academic studies that the 1986 change had increased revenue, and that the cut now planned by Mr. Bush was likely to reduce tax revenue by an annual $4 billion-8 billion. The chairman of the Federal Reserve, Mr. Alan Greenspan, was evasive before Congress's Joint Economic Committee on January 31st, going no further than to say that a cut in the rate would not automatically reduce revenue. The cut might indeed increase it in 1990, as investors realise gains on assets they have held on to since Mr. Bush's pledge. But future budgets would almost certainly lose revenue.

The lowest tax rate on income, including the social-security levy, is over 22% (or almost 30% if you include the employer's portion of social security). It will be hard for Mr. Bush to explain why he wishes to tax capital gains at only 15%—a break whose benefit will go overwhelmingly to the rich. It also will be hard for him to explain why he wants to reopen the Pandora's Box of special loopholes and deductions that his predecessor, Mr. Reagan, took great credit for closing in 1986.

But the best argument against a capital-gains break is strictly free-market. The tax system should be as neutral as possible between alternative economic opportunities. If capital gains get special treatment, investors will arrange their affairs so as to have capital gains instead of ordinary income. That will not produce the same results as the market working its will unmolested. In America before 1986 it produced tax shelters and empty office buildings, among other wasteful activities. Britain recently followed America's lead in eliminating the capital gains differential. It would be a pity if one of Mr. Bush's first acts were to undermine America's fiscal neutrality and so add to its economic inefficiency.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE UKRAINIAN NATIONAL ASSOCIATION

HON. LOUISE M. SLAUGHTER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, February 22, 1989

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my congratulations to the Ukrainian National Association on the 95th anniversary of its founding. The Ukrainian National Association was founded on February 22, 1894, in Shamokin, PA, with 439 members and only 13 branches. It now has over 77,000 members in 28 States and 7 provinces in Canada. The Ukrainian National Association now has over 420 branches and provides a wide range of services to its members.

Furthermore, the Ukrainian National Association has been a strong and consistent voice opposed to oppression in Ukraine. Through the many tribulations of Ukrainians the Ukrainian National Association has spoken out, through its official journal, the Ukrainian Weekly and Svoboda, and through its individual members about human rights and national repression in Ukraine.

The Ukrainian National Association also sponsors a wide range of events that preserve Ukraine's unique cultural heritage such as scholarships, the operation of children's camps, the offering of cultural courses and financial assistance to Ukrainian cultural centers. Ukrainians have contributed an important heritage to our culture and the Ukrainian National Association has been instrumental in this process.

The Ukrainian community in the United States as well as all of us who are concerned about Ukrainian affairs, applaud the efforts of the Ukrainian National Association. I look forward to many more years of service by the association.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, February 23, 1989, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, February 23, 1989

The House met at 11 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O Gracious God, as we experience the actions of our society and the torment of our world, there is cause for despair and we realize how we have missed the heavenly vision of understanding and respect between people. We pray, O God, that Your good spirit will ever encourage those who dedicate themselves and their energies to speak for life, to act for justice, to work for peace, to strive for sincere communication between adversaries, and so to be the people You would have them be. This we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

INTRODUCTION OF THE COMPETITION IN GOVERNMENT SPARE PARTS PROCUREMENT ACT

(Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, today, I am reintroducing the Competition in Government Spare Parts Procurement Act. The act has three main purposes.

The first is to provide a level playing field for all businesses to compete for spare parts contracts. The bill will help correct the two main obstacles the Defense Department has identified as the major impediments to increased competition: Sufficient numbers of skilled procurement personnel and access to appropriate technical data.

In the 4 years since the passage of the Competition in Contracting Act defense spare parts costs have been reduced by $5.6 billion. Through further reducing the barriers to competition, this bill will continue the trend of decreased spare parts costs.

At the same time the bill would improve our industrial base by broadening the number of sources for spare parts. Since 1969 we have fallen from first to fourth behind Japan, West Germany, and the Soviet Union as makers of metal shaping and cutting machines. Through our neglect, we are risking our national security. Our toolmaking force and plant capacity may not be big enough to fight a conventional war. This bill would help the American tool and die industry to compete and has been endorsed by the National Tooling and Machining Association.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to join me in this effort to allow our small businesses to compete, help fight the budget deficit, and build up our defense industrial base.

INCREASING GAS TAX UNFAIR TO RURAL AMERICA AND THE POOR

(Mr. CLINGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my opposition to increasing Federal excise taxes on gasoline for the purpose of reducing our deficit. This idea, whose supporters are attracted by its simplicity and potential for vast new revenues, is one that is patently unfair to those most dependent on automobile transportation for their daily needs; rural America and the poor.

Rural residents, unlike their urban counterparts, have no mass transit services. They tend to live farther from work and from grocery stores, hospitals, and other services those in the city tend to take for granted.

Rural residents are totally dependent on their cars. They drive greater distances on an annual basis than city residents. Lower income families often are totally reliant on their cars to survive.

Increasing the gas tax unfairly targets these groups. It is a regressive tax in the worst sense of the word.

Let me mention also that the question of fairness goes well beyond the notion of who pays. Urban areas receive far more in Federal aid than do rural communities. So under the gas tax proposal, not only does the rural resident pay a greater share for deficit reduction, he receives less in Federal investment than does his urban cousin.

Mr. Speaker, the gas tax is a bad idea, it's unfair, and it violates the concept of user fees, a concept that has served the Highway Program extremely well. I urge my colleagues to examine this issue carefully and say "no" to the gas tax.

JOINT RESOLUTION DENOUNCING DEATH SENTENCE AGAINST BRITISH AUTHOR

(Mr. MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, today with 79 colleagues, I introduce a joint resolution denouncing the intolerable death sentence against British author Salman Rushdie issued by the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of Iran. The death sentence is a pernicious and unacceptable attack against the free expression of writers and publishers throughout the world. The death threat must be clearly denounced by the Congress, the President, and governing bodies in all countries whose responsibility is to protect freedom of expression.

The resolution condemns the death threat, calls for it to be withdrawn, together with the reward of $5 million for the murderer. And it calls on the Secretary of State to convey the sense of Congress to the Government of Iran.

Let me make it clear that I do not condone discrimination or demeaning behavior against any one's religion. And Rushdie's book, "The Satanic Verses," has obviously offended members of the Islamic faith. But to respond to such offense with an international call to murder is wholeheartedly unacceptable, completely irresponsible, and contrary to the norms of international behavior.

To fail to respond to the death threat in the strongest terms is to allow a serious infringement on free expression, one of our most sacred freedoms.

I applaud the writers, publishers, and booksellers of America that have come to the defense of Mr. Rushdie, as well as applaud the European Community diplomatic actions condemning the death threat.

I hope the House will swiftly consider this resolution and that the Senate will follow suit, so that this Congress, and the U.S. Government, are firmly on record in opposition to this reprehensible attack on free speech.

LEGISLATION TO DELAY VOTE ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMISSION ON BASE CLOSURES AND REALIGNMENTS

(Mr. SAXTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation to delay a House vote on the recommendations of the Commission on Base Closures and Realignments. I am requesting this delay so that the General Accounting Office can complete an ongoing inyestigation into the savings that the Commission outlines in its report.

We owe it to the American taxpayers to make sure that closing these recommended bases will actually yield the savings that the Commission proposes. I believe that Congress has a serious obligation to examine the savings findings of this Commission before voting.

For some unknown reasons, interested Members of this body have been denied basic information as to the analysis of the Commission's proposals. I, for one, have found serious flaws in the Commission's mathematical approaches and savings assumptions. I am convinced that the Commission, in its haste, has reached a conclusion which will actually cost unnecessary tax dollars.

All I am asking in this bill is that we give GAO ample time to conduct an objective analysis. I think this is reasonable, and I hope my colleagues will agree.

RAISE THE MINIMUM WAGE TO $4.35 PER HOUR

(Mr. KLECZKA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, today I am again introducing legislation to raise the minimum wage to $4.35. Raising the minimum wage will be one of the most important legislative battles of the 101st Congress. As the Congress debates this issue we should remember that this is not an abstract policy debate but an issue of crucial importance to millions of American workers.

Opponents of a higher wage would have us believe minimum wage workers are mostly teenagers. This is just not true. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that 63 percent of minimum wage workers are age 20 or above.

One such worker is Ann Rogers from Milwaukee. Mrs. Rogers is desperately trying to support a family of five but she earns just above the minimum wage of $3.35 per hour. Child care expenses for her family immediately eat up much of her wages and what's left simply doesn't provide the bare necessities of life for her family.

She says,

It's hard explaining to the kids you just don't have money. For us there is no such thing as a night out at the movies. My kids can't even go on school field trips because we can't spare the money.

All Ann Rogers is asking for is a fair day's wage for a fair day's work.

The Congress should restore some dignity to America's lowest paid workers. The best way to help Ann Rogers and the millions of other hard-working Americans like her is to raise the minimum wage.

TRIBUTE TO HERMAN L. LONGERBEAM

(Mr. BLILEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the service rendered by a brave soldier who paints a truly patriotic example for all Americans, Mr. Herman L. Longerbeam.

Mr. Longerbeam as a litter bearer to a medical attachment was in Belgium in 1945 assisting in the removal of casualties from a highly exposed area, when six casualties were found exposed and vulnerable. Private Longerbeam proceeded to administer aid, allowing five to crawl away and carrying the sixth one-half mile through deep snow to safety. The entire time he was besieged by enemy fire and ruthless snipers.

Mr. Longerbeam is a man who has demonstrated heroism beyond any that was asked of him or even expected of him. It is this kind of courage for which our Nation should be proud. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill which waives the time limitation on the Congressional Medal of Honor, and awards Herman Longerbeam the highest medal awarded by the United States. For his dedicated service not only to his country but to his fellow human beings we should express our thanks and recognize his immeasurable patriotism demonstrated through this selfless contribution.

Mr. Speaker, for the courage he so loyally displayed, I salute Mr. Herman Longerbeam.

THIRD WORLD DEBT

(Mr. PEASE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, in the first hearing that he chaired as the new chairman of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, Chairman GONZALEZ described the Third World debt crisis as "a ticking time bomb which threatens the international financial system, costs the United States jobs, and most importantly, exacerbates the poverty already rampant in the Third World."

Chairman GONZALEZ was right. The Third World debt crisis is creating multiple problems around the world and in our country.

Today, on behalf of my colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. TORRES] and myself, I am introducing a debt-reduction bill which would provide massive and significant debt relief to Third World nations. It is time for imaginative thinking. We hope that this bill will make a contribution.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE ROBERT K. DORNAN, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable ROBERT K. DORNAN:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
January 31, 1989.

Hon. JIM WRIGHT,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you, pursuant to Rule L of the Rules of the House of Representatives, that an employee in my office has been served with deposition subpoenas duces tecum issued by the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

After consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk, I will make the determinations required by the Rule.

Sincerely,

ROBERT K. DORNAN,
U.S. Congressman.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE WALLY HERGER, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable WALLY HERGER:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC. January 3, 1989.

Hon. JIM WRIGHT,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you, pursuant to Rule L(50) of the Rules of the House of Representatives, that an employee in my office has been served with a trial subpoena issued by the Superior Court of the State of California.

After consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk, I have determined that compliance with the subpoena is consistent with the precedents and privileges of the House.

Sincerely,

WALLY HERGER,
Member of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. BERMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

[Mr. BERMAN addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

BUSH S&L PLAN SETS UNREALISTIC TIMETABLE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, today the Secretary of the Treasury, Nicholas Brady, appeared before the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs to discuss the plan put forth by President Bush to resolve the savings and loan crisis. While I commend the President for moving quickly on the problem, the Bush plan must be examined carefully. We need to solve the S&L crisis for good, not merely meet an artificial timetable set by the President. I have described the Bush plan as an attractive porcupine—you have to be very careful how you embrace it.

In that regard, I am inserting my opening statement before the hearings this morning to further outline my position on the Bush S&L plan.

OPENING STATEMENT FROM CONGRESSMAN FRANK ANNUNZIO, FEBRUARY 23, COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Chairman, I first want to commend you for the expeditious manner in which you have called these hearings, and for your willingness to deal with the savings and loan crisis on an immediate basis. Secondly, I want to commend President Bush for also recognizing the problem, and for making it a priority of his Administration.

As Chairman of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions Supervision, Regulation and Insurance, I too want to move with the greatest possible speed to deal with this situation.

I am deeply concerned about the 45 day time table that President Bush has laid out for passage of this legislation. It was only last evening that we finally received a copy of the legislation. Prior to that time we had been given two position papers outlining the legislation and many of the points made in the first paper were subsequently changed in the second document. I can only wonder if the legislation is identical to the second outline or does it contain as many gaps as the infield of the Baltimore Orioles.

When President Bush delivered his State of the Union message on February 9th, he indicated that he was giving Congress 45 days to have the completed S&L legislation on his desk. Apparently, the President started the clock running on that date, yet it was not until yesterday, 14 days later, that Congress received the President's proposal in a legislative form. For the past 14 days I have been prepared, as has Chairman Gonzalez, to move ahead with hearings on the legislation, but it is impossible to hold hearings on a piece of legislation that does not exist.

The President's 45 day plan is inviting disaster. It places speed above the need to carefully craft a plan that will pass, not the 45 day time test, but the long term test of time so that we will not be back here in six months or two years repeating the exercise again.

For the past eight years the Republican Party has controlled the White House and thus the Executive Branch. That Administration has appointed every regulator of every federal bank regulatory agency. That Administration has hired every bank examiner, and every official in the Treasury Department. All of the horror stories of the savings and loan industry occurred under the term of that same administration.

Congress didn't pick those people, the American public didn't pick those people, and certainly the industry did not select the regulators. Those choices were made by the Administration. Now, many members of that same Administration are asking Congress to "stop me before I appoint again."

And not only is Congress being asked to clean up the mess, but it is being given an unrealistic time table. It took the Administration eight years to cause the problem, yet Congress is given only 45 days to correct the situation. If the Republican Administration had appointed quality people to run the Federal financial regulatory agencies and given those peopole the tools that they need to enforce the regulations in the form of enough examiners; we would not be sitting here today.

In 1980, I was a member of the Conference Committee that developed the first deregulation legislation for the Financial Institution Industry. I was the only member of that Conference Committee who would not sign the conference report, and who spoke out strongly against the evils of deregulation. In 1980 during the Conference Committee hearings, I correctly predicted everything that is happening in the financial industry today: I hoped that I would be wrong, but unfortunately I was not. I was criticized in 1980 for not going along with the crowd—for not giving in to what I felt was a path of destruction for our financial community. I feel those same pressures today.

The media is already calling for swift adoption of the Bush Plan. Both of the major newspapers in my hometown of Chicago have already endorsed the Bush Plan on almost a line for line basis. Perhaps the safe thing for me to do would be to quietly march to the beat of the 45 day Bush drum. But there is too much at stake here for me to simply announce my complete and unqualified support for the Plan.

Let me cite some of the areas in which I will offer amendments to improve the Plan. I cannot support placing the Federal Home Loan Bank Board under the Treasury. My concern with moving the Bank Board into Treasury is that there are too many officials within the Administration who would just as soon see the home mortgage lending industry done away with. I support a separate home lending industry in this country, and I will oppose any attempt to do away with such an industry or any plan which would even give those who want to do away with the industry a better chance to accomplish their mission.

If we lose a home mortgage lending industry, interest rates on home loans will rise dramatically, and home lending will not be a priority for the remaining financial industry.

Secondly, the Bush Plan does nothing to eliminate the problems that currently exist in the savings and loan industry. Instead of concentrating on home mortgage lending, that industry under deregulation, has branched out into too many other areas and its percentage of financing has shrunk from 80% to 40% of our nation's homes. The Bush Plan allows that situation to continue and therefore I will offer an amendment to require savings and loans to keep 80% of their loans in 1 to 4 family mortgages within 50 miles of their trade area. All other activity of the savings and loan would have to be placed in a 20% basket, and any loans or investments made outside of the 50 mile area would also have to be placed in that 20% basket. I want to return the savings and loan industry to the home lending business. The Bush Plan merely allows business to continue as usual as long as the savings and loan is able to pay increased insurance premiums and attract more capital. It doesn't stop the crooks, it just makes them pay more to do business.

I want to stop the crooks before they commit the crime, and I note that nowhere in the Bush Plan is there the direct ability or money for the financial regulators to hire more examiners. Therefore, I will offer an amendment that will require the hiring of more examiners. I think the American people are shocked to find out that there are some financial institutions in this country that have not been examined for six or seven years. My goal is to have every financial institution in this country examined every year. In that regard I would point out that the National Credit Union Administration does examine every federally-chartered credit union every year. And does that kind of examination help catch problem operations? You be the judge. Last year, both the Banking and Savings and Loan Industry set records for the number of institutions that failed. Credit unions also set a record for failed institutions, but it was a record that went in the other direction. Out of 15,000 credit unions in this country only a record low 85 failed last year. I note that in the Administration's Bill, it also wants to change the way that credit unions handle their insurance fund. I would suggest that rather than fooling with the credit union's insurance fund the Administration ought to learn from the example set by the National Credit Union Administration and its share insurance operation. Let's deal with the real problems in the financial community and let's not take on the problem of fixing an insurance fund that already works. Let's find out why the NCUA can examine every one of its institutions every year and avoid losses and why the other regulators cannot.

RULES OF THE JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEE FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. HAMILTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to rule XI, clause 2(a), of the Rules of the House of Representatives, I am inserting in the RECORD the Rules of Procedure of the Joint Economic Committee, adopted on February 15, 1989. The rules adopted are the same as existed in the 100th Congress, without change.

RULES OF THE JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEE [1]

RULE 1. The rules of the Senate and House, insofar as they are applicable, shall govern the committee and its subcommittees. The rules of the committee, insofar as they are applicable, shall be the rules of any subcommittee of the committee.

RULE 2. The meetings of the committee shall be held at such times and in such places as the chairman may designate, or at such times as a quorum of the committee may request in writing, with adequate advance notice provided to all members of the committee. Subcommittee meetings shall not be held when the full committee is meeting. Where these rules require a vote of the members of the committee, polling of members either in writing or by telephone shall not be permitted to substitute for a vote taken at a committee meeting, unless the ranking minority member assents to waiver of this requirement.

RULE 3. Ten members of the committee shall constitute a quorum. A majority of the members of a subcommittee shall constitute a quorum of such subcommittee.

RULE 4. Written or telegraphic proxies of committee members will be received and recorded on any vote taken by the committee, except at the organization meeting at the beginning of each Congress, or for the purpose of creating a quorum.

RULE 5. The chairman may name standing or special subcommittees. Any member of the committee shall have the privilege of sitting with any subcommittee during its hearings or deliberations, and may participate in such hearings or deliberations, but no such member who is not a member of the subcommittee shall vote on any matter before such subcommittee.

RULE 6. The chairmanship and vice chairmanship of the committee shall alternate between the House and the Senate by Congresses. The senior member of the minority party in the House of Congress opposite to that of the chairman shall be the ranking minority member of the committee. In the event the House and Senate are under different party control, the chairman and vice chairman shall represent the majority party in their respective Houses.

RULE 7. Questions as to the order of business and the procedure of the committee shall in the first instance be decided by the chairman, subject always to an appeal to the committee.

RULE 8. All hearings conducted by the committee or its subcommittees shall be open to the public except where the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be, by a majority vote orders an executive session. Whenever possible, all public hearings shall include some sessions held on the Senate side and some on the House side. House and Senate Members shall alternate in order of seating and interrogation.

RULE 9. So far as practicable all witnesses appearing before the committee shall file advance written statements of their proposed testimony, and their oral testimony shall be limited to brief summaries. Brief insertions of additional germane material will be received for the record, subject to the approval of the chairman.

RULE 10. An accurate stenographic record shall be kept of all testimony and each witness provided with a copy thereof. Witnesses may make changes in testimony for the purpose of correcting grammatical errors, obvious errors of fact, and errors of transcription. Brief supplemental materials when required to clarify the transcript may be inserted in the record subject to the approval of the chairman. Witnesses shall be allowed 3 days within which to correct and return the transcript of their testimony. If not so returned, the clerk may close the record whenever necessary.

RULE 11. Each member of the committee shall be provided with a copy of the hearings transcript for the purpose of correcting errors of transcription and grammar, and clarifying questions or remarks. If another person is authorized by a committee member to make his corrections, the clerk shall be so notified.

Members who have received unanimous consent to submit written questions to witnesses shall be allowed 2 days within which to submit these to the executive director for transmission to the witnesses. The record may be held open for a period not to exceed 1 week awaiting responses by witnesses.

RULE 12. Testimony received in executive hearings shall not be released or included in any report without the approval of a majority of the committee.

RULE 13. The chairman shall provide adequate time for questioning of witnesses by all members, and the rule of germaneness shall be enforced in all hearings.

RULE 14. None of the hearings of the committee shall be telecast or broadcast, whether directly or through such devices as recordings, tapes, motion pictures, or other mechanical means, if in conflict with a rule or practice of the House on the side of the Capitol where hearings are being held. If no general rule or practice prevails in regard to such telecasts or broadcasts, none of the hearings of the committee shall be telecast or broadcast unless approved by a majority of the members of the committee.

Telecasts or broadcasts of any such portion of hearings of the committee as may include testimony of a witness, shall not be authorized if such witness objects to such telecast or broadcast: Provided, That such witness shall be afforded the opportunity to make such objection, if any, to the committee at a time when the proceedings are not being telecast or broadcast.

RULE 15. No committee report shall be made public or transmitted to the Congress without the approval of a majority of the committee except that when the Congress has adjourned, subcommittees may by majority vote and with the express permission of the full committee submit reports to the full committee and simultaneously release same to the public: Provided, That any member of the committee may make a report supplementary to or dissenting from the majority report. Such supplementary or dissenting reports should be as brief as possible. Factual reports by the committee staff may be printed for the distribution to committee members and the public only upon authorization of the chairman of the full committee either with the approval of a majority of the committee or with the consent of the ranking minority member.

RULE 16. No summary of a committee report, prediction of the contents of a report, or statement of conclusions concerning any investigation shall be made by a member of the committee or of the committee staff prior to the issuance of a report of the committee.

RULE 17. There shall be kept a complete record of all committee proceedings and actions. The clerk of the committee, or a designated member of the committee staff, shall act as recording secretary of all proceedings before the committee and shall prepare and circulate to all members of the committee the minutes of such proceedings. Minutes circulated will be considered approved unless objection is registered prior to the next committee meeting. The records of the committee shall be open to all members of the committee.

RULE 18. The committee shall have a professional and clerical staff under the supervision of an executive director. The committee shall appoint and remove the executive director with the approval of not less than ten members of the committee. Staff operating procedures shall be determined by the executive director, with the approval of the chairman of the committee, and after notification to the ranking minority member with respect to basic revisions. The executive director, under the general supervision of the chairman, is authorized to deal directly with agencies of the Government and with non-Government groups and individuals on behalf of the committee.

The professional members of the committee staff shall be appointed and removed on the recommendation of the executive director with approval by majority vote of the committee. The professional staff members, including the executive director, shall be persons selected without regard to political affiliations who, as a result of training, experience, and attainments, are exceptionally qualified to analyze and interpret economic developments and programs. The clerical and temporary staff shall be appointed and removed by the executive director with the approval of the chairman, and after notification to the ranking minority member. The committee staff shall serve all members of the committee in an objective, nonpartisan manner. From time to time, upon request, the executive director shall designate individual members of the staff to assist subcommittees, individual committee members, and the minority members. The staff, to the extent possible, shall be organized along functional lines to permit specialization.

RULE 19. Attendance at executive sessions shall be limited to members of the committee and of the committee staff. Other persons whose presence is requested or consented to by the committee may be admitted to such sessions.

RULE 20. Selection of witnesses for committee hearings shall be made by the committee staff under the direction of the chairman. A list of proposed witnesses shall be submitted to the members of the committee for review sufficiently in advance of the hearings to permit suggestions by the committee members to receive appropriate consideration.

RULE 21. The chairman of the committee shall have the overall responsibility for preparing and carrying out the committee's program, including staff studies, subject to prior approval of each item on the program by a majority of the committee or, alternatively, by the ranking minority member. Prior to and during the transition from one Congress to another, the outgoing committee shall prepare and have ready a plan for the consideration of the President's Economic Report and the preparation of the committee's report thereon in order to meet the March 1 deadline established by Public Law 304 (79th Cong.), as amended. (See historical note at top of p. 14.)

RULE 22. Proposals for amending committee rules shall be sent to all members at least 1 week before final action is taken thereon, unless the amendment is made by unanimous consent. Approval by at least 11 members of the committee shall be required to amend these rules.

RULE 23. The information contained in any books, papers, or documents furnished to the committee by any individual, partnership, corporation, or other legal entity shall, upon the request of the individual, partnership, corporation, or entity furnishing the same, be maintained in strict confidence by the members and staff of the committee, except that any such information may be released outside of executive session of the committee if the release thereof is effected in a manner which will not reveal the identity of such individual, partnership, corporation, or entity: Provided, That the committee by majority vote may authorize the disclosure of the identity of any such individual, partnership, corporation, or entity in connection with any pending hearing or as a part of a duly authorized report of the committee if such release is deemed essential to the performance of the functions of the committee and is in the public interest.

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS FOR THE 101ST CONGRESS

(Mr. CONYERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 2(a) of rule XI of the House of Representatives, herewith are submitted for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the rules of the Committee on Government Operations, which were adopted on February 9, 1989:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

Rule XI, 1(a)(1) of the House of Representatives provides:

"The Rules of the House are the rules of its committees and subcommittees so far as applicable, except that a motion to recess from day to day is a motion of high privilege in committees and subcommittees."

Rule XI, 2(a) of the House of Representatives provides, in part:

"Each standing committee of the House shall adopt written rules governing its procedure.* * *"

In accordance with the foregoing, the Committee on Government Operations, on February 9, 1989, adopted the rules of the committee. The rules read as follows:

RULE 1.—APPLICATION OF RULES

Except where the terms "full committee" and "subcommittee" are specifically referred to, the following rules shall apply to the Committee on Government Operations and its subcommittees as well as the respective chairmen.

RULE 2.—MEETINGS

The regular meetings of the full committee shall be held on the second Tuesday of each month at 10 a.m., except when Congress has adjourned. The chairman is authorized to dispense with a regular meeting or to change the date thereof, and to call and convene additional meetings, when circumstances warrant. A special meeting of the committee may be requested by members of the committee in accordance with the provisions of House Rule XI, 2(c)(2). Subcommittees shall meet at the call of the subcommittee chairmen. Every member of the committee or the appropriate subcommittee, unless prevented by unusual circumstances, shall be provided with a memorandum at least three calendar days prior to each meeting or hearing explaining (1) the purpose of the meeting or hearing; and (2) the names, titles, background and reasons for appearance of any witnesses. The minority staff shall be responsible for providing the same information on witnesses whom the minority may request.

RULE 3.—QUORUMS

A majority of the members of the committee shall constitute a quorum, except that two members shall constitute a quorum for taking testimony and receiving evidence, and one-third of the members shall constitute a quorum for taking any action other than the reporting of a measure or recommendation. Proxies shall not be used to establish a quorum. If the chairman is not present at any meeting of the committee or subcommittee, the ranking member of the majority party on the committee or subcommittee who is present shall preside at that meeting.

RULE 4.—COMMITTEE REPORTS

Bills and resolutions approved by the committee shall be reported by the chairman in accordance with House Rule XI, 2(l).

Every investigative report shall be approved by a majority vote of the committee at a meeting at which a quorum is present. Supplemental, minority, or additional views may be filed in accordance with House Rule XI, 2(l)(5). The time allowed for filing such views shall be three calendar days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) unless the committee agrees to a different time, but agreement on a shorter time shall require the concurrence of each member seeking to file such views. A proposed report shall not be considered in subcommittee or full committee unless the proposed report has been available to the members of such subcommittee or full committee for at least three calender days (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) prior to the consideration of such proposed report in subcommittee or full committee. If hearings have been held on the matter reported upon, every reasonable effort shall be made to have such hearings available to the members of the subcommittee or full committee prior to the consideration of the proposed report in such subcommittee or full committee.

RULE 5.—PROXY VOTES

A member may vote by proxy on any measure or matter before the committee and on any amendment or motion pertaining thereto. A proxy shall be in writing and be signed by the member granting the proxy; it shall show the date and time of day it was signed and the date for which it is given and the member to whom the proxy is given. Each proxy authorization shall state that the member is absent on official business or is otherwise unable to be present; shall be limited to the date and the specific measure or matter to which it applies; and, unless it states otherwise, shall apply to any amendments or motions pertaining to the measure or matter.

RULE 6.—ROLLCALLS

A rollcall of the members may be had upon the request of any member.

[See House Rule XI, 2(e).]

RULE 7.—RECORD OF COMMITTEE ACTIONS

The committee staff shall maintain in the committee offices a complete record of committee actions including a record of the rollcall votes taken at committee business meetings. The original records, or true copies thereof, as appropriate, shall be available for public inspection whenever the committee offices are open for public business. The staff shall assure that such original records are preserved with no unauthorized alteration, additions, or defacement.

RULE 8.—SUBCOMMITTEES; REFERRALS

There shall be seven subcommittes with appropriate party ratios which shall have fixed jurisdictions. Bills, resolutions, and other matters shall be referred by the chairman to subcommittees within two weeks for consideration or investigation in accordance with their fixed jurisdictions. Where the subject matter of the referral involves the jurisdiction of more than one subcommittee or does not fall within any previously assigned jurisdiction, the chairman shall refer the matter as he may deem advisable. Bills, resolutions, and other matters referred to subcommittees may be reassigned by the chairman when, in his judgment, the subcommittee is not able to complete its work or cannot reach agreement therein. In a subcommittee having an even number of members, if there is a tie vote with all members voting on any measure, the measure shall be placed on the agenda for full committee consideration as if it had been ordered reported by the subcommittee without recommendation. This provision shall not preclude further action on the measure by the subcommittee.

[See House Rule XI, 1(a)(2).]

RULE 9.—EX OFFICIO MEMBERS

The chairman and the ranking minority member of the committee shall be ex officio members of all subcommittees. They are authorized to vote on subcommittee matters; but, unless they are regular members of the subcommittee, they shall not be counted in determining a subcommittee quorum other than a quorum for the purpose of taking testimony.

RULE 10.—STAFF

Except as otherwise provided by House Rule XI, 5 and 6, the chairman of the full committee shall have the authority to hire and discharge employees of the professional and clerical staff of the full committee and of subcommittees subject to appropriate approval.

RULE 11.—STAFF DIRECTION

Except as otherwise provided by House Rule XI, 5 and 6, the staff of the committee shall be subject to the direction of the chairman of the full committee and shall perform such duties as he may assign.

RULE 12.—HEARING DATES AND WITNESSES

The chairman of the full committee will announce the date, place, and subject matter of all hearings at least one week prior to the commencement of any hearings, unless he determines that there is good cause to begin such hearings at an earlier date. In order that the chairman of the full committee may coordinate the committee facilities and hearing plans, each subcommittee chairman shall notify him of any hearing plans at least two weeks in advance of the date of commencement of hearings, including the date, place, subject matter, and the names of witnesses, willing and unwilling, who would be called to testify, including, to the extent he is advised thereof, witnesses whom the minority members may request. The minority members shall supply the names of witnesses they intend to call to the chairman of the full committee or subcommittee at the earliest possible date. Witnesses appearing before the committee shall, so far as practicable, submit written statements at least 24 hours in advance of their appearance.

[See House Rule XI, 2(g)(3), (g)(4), (j), and (k).]

RULE 13.—OPEN MEETINGS

Meetings for the transaction of business and hearings of the committee shall be open to the public or closed in accordance with Rule XI of the House of Representatives.

[See House Rules XI, 2(g) and (k).]

RULE 14.—FIVE-MINUTE RULE

A committee member may question a witness only when recognized by the chairman for that purpose. In accordance with House Rule XI, 2(j)(2), each committee member may request up to five minutes to question a witness until each member who so desires has had such opportunity. Until all such requests have been satisfied, the chairman shall, so far as practicable, recognize alternately on the basis of seniority those majority and minority members present at the time the hearing was called to order and others on the basis of their arrival at the hearing. Thereafter, additional time may be extended at the direction of the chairman.

RULE 15.—INVESTIGATIVE HEARINGS; PROCEDURE

Investigative hearings shall be conducted according to the procedures in House Rule XI, 2(k). All questions put to witnesses before the committee shall be relevant to the subject matter before the committee for consideration, and the chairman shall rule on the relevance of any questions put to the witness.

RULE 16.—STENOGRAPHIC RECORD

A stenographic record of all testimony shall be kept of public hearings and shall be made available on such conditions as the chairman may prescribe.

RULE 17.—TV, RADIO, AND PHOTOGRAPHS

When approved by a majority vote, an open meeting or hearing of the committee or a subcommittee may be covered, in whole or in part, by television broadcast, radio broadcast, and still photography, or by any of such methods of coverage, subject to the provisions of House Rule XI, 3. In order to enforce the provisions of said rule or to maintain an acceptable standard of dignity, propriety, and decorum, the chairman may order such alteration, curtailment, or discontinuance of coverage as he determines necessary.

RULE 18.—ADDITIONAL DUTIES OF CHAIRMAN

The chairman of the full committee shall:

(a) Make available to other committees the findings and recommendations resulting from the investigations of the committee or its subcommittees as required by House Rule X, 4(c)(2);

(b) Direct such review and studies on the impact or probable impact of tax policies affecting subjects within the committee's jurisdiction as required by House Rule X, 2(d);

(c) Submit to the Committee on the Budget views and estimates required by House Rule X, 4(g), and to file reports with the House as required by the Congressional Budget Act;

(d) Authorize and issue subpoenas as provided in House Rule XI, clause 2(m), in the conduct of any investigation or activity or series of investigations or activities within the jurisdiction of the committee; and

(e) Prepare, after consultation with subcommittee chairmen and the minority, a budget for the committee which shall include an adequate budget for the subcommittees to discharge their responsibilities.

SENATE—Thursday, February 23, 1989

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 3, 1989)

The Senate met at 2 p.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable TERRY SANFORD, a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The session will be opened by a prayer of our guest chaplain, the Reverend Jay Wolf, of the First Baptist Church of Alexandria, VA.

PRAYER

The Reverend Jay Wolf, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Alexandria, VA, offered the following prayer:

Senators, please join your hearts with mine as we pray together.

Gracious Lord Jesus, we thank You for the privilege of pausing and turning to You in prayer.

We acknowledge that these are difficult and dangerous days in our world community. Father, we confess that our resources and wisdom are not adequate to solve the problems, so we come to You and ask for Your help.

Lord, we want You to know that these deliberations of this hour will be committed to You. We would ask that You would give these wonderful legislators Your wisdom, Your hope, Your strength, Your peace, and Your encouragement, even in these moments.

Father, would You make them righters of wrong, defenders of the oppressed, lovers of righteousness and justice. Father, even in these moments as we make decisions that will affect this national world family, You give them that deepest sense of knowing that they are ultimately accountable to You.

Father, we wrap this prayer in the magnificent, majestic, and saving name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, February 23, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable TERRY SANFORD, a Senator from the State of North Carolina, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. SANFORD thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the acting majority leader is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESERVATION OF MAJORITY LEADER'S TIME

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the majority leader's time be reserved.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING REPUBLICAN LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the acting Republican leader is recognized—the Senator from North Carolina and a member of the First Baptist Church of Alexandria, VA.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair very much.

THE REVEREND JAY WOLF

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I was delighted some weeks ago when I learned that Rev. Jay L. Wolf, Jr., had been selected to serve today as guest chaplain of the U.S. Senate. Jay is one of the most remarkable young men I have had the privilege of knowing.

When Dorothy and I are in Washington on weekends, we attend First Baptist Church of Alexandria. In 1984, Jay Wolf was selected by that church to serve as its pastor. Jay was 30 years old at the time.

Mr. President, to be honest about it, there perhaps were some who wondered if such a young minister could successfully lead a great church the size of First Baptist of Alexandria. Dorothy and I were not among the doubters, if any, particularly after we first heard Jay Wolf preach.

In the weeks that followed, we noticed a remarkable thing: Every Sunday, more and more young people were coming to First Baptist, and more and more of them were joining the church. Jay became pastor in September 1984. In his first 4 years as pastor, more than 1,200 new members joined the fellowship at First Baptist of Alexandria.

Mr. President, in September 1984, First Baptist of Alexandria had one morning service each Sunday. In all honesty, the church sanctuary was seldom filled, sometimes not even on Easter morning. Today, there are two morning services and one in the evening each Sunday. The morning services are packed, and if you expect to find a parking space and a seat, you had better come a bit early.

This is a measurement of the Reverend Mr. Wolf's dedication to preaching the gospel. He is not a social activist. He is, as we say in the Baptist Church, a Bible-believing minister who preaches the gospel with good humor yet firm convictions. He knows that there is a difference between right and wrong, and those who attend First Baptist of Alexandria appreciate his willingness to preach the Word of God.

He is, in every sense, a devoted, caring and loving pastor, and his congregation knows it.

Jay is a native of Texas, as just about everybody in this town these days is. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Wolf, Sr., live in Georgetown, TX. Jay's wife is the former Mary Ruth Simmons, of Jackson, MS. They were married in 1977 and have two children—Jay III, born in 1982, and Sarah, who was born in 1985. Jay was licensed to the Gospel Ministry in 1971 and ordained February 16, 1978.

He was graduated from Georgetown (TX) High School in 1973. He was salutatorian of his class. He was graduated magna cum laude from Baylor University in 1977, and received his master of divinity degree in 1981 from the New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary.

All in all, a remarkable young man. Obviously, Mr. President, it gives Dorothy and me a very special pleasure that the Reverend Jay Wolf has today been honored by the Senate with an invitation to serve this day as the guest chaplain of this body.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, may I just add to the words of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina my personal thanks for Reverend Wolf's being with us today, for the eloquence of his prayer, but also for the essence of the message that the Lord built a house, of course, by extension, the Nation, and all we who labor, labor in vain.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

Thank you for your work and thank you for being with us today.

RECOGNITION OF THE REPUBLICAN LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes of my time to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished leader for yielding time to me.

TECH-PREP EDUCATION ACT

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, the youth of today must prepare for the work force of tomorrow. That will require workers with increased levels of skill and proficiency in mathematics, science, and communications. We must provide a technical education program of higher quality if we are to meet that need.

One way to do this is to increase the cooperation between secondary schools and community colleges in technical education, so that students have a unified, continuous program. It is with this goal in mind that I am joining my colleague from Rhode Island, Mr. PELL, in introducing the Tech-Prep Education Act. This bill would provide planning and demonstration grants to consortia of local educational agencies and community colleges for the development and operation of 4-year technical preparation education programs leading to an associate degree.

Secondary schools and community colleges would work together to offer students a comprehensive 4-year curriculum designed to prepare them to enter the modern work force. There would be joint training of teachers, and counselors would be trained in effective recruiting techniques.

Mr. President, each year over 1 million young people drop out of school, and many wind up on the welfare rolls. Tech-prep is a new way to encourage those who may be tempted to drop out to stay in school.

It gives us a better chance to prepare our students for a different kind of future.

Hearings will begin soon in the Education Subcommittee on reauthorization of our vocational education programs. It is my hope that careful consideration will be given to this proposal for improved coordination of effort among our schools to ensure a more interesting, appealing, and rewarding program of study for technical and vocational education students.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, do I have any time remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. I am sure that the Senator has. We are about to go into morning business, if that makes any difference.

Mr. DOLE. If I have any leader time remaining that I could yield, I wish to do so.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Four minutes.

Mr. DOLE. I yield that time to the Senator from Alaska.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the leader.

NOMINATION OF JOHN TOWER TO BE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this morning I read the FBI report in toto that is before the Senate on our former colleague, John Tower.

I have read FBI reports for a long time. Early in my career I was a U.S. attorney and had occasion to read FBI reports in criminal matters on many occasions. Later I was Solicitor of the Interior Department. I read them there. I read them here in the leadership for 8 years and also as chairman and ranking minority member of committees and subcommittees I have read FBI reports.

I want the Senate to know that we have agreed not to talk about what is in the report. But I think it is within our prerogative to talk about our reaction to the report, and my reaction is that nothing in that report changes my mind concerning my support for John Tower to be the Secretary of Defense.

Mr. President, I have known John Tower since 1961. He has traveled to my State. I have traveled with him. I have served here in the Senate with him from 1968 to 1985.

After that, on many occasions as chairman of the Senate's arms control observer group, I went to Geneva. On occasion, I stayed with John Tower in his home. One summer, as a matter of fact, I borrowed his home and my wife and little girl and a staff member went and stayed in the house. He was there part of the time. Part of the time, he was not because he had official business in Geneva at the time.

During this long period here in the Senate, my Capitol office was right around the corner from Senator Tower's and as we all know, we spent a lot of long hours here, sometimes all night, going back and forth on votes.

So I can say to the Senate that I think I have known John Tower as well or better than any Member of the Senate. I have traveled with him. I have stayed in his home. He has visited mine. I have been with him here extensively.

I know of nothing in John Tower's background or his personal or professional experience which would justify anyone in concluding that he was not ably qualified to be Secretary of Defense.

In terms of defense matters, the Senate will recall that Senator Tower and I disagreed on many occasions.

He was chairman for 6 years on the Armed Services Committee and I was chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, and we had violent arguments on the floor of the Senate.

Senator Tower is not one to mince his words or to stop arguing when he left the floor of the Senate.

We have had words in his office and in mine and they were direct and professional.

I consider John Tower one of my best friends, and I hope that he will be able to say the same despite all of those arguments and collisions, collisions that I recall on one occasion, as a matter of fact four occasions, concerning battleships which I opposed his refurbishing and refloating, and he was dedicated to achieving, and he did achieve, his goal of bringing the battleships back.

Mr. President, seeking public office is one thing. Seeking to perform public service after leaving public office is an entirely different thing.

When Senator Tower took on the task of being one of our Ambassadors in Geneva in arms control he knew what he was doing.

Would the Chair like to interrupt now and go into regular morning business?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. I yield the Senator from Alaska as much time as he wishes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Senator Tower took on a task very important to this country and did an admirable job.

I do not know of any person in Geneva who criticized Senator Tower's conduct there at the time or after he left until he was a nominee for the Secretary of Defense.

When we went to Geneva, we were all cautioned that Geneva is a place where everybody is under observation. We did not have conversations about arms control except in a secure place.

I spent many hours with Senator Tower in his home and in his office, met very often in his office with Ambassador Karpov from the Soviet Union to discuss issues concerning the negotiations that were going on.

My point to the Senate is this: I have heard a lot of these rumors and I have read a lot about rumors lately concerning Senator Tower.

Mr. President, Senators know who as a Member of the Senate has a drinking problem. I have known Senators who have had drinking problems. We have all known Senators who had drinking problems. We all know Senators even to drink during working hours.

But I can tell the Senate this, and I tell the American people this: In all my time working with John Tower, I never saw him drinking during working hours. I never saw him in a situation where he was not in complete control of his brain. He never drank during those long hours that we spent either here or over in Geneva except on social occasions when work was over.

I have not heard anyone who served in the Senate with John Tower say that John Tower had a drinking problem. If there is anyplace that will bring up a drinking problem, it is right here. That is all there is to it.

This word that is going around that John Tower has a drinking problem in my opinion is ludicrous, is absurd, and I think that those of us who have worked with John Tower, who know John Tower and know his ability, including those Senators like me who have been the target of his invective at times because he disagreed with us and we know he is a tough person to deal with, it is time for us to stand up and defend this man because he is the kind of man that ought to be Secretary of Defense right now.

John Tower knows what those programs are. He knows where there is overspending. He knows where there is great need that we do not have money allocated for. He knows after negotiating with the Soviets, better than any man who served in this Senate, what the Soviets have and do not have, what our potential enemies of this world have and who they are. It is my opinion, Mr. President, that this man is a good choice to be the Secretary of Defense.

I am very hopeful that this will settle down today and we will get a vote to bring this nomination to the floor.

I intend to pursue it and defend him and am prepared to meet anyone here on the floor and defend my friend and this nominee at any time.

I thank the Chair and I thank my friend for yielding his time.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, are we now in morning business?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The leader still has time.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business for not to exceed 1 hour with Senators permitted to speak therein for 5 minutes each.

The Republican leader is recognized.

NOMINATION OF JOHN TOWER TO BE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Alaska for his statement. I know that today is a very important day insofar as the nomination of John Tower is concerned. And though I get a little scent around this place that maybe we are going to have a party line vote in the committee, I hope that is not the case.

We are all going to be attending a reception later on today. Senator BYRD has spent a lot of time on a book, "200 Years in the Senate." It seems to me that we are about on the verge, unless there is some change of what I sense around, of sort of tearing this place up.

I have already seen on the talk shows some of my colleagues hiding behind the FBI report, saying, "Oh, I can't tell you what's in it, can't tell you what's in it, but I can tell you this: I can't vote for John Tower."

So now we have the FBI report, which is not supposed to make a judgment on whether or not you should vote for or against any nominee, being used by some to say, "Well, I can't tell you what's in it, but I can tell you there are some problems in there."

And, having read the FBI report myself—and again, being under the same constraints that Senator STEVENS indicated, we cannot tell you what is in it—I can tell you a lot of it is anonymous, no names, people that do not know John Tower, people that have heard rumors. And then they sic the FBI onto that particular source and they run down the rumor and in nearly every case the rumor is shot down.

Now, I have heard others say, "Well, this has been around for quite a while now and we have had so much news on it and a lot of people back home are opposed to Tower." Why would they not be? Every night on the nightly news, on every network, on CNN, in every newspaper, there is some rumor, some rumor that somebody has spread and it is repeated in the news. If somebody in my State or your State sees that report, they would not be for John Tower, either.

Talk about cynical news coverage and media frenzy, it has been around in this case. Every night there is a negative story on John Tower.

Now, we have had eight Cabinet officers turned down in the history of this country—eight—and four of them were in the term of John Tyler, and were part of a power struggle between the first Vice President to assume the powers of the President and Henry Clay, and one got caught in the politics of the impeachment of President Johnson and other things. Only one has ever been turned down in the early part of a President's term.

Now, I think it is time we understand that this is not a trial of John Tower. This is a confirmation.

I heard one Senator say last night on television, on the "Larry King Show," "Well, 90 percent of that FBI file is rubbish."

Is he on trial that we have to have beyond a reasonable doubt; it has to be 100 percent or I cannot vote for John Tower? What have we come to in the U.S. Senate? What kind of a standard do we need someone to meet to be confirmed on a bipartisan basis?

Now, I have to believe there are Republicans and Democrats who are reasonable men and women who are going to take the time to read the report and reach their own conclusion and not let some television commentator make it up for you or some poll that somebody took for Time magazine that says it is 54 to 26 percent against Tower. How did he get the 26 percent? I was surprised. If you hammer someone for 30 days or 45 days, every day, I think he is pretty lucky to have 26-percent support.

But, as I understood the process—and I have been around here for some time—the President of the United States, whether he is a Democrat or Republican, has a right to choose people he wants to serve in his Cabinet. And unless there is some overriding reason that that person should not be confirmed, in all the history of the Senate, we have done that without hesitation. There have been eight exceptions and many of those are far different than the one before us.

But now, in the modern day of television and instant news coverage and every night we have some story made out of whole cloth or based on some rumor, we have a different standard.

Today is a very important day, not just for John Tower but for the Senate of the United States. And I hope, the one thing I do hope is that it is not a party line vote on this nomination in the Armed Services Committee. I think we deserve better.

President Bush is in Tokyo today, I believe, for a very important mission. Among other things, attending the funeral, but, among other things, visiting with 12 to 15 heads of state from around the world.

I have had two conversations with Mr. Sununu, the Chief of Staff, one last night at 9:30 our time—I do not know what time it was there; they were not in Tokyo yet, they were a couple of hours out—and one at 11 o'clock this morning, which is 1 or 2 a.m. in Tokyo, concerning the Tower nomination. It is matter of minute-by-minute concern to the President of the United States. This is his nominee. He did not pick John Tower up off the street. He did not do it without careful consideration. He did it after a lot of thought and a lot of investigation. Nobody has ever been investigated as much by so many FBI agents in history, probably combined, than has former Senator John Tower.

So I hope we can restore a little balance, as the Senator from Alaska said, in what we are about to do. I would state there are 71 Senators in this body have served with Senator Tower. And I want to re-underscore what Senator STEVENS has said. I cannot believe some Senator is going to believe some anonymous source in some FBI report, a Senator who has served with John Tower and been on the Senate floor with John Tower night after night, day after day, and knows for certain that he has never seen John Tower in any condition except a proper condition. What does it come to if we rely on some anonymous source, someone who never knew John Tower or some who were political enemies of John Tower to make up our minds when we know Senator Tower and we know what his conduct was like?

So I hope that when we think about the 200 years of the Senate, we think about the institution, we think about the disservice that we could do to someone who served in this body with honor and distinction. As far as I know, nobody ever quarreled with that. When he was chairman of the Tower Commission, when he criticized Ronald Reagan, nobody jumped on Senator Tower that I know of. When he was our negotiator in Geneva, nobody criticized Senator Tower. Now we have all these charges coming out of the woodwork, over the transom, under the door, across on the House side, and some are not even related to John Tower but he is making the nightly news.

I would just say we have to have some fairness. There could be some hypocrisy around here. I hope not. But I am convinced that we ought to look at this man's strengths. His strengths are he understands the Pentagon, he understands the Congress, he knows how the executive branch works, and he can help reshape the Pentagon and help reduce some of the spending that we have to do in defense and he will know where to go to do it. That is why John Tower was selected by President Bush.

So it just seems to me that I am concerned, as a Senator that has been here for a long time, that everybody is going to hide behind the FBI reports: "Oh, we can't make that public. We can't tell you anything, but I will tell you I can't vote for John Tower."

Maybe it ought to be made public. Maybe there ought to be an exception. Maybe it ought to be sanitized. Maybe we ought to answer it charge by charge by charge. And I am willing to bet that if some objective Senator, any objective Senator, Republican or Democrat, goes through all that report and has a charge up here and an answer here, you are going to find in nearly every case they are unfounded.

So if there is no foundation except maybe rumor—and from anonymous sources, in most cases—then I wonder how we are ever going to come to grips with our responsibilities as Senators and how we are going to advise and consent on the nomination.

I guess I could call Tokyo now and tell the President the committee is meeting. Maybe he can make some phone calls. But I do not think I will do that. I think he believes, as I believe, and I think most Senators believe, that the nominee is going to have a fair hearing, not a trial, a fair hearing in the Senate. And they have had a very thorough, a very exhaustive and a very fair hearing in the Armed Services Committee. The only thing I hope is when they meet later today it is going to be a vote that expresses the concerns of the Senators but it is not going to be party line.

But whatever happens, it will be on the Senate floor, as I understand it; hopefully as early as next week. And then it is going to be incumbent upon all of us on this side and the other side of the aisle to make a judgment of the nominee and for us to understand that he is President Bush's nominee. President Bush selected John Tower. He has a right to have people in his Cabinet.

George Bush has been around awhile. I learned the hard way, he is a pretty tough competitor. And I think he has made some pretty good choices.

So I just hope that when all is said and done we are going to be objective about this nomination. If it becomes a party line vote, Republican on one side and Democrats on the other, then I think we have had a big, big setback in the U.S. Senate, notwithstanding the 200 years of history we are going to hear about later today.

I thank the Presiding Officer.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader.

Mr. FOWLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BREAUX). Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNESCO

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in the course of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearings on the nomination of our distinguished Secretary of State, Mr. Baker, I took the occasion to ask whether he would be open to some reconsideration of our decision several years ago to leave the United Nation's Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization known commonly as UNESCO. I did not ask that he state whether he thought returning to UNESCO was a good idea, nor did I indicate that I thought it was of necessity a good idea. However, it seemed to me that we should take into account the progress UNESCO has made under its new Director General, Federico Mayor. This distinguished Spanish biochemist has done much to reform the management of the organization and moderate the ideological extremism to which it had fallen prey in the years immediately preceding our decision to withdraw.

I might make the point, Mr. President, that we have once before withdrawn from a specialized agency of the United Nations system, the International Labor Organization. It is a sequence in which I have found myself intimately involved. As it happened, my doctoral dissertation was written on the subject of how we came to join the ILO. Of the three organizations of the League of Nations—the League itself, the World Court and the ILO—the one we were least likely ever to join was the last. But it was the only one we did join. We joined in large part because of the American labor movement, which had been involved with these matters for a third of a century before we joined in 1934. Samuel Gompers, the head of the AFL, was the Chairman of the Commission which drafted the ILO charter in Paris in 1918.

The ILO held its first labor conference here in Washington in 1919. While they met, this Senate, in this Chamber, was debating the Treaty of Versailles. We were not members of the ILO, or any of the other League organizations.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, allowed the ILO to occupy temporary offices which had been built on the Mall during the war. He generally did what he thought President Wilson would want done, Wilson being then in a coma.

That attachment continued to the time that Franklin Roosevelt returned to Washington as President-elect and the United States joined the ILO. The ILO was the organization to survive the League of Nations and to go on into the U.N. system. And yet it, too, began falling into a pattern of ignoring its basic charter. The ILO was to operate on a tripartite basis: government, business, labor, representatives concerning themselves with fundamental issues such as freedom of association, and with important issues such as working conditions and the rights of employees. In the 1970's there was a nasty effort to exclude Israel from any regional groups. There was a typical pattern of these things, the Soviets being very much involved. And so it fell to me, in 1975, when I was our Ambassador to the United Nations, to draft a letter telling the ILO that we were giving 2 years' notice of our intention to leave. I said we hoped we would not have to leave but we would, if there were no change. This letter was signed by the Secretary of State, Dr. Kissinger, of course.

It happens, also, that when the 2-year time period had expired, as a Senator I moved that we leave the ILO. And I said that we hoped, one day, to return, but we were leaving.

Indeed, this did concentrate the minds of the bureaucracy in Geneva. The delegates of labor and business, and even from the Marxist world, realized they had lost the United States, the country that had sustained the body through half a century. They did make changes and we did return. And not 6 months ago, again on this floor, I was able to move the adoption of three international labor conventions the first we had ratified in a third of a century.

So we are back in the ILO. We are out of UNESCO. Yet, the question arises whether we should reconsider our position in the light of changes UNESCO has made. I am particularly pleased to know that the United Nations Association, USA, has formed a panel to engage in what it calls "rethinking UNESCO." I see that the chairman of the panel is none other than our revered former colleague, Senator Robert T. Stafford, of Vermont. He has joined with what appears to me to be a very distinguished group of persons who might consider this whole question of the governance of UNESCO past, present, and future.

In that context, Mr. President, I have been struck by an address which the Soviet Foreign Secretary, Mr. Eduard Shevardnadze, gave at UNESCO House in Paris on October 11, 1988. His address appeared in Pravda on October 13, and has now been reprinted in English by the newsletter of the Americans For the University of UNESCO.

Mr. Shevardnadze stated that he was the first Soviet Foreign Minister to speak to that body, which I do not doubt. I am not aware that any American Secretary of State has done so, although one may have many years ago. Shevardnadze had something powerfully important to say. Acknowledging that UNESCO could not escape the influence of political and ideological storms of this century, he said:

As we delve into the roots of the trouble, we don't try to shift the blame on others. We submitted to the influence of confrontation and adopted its spirit as we sought to repulse ideas alien to us. The exaggerated ideological approach undermined tolerance intrinsic to UNESCO.

At this point, Mr. President, I would ask unanimous consent that excerpts from Mr. Shevardnadze's speech be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, it is not every day in my experience that a Soviet diplomat goes to an international organization and asks: "Has this organization been torn apart by ideological stress? Has it been confrontational? Has it departed from its essential mission?" and answers: "Yes, it has. And we are the ones who did it."

That is a significant event. I know of no equivalent in Soviet diplomacy. I know no equivalents of a Soviet acknowledgement that, at minimum, the UNESCO is an organization that was meant to embody, "The tolerance"—I use Mr. Shevardnadze's words—"of opposing opinion." The tolerance, I might add, which is the essence of a liberal society—small "l."

Did I use the word "liberal?" Well, it can still be used, even on the Senate floor. We are immune from prosecution for statements made in this body.

The UNESCO is an embodiment of the kind of liberal tradition of the West. The founders of UNESCO had expected that the world would soon resemble the Western democracies, but that did not turn out to be so.

On the other hand, it did not have to follow that when nondemocratic states became the majority, they used that power to begin turning the very institution that embodied the world order's expectation of a free and liberal political, cultural and scientific life into the very opposite.

Part of that effort was the New World Information and Communications Order. In a word, Mr. President, UNESCO set out to make rules for journalism: what you could do, could not do, what you had to report and could not report. Nothing quite as extreme as the Ayatollah's proposal to sentence to death anyone who writes things of which he disapproves, but still the clearest possible violation of the spirit and the word of the UNESCO constitution.

I recall going to Paris 10 years ago for the purpose of calling on our mission there and meeting with Mr. M'Bow. I was not able to do so; he was not in Paris at the time. But I had met him in Geneva earlier when I was the U.N. Ambassador, and I said to him, "Listen, you are way off. You are heading in directions that are going to destroy this organization, and it will not be missed. If your idea is to license journalists and to set up the one-party press that is characteristic of the majority of the countries now in UNESCO, I tell you, we will depart."

My dear friends of earlier years, Prof. Gene Lyons and Michiline Lyons of Dartmouth College were there. Both expressed their hope we would not leave. We had not given the subject the attention it deserved. We did not have a mission there that was saying, "Keep this up and out we go," or to the degree it was heard, it was not believed. Indeed, we did go.

Well, that concentrated the mind. Just as the ILO began to address our concerns, so did UNESCO. And in the course of a normal sequence of the expiration of the term of office of the Director General, the effort by Mr. M'Bow to succeed himself yet again was rejected. The body turned, as I remarked earlier, to Mr. Mayor, an eminent Spanish scientist who embodies the expectations of the organization.

Mr. President, we are going to have hearings on this subject in the Committee on Foreign Relations. We are going to ask the persons who think we should reaffiliate, those who think we should not, those who have various views in between. It is a sensible time to do this. For my part, I would take the surprisingly candid admission of Mr. Shevardnadze that the Soviets were behind the wrecking of the institution to be an indication of their willingness to see to its rebuilding. I do not know.

The distinguished Presiding Officer may have a very healthy skepticism, but the matter is worth inquiry when our former colleague, Senator Stafford, devotes himself to the matter. Surely we can do as well. I thought I would take this moment to advise the Senate of our intention to hold hearings and also of this rather unusual statement by a Soviet diplomat.

SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTER SPEAKS AT UNESCO

[Following are excerpts from the speech delivered in UNESCO House before Permanent Delegates, members of the Executive Board, staff and guests on 11 October 1988 by Eduard Shevardnadze, USSR Minister of Foreign Affairs. The English text appeared in a Supplement to "Moscow News" No. 45, and was translated from the Russian original in Pravda of 13 October 1988.]

I am the first Soviet Foreign Minister to speak here. This address is inspired by Mikhail Gorbachev's words that the goals for which the UNESCO was set up are of special importance today.

My speech has been inspired by the desire and, no less so, by the Soviet will to be constructive and trailblazing contributors to UNESCO's activity.

On my way here, I recalled a Soviet novella whose hero never distinguishes between homeland and foreign countries and takes to heart others' problems, joys and sorrows like his own. Such people are linked with the entire humankind by ideas, by feeling part of everything, by faith in the triumph of reason, by responsibility for whatever happens in the world.

For me, that story goes together with the basic law of our perestroika: human life, dignity and social progress matter more than anything else. Universal human values are above all other interests.

I think it especially important to say that to an organization whose founding fathers wrote in its Charter the words on peace based on intellectual and moral solidarity of the human race.

That goal used to seem a beautiful ideal torn apart from reality. Now that ideal is imperative, politically and morally. This world is indivisible, and the clearer we see it, the clearer to us the global nature of that imperative.

UNESCO could not escape the influence of political and ideological storms of this century.

It found itself on the threshold of a crisis. It could not fully use its rich potentials.

As we delve into the roots of the trouble, we don't try to shift the blame on others. We submitted to the influence of confrontation, and adopted its spirit as we sought to repulse ideas alien to us. The exaggerated ideological approach undermined tolerance intrinsic to UNESCO.

We refuse to act as judges, and we start our criticisms with ourselves. We call on everybody to learn the lessons of the past as UNESCO revival is starting. The organization shall be one universal whole to respond to the emergent wholeness of the world.

UNESCO shall embark on the course determined in its Charter and become a genuine center of cooperation. Thus we see the goal of its revival.

As we refer to the universal nature of UNESCO, we mean not only extensive representation. Such nature presupposes that UNESCO's practical activity rests on the principle of a united human race, a world inter-connected and interdependent. Our decisions ought to bring to a common denominator the demands and interests of East and West, of South and North, of humanity as a whole.

The existence of universal values is beyond doubt. Such values take shape and consolidate, above all, the realm of the spirit.

It is in the nature of man to repeat great truths, but only experience engenders a conscious desire to follow them. It has taken us decades of alienation and confrontation to see that we are different and will remain as such for some time. Yet we have one civilization and we will not be able to save it if we stay divided. There is a need for consolidation and solidarity of thinking people, first and foremost.

There is a need for real solidarity that would foster the idea of the world's unity and of a common destiny of its nations.

The perestroika philosophy has enabled us to develop a new view of the world and ourselves, to look through new lenses at our responsibility to our own people and the human race generally.

Perestroika has tapped previously unused creative energies, brought unjustly rejected names and works back from limbo, restored the civil right of dialogue between the public and the state, between authorities and the creative artist, and between the individual and the community.

Further decentralization and greater glasnost go a long way to foster the plurality of views and assessments, freedom to disagree, tolerance and humanity.

The traditional concept of culture has suddenly taken on new aspects.

For, apart from everything else, culture is that potent force crucial to the ability of society to set itself progressively higher value standards, organizing public life accordingly.

Surely this change in attitudes has had an impact on our foreign policy, which today is underpinned and guided by the concept of new political thinking.

The basic principles of this concept are these:

Free choice, which implies that one must not claim the right to final judgment, nor impose ideas, doctrines or models of development;

Political and cultural pluralism, which implies that no commitment to one's beliefs can any more justify their messianic promotion;

Reliance on dialogue, not on confrontation, and on the balance of interests, not on the balance of forces;

Exclusion of the self-acting component of ideological differences from international affairs, and measures to guarantee national security in the context of universal security;

Peace through wisdom, not through force; force of politics, not politics of force;

Supremacy of international law in international affairs.

The Soviet Union is rethinking its attitude to many international organizations, including those concerned with economic issues and seeks a worthy place in them.

The Soviet Union sees its role in UNESCO in a new light, too. Now that the ideas of its founding fathers, who foresaw the unique role of intellectual, cultural and ethical factors in politics in the context of an integral world, are getting a new lease on life, we have no task more important than humanizing international relations, promoting intellectual and emotional unity of world peoples, and concentrating on ways and means of saving the foundations of life on Earth.

The Soviet Union calls for this high energy to be immediately used in world politics, and regards UNESCO as a unique generator of fresh innovative approaches to humanitarian and intellectual cooperation in the cause of peace and security.

As we see it, UNESCO has a major role to play in devising a sound strategy for a world that is undergoing renewal.

There is therefore an objective necessity to reorient UNESCO, laying special emphasis on the utilization of the latest achievements in science, engineering, culture and education. It would be proper to think of new ways of organizing UNESCO's work.

Science has elevated the world to such a height from which it may either develop, reaching still higher summits, or fall into an abyss. Scientific discoveries have proved the truth which was known back in antiquity: knowledge by itself is not a panacea from all evils. Without moral guidelines it may become a source of evil.

The sacred faith in the power of knowledge has been undermined by infernal discoveries, by the depletion of the natural sources of self-reproduction, and by hunger and poverty.

The scientific and technological revolution has not merged with the spiritual and moral advancement. As a consequence, the fertile layer feeding civilization has started thinning.

Only recently science was isolated from other spheres of intellectual activity. Now its impact on human life is becoming more and more visible.

Much depends on the international and universal human function of science, on the ability to cope with the still dominating tendency of monopolizing scientific and technological achievements.

Jointly, the nations must find a formula for the just distribution of products of the scientific intellect, and establish such an order whereby the benefits of scientific discoveries might become accessible to all.

To keep whole nations on the periphery of the emerging scientific and information world is not only immoral, but also dangerous, particularly for the peoples which, for historical reasons, have risen to the heights of welfare.

Culture is more than the preservation of historical monuments or human aesthetical erudition. It's an imperative standard of inner relationships between the eternal and transient, and a permanent test of plans and their realization by the supreme criteria—justice, the good and beauty.

There is also the problem of dying languages, and natural and forced assimilation of cultures. Our integral world is not a melting pot. It is integral due to its diversity.

Shortly before our meeting, the permanent representatives of the Soviet Union, the Ukraine and Byelorussia handed UNESCO Director-General Federico Mayor the instruments of ratification pertaining to the convention on the protection of the world cultural and natural heritage.

Frankly, we were impermissibly long in acceding to the convention drafted with our involvement way back in 1972. This is also an aftereffect of the recent stagnation on our domestic scene. However, we will try to make up for the time lost by vigorous efforts to save and protect cultural monuments and natural riches in the Soviet Union and elsewhere.

We hope that the World Decade for Cultural Development will make for nations' resolves to prevent the erosion of moral and cultural values.

Under the Decade's program, the Soviet Union will be glad to host in Moscow a major international symposium on 'Mankind's Common Heritage and the Third Millennium.'

Our common heritage includes land and sky, seas and oceans, lakes and rivers. It includes everything that has made us the human race.

It includes space, a field of peaceful concerns in the future. We must keep it peaceful.

We know that UNESCO is emphatically for international space research projects under its aegis.

UNESCO could promote a UN world information program by using its own TV and computer facilities. We pledge support with national technical facilities to further the idea of unity for the survival of mankind, the protection and augmentation of its spiritual and ethical values, and greater humanitarian and intellectual cooperation.

UNESCO is drafting a third medium-term plan which is to shape its prospect practically till the end of this millennium. We hail the organization's intention to work, in compliance with its mandate, for peace, development and environmental protection.

We also support UNESCO's emphasis on human rights and efforts against discrimination in any form.

The current boom in communications explains UNESCO's interest in this field. The organization should make for a free circulation of information.

UNESCO should resolutely turn to the issues that concern young people. The organization should enter into an active dialogue with young men and women everywhere. We will do our best to contribute to drafting projects oriented to those who will inherit this planet and peace.

We are reviving many words and notions which enmity and violence have removed from mankind's lexicon. Charity is one of them. UNESCO is right in proposing that charity should be fostered internationally through programs designed to help the destitute. We believe UNESCO was also correct in centering on urbanization issues and selecting the future of cities as the subject of one of its mobilizing projects.

It is precisely at UNESCO that we can do a lot together to overcome lack fo understanding.

Let us remember this, while conducting debates, discussing cooperation projects, and passing resolutions. Let us remember this every day and minute.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

CONSULTANTS

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, recently my friend and distinguished colleague from Arkansas, Senator DAVID PRYOR, chaired an important hearing before the Subcommittee on Federal Services, Post Office, and Civil Service, on which I shall serve. That hearing examined the role played by private consultants to the Environmental Protection Agency in planning and administering Superfund cleanup activities. We heard some disquieting testimony about the extent to which private contractor consultants—some of whom do extensive work for the very industries being regulated—plan and execute public policy without proper accountability and oversight.

The proper role of consultants in Government activity is not, of course, an issue limited to the environmental area. Last year's Pentagon procurement scandal, involving alleged use of insider information by well-placed defense consultants, reminded us of the need for better scrutiny of this form of "shadow government." Senator PRYOR has been in the forefront of such scrutiny, and I am sure my colleagues join me in commending his efforts.

On January 6, 1989, readers of the Los Angeles Times were privileged to read a most thoughtful editorial piece by Senator PRYOR entitled, "Insiders on the Loose—Nobody Knows What All the Government's Consultants Are Doing." I believe Senator PRYOR's observations are interesting and well-taken, and should be available to my colleagues.

Accordingly, I ask unanimous consent that Senator PRYOR's editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INSIDERS ON THE LOOSE—NOBODY KNOWS WHAT ALL THE GOVERNMENT'S CONSULTANTS ARE DOING

(By David Pryor)

When the Justice Department announced Operation Ill Wind last June, it was as if a hurricane had suddenly struck the entire defense-procurement system.

The revelations concerning potential criminal behavior on the part of some well-connected defense consultants brought the usually behind-the-scenes world of consulting out into the open. Just as the eye of a hurricane provides a brief respite, the secrecy of the grand-jury process has thrown a calmness over the events of the scandal over procurement. It is appropriate then, in this time of relative calm, to take a systematic look at the role that consultants play in our government.

Since 1978, when President Jimmy Carter asked for a short list of all consultants who were working for the federal government, we have been aware of an abysmal lack of information on the government's use of such people. We do not know the answers to such basic questions as how many consultants work for the government, how much we pay them (estimates have ranged from $243 million a year to $26 billion a year), what work they are doing, or whether anyone has checked to see if federal workers could have done the job.

Yet, increasingly, the basic work of government has been delegated to a work force that is nowhere to be found on the official organization charts—a shadow government.

It is not my contention that this shadow government is totally corrupt. It is my contention that Congress, the press and the public should have easy access to the "real organizational charts" of our federal agencies. Only when we have information on the numbers of consultants and the actual work that they are performing can we then have a true picture of our government.

We found in the past that the Department of Energy employed a contractor to help plan our nation's response to future oil shortages. This same contractor also worked for the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. A federal worker would not be allowed to maintain this potential conflict of interest. But in the shadow of government the agencies often don't know what private-sector (or in this case what international) interests the consultants or contractors have.

At the Department of Defense, we recently found that a consulting organization had largely written the department's directive that established the Pentagon's policy on consultants.

In 1981 the Department of Defense testified that it had 31,000 contractors performing consulting services, studies, management and professional services. The government did not know in 1981, and the government still does not fully know in 1989, what potential conflicts of interests exist between the work that these individuals do for the government and the work that they do for the private sector.

In the defense-procurement scandal we have seen that private contractors themselves have the resources and the incentive to hire their own private consultants. The actual work performed by these private-sector consultants and their relationship to the government is shrouded in the same shadow as the government's own consultants and contractors.

It is all too difficult to find the most basic data on the government's private work force. But at least when a consultant is hired by the government some record should exist. This new level in the private bureaucracy, where consultants hire consultants, defies even the most basic opportunity for scrutiny. Though tax dollars might (it is hard to say with certainty) be paying these consultants to consultants, neither Congress nor the public can find out what these people are actually doing.

We are becoming a nation of insiders and outsiders, not public officials and citizens. On the one hand, the public is unaware of the decisions and actions made by this unelected bureaucracy. On the other hand, those who happen to be plugged into this shadow government have privileged access to government information. when unscrupulous individuals trade on this government information and are caught, we have a scandal. I deplore this alleged example of profiteering off one's privileged access to information. Until we have total disclosure, however, we simply don't know the extent of the procurement problems.

We need our own glasnost in this area. Unless we have comprehensive disclosure of the private-sector connections of persons hired as government consultants or contractors, then neither Congress, the citizens nor indeed the majority of the federal work force can have complete trust that we are receiving unbiased and untainted advice. Furthermore, as far as defense contracting is concerned, only through disclosure will we know if major procurement decisions (that is, weapon systems) are being made based on reasons of national security and not based on who had the best inside information. While the disclosure of who is doing what for the federal government and who his private-sector clients are will not solve all the defense-procurement problems, this openness will go a long way toward restoring confidence in our system.

I am somewhat encouraged by the Pentagon's recent announcement that it no longer opposes the registration of consultants. With the Defense Department's support, perhaps the congressionally mandated requirement for the Administration to formulate a consultant registration proposal will result in some meaningful procurement reform. Unfortunately, the legislation gives the incoming Bush Administration the option of deciding whether or not to actually use the registration proposal.

Yet when the grand-jury indictments start the Operation Ill Wind hurricane blowing again, I hope that the new Administration will seize the concept of consultant registration as a way of restoring taxpayer confidence in a troubled system.

RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION REFORM

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, for a number of years, I have been advocating legislation to improve the implementation of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980. In the Staggers Act, Congress deregulated rail transportation where shippers have competitive alternatives but it established important safeguards for captive shippers who lack such alternatives.

While the Staggers Act produced many benefits, implementation of the safeguards for captive shippers was not satisfactory. In West Virginia and in many other States we are heavily dependent on railroad transportation and have many captive shippers. Without competition, such shippers face the prospect of monopoly rates unless they can rely on the checks and balances afforded by Federal law. Unfair rail rates can create economic trouble. In West Virginia and elsewhere, for example, excessive rates for shipping coal can mean coal contracts lost to foreign competitors and higher electricity rates.

Efforts to improve implementation of the Staggers Act have focused on the need for more streamlined Interstate Commerce Commission procedures and fair standards that will provide captive shippers with the safeguards to which they are entitled. One of the issuers in this debate which I have emphasized because of its importance has been the proper calculation of the rail cost index. Since that index insulates railroad rates from captive shipper challenge, many of us have argued that, in order to be fair, the index must be adjusted for railroad productivity improvements.

The ICC is currently conducting a rulemaking on adjusting the cost index for productivity, and I am pleased to say that the Commission has tentatively decided to make a productivity adjustment. Because of the importance of the issue, I have submitted a statement to the ICC on the matter and ask unanimous consent that a copy of the statement be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, regulatory issues can be complicated and difficult to understand, but they have a pocketbook impact on the public that we must not ignore. In the months ahead, I intend to keep reminding my colleagues of the real world importance of the sometimes arcane issues involving our railroad laws. I am cautiously optimistic that we are getting back on the right track.

EXHIBIT 1

BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

(In the matter of: Railroad cost recovery procedures—productivity adjustment, Ex Parte No. 290 (Sub-No. 4))

STATEMENT OF JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER IV, U.S. SENATOR, FEBRUARY 22, 1989

As a Senator representing the state of West Virginia, I believe it is important for me to comment on the Interstate Commerce Commission's consideration of whether to adjust the Rail Cost Adjustment Factor (RCAF) for improvements in railroad productivity.

West Virginia—known, for good reason, as the Mountain State—is heavily dependent on railroad transportation. Many of our shippers, particularly coal companies, are captive shippers. That is, they have access to a single railroad and have no viable transportation alternative. Without competition, such shippers face the prospect of monopoly rates unless they can rely on the checks and balances afforded by federal law. Unfair rail rates can create trouble for our economy in coal contracts lost to foreign rivals and higher electricity rates. Captive shippers exist in many states and face similar problems. This includes, for example, many of the grain shippers of the farm belt.

Foremost among the checks and balances provided by federal law to guard against monopoly rates is the right of captive shippers to challenge unreasonable rail rates at the Interstate Commerce Commission. However, as the Commission explains in its November 14, 1988 decision on the RCAF, the law provides that rate increases that track the increases in the RCAF index are "insulated from shipper protest." (ICC decision, page 1) The idea behind this, as I understand it, is that rates should be allowed to rise without challenge as costs rise, because a rate increase that covers costs is considered reasonable. The use of a cost index avoids the need for the elaborate and burdensome proceedings that previously were used for general rate increases. (ICC decision, note 2)

Fair enough. But if the RCAF index is going to play the important role of sheltering rate increases from challenge by captive shippers, then how that index is constructed becomes crucial. As the Commission points out, for years "many shippers have argued that railroad productivity gains should be factored into the compilation of the RCAF index." (ICC decision, p. 1) The reasoning is this: If railroad costs increase, but productivity also increases by the same amount, the cost of providing a given service does not rise. Consequently, the rate level that is insulated from captive shipper challenge should not rise. Of course, this does not mean the railroad cannot charge above the level insulated by the RCAF—the RCAF is no cap on rates. It just means that a rate above the RCAF level is not automatically and forever immune from challenge. A captive shipper can challenge such a rate, but the shipper will prevail only if the rate is unreasonable.

In its decision proposing to adopt a productivity adjustment to the RCAF, the Commission succinctly explained its rationale. The Commission observed that the adjustment "will insure that rail carriers cannot use the procedural protections of the RCAF process to avoid scrutiny of potentially excessive rates in captive markets." (ICC decision, p. 3) The Commission also tentatively concluded that the methodology employed should be that developed by its independent contractor, Reebie Associates. (ICC decision, p. 2) I submit this statement in support of adoption by the Commission of a productivity adjustment and use by the Commission of the Reebie methodology.

A Commission decision to adopt an appropriate productivity adjustment to the RCAF would be, I believe, well founded and is badly needed. The Railroad Accounting Principles Board stated that it believed "that a productivity adjustment is necessary for the RCAF to measure cost changes accurately." (RAPB Final Report, Vol. II, p. 90. See also Railroad Cost Recovery Procedures, 3 I.C.C. 2d 60, 65 (1986)) The Commission observes, in something of an understatment, that since 1980 railroad "productivity gains have been achieved." (ICC decision, p. 3) In fact, I understand that such gains have been substantial. Across the whole spectrum of the business, railroads have enhanced productivity and made substantial investments in upgrading their physical plant. For the most part, however, the improved productivity these steps have made possible has not been reflected in the RCAF. The cumulative impact of eight years of such gains means that the RCAF is now at serious odds with actual costs.

Various objections to implementation of productivity adjustment to the RCAF, including the concern that incentivies to innovate not be adversely affected, were answered by the Railroad Accounting Principles Board report. (RAPB Final Report, Vol. II, pp. 89-92) Let me only emphasize what is widely acknowledged—that most railroad traffic is deregulated because it is disciplined by a reliable and effective incentive to innovate, namely competition. Moreover, my understanding is that the Reebie methodology carefully preserves incentives to innovate. For example, since productivity improvements under the proposed methodology will be applied on a delayed basis, railroads will be able to retain productivity gains initially under the RCAF. In this respect, the Reebie approach imitates the competitive market. In the competitive marketplace in which most American business functions, a firm innovates without a permanent guarantee that it will keep the fruits of productivity gains. It constantly innovates to get or keep an edge on the competition, knowing that it may be to keep the fruits of any particular productivity improvement only for a limited time. The preservation of incentives for innovation under the Reebie methodology makes unnecessary and excessive an additional sharing of productivity between railroads and shippers as suggested by some in the present proceeding.

The decision in this proceeding is, of course, for the judgment of the Commission. Given the importance of the decision, however, to my own state and to our national transportation policy, I appreciate this opportunity to comment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER IV.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONDEMNATION OF THREATS AGAINST THE AUTHOR AND PUBLISHERS OF "SATANIC VERSES"

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it be held at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, might I, by way of explanation, say that this is a resolution which we hope will win the support of both sides of the aisle. It is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution concerning the threats which the Ayatollah Khomeini has directed against an Indian-born author and the employees of his American publisher.

It was our hope that we might have voted on this resolution by now. Slightly different versions were prepared on both sides of the aisle. Senator PELL, Senator SANFORD, and Senator GRAHAM have joined me in sponsoring this version. Mr. WALLOP would like to introduce a measure, too. He is necessarily engaged in the Armed Services Committee and cannot be here at the moment. We hope that this might be resolved before the end of the day.

But in the event that it may not be possible, I wish to have the RECORD note that the Senate is concerned and will make its views known, if not today then in our next regular session.

When the leader of a foreign nation orders the assassination of the citizen of another, the Senate cannot stand silent. Our response must be clear and immediate. To paraphrase the 19th century British Prime Minister W.E. Gladstone, the resources of civilization in dealing with its enemies are not exhausted. Indeed they have as yet hardly been displayed.

Egyptian author Naguib Mahfouz, last year's Nobel laureate in literature, spoke for us all when he said of the Ayatollah Khomeini's threat to murder Salman Rushdie: "I consider it intellectual terrorism." I will not comment on the quality of the book. The quality of the book is not the issue. The issue is that any attempt to suppress any book by violent intimidation is a threat to intellectual freedom that cannot be allowed to succeed.

"Satanic Verses" has been banned in India, Pakistan, and Egypt. In Great Britain its author hides in fear. In the United States, the offices of Viking, the book's American publisher, have been evacuated several times following bomb threats.

Outrage is certainly in order, though it must be tempered with a few words of caution. Mr. Rushdie is, indeed, fortunate to be living in Western Europe. Vaclav Havel, the Czech author who was sentenced to 9 months in prison on Tuesday for offending the Czech state was not as fortunate. Nor were the Czech, Polish, Russian, and Hungarian writers whose works cannot yet and may never be read because totalitarian regimes erased them from the world's culture. Their persecutors were not fanatics. They are not as easily caricatured as the Ayatollah.

But as a challenge to international law and to freedom of thought, the threat against Mr. Rushdie and his publishers cannot pass without condemnation. Our attitude, this Senator's attitude, was summed up in an ad placed in the New York Times on Wednesday by the Association of American Publishers, the American Booksellers Association, and the American Library Association. It read:

Free people write books.
Free people publish books.
Free people sell books.
Free people buy books.
Free people read books.

Mr. President, a free people will not be intimidated into abandoning their freedom by the threatening voice of a second-rate dictator and a religious zealot.

We do not speak in any disapprobation of religious zeal. It is religious intolerance which brings us to the floor at this moment.

Mr. President, I would like it to be understood that we very much approve of our President's statements in this matter and say once again that the resources of civilization have not been exhausted. We would put those who now threaten our civilization on notice that in their actions, they submit themselves to a yet greater threat from vastly greater powers, vastly more protective of what has created this civilization.

We did not reach the point of freedom we enjoy today because we were unwilling to defend that freedom. And we will not give it up. We will not allow ourselves to be intimidated by those who have never known freedom and would reject it if they did.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for its courteous attention.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I commend the actions of the European Economic Community nations in recalling their diplomatic personnel and suspending official visits with the regime of the Ayatollah Khomeini in Iran. These actions are a measured and reasonable response to the death threats made against Salman Rushdie. President Bush also deserves praise for his strong condemnation of Khomeini's acts.

Openly avowed threats of assassination have no place in the world community. They cannot be tolerated in a pluralistic world, and to deny them legitimacy is the only appropriate response.

The Islamic religion, one of the world's great faiths, the second largest by number of adherents in the world, the youngest of the religious beliefs that is heir to the traditions venerated by Jewish and Christian people, does not authorize contract murder or bounty hunting.

The world's Islamic people honor the books of what we call the Old and New Testaments, with their repeated proscriptions against killing. Their own holy book, the Koran, is equally explicit.

Indeed, in the particular case of the Ayatollah's death threat against a fellow Moslem, Salman Rushdie, there is a direct injunction: "Whoso slayeth a believer of set purpose, his reward is Hell forever" (Surah IV, 93).

The death threat and the reward offered for the killing of this man, therefore, offend against Islam as a matter of faith, no less than they offend against Judaism or Christianity.

It is important for Americans to remember that the call for the author's death is not the universal reaction of the Moslem world. Many members of that faith, while deeply offended by Rushdie's bock, do not support the Ayatollah's call for his murder.

Ayatollah Khomeini's actions are simply unacceptable within the context of tolerance that has traditionally characterized Islam or within the context of norms and principles broadly shared by the international community.

In the spirit of the American tradition of honoring freedom of conscience and thought, our Nation can understand the anger and frustration of the members of a great faith, Islam, against a book that seems to mock it.

We respect the feelings of those who believe their faith has been blasphemed. We recognize the indignation of a people who too often see their faith scorned or misunderstood by a Western world that demands respect for its own beliefs.

We welcome the efforts of Moslem people who share our respect for human life to make clear that the Islamic faith looks with dismay on assassination, as do all civilized peoples.

People of good will, regardless of religious faith, should not let one man sway them from the injunctions to brotherhood that are common to all faiths. We Americans should set the example, drawn from our own struggles to accommodate diversity in practice and belief.

We reaffirm both our deep respect for all forms of religion and our belief that freedom of expression is a fundamental individual right that must be vigilently protected by the international community.

We join in standing firmly behind President Bush in his unequivocal condemnation of the Ayatollah's threats.

This is the purpose of the resolution before us. It is a purpose which I believe all Americans can and do support.

I believe that our words join a growing chorus of voices worldwide united in support of the right of free expression and the condemnation of violence against individuals who exercise that right.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I join in the concern that has been so widely expressed about threats against the writer Salman Rushdie for his recently published book, "Satanic Verses." On February 22, in Boston, New York,

Washington, and other cities there were public meetings at which writers and scholars joined to uphold Mr. Rushdie's freedom to publish, and to condemn the threats against his life that have been uttered by the Ayatollah Khomeini.

Of those who spoke in support of Salman Rushdie, none was more eloquent than Christopher Hitchens, columnist for the Nation magazine in New York and for the New Statesman in London. Mr. Hitchens was to have introduced Salman Rushdie at a program in Berkeley, CA, this week. The program, and Mr. Rushdie's entire visit to the United States, had to be canceled in the face of the threats on his and his wife's life.

In his remarks in New York, February 22, Mr. Hitchens applied the English poet Shelley's line about an "old, mad, blind, despised and dying king" to the Ayatollah. He quoted the German Poet, Heinrich Heine, to the effect that "where books are burned, men will be burned."

As reported by the New York Times, Mr. Hitchens received the strongest response for his statement:

> Until the threat of murder by contract is lifted, all authors should declare themselves as co-conspirators. It is time for all of us to don the yellow star and end the hateful isolation of our colleague.

This is a timely and appropriate reminder of the attacks on Jews under Hitler's regime in Germany, which culminated in the Holocaust. Jews were required to wear a yellow star as an emblem of shame. A few non-Jews would wear the star as an expression of sympathy with the Jews and opposition to the Nazi policies. Some of those individuals perished in the madness that followed. We honor their memory by drawing the parallel to the situation before us today.

Mr. President, in our lives we have occasional opportunities to stand in solidarity for that which is right. This is one of those opportunities. I join in this resolution expressing support for the author, and publishers, the booksellers, and the writers and others who are upholding Mr. Salman Rushdie in his right to publish "Satanic Verses." The Ayatollah should understand the very wide concern that his threats against Mr. Rushdie have aroused.

Debate and disagreement there may be. Books may give offense and be sharply criticized. That is part of the discourse of intellectual life.

But threats against the very person of an author cross a line that is so fundamental that they deserve the widest condemnation. I congratulate the Senator from New York for his initiative in bringing forward this resolution and urge its immediate approval. May I add that I congratulate Senator LEAHY on his position in this regard.

NOMINATION OF JOHN TOWER TO BE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate is in the process of performing a duty central to the constitutional responsibilities and powers of this body. Under section 2, clause 2, article II of the Constitution, the President shall appoint public ministers with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Senate has a shared constitutional responsibility with the President to judge the fitness of a person to serve as a Cabinet Secretary and shares the responsibility, as an institution, for the consequent acts and behavior of nominees to whom it gives its consent.

The position of Secretary of Defense is particularly unique, sensitive, and important. The standard of fitness to exercise the responsibilities of that office must be extremely high. The Secretary is in the chain of command, and his decisions, often made on the basis of unforeseen developments, partial information, excruciating time pressures, in the middle of the night, or at any hour of the day, affect the lives of our fighting men and women, the credibility of this Nation, and could affect the fate of other nations as well. These are sometimes grave decisions and a person in the position of Secretary of Defense must possess unfailingly sound judgment, and precise, careful, cogent reasoning powers at all times.

The individual charged with decisions of this gravity must be one of proven, strong self-discipline, mature judgment, unclouded reputation, and demonstrated constancy. He must set an example for our fighting men and women.

At issue as well is a nominee's managerial capability in running the gigantic bureaucracy of the Defense Department, and his ability to resist any temptation, based on past associations, present influences or potential future opportunities. His judgments must not be colored by any consideration other than the most efficient use of our scarce national resources to develop our military systems. Today, in particular, the American people have been treated to inexcusable and seemingly unending abuses of the Defense procurement system. It will take hard-nosed determined and sustained action to clean the system out. Credibility must be restored to the Defense Department for the good of our Nation.

In these two vital benchmarks of fitness—unfailingly sound judgment under circumstances of duress and difficulty, and freedom from conflicting interests and financial pressures—Senator Tower in my judgment falls short of these thresholds. The substantial body of information made available to the Armed Services Committee leads me to question his ability to perform this unusually demanding position under all circumstances, and at any and all times. His acceptance of large sums of money for what appears to be little identifiable productive work, leads me to question his capacity to hold the seductive pressures of vested interests at arms length. Even in the absence of impropriety, the extensive dealings he has recently engaged in with many influential defense contractors gives the appearance—the appearance—that could damage his ability to carry out his responsibilities from the outset.

I reach these conclusions in spite of Senator Tower's experience in this body, and as an official in the arms control field with the previous administration.

John Tower is capable, he is knowledgeable, and he has an extensive background in defense matters.

So there is no question about his capability from that standpoint. There are relatively few people in the country who have the kind of background and experience, long experience, and knowledge that John Tower possesses in this field. But he is not the only person who can fill this position. There are others who can be nominated, who have equally good qualifications in this respect but who will not have the problems that have caused the concerns and the questions raised about this nominee.

This is not an easy vote for me to cast. Senator Tower is a former colleague and he is the President's first choice. And there are those who feel that doubts over a Cabinet nominee should be resolved in favor of the President's preferred choice.

There are those who believe that in the case of Supreme Court nominees, nominees who are to serve for life, perhaps the test should be greater and more should be expected, but that in the case of Cabinet nominees, these individuals working very closely with a President, as they will, we should bend over backward to give the benefit of the doubt to the President.

I do not find any fault with that logic. But in this case, the doubts are too serious, and the post is too vital. Our primary responsibility must be to resolve any doubts, not in favor of the President, but there is a higher level that is required of us—namely, to resolve any doubts in the best interests of the American people and the Nation.

We must not overlook the nominee's problems and subject him to less rigid standards just because he once served in this body.

Passing judgment on someone's fitness for office is always a tough assignment. There is no smoking gun in the FBI reports. But there is enough smoke to cause one to be most uneasy with this nominee for this position.

In the end, each of us must make a personal judgment based on the totality of the information and impressions we have gained in the confirmation process. I cannot support a nomination which sends a message to the American people and to our friends and allies that repeated serious errors of judgment, of self-discipline, of propriety, and of the appearance of lucrative intimacy with many defense industries can be overlooked, on the hope that such failings will not be repeated and will bear on his capacity to discharge his responsibilities.

I have tried to be fair in my efforts to reach the right judgment, and I know that this is an extremely difficult decision for my colleagues to reach, as it has been for me. I have read all of the FBI reports, as have most, if not all, of my colleagues. One has to weigh the evidence and then reach the judgment in his own mind as to the weight of the evidence.

I have done this, and I reach this conclusion after studying the record produced by the FBI and by the careful inquiries that have been conducted by the Armed Services Committee. I want to commend Senator NUNN and Senator WARNER for having conducted what is, in my estimation, a very fair, thorough, careful, painstaking, conscientious inquiry.

It has gone on over a period of many days. I think now the time has come when there will be a decision. So far as I am concerned, I judge former Senator Tower solely as a nominee for this very special post only, and not as a man, not in any other context.

It is painful to reach this conclusion, but I am a little like Vice President Calhoun, when he had to cast the tie-breaking vote on a very important matter that came before the Senate. Apparently, the tie may have been prearranged, but he could not vote "maybe," so he had to make a decision, and he voted.

Therefore, I shall vote no when the time comes in the Senate, if the Senate is to be the final arbiter, and I shall hopefully have the opportunity to cast my vote in committee, not to vote no there, because I want to give the man his day in the full court.

I did this in connection with Mr. Kleindienst some years ago. It was my position that I would vote to report his nomination to the Senate, that the Senate be the final judge. I would vote no there. So in the committee, it would be my choice to vote to report this nomination, but I think the committee ought to showdown and ought not hesitate to send a message to the country as to where it stands. My judgment would be to send the nomination to the Senate with an adverse recommendation. To do otherwise, I think, would be a copout.

Mr. President, I thank the leadership, Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. DOLE, for having kept the Senate in. I do not know whether other Senators are going to speak or not. I appreciate it very much. I hope I have not kept them too long.

ENVIRONMENTAL CONDITIONS IN THE U.S.S.R.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, as we are in the throes of the debate on the nomination of John Tower, certainly that should lead us to be thinking very carefully about our overall relationship with the Soviet Union. We know that our relationship with the Soviets is going to change very dramatically, in part because of extraordinary changes going on within the Soviet Union itself.

We have read a great deal about perestroika, glasnost, changes within the political structure of the Soviet Union. We know that the Soviet Union is in very severe economic problems and, without reform, may fast become a third-rate world economic entity.

We know that the Soviet Union ecologically has major problems within the Soviet empire itself and as a model to the rest of the world. What is less well known is that the Soviet Union is also at this point an ecological disaster zone.

What I would like to do, Mr. President, is to cite a little evidence of this which I think will be of interest to all my colleagues in the Senate, and those in the country who are concerned about our relationship with the Soviets and the kinds of problems they have internally, which must be overcome.

The first are excerpts from an article by Stefan Hedlund, who is the associate professor at the University of Lund in Sweden, after a recent trip to the Soviet Union.

ENVIRONMENTAL RUIN: A SWEDE'S PERSPECTIVE ON THE U.S.S.R.

(Excerpts from an article by Stefan Hedlund)

The destruction of the Soviet environment, particularly in the Central Asian area, has now progressed beyond the point of recovery. The Caspian Sea is dying, the Black Sea is heading for the same fate, and Lake Ladoga, Europe's largest inland sea, is so polluted that it cannot be used even by a planned extension of a paper mill. By the year 2000 Central Asia will be environmentally dead.

As a result of glasnost, horror stories on ongoing environmental destruction began to appear after 1987. To understand the scale of the catastrophe, one must understand the enormous land mass involved, with seemingly unlimited resources of waterpower, forests, and mineral deposits. The main problem, however, is that much of the resources have not been readily available. The land surface has either been too warm or too cold, too wet or too dry, or simply too hilly for rational farm production. Forests, oil and gas are primarily found in Siberia, while Central Asia has the manpower.

In order to "rectify" this unfavorable situation, powerful measures have been taken to "bring nature to its knees." Soviet intellectuals are agreeing that the victory won was nothing less than spectacular. The forests are gone, the rivers are poisoned, farm land has been turned into swamps or salt marsh, and the atmosphere is thick with pollution.

Part of Central Asia consists of the republics of Uzbekistan, Tadzhikistan, Turkmenistan and Kirghizia. The mainstay of this area's ecological system has been the Aral Sea, once the world's fourth largest inland sea with a surface of 66,000 square kilometers. This sea moderated the climate and water cycle of the region: The rivers flowing into the Aral Sea were used to irrigate cotton and rice fields. The Aral Sea is in the process of drying out, rapidly transforming surrounding areas into salt deserts. Tons of salt from the dying Aral Sea is spread by the wind over neighboring areas. Today about a third of the lake has disappeared. The coast line has receded by about 40 to 50 kilometers. Fifty percent of nearby Lake Balkash has dried up.

Soviet Academician Andei Monin writes in the July issue of Novy Mir that while traveling by car some 300 kilometers between the cities of Khiva and Mukus, he saw a white, what appeared to be snow-covered plain stretching to the horizon without a sign of life. The area, once a major irrigated agricultural area, has been transformed into a salt desert. Monin expects the Caspian Sea to meet with the same fate.

The Black Sea is increasingly polluted also. The waters off the famous Crimean resorts are changing into a green soup due to high concentrations of agricultural chemicals such as phosphorous, nitrogen, and potassium. The bottom is devoid of life and the air smells of rotten eggs. There are reports from Odessa that bathing is prohibited and that the drinking water contains typhus and cholera.

North of the Black Sea, in the "black earth" region, environmental destruction is a problem as well. Despite being only 8 percent of the Soviet land surface, the area contains two-thirds of the arable land. The chief editor of the newspaper Znamya, Grigory Baklanov, reports that in the last decade the region has lost 25 to 40 percent of its soil, which is like "cutting out part of the motherland's heart."

The vice chairman of the Soviet Academy of Science, Valentin Koptjug, talks of "unlimited cutting of forests, construction of hydro-power without regard for forests and soil, salt-buildup from irrigation, the desertification of the Aral Sea and the northern part of the Caspian Sea, catastrophic pollution of numerous rivers, and heavy smog over many industrial areas."

Leningrad's drinking water has been contaminated over a long period by amoebic dysentery bacteria. To this should be added recent reports describing the dumping of industrial waste in the river Neva.

The chief editor of Novy Mir, Sergei Zalygin, put it this way: "It is now crystal clear for everyone that we have perhaps five or six years left to us. Then it's over. Then we can talk about perestroika or whatever else we choose. But our resources will be destroyed beyond recovery." The Soviet Ministry for Irrigation compares the problem to the Mongol hordes or the German invasions.

Stefan Hedlund is associate professor at the University of Lund, Sweden.—[Excerpts from an article in the Swedish paper, Dagens Nyheter, 8/27/88. Department of Commerce cable summary).

That was an outside commentary.

An inside one came from the new head of the environment for the Soviet Union, a very distinguished Soviet by the name of Fyodor Morgun, who was recently in the United States and attended the Time magazine conference in Boulder, CO.

Mr. Morgun, who was given the extraordinary responsibility to chair the new committee on nature within the Soviet Union, said the following:

ECOLOGICAL PERESTROIKA

[In January 1988 the Central Committee of the Communist Party and the USSR Council of Ministers adopted a resolution calling for the establishment of a State Committee for Environmental Protection, Goskompriroda. Fyodor Morgun, chairman of the new committee, addressed the 19th Party Conference in June about the country's need for ecological perestroika.]

I would like to talk about some ecological problems. Some 64 million tons of harmful substances are discharged into the atmosphere by industry and even more by automobiles, and the content of these substances in the air exceeds air quality standards in all industrial centers. In 102 towns and cities with populations of fifty thousand, the air pollution level is frequently ten times the permitted level.

Water quality is deteriorating nearly everywhere, but particularly in the rivers of Western Siberia, the Ob and the Irtysh, where the concentration of oil products is twenty times the permitted level. Water quality in the Volga, Dnepr, Don, Ural, Kura, Amur, Syrdaria, Amudria has sharply deteriorated. Unless serious measures are taken immediately, water in some parts of the basins of these rivers will very soon be unfit to drink and use for irrigation. Seas are becoming polluted: the phenol concentration in the Caspian is nine times the permitted level. The Aral Sea is an ecological disaster area. The environmental conditions for nearly a million people in Karakalpakia and many parts of Kazakhstan and Turkmenia have become extremely bad.

Ill-considered chemicalization is especially damaging to nature today. Comrade chemists, slow down your current expansion, take a rest, let people breathe normal air, let the rivers and soils cleanse themselves of all the rubbish. Propose ecologically clean and economically advantageous, waste free projects, and then your request for the construction of new plants will be welcomed where new plants are not being waved away like so many pesky flies.

Rather than being applied properly to our soil, chemical fertilizers are being thrown around. But in nature nothing is lost. They run off into reservoirs and then turn up in the waters of the Volga, Dnepr, Don and other rivers in the form of blue-green algae and other pollutants that are harmful to every living thing.

In the field of ecology, restructuring is not just necessary, it is unavoidable. It can be said that for an entire year, our Party and professional propaganda and science took an intolerably passive attitude toward ecology. Behind every encroachment on nature and threat to people's health are specific academicians and scientists, planning institutes and construction workers and members of state commissions who have given their blessings to projects that destroy nature.

ENERGY EFFICIENCY: A KEY TO SOVIET REFORM

(Excerpts from a proposal on US-Soviet cooperation in resource efficiency by Hal Harvey and Armory Lovins)

Perhaps the most important single technical element in the success of perestroika is the efficient use of energy. Efficiency frees scarce domestic resources, such as capital and technical skills, for more productive reinvestment in modernizing agriculture and industry. At the same time, it frees oil and gas for export to earn hard currency to buy foreign technologies for the same purpose. The current Soviet leadership fully grasps this connection: General Secretary Gorbachev last year set the world's most ambitious national goal for energy efficiency, namely using savings to meet 75-80% of the USSR's needs for increased energy services.

The Soviet economy is arguably the least energy-efficient, and the least adaptive to post-1973 world market conditions, of any in the world. According to the Worldwatch Institute's State of the World 1987, for example, in 1983 the energy intensity of the Soviet economy was two-thirds higher than that of the United States, and 3.8 times that of Sweden or France. In recent years, for example, Soviet coal-mining has resulted in mining more coal but getting less energy out of it, simply because the grade of the coal has fallen faster than the tonnage has increased. Some principal Eastern coals are of such low grade that no one has ever figured out a reliable way to burn them.

Improving Soviet energy efficiency is important to all countries for three reasons. First, the alternative to efficiency is continued stagnation, instability, or worse. Everyone has a security stake in the success of Soviet internal reforms. Second, depletion of anyone's resources is ultimately, in a global economy, depletion of everyone's resources. Third, the flip side of depletion is pollution: Soviet inefficiency carries profound environmental consequences for the world.

If perestroika proceeded without dramatic gains in energy efficiency, the resulting economic growth would surely require massive infusions of additional energy from some combination of three sources, none of them attractive to either the Soviets or anyone else: increased oil imports, increased burning of dirty, low-grade coal and accelerated expansion of nuclear power. The formidable constraints on all three approaches are at the front of Soviet planners' minds. Hard currency remains precious. Concern about acid rain and CO_2 is burgeoning. Construction at two or three Soviet nuclear plants has recently been suspended due to public protest. The time could not be riper for a sound, affordable alternative to energy sources.

(Hal Harvey is Director of the Security Program and Armory Lovins, Vice President and Research Director at Rocky Mountain Institute in Snowmass, Colorado.)

The economic problems that come along with this, Mr. President, are also very clear. There is no question but that the Soviet Union has economic challenges, and the cost of this is going to be very severe indeed.

The Soviets recognize this, and it is appropriate for us as well to recognize this reality and the problems that this is creating for the Soviet Union.

Let me close, if I might, with a quote from Mr. Shevardnadze, the Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, recognizing this challenge and recognizing the job that our countries and other industrialized nations around the world have to do together. This statement from Mr. Shevardnadze:

NO BORDERS HAS THE BIOSPHERE

(Excerpts from Eduard Shevardnadze's 1988 speech to the UN General Assembly)

Faced with the threat of environmental catastrophe, the dividing lines of the bipolar ideological world are receding. The biosphere recognizes no division into blocs, alliances or systems. All share the same climatic system and no one is in a position to build his own isolated and independent line of environmental defense.

Perhaps for the first time we have seen the stark reality of the threat to our environment—a second front fast approaching and gaining an urgency equal to that of the nuclear and space threat. For the first time we have clearly realized that in the absence of any global control, progress is turning into a global aggression against the very foundations of life on earth. For the first time we have understood clearly what earlier we only guessed: that the traditional view of national security based primarily on military means of defense is now totally obsolete and must be urgently revised.

Divisions and redivisions of the world into spheres of influence are historically pointless. Today, we all have only one sphere of influence—our planet. It will perish if our influence on the course of development is divided and fragmented into blocs and systems. Therefore the Soviet leadership has tried to reinterpret more profoundly the idea, originally inherent in Marxism, of interrelationship between class and universal human values, according to priority to the interests shared by all nations.

If the term "great powers" is to be retained at all, it is only in the sense of great responsibility to the rest of the world.

(Eduard Shevardnadze is Foreign Minister of the USSR. [News and Views from the Soviet Union, 9/28/88])

Mr. President, it is sobering to hear this information about the Soviet Union, sobering in terms of the problems that they have and sobering as that might be a harbinger for elsewhere in the industrialized world.

I bring it up at this point, Mr. President, at the time we are about to go into the vote on John Tower, only because that is a time when once again we ought to be focusing on our relationships with the Soviet Union, the fact that the world is changing rapidly and in my belief, the No. 1 issue may no longer be our military confrontation but rather the joint responsibilities we have together to save this globe.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

IN PRAISE OF STUART SYMINGTON

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on January 10, 1989, hundreds of friends of Stuart Symington gathered beneath the soaring arches of Washington's National Cathedral to pay tribute to the man who gave so much of himself to that institution and who devoted much of his life to the work of the U.S. Senate.

Few men, in the 200 years of our Nation's history, have compiled such a record of distinctive achievements. He brought to the U.S. Senate ability, courage, integrity, and a measure of experience rarely found in one person. He was a soldier, several times a corporation president, and six times a Presidential appointee to head various Federal agencies. He capped his career in the executive branch as the first Secretary of the U.S. Air Force. After completing this remarkable career in business and Government, Stuart went on to 24 years of distinguished service in the Senate form the State of Missouri.

Twice he sought his party's nomination for President of the United States, and for all of his life he brought wisdom and insight to the administration of the Government of the United States. While his family, his friends, his fellow Missourians, his fellow Senators, and Americans throughout the country will miss this giant of a man, the memory of his achievements lives as a part of this institution and as a part of our Nation's history.

I was honored to be asked to pay tribute to Stuart Symington at the memorial service held at the National Cathedral, along with his son, the Honorable James W. Symington, the Honorable David Acheson, and the Honorable Clark Clifford. I ask unanimous consent that the eulogies delivered at that service be printed in the RECORD following these remarks and that following the eulogies, there be printed a number of editorial tributes from newspapers throughout the country who recognized the contributions of this man from Missouri. I also ask that there be printed in the RECORD the "Legislative History of Senator Stuart Symington," which was prepared in his last year of service in the Senate.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF JAMES W. SYMINGTON AT SERVICES FOR SENATOR STUART SYMINGTON, WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL, JANUARY 10, 1989

On behalf of his beloved wife Nancy, my brother Stuart, and all the families united by my father's life I embrace you and thank you for coming today to share in this farewell salute. In St. Paul's Cathedral is the epitaph of its great architect, Christopher Wren. It reads, "If you seek my monument, look about you." My father might well say the same, not of this glorious cathedral, per se, though he served it well, but the people in it—loving friends—the truest monument to any life.

Born 87 years ago, he came with the century, and in every walk, or rather giant stride of that life gave back to his country the best his country could produce. He was graceful in manner, keen in competition, resourceful in business, caring and just to laboring men and women, compassionate and fair to minorities and the less fortunate, and ever so proud of his peers and colleagues in the Air Force, the Senate, and the wide worlds of public and private endeavor.

Formidable in a fight, philosophic in the outcome, forgiving of his adversary, but most of all devoted to each and every friend, his joy was in their achievement more than his own. Of the Air Force's Tooey Spaatz, Norstad, Vandenberg and that whole Pantheon of heroes, "Best people I ever worked with." "Never could have made it to the Senate, boys, without Jim Meredith." "Couldn't have done the job without Stanley Fike." "You should have seen how Bob and Dolores at the air base in Alaska made those tough, young soldiers laugh and cry on Christmas Eve." "You know, of all Musial's records, one that isn't written down—never thrown out of a game." "A call was a call." "Your darling mother was a saint." "Dearest Nancy saved my life." "Now let me tell you about Clifford."

Well, Dad, there must have been something about you that attracted all these stars. What was it? The eyes? What the journalists called, "the look of the eagles"? It's the same look in all the old photos. The judgmental infant, the solemn tow head with bangs, the eleven year old paperboy who emerged from the 1912 Democratic convention in Baltimore exclaiming, as reported, "It's Woodrow Wilson unanimously", the 17 year old lieutenant of field artillery, the impatient industrialist, the Air Force Secretary, the Senator, the grandfather. Those constant blue eyes were windows to a light that burned to be seen and felt, and not eclipsed. He was tall and built to move. But as Emerson said of Hercules, he needed no contest. He conquered where he stood.

At this point he is undoubtedly standing up there looking down, and saying, "Make it short, Jim, these are busy people." My friend John Walker has a long day ahead, and anyway, I want to hear Dave, Fritz and Clark. By the way, thank them for me." Well, Pa, I'm used to the five minute rule, and in your presence the 10 second rule, but reflection is the order of this day.

So, first a few other illustrative strictures. Chronologically: Sit up. Hit those books. Don't drop your racquet head, swing through—get that math down. Be on time. You can't learn what you already know, the greatest fool is the fool who fools himself. The greatest thrill in politics is to make a friend out of an enemy. There's nothing older than yesterday's newspaper.

Whence these principles and perceptions? What confluence of genes and experience produced them? His great grandpa quarried the corner stone of the Washington Monument. His granddad was a captain in the army of Northern Virginia and went up the hill at Gettysburg. His father abandoned a low-paid professorship in romance languages to study law and become a judge in his hometown of Baltimore. His mother campaigned for women's suffrage, and ran a shelter for homeless black families.

Stuart Symington was a southerner, with that admixture of charm, remembered pain, and lofty spirit that carried the ramparts of Northern institutions and national respect. A Missourian by choice, he brought to government a "show me" mindset as well as a concept of public service that stands like a Doric column against the grey Washington sky. And with that look of the eagles he saw beyond most—and lived to see much that he'd foreseen. Western democracies ill prepared to meet a ruthless enemy, a separate and more effective air arm and an academy to nourish it, a faulted and futile war in Asia, the debts and deficits of an unbalanced economy, a brighter future for Missouri, and a changing world where hope could one day outpace fear.

In 1946 as my brother and I headed for college, he counselled, "Take Russian. We'll either be fighting or doing business with them in the next half century." Like the Spartan at Thermopylae his wounds were all in front. And honorably earned in just causes—"I'm not afraid of you", he said to Joe McCarthy. "I believe you", he said to Annie Lee Moss. Yet he appeared to stand above the very conflicts that engaged his energies, in a way that friend and foe alike considered him trustworthy. True of Harry, Ike, Jack, Lyndon, Jerry Ford and all his colleagues on both sides of the aisle. Yet the essence of Stuart Symington, what was it?

"The best portion of man's life," wrote Wordsworth, "is his little, nameless, unremembered acts of kindness and of love." But my father's are remembered. For I've read them in your letters and in your faces. As Longfellow said,

When a great man dies
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

So to the well-intentioned gentleman who observed, it must be tough for you and your brother, living in your father's shadow, I say, "Correction, Sir. We live as we always have, and always will, not in his shadow, but his light.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR W. STUART SYMINGTON, REMARKS OF DAVID C. ACHESON, WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL, JANUARY 10, 1989

Only a few people are blessed with a clear perception of fundamental values and the ability to protect them in a simple and forceful way. Those few people are a national resource, and Stuart Symington was one of them.

I inherited from my father an admiration for Stuart, and soon knew him better as my friend Jim's father. Later we became friends in a different setting, when Stuart was President of the National Cathedral Association. As his successor at the NCA I had many occasions to talk to him and to see his deep imprint on the constituency of the Washington Cathedral. His attractive and forceful personality symbolized and inspired a truly national association for this Cathedral. He had a way of turning sober and mundane work into fun, a faculty that made for high morale and a devoted following. He made one work, with a light and gracious hand, to be sure, but he made one work.

Stuart used to say that Washington had a political "Hill" where, granting the best of intentions, standards sometimes fell a but short. Official Washington, he said, should have another and different hill, one that would hold out a standard to remind us how things ought to be. He wanted that other hill to be this Cathedral. He had the best possible credentials to convey that message.

Stuart's life reflected themes that were simple and powerful, such as personal integrity, loyalty both up and down, service, patriotism, leadership from the front line in good times and bad, for he was no summer soldier. The essence of his style was the projection of those values with energy and impact. This style energized other people to turn out and work. At the Cathedral, Stuart never presumed to persuade his workers that they were enlisted in the Lord's work. To them, if Stuart was for it, that was enough, so contagious and compelling was his example.

Many different communities have felt the force of that example: the national security community, the Senate, his adopted state, the Washington Cathedral and his countless friends. That example may well be his most lasting public service. It has touched each of us in an unforgettable way.

REMARKS OF SENATOR ERNEST F. HOLLINGS AT SERVICES FOR SENATOR STUART SYMINGTON, WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL, JANUARY 10, 1989

Stuart Symington, a leader of this church, loyal to his family, was above all a unique public servant. Stuart Symington ran a government bureau—the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—and believe it not, made a profit. While other Senators cringed, he was the Senator that told Joe McCarthy, "I am not afraid of anything about you or anything you have got to say, anytime, any place, anywhere." Six times he was appointed by the President to executive posts in the government and six times he was unanimously confirmed by every Democate and every Republican Senator. He was the first Secretary of the Air Force. The only Senator from Missouri elected four times. The only member of the United States Senate in its history to serve simultaneously on the Armed Services Committee, the Foreign Relations Committee, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. He was a Senator's Senator, a Senator for all reasons.

I had the privilege of practicing law in the early 60's with Stuart Symington, Jr. so I had the pleasure of knowing Senator Symington before I came to the Senate over 22 years ago. He was my mentor, my ideal. I campaigned for him in the boot heel section of Missouri and traveled with him on that fateful trip to Eastern Europe in 1972 when he came down with the flu and his dear Evie broke her health caring for him so that he could complete the trip. And I visited with him and his Nancy at Del Ray, Florida. Most revealing was my regular contract with Stu during the 10 years that we served together on the Democratic Policy Committee. It is there the Senators let their hair down, that you get to know a colleague, that you get to know the country's needs. What this country needs more than a balanced budget is a balanced Senator. Such a Senator was Stuart Symington of Missouri. Barry Goldwater said it best, and I quote: "Stuart Symington knows so much about so many things, it's unfair to this Renaissance public servant to single out a particular forte."

Many Senators would single out his expertise at saving failing businesses, and applying that expertise to failing fiscal policy. It was Stuart Symington who stated, "There has to be a viable economy with a strong dollar."

Others would stress that it was Symington of Missouri who sponsored the first statutory measure to curb the growing danger of nuclear proliferation. It was Stu who stated, "We have to control the atom before it controls us."

It was the Senator from Missouri who counseled in the early days of Vietnam, "We ought to go all out or get out of Vietnam." Applying his studied approach to every problem, Stuart Symington was the member of our body who exposed the secret war in Laos and Cambodia. This dramatic revelation turned the tide of debate in the Senate and started our withdrawal. As a member of Armed Services when first elected, he was a hawk. Later, as a member of Foreign Relations, some charged that he had become a dove—he has switched. It was then that Senator Symington delievered his famous rejoinder, "It isn't that you switch, it's that you learn."

Stu's judgment was balanced from a vast experience—his wise counsel balanced with humor. Referring to the arrogance of a witness, he told the story of a Boston Brahmin seated next to a rabbi at a formal dinner. The member of the old New England family turned to the rabbi and said, "Rabbi, I will have you know my ancestor wrote the Declaration of Independence." And the rabbi replied, "Good enough—I will have you know that my ancestor wrote the Ten Commandments." As a former Secretary in the Pentagon, he would bring us down to earth with the story about his friend Pete Quesada. Returning from the war, landing at Washington National and riding in a taxi past the Pentagon, seeing for the first time the world's largest office building, General Quesada asked, "How many people work in a building like that?" And the taxi driver without batting an eye answered, "About half!"

The other morning when I was called and told that I could have this honor today, a breakfast cereal ad had just appeared on TV with the call, "Breakfast as it is meant to be." I immediately thought of Stuart Symington—United States Senator as one is meant to be.

Over the past two decades, we have witnessed the raise of the "pollstered" public servant, a new breed that practices public service by windsock. At the right hand of this new politician sits a poll-taker who identifies the issues of importance and the popular side on each issue. At the left hand sits a media consultant to help him express that popular view in a 20-second sound bite.

I can assure you—Stuart Symington never tailored his politics to a opinion poll. Winston Churchill once stated: "Nothing is more dangerous than to live in the temperamental atmosphere of a Gallup poll, constantly feeling one's pulse, taking one's temperature. The only duty, the only safe course is to try to do what is right." Stuart Symington did what was right. He knew no dictate save his own conscience, no guide but his own judgment, no purpose but to serve his state, his country, his God!

REMARKS OF CLARK CLIFFORD AT SERVICES FOR SENATOR STUART SYMINGTON, WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL, JANUARY 10, 1989

Stuart Symington was my best friend. In 1938, I was a young lawyer practicing in St. Louis, my home, and he came out there to become president of one of the large companies. We became friends and our friendship flourished so for 50 years we had a bond between us that could have been, perhaps to some extent, the most important one each of us had. By coincidence, we left St. Louis, each of us, during the war. But then resumed our friendship in 1945, when by different roots we each came into the Truman Administration.

Stuart had many admirable qualities; intelligence, charm, grace, good humor, and I can talk about those as I came to learn, as I knew him better, that there was another quality of transcendence importance that he possessed. It was that unique and rare quality of courage. I saw it again and again. It was an important thread that wove through his life. Some examples: when he was 17 years old our country was in the first world war, he decided to leave his family, leave his classmates and embark on a new and even frightening experience. He fibbed a bit about his age and joined the United States Army. It took a good deal of courage. It was a successful venture; he came out later a first lieutenant. When he came out he was to become President of the Emerson Electric Company. It had had a long history of faltering earnings, but even more important, it had a history of the most vicious and venomous labor difficulties between management and employees. He knew all that and many counseled him against it because they said, as a matter of fact, there was no real solution to it. He squared his shoulders and walked right into it and he brought about a transformation of that company. One reason was he put into operation, what was very new and even regarded possibly as socialistic then, he put in a profit sharing plan with the employees. They returned enthusiastically, within a year he had turned the company around and later made such a success of it that President Truman drafted him to come into government.

After he had served in many capacities in the Executive Branch, he finally concluded that period of his life. We had a long talk one evening about what he was going to do. He'd had a number of business offers but that was not an attractive life to him. he had one intriguing offer to become Commissioner of baseball, that caught his attention because he loved the game, but it didn't seem to be what he wanted to do with the rest of his life. He said that he had been visited by a group of Democrats from Missouri and they suggested that he come out and run for the Senate. With my unerring judgement I said, "You'll never make it. You were born in Massachusetts, you were reared in Baltimore, Maryland, you've spent your adult life in New York. Out in Missouri they like their public servants to come from Missouri, they like to feel they are risen from Missouri soil." So I said, "You'll be a carpet bagger out there, Stuart, and I strongly counsel you to look in a different direction." He said, "I'm going to give it a try." He went out and went through the length and breadth of Missouri. He saw thousands of people, he made hundreds of speeches, he won the primary against substantial odds, and then in the election, in the Eisenhower sweep of 1952, he fought against that current and won, and won comfortably. It was really an outstanding illustration of the basic courage of the man.

After reaching the Senate, it's been referred to, he was a member of the committee that went through the Army-McCarthy Hearings. You would have to live in that era to have believed it. It was a period of national paranoia. Senator Joe McCarthy claimed that our government was riddled with communists. He destroyed individuals, he ruined characters, he ruined reputations and finally one day at a meeting on television, Senator Symington said, "I will take no more of this. Senator," he said, "you have a serious problem. If I were you, I would consult a psychiatrist." It was the first real important puncture in the Joe McCarthy balloon and it started in on a precipitous decline which ultimately ended in his total destruction. The position that Stu took was against the feeling of the time. But it was that air of indomitability within him that caused him to ignore that. In the middle 60's our Nation was wrestling with the war in Vietnam. Stuart had supported it at first but then as more and more troops were sent and the war worsened, he became uneasy. He became more uneasy and finally he lost faith in it entirely and even though the great tide of public opinion was strongly in support of the war, he decided to go public with it and he made a public statement and he said the war is a mistake, our national security is not involved, we may not ever prevail under the conditions that exist. The time has come for us to get out. Cries of traitor, treason meant nothing to him because, not only was he courageous but he turned out to be so right.

This is the man we honor today, the man who had that rare quality of binding others to him closely and permanently and a man who saw fit to give his very best efforts to the defense and the honor of his country. I would be remiss if I did not refer to his widow, Nancy. Ten years ago they were married and it proved to be the happiest ten years I believe Stuart Symington ever had. She was affectionate and loving, supportive and sympathetic and stood with him through difficult times day after day. As his physical problems worsened these last years, it seemed to me she stood even taller, always solicitous, always protective, it meant a life for him that she made livable. I am glad to have the public opportunity, in behalf of all of those who loved him, to express our appreciation to Nancy for what she did. I know that our Lord felt kindly toward Stuart Symington, and if during his lifetime our Lord had had a chance to speak to him, I think he might well have spoken in the words our Lord used in 12-Mathew-verse-18 when He said: Here is my servant, whom I have chosen, the one I love and with whom I am pleased. I will send My spirit upon you and he will announce My judgement to the nations. He will persist until he causes justice to triumph and on him all people will put their hope.

STUART SYMINGTON, 4-TERM SENATOR WHO RAN FOR PRESIDENT, DIES AT 87

(By Eric Pace)

Former Senator Stuart Symington, a Missouri Democrat who twice sought the Democratic President nomination and became a leading critic of the Vietnam War, died early yesterday at his home in New Canaan. He was 87 years old and had lived in retirement there since 1978.

Mr. Symington's son Stuart said he died in his sleep after being "ill with angina and weakness of the heart."

Senator Symington was a candidate for the Democratic President nomination in 1956 and 1960. He was a notable adversary of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin at the Army-McCarthy hearings in 1954.

Tall, sandy-haired and square-shouldered, Mr. Symington was an imposing and influential figure in the Senate from 1953 to 1976, serving on both the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees. At first a staunch supporter of large military outlays, he became increasingly critical of military spending and of the war in Vietnam.

OUTSPOKEN ADVOCATE

Announcing that he would retire as Senator at the end of his forth term, he said at a St. Louis news conference in April 1975, "I'm tired of having old men in Government passing laws that force young men to do battle in causes that are not essential to the United States."

He was an outspoken advocate on a multitude of other military issues. As Secretary of the Air Force in the Truman Administration, he championed the building of American air power. After his election to the Senate, he contended heatedly that the Soviet Union was outdoing the United States in the missile race.

TRIBUTE FROM KENNEDY

In 1972 he repeatedly decried "excessive secrecy" in the storage of United States nuclear weapons on foreign soil and said such storage complicated relations with other countries. In the 1970's he was also a prominent opponent of the Grumman F-14 fighter plane.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, said yesterday through a spokesman, Jeff Smith: "Stuart Symington was a great Senator and a great friend whom I learned from, respected and admired throughout our 14 years of service together in the Senate. He was a profound and persuasive voice for both a strong and a responsible national defense, especially in the controversial years following the Vietnam war. Even today, whenever a defense bill is being hotly debated on the Senate floor, all of us who knew him still ask, 'What would Stu Symington have done?' "

In 1960, when Mr. Symington lost the Presidential nomination to John F. Kennedy on the first ballot at the Democratic National Convention in Los Angeles, many said he was "everybody's second choice" for the nomination. It was often said at the convention that he was the most Presidential-looking White House aspirant. Delegates called him a "gentleman candidate" who made nobody angry except the Republicans.

In military issues, his advocacy was forceful and sometimes pungent. In 1972, castigating the Nixon Administration for its secrecy about nuclear weapons outside the country's borders, he said, "Comparable to the problems of an alcoholic in the family, the subject is never mentioned."

SPARRED WITH MC CARTHY

One of Senator Symington's most visible roles was as a member of the Senate Subcommittee on Investigations headed by McCarthy. During the 1954 Army-McCarthy hearings, the two frequently traded insults, with McCarthy calling his Missouri colleague "Sanctimonious Stu." For this part, Senator Symington suggested that McCarthy should see a psychiatrist.

William Stuart Symington, who dropped the first name years later, was born June 26, 1901 in Amherst, Mass. His parents were William Stuart Symington, a professor of Romance languages at Amherst College who became a Baltimore judge, and Emily Haxall Harrison Symington.

The future Senator grew up in Baltimore and, after graduating from secondary school at the age of 17, joined the Army as a private in World War I. He was later commissioned a second lieutenant, but the war ended before he could see action.

He studied at Yale College from 1919 to 1923 but left without a degree and went into business; in 1946, Yale awarded him a bachelor's degree. He became an executive of several companies before rising to be president and chairman of the Emerson Electric Manufacturing Company from 1938 to 1945.

AIR FORCE SECRETARY

Mr. Symington entered Government in 1945 when the new President, his fellow Missourian Harry S. Truman, appointed him chairman of the Surplus Property Board. He later became Assistant Secretary of War for Air and Secretary of the Air Force.

As Air Force Secretary, Mr. Symington championed an expanded Air Force while James Forrestal, then the Defense Secretary and other influential Government defense experts held other views. Mr. Symington liked to ask, "What the hell good is it to be the richest man in the graveyard?" He resigned as Secretary when his views did not prevail in the Truman Administration.

Mr. Symington first won election to the Senate in 1952, defeating a candidate backed by Truman in the Democratic primary and then easily beating the Republican nominee. He was reelected with ease in 1958 and 1964 but by only 37,000 votes in 1970, when he was 69 years old. The Republican candidate was John C. Danforth, the Missouri State Attorney General, who is now a Senator.

After his retirement, he worked on his memoirs and played golf frequently, his son James said, adding, "He was a sportsman all of his life."

Mr. Symington was variously a vice chairman and a director of First American Bankshares and President of the National Cathedral Association in Washington.

Mr. Symington's first wife, the former Evelyn Wadsworth, died in 1972 after 48 years of marriage. In 1978, he married Ann Hemingway Watson.

He is survived by his wife; two sons, James Symington of Washington, a former Congressman from Missouri, and Stuart Symington Jr. of St. Louis; six grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren.

SYMINGTON LAUDED AS BRAVE, DEVOTED

(By Robert L. Koenig)

WASHINGTON.—Former U.S. Sen. Stuart Symington of Missouri was eulogized Tuesday as a public figure of great courage, "a senator's senator" and a Renaissance man who excelled as a businessman, government administrator and legislator.

The praise for Symington rang through the Washington Cathedral, where about 700 people attended a memorial service for him. Those paying their respects included a former president's widow, several former presidential hopefuls, numerous senators and other dignitaries.

Symington, who represented Missouri in the Senate for 24 years and sought the Democratic nomination for president in 1960, died of a heart ailment Dec. 14 at his home in New Canaan, Conn. His remains were interred in a crypt at Washington Cathedral after a funeral service last month attended by family members and close friends.

Clark M. Clifford, a former St. Louisan who called Symington his "best friend," praised Symington on Tuesday as a man who had "the unique and rare quality of courage" in public life.

"I saw it again and again. It was an important thread that wove through his life," said Clifford, a former secretary of defense and a confidante of several Democratic presidents.

Clifford cited Symington's courage in beating the odds to win election as a U.S. senator in 1952; in standing up to then-Sen. Joseph McCarthy in the 1950s when McCarthy was accusing many government officials and public figures of being communists; and in becoming a critic of the Vietnam War in the late 1960s.

"Even though the great tide of public opinion was strongly in support of the (Vietnam) war, he made a public statement and said: "The war is a mistake,'" Clifford said. "Not only was he courageous, but he turned out to be so right."

Clifford, who first met Symington while both men worked in St. Louis in the 1930s, called Symington, "a man who gave his best efforts to the defense and honor of this country."

Symington was appointed in 1947 as the nation's first secretary of the Air Force and served in several other posts in the administration of President Harry S Truman.

Before Symington's government service, he was chief executive officer of Emerson Electric Co. in St. Louis. He represented Missouri in the Senate from 1952 to 1976.

Former U.S. Rep. James W. Symington, now a lawyer in Washington, praised his father in a eulogy as being "formidable in a fight, philosophic in the outcome, forgiving of his adversary—but most of all, devoted to each and every friend."

The late senator's other son, Stuart Symington Jr. of St. Louis, gave a reading from the Bible, a passage that begins: "Let us now praise famous men."

Symington's second wife, the former Ann H. Watson, also attended the memorial service. Other survivors include Symington's brother, Charles H. Symington of St. Louis; six stepchildren; six grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren.

Also giving eulogies at Tuesday's service were U.S. Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, and David C. Acheson, a friend of the Symington family and the son of former Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

Among those attending the service were Lady Bird Johnson, the widow of former President Lyndon B. Johhnson; former Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., who was the Democratic presidential nominee in 1972; Senate Minority leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.; and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who was the Democratic nominee for vice president last year.

Also present were William H. Webster, a former St. Louisan who is director of the Central Intelligence Agency; former Sen. Edmund Muskie, D-Maine, a former Secretary of State who was the Democratic vice presidential nominee in 1968 and later a presidential hopeful; Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.; and Ethel Kennedy, the widow of former Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D-N.Y.

Also attending were Missouri's two senators, John C. Danforth and Christopher S. Bond, both Republicans; Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo.; former Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill.; Paul Kirk, outgoing chairman of the Democratic National Committee; Katharine Graham, chairman of The Washington Post; Paul Warnke, a former high Pentagon official; and True Davis, a Missouri Democrat who ran unsuccessfully for the U.S. Senate in 1968.

STUART SYMINGTON

Few Americans have achieved more than Stuart Symington, who died Tuesday night at his home in New Canaan, Conn. He was a successful businessman, an able government executive and a distinguished senator.

Missourians remember him fondly as their four-term senator, although, curiously, his speech clearly revealed that he was not a Missourian and he had lived and worked here for only seven years when he decided, in 1952, to seek the Democratic nomination for the Senate. His voting record during his 24 years in the Senate placed him unmistakably among the liberals, but he was no doctrinaire ideologue.

For example, like millions of fellow Americans, he began as a strong supporter of the U.S. military effort in Vietnam but gradually came to see that the nation was paying a heavy price in lives and national unity for no clear-cut American interest. From his influential posts on the Armed Services and Foreign Relations committees, Mr. Symington helped lead the fight against American involvement.

Though his name does not evoke a piece of watershed legislation, he played an important part in shaping American defense policy and arms control initiatives. Civil rights advocates had a friend in Stuart Symington, as did organized labor. In the 1950s, when too many were mute, the Missouri senator stood up to Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

Had it not been for Emerson Electric, Mr. Symington would never have represented Missouri in the Senate. In 1938, after several business successes in the East, he was invited to come here to rescue the company, which he did. After World War II, President Truman appointed him to a succession of administrative posts in Washington, including naming him the first secretary of the Air Force. Then, instead of returning to business, he turned to politics.

Well regarded by colleagues in all three of his careers, Stuart Symington brought skill and conviction to his responsibilities in a measure too seldom seen.

STUART SYMINGTON DEAD AT AGE 87

(By Robert Koenig and Jo Mannies)

Former Sen. Stuart Symington, a Democrat who represented Missouri for 24 years and unsuccessfully sought his party's nomination for president in 1960, died in his sleep early Wednesday at the age of 87.

Sen. Symington's death sparked statements of regret from Democrats and Republicans in Missouri and Washington. All lauded him for a "brilliant career" in business and government spanning more than 50 years.

Sen. Symington served as head of Emerson Electric for seven years, beginning in 1938. In 1947, he was appointed the nation's first Secretary of the Air Force by then-President Harry S. Truman.

He served in numerous other posts under Truman before being elected to the U.S. Senate in 1952. He served until he retired in 1976. As a senator, Sen. Symington served on the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees, as well as the Joint House-Senate Economic Committee, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee.

Sen. Symington died at his home in New Canaan, Conn. Relatives said he had suffered from heart failure.

"We were talking every other day about everything under the sun," said his son, James Symington, a lawyer in Washington. "His mind was in perfect condition.

"He had had angina, I spoke with him yesterday (Tuesday). He said he had congestive heart failure. I asked, 'What was that?'" He said, "I'm not sure, but I have to rest a lot."

"We were planning to get together over the holidays. He didn't seem in any urgent condition."

A funeral service for family and closer friends will be held at 3 p.m. Saturday at the Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral in Washington. A memorial service will be at 11 a.m. Jan. 10 in the cathedral. Sen. Symington will be buried in a crypt in the cathedral next to his first wife, Evelyn, who died in 1972.

The family has asked that, in lieu of flowers, contributions be sent to the Stuart Symington Scholarship Fund at the University of Missouri at St. Louis. The fund has been in existence for several years.

Survivors include his second wife, Ann H. Watson; two sons, Stuart Jr. of St. Louis and James W. of Washington; and six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Former Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., a close friend, said Wednesday, "Stuart Symington was a Renaissance man. He could do anything, in any discipline and do it extraordinarily well: business, sports and the executive and legislative branches of the federal government."

Eagleton said he had written weekly to Sen. Symington. Some of Sen. Symington's last letters dealt with his disappointment with the unsuccessful presidential campaign of Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, a Democrat.

Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., who succeeded Sen. Symington in the Senate in 1976, called him "one of the best-known Missourians ever," who had a national reputation and "a distinguished career."

"I think one of his great characteristics was his thoughtfulness for others and for the state of Missouri," said Danforth, who ran unsuccessfully against Sen. Symington in 1970 before winning election to the Senate seat the year Sen. Symington retired.

Danforth said that after the 1976 election Sen. Symington "called me and invited me to Washington to give me his thoughts on the job. It was advice that I took, and it helped me."

In addition, Danforth said Sen. Symington had given him a head start in seniority over 17 other newly elected senators by resigning early (on Dec. 27, 1976) from the Senate seat. "That has always helped me," Danforth said. "It helped me get on the Finance Committee and the Commerce Committee. . . . Every day I serve in the Senate, my work reflects the generosity of Sen. Symington.

"To consider that he did this for someone who had run against him, for someone of the other party, says a lot about the man, about the bigness of the man and about his concern for the state."

The desk that Danforth uses in his Senate office is a gift from Sen. Symington, and Danforth has kept an autographed photo of Sen. Symington on his office wall since 1976. Danforth's parents—Dorothy Danforth and the late Donald Danforth of St. Louis—were contemporaries and acquaintances of Sen. Symington.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Sen. Symington was "a great senator and a great friend whom I learned from, respected and admired throughout our 14 years of service together in the Senate."

Kennedy added: "He was a profound and persuasive voice for both a strong and a responsible national defense, especially in the controversial years following the Vietnam War. Even today, whenever a defense bill is hotly debated on the Senate floor, all of us who knew him still ask: 'What would Stu Symington have done?'"

Missouri Lt. Gov. Harriett Woods described Sen. Symington as someone "who set an example for a generation of politicians."

"He was truly a citizen-politician who left a successful private life to commit himself to the service of his country," Woods said in a statement. "In a time when power and personal advancement sometimes seem to be the order of the day, his standards of personal ethics and commitment to principle was a model for us all."

Sen. Christopher S. Bond, R-Mo., said in a statement that Sen. Symington "made great contributions to the state of Missouri and to the nation through his public service."

Rep. Richard A. Gephardt, D-Mo., said Sen. Symington "was one of my political heroes and dear friends. He was an inspiration to my becoming a public servant."

Gephardt said Sen. Symington "was instrumental in many major projects in St. Louis. His contributions to the people of Missouri and this country are greatly appreciated. He will be truly missed."

Gephardt also said it had been an "honor and privilge" for him to serve as campaign manager for Sen. Symington's re-election in 1970.

Rep. William L. Clay, D-Mo.—the dean of Missouri's congressional delegation—called Sen. Symington "a grand statesman who will forever rank among the most deeply devoted and highly revered elected officials in the history of Missouri politics."

"Stuart Symington was a diplomat, a laborer and a leader among leaders," Clay said. "He was blessed with a grace and a wisdom that brought him the friendship and trust of ordinary citizens and extraordinary world leaders."

Nothing that Sen. Symington had once referred to politics as "the art of persuading people in the right direction," Clay observed: "By this definition, Stuart Symington was among the most gifted and talented artists who ever served in the U.S. Congress."

Former Sen. William Fulbright, a Democrat from Arkansas who used to chair the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called Sen. Symington "a distinguished senator."

Fulbright, 83 was reached by telephone at his vacation home in Florida. He said Sen. Symington was a good friend for many years and used to play tennis with him in Washington. "Stu Symington was a very agreeable fellow, with a wonderful approach to life," he said.

Fulbright, who was one of the most vocal opponents of the Vietnam War, said he was impressed that Sen. Symington had moved from being a hawk on Vietman in the early 1960s to expressing serious reservations about the conflict in the late 1960s.

"You have to respect a man who can evolve like that. It takes political courage," said Fulbright, who was defeated in 1974 in part because of his controversial stand against the Vietnam War and his positions on other issues of foreign policy.

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., called Sen. Symington "a class act" who made "a tremendous contribution to the nation. In a sense, he was an aristocrat, but one who fought for working men and women."

Simon noted that Sen. Symington "came within a hair of being named the vice presidential nominee under John Kennedy and he would have been a superb president if he had emerged in that role."

Rep. Jack Buechner, R-Mo., said Sen. Symington was "a man with vision, and he'll be missed. You have to admire his dedication to principle."

Rep. Bill Emerson, R-Mo., said Sen. Symington "will be remembered for the dignity, independence and integrity that he brought to all the tasks he was called upon to undertake."

CHRONOLOGY

STUART SYMINGTON: PRAGMATIST, EXECUTIVE, STATESMAN

(By Jo Mannies)

Former Sen. Staurt Symington, who died Wednesday at the age of 87, had three distinguished careers:

First as a successful businessman who was a millionaire by age 40.

A government administrator who helped the nation shift from World War II.

And a legislator, serving as Missouri's senator from 1952 to 1976.

By any measure, he was a success in all three.

In 1960, Symington—then regarded as a Democratic star—was narrowly edged out at the last minute as the Democratic vice presidential choice of presidential candidate John F. Kennedy.

But those who remember him say that Symington's real legacy is as a man who cared about people and his country.

He backed a strong defense and the Equal Rights Amendment, changed from a hawk to a dove during the Vietnam War and was staunchly pro-labor.

He consistently supported measures liberalizing Social Security payments, unemployment compensation, domestic aid, foreign aid, housing public works and education.

In 1938, he became president of the then-financially troubled Emerson Electric Co. here and stunned local union leaders and the business world by initiating a profit-sharing program for employees—something unheard of at the time.

As a senator in the 1950s, Symington once canceled a speech in Little Rock, Ark., when he learned that blacks would be seated at separate tables.

Also in the 1950s, Symington became a television star via his public debates with Sen. Joseph McCarthy, R-Wis., who accused many government officials and public figures of being communists.

Symington's son, former U.S Rep. James Symington, said the McCarthy confrontations made up some of the most important memories he has of his father.

"A lot of average citizens were being bullied. He stood up for them," the younger Symington said Wednesday." He knew how to be intelligently concerned by communism but didn't like seeing people's lives destroyed by the rampage."

Indeed, former Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, who retired in 1986, once said that he would be honored if he were to be remembered as being half as good as Symington.

On Wednesday, Eagleton added: "Stuart Symington was a Renaissance man. . . . When I went to the Senate in 1968, he became my political father. I made a lot of mistakes, but I would have made even more if Stuart Symington hadn't stopped me."

William Stuart Symington was born on June 26, 1901, in Amherst, Mass. His father, for whom he was named, was a professor of Romance languages at Amherst College, later opened a law office in Baltimore and was elected a judge. His mother was the former Emily Hazall Harrison. The couple had five other children.

After attending public schools at Baltimore and graduating from Baltimore City College, a high school, Symington enlisted in the Army at the age of 17 and became a second lieutenant before he reached the age of 18.

At the end of World War I he entered Yale University. He attended from 1919 to 1923, but because of a deficiency in mathematics, Symington did not graduate with his class. He was awarded a B.A. degree by Yale in 1946.

In 1924, he married Evelyn Wadsworth of New York. She was the daughter of James W. Wadsworth, a Republican who served as a U.S. senator from 1915 to 1927 and as a representative from 1933 to 1951.

Evelyn Symington, who died in 1972, became known in her own right in the middle 1930s when, as Eve Symington, she had a successful career as a Cafe Society singer in New York.

She and Symington had two sons, Stuart Jr. and James W., both lawyers.

When he left Yale, the elder Symington went to work for the Symington Co., which was owned by an uncle, in Rochester, N.Y. There, he got his first "degree"—one of which he was ever afterward proud—a certificate from the International Correspondence Schools for completing an engineering course.

For the next few years, he was in and out of Symington family firms while engaging in some business enterprises of his own.

In 1928, he organized a company to manufacture radio loudspeakers, and two years later, he set up a company to manufacture radios. In 1935, he accepted the presidency of the Rustless Iron & Steel Co. to reorganize it. He did such a good job that the owner sold it in 1937—a Depression year—for a profit.

In 1938, a friend, the late James V. Forrestal, who later became the first secretary of defense, urged him to come to St. Louis to take over the strike-plagued plant of the former Emerson Electric Manufacturing Co.

It was here that the young industrialist attracted national attention by demonstrating his skill at labor relations and by putting the shaky plant on a profitable basis.

"He took over Emerson when it was broke and involved in a 90-day sit-down strike," James Symington said. "He made arrangements considered almost socialist at that time. He made the company a union shop (all-union) and approved a dues check-off.

"Then he said to the man running the union, a known communist, and said, 'Is that all you want?' The man said, 'Yes.' My father replied 'You're not really concerned about the workers are you?' Then he put into place the profit-sharing plan.

"When he left Emerson, he told employees never to drop the profit-sharing plan," James Symington said. "But they eventually did, for a pension plan, because that seemed safe. But they would have made a great deal (more) money if they had kept it. Imagine what those families would be getting now from that profit-sharing plan. He knew it would work."

Stuart Symington went to England in 1941 to study airplane armament for the War Department and returned with British blueprints that made the Emerson company the largest manufacturer of power-driven gun turrets for airplanes.

He remained at the helm of Emerson throughout World War II.

On Aug. 1, 1943, a last-minute business trip prevented Symington from being a passenger on an Army glider that made a demonstration flight in St. Louis.

The glider crashed, killing Mayor William Dee Becker and nine others.

In 1945, Symington sold his Emerson stock for a reported $1 million and went to Washington to begin a career in politics.

His performance with Emerson during the war had caught the eye of then-Sen. Harry S. Truman when Symington had appeared as a witness before a congressional panel investigating national defense contracts.

When the death of President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1945 placed Truman in the White House, Truman summoned Symington to Washington to become administrator of surplus property.

In 1946, Symington was appointed assistant secretary of war for air under Secretary of War Robert P. Patterson. The next year, when a unified Department of Defense was established, Symington became the first secretary of the Air Force. This was a period of growing post-war tension with the Soviet Union, and Symington rapidly emerged as an advocate of strong American defenses, particularly air power.

He resigned the secretaryship in 1950 after charging that Truman's administration made armaments reductions for the sake of balancing the budget.

But the same year, he was named chairman of the National Security Resources Board, which was charged with long-range planning of national defense needs.

In 1951, he was appointed cleanup administrator of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to replace the five-man board that had been in charge of the agency. The board had been discredited by a congressional investigation that disclosed favoritism and influence in the awarding of loans.

For his government service, Symington was awarded the Medal of Merit in 1947 for "extraordinary fidelity and exceptionally meritorious conduct" and the Distinguished Service Medal in 1952 for "distinguished service to the United States in positions of great responsibility."

In 1952, at the age of 51, Symington then entered the third—and arguably most public—phase of his life.

A resident of Missouri for 14 years, half of them spent in Washington, Symington returned to St. Louis and filed for the Democratic nomination for U.S. senator in March 1952. Truman supported the opposing candidate, J.E. "Buck" Taylor.

It was a long, hard primary campaign. Symington, his wife and guitar-playing son, James, visited every corner of the state. In southern parts of the state, Symington played up the fact that he was the grandson of Maj. W. Stuart Symington, who had served on the staff of Gen. Robert E. Lee and was cited for conspicuous gallantry after charging with Gen. George E. Pickett at Gettysburg, Pa.

In the end, Symington beat Taylor. The primary vote was: Symington, 368,595; Taylor 180,849.

In the election Nov. 4, Symington beat the incumbent Republican, U.S. Sen. James P. Kem of Kansas City, by a vote of 1,008,523 to 858,170. The victory was notable because Republican Dwight D. Eisenhower carried the state over Adlai Stevenson, 959,429 to 929,830.

Symington's first term was marked by his confrontations with McCarthy and Symington's keen interest in a strong defense. Within months after first taking office, he criticized the Pentagon for bad management. "It is nonsensical to spend ourselves into bankruptcy because of a wastefully inefficient defense organization."

Symington's debates with McCarthy stemmed from his service on the latter's Permanent Investigations Subcommittee.

"Sen. Symington took him on at the hearings," recalled Clark M. Clifford, a former defense secretary.

"At one time, in utter exasperation, he turned to Sen. McCarthy and said: 'Senator, the main thing you need to do is go to a psychiatrist.'

"Symington stood up to him," Clifford said. "It took a lot of courage."

Symington also showed that he did not hold a grudge. Although McCarthy had called him "Sactimonious Stu" during their battles, Symington and his wife later accepted an invitation to dinner at McCarthy's home, James Symington said.

Stuart Symington's vote-pulling ability and his strong support by labor made him attractive to some in the Democratic Party as a potential presidential candidate. In 1956, his supporters made an effort to enlist delegates at the Democratic National Convention.

The senator allowed himself to be considered as a "favorite son," and at one point in the convention, he loomed as a compromise candidate in a deadlock between Adlai Stevenson and Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee. The deadlock did not develop, but as it was, Symington got 45 first-ballot votes for the nomination.

Two years later, in 1958, Symington won re-election to a third term easily; he faced no serious opposition either in the primary or the election in November.

Although he announced early in 1960 that he would be a candidate for the presidential nomination and carried on an active pre-convention campaign, Symington was buried with other favorite sons under the elaborately planned campaign of John F. Kennedy, who won on the first ballot.

Later in the convention, Symington almost came a heartbeat away from the presidency when Kennedy decided to offer him the vice presidential slot.

But in a last-minute switch, the position on the ticket went to Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson, a Democrat from Texas. Johnson became president in 1963 when Kennedy was assassinated.

In 1964, Symington won renomination easily and led the state Democratic ticket with a landslide victory that November. His margin, more than 590,000 votes, was the largest for any candidate in the state.

But opposite conditions prevailed in 1970, when Symington faced a strong Republican challenge by the young Missouri attorney general, John C. Danforth. Thus, the senator's final victory was also his narrowest with the margin over his opponent totaling a slim 37,000 votes.

Symington announced his decision to retire in 1975—a year before the expiration of his term. Among those Democrats who sought to succeed him was his younger son, James, then the congressman from Missouri's 2nd District.

Danforth ended up winning the seat, and Stuart Symington showed once again that he did not hold a grudge by resigning his seat early so that Danforth would have an edge in seniority over other freshmen senators.

Two years later, Symington married Ann Watson, the widow of Arthur Watson, the founder of International Business Machines Corp. At the time of his death, he lived in Connecticut.

As a senator, one close associate described Symington as a "middle-of-the-roader with good humanistic instincts."

In addition to membership on the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees, Symington served on the Joint House-Senate Economic Committee, the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee.

Some regarded Symington as one of the liberal members of the Senate. His record was rated at 100 percent in a ranking of members of Congress for many years by Americans for Democratic Action.

The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education gave him a 100 percent rating on his votes on labor legislation.

He repeatedly supported Senate efforts to enact civil-rights legislation. When Eisenhower sent soldiers to Little Rock, Ark., after racial riots in 1957, Symington agreed that the president "had no other course."

But many also regarded Symington as a pragmatist—a man persuaded by practicalities rather than by dogma—and this outlook resulted in changes of position over the years on two major issues: defense spending and the Vietnam War.

Friends and enemies alike credited him with the rare political courage to renounce an earlier stand when convinced by changing circumstances.

For much of his career in Washington, Symington was known as a "big bomber and big-missile man," and in the early phases of the Vietnam War, as a hawk.

But as sums for defense expenditures mounted in the late 1960s and early 1970s, he became a critic of ever-larger Pentagon budgets and an opponent of a number of costly and elaborate weapons projects.

In the 1970s, he became increasingly concerned about the proliferation of nuclear weapons and the associated arms race, and he became a vocal advocate of arms control.

Symington's position on American involvement in Indochina went through a similar evolution.

In 1961, he announced that the United States must do everything in its power to prevent South Vietnam from becoming a communist satellite. As late as 1966, he urged the American bombing of North Vietnam and the mining of Haiphong harbor.

But by the next year, in 1967, he had become convinced that the war was a stalemate, that the military and economic costs were burdensome, and that no basic American interests were at stake.

Symington served on the Senate Foreign Relations and the Senate Armed Services Committees, a rare dual membership that gave him unusual access to top secret information in two key areas.

As a consequence, he played a central role in revealing to the public the clandestine American military and CIA operations in Laos and Cambodia, American payments to Asian allies to support the Vietnam War, and the efforts by the administration and the Pentagon to conceal them.

Much of his work was done in 1973, when he served as acting chairman of the Armed Services Committee for several months while the permanent chairman, John C. Stennis, recuperated from a gunshot wound suffered in a street robbery.

During his career, Symington received numerous awards and honorary degrees. Among the degrees were those conferred by William Jewel College, Park College, Rockhurst College, Avila College, Missouri Valley College, the University of Missouri, Washington University and St. Louis University.

Numbered among his awards were the Missouri Society's "Silver Mule" award, the Herbert Lehman Award for Significant Public Service, two "Man of the Year" awards from the Air Force Association and the Wright Brothers trophy of the National Aeronautic Association.

When Symington retired in 1976, many of the nation's most powerful and respected officials sent in letters of tribute. Among those tributes:

Then-President Gerald R. Ford said Symington's career was "marked with the wisdom, honor and integrity of a great statesman."

Former President Jimmy Carter, who was then running for president, said Symington's years in the Senate "exemplify the highest standards of public service and will be an inspiration to all who aspire to the highest elective offices in the country.

Then-Secretary of State Henry A Kissinger wrote: "Your service to this country has been long, steadfast and brilliant. We have disagreed sometimes, but I have always found you a constructive and honest statesman."

Then-Vice President Nelson Rockefeller wrote that Symington's career in the Senate was "marked by a broadness of vision which placed the national interest above narrower considerations, a long view particularly apparent in his valuable contributions to American foreign and military policy."

SYMINGTON HAD MOMENT IN SUN IN 1960

(By Bob Adams)

Clark M. Clifford, confidant of many Democratic presidents, well remembers the night in 1960 when Stuart Symington was almost nominated for vice president of the United States.

John F. Kennedy, the young senator from Massachusetts, had clinched the presidential nomination. At the Democratic convention in Los Angeles, various names were tossed around for vice president: Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas, Henry M. Jackson of Washington. Orville Feeman of Minnesota.

And Stuart Symington of Missouri.

"I was carrying messages back and forth," said Clifford, a former St. Louisan and a longtime friend of Symington, in a telephone interview Wednesday.

"The day before the decision was to be made, Sen. Kennedy said: I'm now offering the No. 2 position to Sen. Symington. Take it to him and get back to me.'

"I reported it to Sen. Symington," Clifford said. "He got his wife and two sons and their wives and Mrs. Clifford and me together. It was discussed all through dinner.

"Finally, after hearing everybody's opinion, Sen. Symington said: 'I think well of the idea, and I accept.' "

Clifford said he had relayed that message to Kennedy the same night. "We shook hands on it," Clifford said.

But others had different ideas. They were pressing Kennedy to pick a Southerner. They felt he could not win without carrying a major southern state—like Texas.

Historians have described the confusion that swarmed over the convention. Johnson, to the surprise of many, said he would accept the No. 2 spot. Northern liberals threatened a floor fight if the choice was Johnson.

"It was batted back and forth," Clifford said. "Finally, I got another call. I went back over, and Kennedy said: 'I've got to do something I've never done before. I have to go back on a commitment. But I'm persuaded that I can't win without Texas.'

"I took that back to Sen. Symington," Clifford said. "He seemed very relaxed about it. He didn't seem to be hungering for it anyway."

In the end, Clifford said, the closeness of the election proved that picking Johnson had been the politically astute move.

"The returns were so close, that Kennedy couldn't have won without Johnson's help in Texas," Clifford said.

Had Symington been chosen, he might have become the nation's 36th president when Kennedy was assassinated. But if Symington had been chosen, Kennedy might never have been president.

Clifford believes Symington did not agonize over the might-have-beens. "He just went on about his business," Clifford said.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF SENATOR STUART SYMINGTON

GENERAL

Senator Stuart Symington has served in the Senate since January 3, 1953.

Throughout his career his overriding goal: a secure and prosperous America in a peaceful and prosperous world.

He has served on major committees concerned with both domestic and foreign policy: Armed Services, Foreign Relations, Joint Atomic Energy, Government Operations, Joint Economic, Agriculture, Space and Aeronautics, Ex Officio Appropriations, Democratic Policy, and Democratic Steering.

He is the only Senator serving concurrently on the Armed Services, Foreign Relations and Joint Atomic Energy Committees, enabling him to combine the expertise learned in these Committees for significant, lasting contributions to our military security and sound foreign policies.

He was among the first Senators who realized the implications of atomic technology for military warfare, and early warned his colleagues of the grave dangers associated with the growing proliferation of nuclear know-how and materials.

In 1971 he left the Joint Economic Committee to join the Joint Atomic Energy Committee to learn more about atomic power and especially our nuclear weapons. He held the first public hearings on the deployment of our tactical nuclear weapons in 1973.

This year he sponsored the first legislation aimed at curbing nuclear proliferation, legislation which became law on June 30.

As Chairman of the Subcommittee on Security Agreements and Commitments Abroad of the Foreign Relations Committee from 1969-1975, he exposed the United States' "Secret War" in Laos, as well as bringing attention to Executive clandestine military operations in Cambodia.

This Committee also presented to the public the incredible magnitude of the American military and economic involvement abroad, causing many to question the role of the United States as world policeman.

Each year he brings his expertise to bear on reviewing the military budget, concerned that we have the most cost-effective military possible to provide necessary military might without sacrificing our economic well-being at home.

All in all, Senator Symington has been a consistent champion of the American public's right to know the facts about government policies warning against the dangers of unnecessary secrecy in government, believing the people to be the best judges as to their priorities and needs.

True National Security has three integral components in Senator Symington's eyes: first, the military capability to destroy any would-be enemy and the possible nation's knowledge of that fact; second, a sound economy based on a sound dollar; and third, the faith of the people in their government.

GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS COMMMITTEE

Senator Symington early established his reputation as a man of integrity and courage to fight for his beliefs during the McCarthy hearings.

As a minority member of the Subcommittee on Permanent Investigations, he publicly disputed Senator McCarthy's accusations that the Army was infiltrated by communists, and charged before an unprecedented television audience that McCarthy needed a psychiatrist. It was this courage, in large measure, which led others to challenge McCarthy's methods and charges, and ultimately McCarthy was censured by the Senate for his conduct.

AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Senator Symington served on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from 1957-1960 to better serve the needs of many of his constituents, for farming is big industry in Missouri.

He served on two Subcommittees: Agriculture Research and General Legislation; and Agricultural Credit and Rural Electrification.

In 1959 and 1960 he headed a Special Agriculture Investigating Subcommittee, and in 1959 introduced the Symington Farm Bill, a 12 point farm program from which many proposals have later been enacted as part of the feed grain programs.

Although he left this Committee in 1961 to join the Foreign Relations Committee, he has never lost interest in farm legislation, working consistently for effective and adequate farm programs. With his votes and testimony before Congressional committees, Senator Symington has always sought income protection and disaster assistance for the farmer and an adequate food supply at reasonable prices for the American consumer.

As but one example of his continued interest in the family farm, in 1962 and 1963 Senator Symington arranged a series of bi-partisan meetings of members of the House and Senate, representatives of the Department of Agriculture, and beef producers. These meetings resulted in the beef import quota system designed to limit beef imports.

MISSOURI WATER RESOURCE PROJECTS

One of Senator Symington's 1952 campaign promises was to aid in the control and development of Missouri's water resources, a promise he fulfilled time and again. Among the projects championed include Table Rock Lake, Pomme de Terre Dam and Reservoir, the Harry S. Truman Dam and Reservoir, Stockton Dam, Cannon Dam and Reservoir, Meramec Park Lake, Smithville Lake, and Long Branch Lake.

DOMESTIC POLICY

As a highly successful businessman before coming to the Senate, Senator Symington has been particularly sensitive to the importance of a sound economy. For this reason he sought membership and served on the Joint Economic Committee from 1967–1971.

Even though next in line for Chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, he left that Committee to join the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy because of his growing concern about nuclear proliferation and the lack of adequate programs for utilization and control of nuclear materials and power.

He has consistently supported anti-poverty legislation, hospital construction, aid to education, housing for low income as well as middle income groups, urban mass transit, and improved social security benefits.

He has an outstanding record on civil rights legislation, being one of the strong supporters of the public accommodations and fair employment provisions in the 1964 Civil Rights Bill.

It is noteworthy that when a businessman in the early 1940s, and President of the Emerson Electric Manufacturing Company in St. Louis, Senator Symington was a leader in providing equal employment opportunities long before it was a popular and mandated practice.

He is also especially proud of the 1974 establishment of the Harry S. Truman Scholarships by Congress, which, when fully operative, will provide 52 four-year higher education scholarships each year, one from each State, the District of Columbia, and the Territories for study in public service fields.

MILITARY AND FOREIGN POLICY

ARMED SERVICES

When first coming to the Senate in 1953, due to his expertise gained as First Secretary of the Air Force, Senator Symington was named to the Senate Armed Services Committee and is now the Ranking Member of that Committee.

Subcommittee assignments have included Central Intelligence, Preparedness and Investigating, Tactical Air Power, Nuclear Test Ban Treaty Safeguards, Disarmament, a Special Ad Hoc Committee on Defense Savings, Chairman of the National Stockpile and Petroleum Reserves Subcommittee, and currently Chairman of Military Construction.

As a member of this Committee, he looks for the most cost-effective defense possible for the taxpayers, without sacrificing necessary military programs. He knows we can destroy any enemy who would attack us, believes any possible enemy knows this fact, and that, he says, is the best possible security in this nuclear space age.

Senator Symington has long been concerned about the amount of money spent on armaments by all nations. In July 1955 he sponsored a resolution unanimously passed by the Senate dubbed the "guns or butter" resolution by the press. This resolution called on the President to present to the United Nations suggestions that steps be taken to explore the possibilities of limiting the proportions of every nation's resources devoted to military purposes to the end that a steadily greater proportion of such resources could be used to improve the living standards of all people.

Following six fact-finding trips to Southeast Asia starting in 1960, each reported to the Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees. In the fall of 1967 Senator Symington urged that we declare a cease-fire in Vietnam and bring our military involvement there to an end on the best basis possible.

Another example of Senator Symington's efforts to eliminate unnecessary military programs was his fight against the ABM system, a system which has resulted in a $10 billion loss to the American taxpayer.

In 1973 Senator Symington became Acting Chairman of the Armed Services Committee for several months while Senator Stennis was incapacitated. During this time he held important hearings on the United States bombing policy in Cambodia, bringing out facts for the American people and the Congress: the tremendous lack of communication between the military and policy planners, emphasizing the dangers of excessive secrecy in government, and criticizing the clandestine military operations authorized by the Executive Department without consulting the Congress. He termed the Cambodian bombing immoral, illegal and wasteful, and helped turn the public's attention to, and consequently against, this policy.

As Acting Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee in 1973, Senator Symington also played an important role in bringing some of the Watergate activities to light. Concerned with allegations that the CIA was implicated in the bugging of the Democratic National Headquarters, Senator Symington called then Deputy Director of the CIA, Lt. General Vernon Walters, to testify in May 1973.

Walters said he had been told by Haldeman, Erlichman and Dean it was the "President's wish" that Walters go to then Acting Director of the FBI, L. Patrick Gray, and request that the FBI cease its investigation of certain Mexican funds associated with Watergate.

This testimony implicated Haldeman, Erlichman, Dean and Gray in the Watergate Affair, and made clear that senior White House officials were deeply involved in attempts to unload the bugging scandal on the CIA. At the time Senator Symington said it was hard for him "not to believe the President didn't know about these actions."

He sent copies of memoranda supplied by Walters to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, the U.S. Attorney General, and the House and Senate committees with jurisdiction over the CIA, and gave as much information as possible to the press. He supported further efforts to uncover what eventually became an unparalled national nightmare.

FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

In 1961 Senator Symington became a member of the Foreign Relations Committee to broaden his knowledges in international relations.

Subcommittee service included European Affairs, Genocide Convention, Multinational Corporations, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Near East and South Asia Affairs, and Chairman of the Subcommittee on Security Agreements and Commitments Abroad. He currently chairs the Subcommittee on Arms Control, International Organizations and Security Agreements.

As Chairman of the Subcommittee on Security Agreements and Commitments Abroad, he has conducted the most extensive review of U.S. commitments ever made for the Foreign Relations Committee.

His conclusions warned the American people of the dangers of extending ourselves abroad to the detriment of our economic health at home. Further, he warned that Congress may play a greater role in formulating foreign policy, and especially in getting the necessary information to make sound judgments. He has often emphasized and documented that foreign policy must be debated in Congress with consideration of all the facts.

Perhaps his greatest contribution has been in calling attention to what he considers the greatest problem facing the world today, that of nuclear proliferation. Since coming to the Senate, Senator Symington has been alerting his colleagues to this matter, and trying to find out more about the ramifications of nuclear technology, especially as it relates to weapons capabilities.

It is noteworthy to speak of his role in creating a Non-Proliferation Treaty, for in 1966, in Geneva, there appeared to be a hopeless stalemate between American and Soviet policy.

Senator Symington went to Geneva, and talked with the Soviet Ambassador, and helped convince him that the Senate was in earnest about negotiating a meaningful treaty to halt the steady spread of nuclear technology. This conversation, and the efforts of a few other Senators, greatly contributed to creating the Treaty completed in 1968 and ratified by this country in 1970.

Throughout this year Senator Symington's Subcommittee on Arms Control, has held hearings on the many aspects of nuclear proliferation—the nuclear suppliers' conference, the role of the International Atomic Energy Agency which Senator Symington visited in July of 1975, the Non-Proliferation Treaty, the nuclear capabilities of other nations, security of weapons and technology, and the transfer of nuclear technology to other nations.

As a result of these hearings, Senator Symington offered the first statutory action to deal with nuclear proliferation, a provision enacted on June 30 as part of the International Security Assistance and Arms Export Control Act of 1976–1977.

This law serves notice to all recipients of United States foreign aid that if they import nuclear reprocessing or enrichment technology without placing all of their nuclear facilities under the inspection network of the International Atomic Energy Agency, and under additional international control when it becomes available, all aid from the United States will be cut off. The State Department is currently using this law as a diplomatic tool.

JOINT ATOMIC ENERGY COMMITTEE

Senator Symington joined the Joint Atomic Energy Committee in 1971 so he would have access to information about our deployments of nuclear weapons, and more about nuclear technology. As a member of both the Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees, for over a decade he had been trying to find out this information, and decided he had to join this Committee for the additional knowledge.

Convinced of the right of the American public to know all the facts that would not aid a possible enemy, in 1973 as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Applications, Senator Symington held the first public hearings on the deployment of our tactical nuclear weapons abroad.

In July 1974 he sponsored legislation, which became law, requiring the Joint Committee to submit an annual report to the Senate and House on nuclear weapons and policies and capabilities, as well as general atomic technology.

DONALD F. COLLINS BUSINESSMAN OF THE YEAR

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, tomorrow night, one of Maine's most prominent and respected citizens is being named the State's "Businessman of the Year" by the Maine Chamber of Commerce and Industry. I am also proud to note that the recipient, Donald F. Collins, has been one of my closest friends and supporters over the years.

Don Collins has served Maine in a number of capacities—he's an important member of the State legislature, he owns one of the State's oldest businesses, and he is a leader in the community of Caribou, ME.

The Collins family of Caribou has contributed much to the heritage of my State. For 145 years, the S.W. Collins Lumber Co. has operated on the banks of the Caribou River and is one of Maine's best-known family businesses.

The company's namesake, Samuel W. Collins, also started a family tradition of public service that endures to this day. At this time, three members of the Collins family are active in public life in Maine and many more work diligently in their communities.

I ask unanimous consent that an article about Don's award and another story about the work of his distinguished family be printed in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Maine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Jan. 27, 1989]

DONALD F. COLLINS NAMED BUSINESS LEADER

A successful businessman, an involved civic leader and a dedicated public servant—the Maine Chamber of Commerce and Industry is proud to salute Donald F. Collins, the 1989 Business Leader of the Year.

The annual award is given to an individual who is outstanding in both professional and community life. It will be presented at the Seventh Annual Chamber of Commerce Day, February 23, at the Augusta Civic Center.

Collins leads a family business which this year celebrates 145 years of lumbering and supplying associated building products to Aroostook County. Started as a sawmill and a grist mill on the Caribou River, the S.W. Collins Co. grew from a milling operation to supplying a wide variety of hardware and building items. The milling operation was phased out in the 1950s. Today lumber is purchased from local operations and the emphasis is on contractor and home construction trade. A small wood shop supplies custom construction needs.

Over the past ten years, volume has tripled, largely because of building growth in Central Aroostook. Fifteen employees operate the business, with three employees added during the summer months.

Collins says he prefers to do business in Aroostook, however, occasionally purchases of lumber are made from neighboring Canada and building supplies are ordered throughout the state and New England. Business last year increased slightly and he looks to maintain a similar volume this year.

Collins also continues another family tradition—public service. This session marks his fourth term in the Maine Legislature. He served as state representative in 1971-72, and as the Senator from District 2 in 1977-78, and again in the last legislative session. Collins' great grandfather, Samuel W. Collins, was twice elected to the Maine House of Representatives and once to the Senate. His grandfather was active in Caribou community affairs and also served in the State Legislature as did his father.

When he is in Augusta, the business is run by two of his sons, Sam who is General Manager, and Greg who is the Assistant Manager. Don and his wife Pat have four other children, Kathleen, Susan, Michael and Nancy. Susan is Commissioner of Professional and Financial Regulation.

Collins met his wife when they were both attending the University of Maine. They are both active in community service and both have been mayor of Caribou. Pat has also served on the Caribou City Council and is now a Trustee of the University of Maine system.

Don Collins has a long list of civic and professional accomplishments. He is past president of the Maine Retail Lumber Dealers Association, Caribou Rotary Club, and Foundation of the University of Maine at Presque Isle. He received an Outstanding Citizenship Award from the Caribou Chamber of Commerce and serves as director of Maine National Bank, Maine Mutual Insurance Company, Maine Public Service Company, and Maine Community Foundation.

COLLINS' DYNASTY SERVING MAINE WELL—TRADITION IN GOVERNMENT BEGAN IN HOUSE IN 1856

AUGUSTA.—More than a century has passed since the first Collins from Caribou became involved in Maine state government. Today there are three—each occupying a lofty position in a separate branch.

Samuel W. Collins Jr., the namesake and great-grandson of a northern Maine settler and lumberman who was first elected to the Maine House of Representatives in 1856, is a justice of the state supreme court.

His brother, Donald F. Collins, is beginning his third term in the Maine Senate after serving one term in the House.

And Donald's daughter, Susan M. Collins, is a member of Gov. John R. McKernan's Cabinet, serving as commissioner of the Department of Professional and Financial Regulation.

All Republicans, they are the latest heirs to a proud family tradition.

To date, four generations of Collinses have served a combined total of more than three decades in the Legislature. Members of the family also have held a variety of municipal, civic and state posts, ranging from Boy Scout leader to University of Maine trustee.

"We kind of grew into it. Government and politics were always topics of conversation," Donald Collins, 63, said in an interview in the Senate chamber.

The senator, a former Caribou mayor and the fourth-generation operator of the family's lumber business, recalled his own frequent visits to the capital as a young man during his father's six terms in the Legislature.

"All of us had some sort of bent toward public service," he said. "It was just a sort of a natural happening."

Samuel Collins, 65, who served stints as leader of a Republican majority and a Republican minority during a decade in the Senate before his appointment to the high court, said he too was inspired, but not pushed, by his father.

"He set an example for me," said the soft-spoken jurist said. "He never asked me to do what he did. It wasn't his way."

Collins said his high-school principal nudged his toward a career in the courts, telling him he would someday make a good judge. Asked whether he had ever pictured himself on the Maine Supreme Judicial Court, he had a ready answer.

"To be honest, yes I had," said the justice, a Harvard Law School graduate whom McKernan appointed to the bench last year.

He described his work as challenging and said he especially enjoys interpreting laws he helped pass as a legislator. He is determined to recuperate fully from an auto accident that he says he is lucky to have survived in 1987. "By golly, I'm gonna catch up," he vowed.

Government service has taken Susan Collins the farthest from the family home in Caribou.

During 12 years in Washington, she advised Republican Sen. William S. Cohen of Maine on banking and labor issues. She also worked on a subcommittee headed by Cohen that had jurisdiction over federal ethics and procurement laws.

The 36-year-old commissioner, whose state agency regulates the banking and insurance industries, said family tradition helped draw her to public service.

"It's something we all enjoy," Collins said, "because you make such an impact on people's lives."

She draws particular satisfaction from the work of the department's consumer protection bureau. Through enforcement actions in fraud and similar cases, the bureau was responsible for payments of a record $1 million in restitution to Maine consumers last year.

When she joined the McKernan administration in 1987, Collins recalled, she was often asked if she would have difficulty adjusting to the relatively quiet pace of activity in Maine's capital after a dozen years in Washington.

"I would say, 'I grew up in Caribou,'" she said. "I had always wanted to come back to Maine. When the governor approached me (about the Cabinet post), I jumped at it."

The first Collins to settle in what is now called Caribou arrived in 1844. At the time, officials in the 24-year-old state of Maine, hoping to settle the northern wilderness, were offering blocks of land to anyone who would build and maintain a sawmill or grist mill along certain rivers.

Samuel W. Collins of Calais, after venturing to midwestern states in search of his fortune, returned to Maine and decided to take up the state's offer. What a partner named Washington A. Vaughan, he took land along the Caribou Stream that eventually developed into the village by the same name, and built a grist mill as well as a sawmill that is still partially standing.

Despite periods of losses in his lumber business, the family patriarch eventually prospered, and gave financial help to settlers who followed him to the northern woodlands. A Democrat living in a Republican district, he decided to run for a Maine House seat in 1856.

According to a family history, a GOP legislator named Thomas B. Read told Collins, "I like you personally, Sam, but I intend to oppose every measure you are trying to carry, because I want to teach those Republicans who elected you that you must not send a Democrat to the Maine House of Representatives."

Today, Democrats have an enrollment edge in Caribou, as well as a decisive majority in the House, but the Collinses remain "very highly regarded in this area," said former GOP Sen. James McBreairty of Perham.

"I would assume the biggest percentage of people in Aroostock County know the Collinses," McBreairty said.

Settler Samuel Collins' youngest son, Herschel D., started out as a Democrat but later became a staunch Republican and served one legislative term in the 1930s.

Herschel's son, Samuel W., served six legislative terms, in addition to stints on a variety of boards overseeing railroads, the University of Maine and business groups, and heading the S.W. Collins Co.

Some of the younger Collinses, including Donald's son, Samuel, also are involved in public service. Samuel is a member of the Aroostook County Charter Commission.

"I foresee a continuing interest on the part of my children," said Donald, a father of six, "It's a bit of a dynasty."

AMBASSADOR AND MRS. MAXWELL RABB

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I could not help but notice the article about Ambassador and Mrs. Maxwell Rabb in the Washington Post.

Max and Ruth Rabb are special friends of our family. We feel a great sense of friendship for them because of the kind of people they are, and an enormous respect because of the way they have represented the United States throughout the Reagan administration.

I have had the opportunity to meet with Max and Ruth, both in Washington and in Rome. I also know the great deal of affection and respect American officials in Italy have for them and the similar level of affection and respect the Italian officials have for them. Not just because of the country they represent, but because of the way they represent it. It would be impossible not to respond to two people so proud of their country and so eager to represent it in the best way possible.

United States-Italian relations have never been stronger, and certainly a lot of that credit can go to this remarkable couple.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Washington Post article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RABB & ITALY'S RENAISSANCE

(By Jennifer Parmelee)

ROME.—Tucked away among the memorabilia from decades of political and diplomatic life, U.S. Ambassador Maxwell M. Rabb keeps a photo of the man he believes was sent to kill him one fall day in 1981.

"That was [Col. Moammar] Gadhafi who put the contract out on me for that one," Rabb recounted recently. The Libyan leader, angered by the downing of two of of his planes by U.S. jets in a dogfight over the Mediterranean, allegedly wanted to strike at "a symbol of the United States and so he went after me . . .

"I've still got a photograph of my hit man."

That was in October, just four months after Rabb had been posted to Rome, a time when Americans were beginning to feel especially vulnerable to international terrorists and Italy seemed like the crossroads of it all.

Italian police foiled the plot, but the Reagan appointee's baptism by fire had only just begun. Italy's home-grown Red Brigade terrorists abducted their first prominent foreign victim—U.S. Brig. Gen. James Dozier. (It was considered a triumph for Italy's antiterrorism campaign when Dozier was freed after 42 days.) Rabb says there were five other plots against his life; and within the ultrasecure 19th-century villa in downtown Rome that houses the U.S. Embassy, the terrorist threat remains a quiet obsession.

Recently, in his high-ceilinged office overlooking fashionable Via Veneto, Rabb looked back on the nearly eight years in Italy that make him this country's longest-serving U.S. ambassador. His tenure is ending with the election of George Bush. As is the custom, his resignation has been submitted, and according to Bush administration sources, it has been accepted.

The 78-year-old Rabb does not speak much Italian, but he has cultivated friendships from across the political spectrum, and many of Italy's best and brightest are regular guests at the spectacular Villa Taverna, which he and wife Ruth call home. A touch of weariness momentarily dims his characteristically upbeat delivery when he says, "It's been a long eight years."

Eight long years. Mafia wars and Sicilian heroin flowing to the United States. Tax and extradition treaties signed. Trade battles resolved on shoes, citrus and Parma ham. American almonds versus Italian anchovies. Arafat, the Achille Lauro and the 1986 bombing of Libya.

And all of it between the parentheses of Italy accepting the unwanted intermediate-range nuclear missiles in 1981 and the equally disdained F16s last year—two remarkable gestures that in Rabb's view make Italy a vital part of the Western alliance, "the best ally maybe that we have, as good as anyone."

It wasn't always that way.

"When I came in 1981," he remembers, "Italy was a good friend—but not the essential ally."

The United States was worried by signs of a possible resurgence by Italian Communists. On terrorism, according to Rabb, Italy had "a rotten record." And in Europe, the Italians were regarded as followers rather than leaders.

What turned things around? Rabb believes that Italian acceptance of the missiles and skills in handling the Dozier rescue helped catalyze what now is known as the new Italian renaissance, an unprecedented period of stability, prosperity and newfound respectability. He also credits himself squarely for having lobbied hard on Italy's behalf right down the line.

"I'll tell you how bad it was at the time, with the United States: The Italians weren't getting the attention of a Mrs. Thatcher, or Kohl, or Mitterrand," Rabb says, remembering that Sandro Pertini, then Italy's president, hadn't been invited to the White House.

"Pertini asked me to get him over, and that was the first time I said to Washington, 'You invite him over if you expect anything in return,' " Rabb says, thumping the end of a long conference table for emphasis.

Once in the United States, the 85-year-old Pertini, one of Italy's most popular political figures, etched what to Rabb is one of the most indelible images of U.S.-Italian friendship—and the sentimental symbol of a new era.

During a public ceremony at the White House, Pertini was standing on a platform flanked by President and Nancy Reagan, listening to their countries' respective anthems. "Then Pertini broke ranks and went over to the American flag, this old man, lifted the folds of the flag, kissed it and went back," Rabb says. "Never had this happened before. And that picture was all over the world the next day."

Another flashback: It is a June day one week after arriving in Rome. Rabb is feeling "very pleased" about his new assignment when he receives a cable from Washington telling him it's "imperative" he persuade Italy to accept 112 nuclear missiles, the INFs.

The imperious language was telling, he remembers: "Not 'it is important that you consult with the Italians on this matter,' " but a direct order—and for missiles that had been spurned by America's other allies.

"It was with a somewhat heavy heart that I went to the meeting of the prime minister and his leadership," Rabb says, remembering there seemed to be "an abnormal number of cabinet members there just to take a look at me and size me up."

"I poured out my story and frankly was pleased that there was so much patience in the attitude of those listening, thinking to myself, 'Maybe I'm making some progress.' "

But when he finished, then prime minister Giovanni Spadolini replied: "But Mr. Ambassador, look at the other countries in the alliance . . . what are they doing?" His hand fluttering in the air, Spadolini said that maybe, in a year or two, the Italians might consider the idea. "In other words, a very distinct no, but done diplomatically," recalls Rabb.

Spadolini then asked if the U.S. envoy had any important addition to make to his argument. To the Italians' surprise, and his own, Rabb said he did.

"To tell the truth I didn't act in a very Foreign Service manner . . . I said, 'Gentlemen, if you will deploy the INF and construct the base for the INF, you'll make me a big man in Washington,' " he says. "Four days later we got it. The whole world was astonished. How did Italy, the follower, take the lead to do this?

"That," asserts Rabb, "was the beginning of the present modern greatness of Italy. . . . Without Italy, we would never have had the Gorbachev-Reagan agreement eliminating a whole category of nuclear arms . . . the missiles in Italy were the bargaining chip, you see."

The Italian government followed the American lead in joining the multinational peace-keeping force in Lebanon and in dispatching minesweepers to the Persian Gulf. And last year, Italy came forward again to accept 79 American F16 fighter-bombers that had been dumped by fellow NATO-member Spain.

Rabb likes to joke that his home's 14-foot walls and phalanx of guards are just to protect his coveted chef, but terrorism is a phenomenon that has changed the face of diplomacy. And it's been an undercurrent in some of the most difficult—and most successful—moments of Rabb's tenure here.

To many Americans, the image of Italy as an unshakable and invaluable ally is undermined by the impression that it doesn't always share the United States' hard line on terrorism. The emotion-charged Achille Lauro affair of 1985 was burned deeply into American memories, while Italy's considerable economic and political ties with Libya remain a major concern.

"Almost the key source of problems today [between Italy and the United States] is around this subject of terrorism," concedes Rabb. "Whether it's the Mideast or it's Libya, it all comes back to this basic subject."

But he hastens to add, "On this subject, as we talk about differences, what I like to point out is that Italy is probably the best nation in all of Europe in suppressing terrorism, in working hand in hand with the United States . . . while preserving its own point of view, its own attitudes and independence."

The Italians and the Americans have exchanged frank and divergent opinions on the U.S. bombardment of Libya in April 1986 (Italy was angry it hadn't been consulted beforehand and deplored the military action) and on the U.S. rejection of a visa for PLO leader Yasser Arafat to address the United Nations.

But it was the killing of an elderly wheelchair-bound American on the hijacked Achille Lauro cruise liner and its political fallout in October 1985 that brought U.S.-Italian relations to the breaking point.

After the Achille Lauro murder, U.S. commandos forced down an Egyptian military plane carrying Mohammed Abbas accused of masterminding the hijacking, and three other suspected Palestinian terrorists. The situation quickly degenerated into a hostile standoff between Italian and American soldiers.

In the end, the Italian government, bitter about violations of its air space and strong-arm U.S. tactics, allowed Abbas to leave, while holding the other three suspects—infuriating the U.S. government.

"I've got a picture of me . . . where I was so mad," says Rabb, who was described by Italian newspaper accounts as appearing on television "sputtering with impotent rage."

"Generally I'm supposed to be a nice person . . . but I almost brought the Italian government down," he says, although he also concedes that American behavior in the episode was less than perfect.

The day after Abbas was spirited out of Italy, Renato Ruggiero, then No. 2 at the Foreign Ministry, visited Rabb on behalf of his government. "He said, 'This is terrible . . . my people would like it straightened out.' I said, 'My people are mad, they're just as furious as they can be. . . . We can't expect you to agree with us on everything but when it comes to an American or the life of an American, we'll go to any length. . . .'

Ruggiero asked what he could do, saying he'd hop the next plane to Washington if needed. Rabb called then secretary of state George Shultz and undersecretary Michael Armacost.

"They said to me, 'It's a terrible mess, the country is up in arms.' I said, 'I know but why don't we make peace? . . . The [Italian] government is going to fall and it will be the United States that brought them down. That's not for us to do . . .'

"And the reply came back, 'Would you be wiling to carry this yourself?' Meaning would I go to the White House and stand alone on this. . . . And I will tell you I gulped because I saw what was happening to me, but I said yes.

" 'Wonderful,' said Shultz. 'I'll be right behind you,' and Armacost said, 'I'll be right behind you'. . . .

"And in the end, peace was done."

GARY SKOGEBO, VETERAN PILOT OF EXTRAORDINARY SKILL

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I go back and forth to Vermont virtually every week, and sometimes more than once during the week. Fortunately, my hometown of Burlington has an airport, and I can be home a few minutes after landing.

On some of the flights I have taken, Gary Skogebo of Grand Isle, a veteran pilot with USAir, has been on the flight. I was pleased to see an article about Gary in my hometown's local paper and his extraordinary skill.

The article describes his actions far better than I, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Burlington Free Press, Nov. 28, 1988]

PILOT GAINS RECOGNITION FOR ONE-ENGINE LANDING

(By Eloise Hedbor)

It began as an ordinary flight from Philadelphia to Boston. It ended with the plane's returning to land in Philadelphia "without incident or injury."

"That was music to my ears," recalled Capt. Gary Skogebo, who drew on years of safety training to bring his USAir Boeing 737 to a safe landing after an engine fell off.

Skogebo, a commercial pilot for 10 years who lives in Grand Isle with his wife, Mary, recently received an Airline Pilots Association's Air Safety Foundation award for "superior airmanship."

Similar awards went to four other airline crews who avoided crashes in emergencies.

In each case pilot skill overcame a potentially fatal problem. In Skogebo's case, the Federal Aviation Administration determined that both a bolt and a backup safety chain designed to hold the engine in place failed because of manufacturing defects.

That Saturday morning flight last Dec. 15, with 69 people on board, began routinely. But five minutes into the flight, about seven miles from the airport, the throttle on the right engine went to idle, and the "airplane started to roll to the right," the pilot recalled.

"I suspected either a partial or complete engine failure," said Skogebo. There was "quite a bit of vibration" but no warning lights, and instruments showed "parameters close to normal for idle."

Skogebo had never before faced this sort of emergency in the air, but his flight simulator experience had him well-prepared. "Gary's very even-keeled," said his wife.

"I decided to return to Philadelphia, and initiated standard engine shutdown procedure," Skogebo said.

With a "predetermined signal" he alerted the flight attendants that there was an emergency, and he notified the airport.

Meanwhile, Skogebo was going through the "immediate action items" to shut down the failed engine and bring his plane in on just one engine. These and other procedures are practiced countless times in mock emergencies on the simulator so it is almost second nature when the real emergency comes along, Skogebo said.

"A flight attendant came into the cockpit," Skogebo said. "I said there was an apparent problem with the right engine and asked him to look and see if he could see anything unusual. As he left the cockpit, we were beginning to reduce speed, and the vibration quit abruptly. I knew something had dropped off the plane."

As the cockpit crew reviewed the procedures for a one-engine landing the "attendant came back and said the engine was missing."

Skogebo advised the passengers and flight crew to prepare for a full emergency landing. There was no nose wheel steering and only partial brakes. And the wing flaps would extend only partially.

But Skogebo remained confident. "I had a chance to talk to the folks in the cabin before the final approach. I told the passengers we had a problem, and I told them I didn't expect any difficulty with landing."

The plane landed smoothly, and slowed down with the help of "partial reverse on the engine we had" and "light to medium braking."

A quick check by the first officer and ground personnel revealed no leaking fluids, no smoke or other signs of impending fire and Skogebo determined there was no need for emergency evacuation, a procedure that, given the short extension of the wing flaps, almost certainly would have resulted in some injuries.

"Probably after the landing most people were thinking, 'What's so bad about this?' " Skogebo said.

The whole thing had taken just 12 minutes.

For the passengers, the entire incident caused only a slight delay. "As we got to the gate, I opened the door, and they took all but four of the passengers, marched them across the hall and put them on another flight to Boston."

Skogebo said he thinks his experience and that of other pilots honored this year, demonstrates the ever-increasing safety of airline travel.

The constant retraining of pilots helps ensure that even when the machinery fails, "the human factor is positive" and can save the plane and passengers.

"It's really satisfying to know that these efforts are paying off," Skogebo said. "An accident is a series of things, that if even one can be avoided, you can break the chain of events," and prevent an "incident" from becoming an "accident."

"The most gratifying thing to me was the comment that the aircraft landed safely without incident or injury. You never heard about it again," Skogebo said.

Mary Skogebo admits she does sometimes worry when her husband is flying, but not in his commercial flights. In his spare time, Skogebo is wing commander for the Civil Air Patrol and Mary said there are some search and rescue operations over the mountains in bad weather that "have me wringing my hands."

BETTER CHILD CARE SERVICES

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, ask the parents of any toddler what they look for in child care and they will tell you first about how difficult it can be to find adequate care. They will tell you about a lack of child care centers that are bright, and safe, and affordable. They will tell you about long waiting lists for the best centers, and the tremendous costs that put them out of their economic reach. They will tell you what every parent knows—that there is no greater anguish than having to leave a child in the care of another, and worry all day about the child's welfare and safety.

They will tell you about the need for better child care in their community.

The better child care working parents seek can be summed up in three words: Supply, quality, and affordability. These three ingredients are essential to the safety of our children, the integrity of our families, and the productivity of our workforce. They are the keys to a brighter future for our children and for America.

Today I rise in support of the Act for Better Child Care Services which establishes a comprehensive system of child care to help States increase their supply of safe services and help low-income working parents meet the high cost of child care.

Supply. In Vermont, the number of licensed child care spaces has risen dramatically over the last 5 years, but an estimated 30,000 children go without the benefits of quality child care services. The ABC bill will expand child care options for working parents. It will allow them to choose among a wide variety of child care services, including nonprofit and for-profit child care centers, family day care homes, school-based care and nonsectarian church-based care.

Quality. Experienced child care providers whose programs offer stimulating, challenging, and safe environments for our children contribute greatly to the future of this country. Happy, healthy, motivated kids get a head start on long, productive working lives. That is good for our children and good for the economic well-being of our country.

The ABC bill will give parents the peace of mind that their children are safe and secure in programs that meet minimum national health and safety standards. In addition, the bill will allow States to use ABC fund to increase child care provider salaries and to recruit new providers by establishing scholarship assistance.

Affordabilty. Every year Vermont families spend more than $60 million for child care. That is no small investment, especially when you consider the rising costs of other necessities like housing, health care, and heating expenses. The ABC bill will provide direct assistance to working families to pay for child care. Priority for funds will go to low-income families.

Senator DODD deserves our praise for the work he has done to improve this legislation. Working with Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, and MIKULSKI he has produced a bill that responds to many of the concerns raised about last year's bill. The ABC bill provides the framework for bipartisan cooperation and compromise, and for a Federal commitment to building an adequate child care system in America.

That commitment, as part of a strong private-State-Federal partnership, is essential to resolving our child care crisis.

Many have expressed concern about the cost of this legislation. I share that concern, but I consider child care an investment in the future. According to the House Select Committee on Children, every $1 invested in preschool child care saves the Government $4.75 over the life of the child. The savings come from spending forgone on programs further down the line like remedial education, and AFDC.

The President and Congress must work together to bring the deficit down so that we can invest now in programs that will save us money later. The American people want that. They recognize the need for public investment in child care and are willing to make sacrifices to achieve it.

Many in the business community advocate investing in prenatal care and early childhood education. The Committee for Economic Development [CED], a group of more than 220 heads of major U.S. corporations and universities, released a report in 1987 entitled "Children in Need: Investment Strategies for the Educationally Disadvantaged." The report called for increased government and business investment in early-intervention programs for disadvantaged children and adolescents.

Everyone agrees—early intervention makes sense economically.

Our children pay the price when their parents cannot afford quality care for them. Our children pay the price when the people we entrust to care for them cannot afford to live on the meager salaries we pay them. Our children deserve better. Our Nation cannot afford to give them and their hard-working parents anything but the best. Let this be the year that Congress makes a commitment to better child care in America.

NATIONAL POLICY ON PERMANENT PAPERS

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased indeed to present for publication in the RECORD a resolution of the Rhode Island Senate memorializing Congress to adopt my pending proposal to establish a national policy on permanent paper.

My proposal, introduced on February 8 as Senate Joint Resolution 57, would declare it to be a policy of the United States that all Federal records, books, and publications of enduring value be produced on acid free permanent paper. It urges all Federal agencies to bring themselves into compliance with the policy and also urges that publishers in the private sector do likewise on a voluntary basis.

The resolution of the Rhode Island Senate reflects the fact that there is a growing awareness at the local level across the country that we are faced with a national problem of deterioration of valuable publications because of the high acid content of paper in use since the mid-19th century. Fortunately, we now have the technology at hand to stop this problem at its source and Senate Joint Resolution 57 would simply encourage its utilization as swiftly as possible.

I am most appreciative of the action of the Rhode Island Senate in passing this resolution and of the efforts of Senators Victoria Lederberg, Sean O. Coffey, William C. O'Neill, and June N. Gibbs, who joined in introducing the measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution 89-S 0851 of the Rhode Island Senate be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND—SENATE RESOLUTION

Whereas, it is now widely recognized and scientifically demonstrated that acidic papers commonly used in documents, books, and other publications for more than a century are self-destructing and will continue to self-destruct; and

Whereas, Rhode Islanders are facing the prospect of continuing to lose state and national historical records, including government records, faster than salvage efforts can be mounted despite the dedicated efforts of many libraries, archives and agencies; and

Whereas, nationwide many hundreds of millions of dollars will need to be spent by the federal, state and local governments and private institutions to salvage the most essential books and other materials in libraries and archives; and

Whereas, there is an urgent need to prevent the acid paper problem from continuing into the indefinite future by means which already exist, in as much as acid free permanent papers with a life of several hundred years already exist and are being produced at prices competitve with acid papers; and

Whereas, some publishers such as the National Historical Publications and Records Commission, the Library of Congress and many university presses are already publishing on acid free papers, and the U.S. Office of Technology Assessment has estimated that only 15 to 25 percent of the books currently being published in the United States are printed on acid free paper; and

Whereas, most government agencies do not require the use of permanent papers for appropriate state and federal records and publications, and associations representing commercial publishers and book printers have thus far not recommended the use of acid free papers; and

Whereas, paper manufacturers have stated that a sufficient supply of acid free papers would be produced if publishers would specify the use of acid free papers; and

Whereas, Senator Claiborne Pell has introduced a joint resolution in the United States Senate to establish a national policy of permanent papers; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the members of this Senate of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations hereby urge the members of the United States Congress to adopt Senator Pell's joint resolution to establish a national policy on permanent papers; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and she is hereby authorized and directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to Senator Claiborne Pell, Senator John Chafee, Representative Claudine Schneider and Representative Ronald Machtley.

DEATH OF JOHN BLAIR

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I was shocked and saddened to learn of the sudden death this week of John Blair, a close friend of mine who was well known throughout Connecticut and in business circles around the Nation for his lobbying work on behalf of the insurance industry.

John had a reputation in Hartford not only for being hard working, committed, even driven, but also for having those rare qualities of honesty, fairness, and trustworthiness. Despite his important role as representative of the largest industry in the State, John retained his straightforward manner. Among lawmakers he was known as an aggressive advocate of insurance companies' interests, and among other lobbyists he was known for the value of his word.

As attached as John was to his work, his devotion to his family went much further. He refused to allow the responsibilities of his job to take away from time set aside for his wife and four children, whom he felt were his greatest responsibility.

John's athletic exploits were legend. Star of the baseball and football teams of New Britain High School, John was awarded a football scholarship from Boston College and was visited by recruiters from major league teams. He remained active throughout his life, taking time every day to go running. He took part several times in the Boston Marathon, and was in training to enter the race again this year.

John's death, at only 44 years of age, is truly a tragedy. Here was a man who was both devoted to his family and successful in his work. My sympathies go out to his wife and children. He will be remembered by all of us who had the good fortune to befriend him.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DESIGNATION OF THE ROBERT C. BYRD ROOMS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senator DOLE, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 65) to designate rooms S221, S222, S223, and S224 in the U.S. Capitol Building as the "Robert C. Byrd Rooms."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the immediate consideration of this resolution.

The majority leader.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, today is a truly notable day in the history of the U.S. Senate.

In a short while Senators will attend a reception to honor the publication of Senator ROBERT C. BYRD's monumental book, "The Senate, 1789–1989."

The work being unveiled today combines Senator BYRD's own insights and recollections, gathered during more than three decades of service here, with an encyclopedic synthesis on modern scholarship on the Senate. Nothing of its kind has ever been undertaken. For the first time, Senators, teachers, students, and others, both at home and abroad, will have access to a highly readable account of the Senate's development during its first two centuries.

"Byrd's History"—as it undoubtedly will be called throughout the coming two centuries—stands as a monument to its author's diligent work, his attention to detail, his boundless energy, and his intense loyalty to the Senate. No one, among the nearly 1,800 persons who have ever served in this body, has given more of himself to the Senate than ROBERT C. BYRD. This magnificent book will stand for the ages as his gift to the Senate.

I believe that it is now appropriate that the Senate recognize, in a lasting way, this extraordinary American leader's contributions. Consequently, I am honored to serve as a cosponsor of a resolution providing that the Senate majority leader's rooms in the U.S. Capitol Building be designated, and hereafter known, as the "Robert C. Byrd Rooms." It is my hope and belief that those who walk these halls in the decades and centuries ahead will pause to recall the Senator from West Virginia who served so effectively as both a maker and a recorder of Senate history.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished majority leader. I was certainly pleased to cosponsor the resolution. It was my honor and privilege to work across the aisle from Senator BYRD as majority leader and then as the Republican minority leader. There is no doubt about it: he is the one of the 100 in this body that understands this institution. What he has done in the book that he has written will be of value not only to us but, as the majority leader indicated, to Senators who will serve here 10 years from now, 20, 30, 40, 50 years from now. So it is a tribute well deserved and I am pleased to join in the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 65) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, and its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 65

Whereas, Senator Robert C. Byrd has served in the Senate with great distinction for more than thirty years, twenty-two of which he served in positions of leadership within the Senate, including six years as Majority Leader and six years as Minority Leader;

Whereas, his service to the Senate has been characterized by diligent work, attention to detail, boundless energy, and intense loyalty;

Whereas, Senator Byrd was the first Majority Leader in Senate history to occupy the suite of rooms S221, S222, S223, and S224 in the United States Capitol Building;

Whereas, Senator Byrd, during the past decade, has prepared a monumental written history of the Senate, which will be widely consulted as the authoritative text on the Senate's past, both now and for decades to come; and

Whereas, by virtue of these extraordinary achievements it is appropriate that he be remembered for as long as there is a Senate of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the suite of rooms S221, S222, S223, and S224 in the United States Capitol Building is hereby designated as, and shall hereafter be known as, the "Robert C. Byrd Rooms", in recognition of the unequaled service in this body of Robert C. Byrd on behalf of the people of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DIRECTING THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL TO TAKE CERTAIN ACTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished Republican leader, Mr. DOLE, I send to the desk a resolution on representation by the Senate legal counsel and authority for the Committee on Foreign Relations to produce documents, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 69) to direct the Senate Legal Counsel to represent Senator Kerry and employees of the Senate in the case of United States v. Norman LeFevre, et al.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. In 1987 and 1988 the Subcommittee on Terrorism, Narcotics and International Operations of the Committee on Foreign Relations conducted an investigation and held hearings on the foreign policy implications of narcotics trafficking in Central America. Two of the subcommittee's witnesses testified about their involvement in narcotics trafficking in closed session, as well as in public hearings.

A defendant in a narcotics indictment currently pending in the U.S. District Court for the middle district of Florida has applied to the court for a subpoena to obtain from the subcommittee transcripts of the closed sessions at which these witnesses testified. The Department of Justice has also requested that the subcommittee provide the transcripts to it so that it may determine which, if any, of the material should be turned over to the defense in accordance with rules on the production of exculpatory material and the prior statements of witnesses.

The determination whether to make congressional investigatory records public is solely within the discretion vested by the Constitution in each House of the Congress. In exercising that discretion, the Senate has sought to balance its interests in maintaining the confidentiality of its investigative records with the legitimate needs of the criminal justice system.

This resolution authorizes the Senate legal counsel to represent Senator KERRY, who chaired the subcommittee, and staff of the Committee on Foreign Relations in order to protect the Senate's prerogative to control its records from compelled disclosure. The resolution also authorizes the chairman and ranking minority member of the full Committee on Foreign Relations, acting jointly, to provide any material that in their judgment is appropriate in the interests of justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 69) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 69

Whereas, in 1987 and 1988 the Subcommittee on Terrorism, Narcotics, and International Operations of the Committee on Foreign Relations conducted an investigation of the foreign policy and international implications of narcotics trafficking;

Whereas, in the case of United States v. Norman LeFevre, et al., No. 88-131 Cr-T-17, pending in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida, a defendant is seeking a subpoena for the production of documents from the investigation by Senator John Kerry or employees on the staff of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Department of Justice has requested that the documents be provided to it so that appropriate materials can be produced for the defendant;

Whereas, pursuant to section 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2) (1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent Members and employees of the Senate with respect to subpoenas issued to them in their official capacity;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Senator Kerry and employees of the Senate in the case of United States v. Norman LeFevre, et al.

SEC. 2. That the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, acting jointly, are authorized to provide records of the Subcommittee's investigation, if in their judgment circumstances so warrant.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DIRECTING THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL TO TAKE CERTAIN ACTION

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the distinguished Republican leader, Mr. DOLE, I send to the desk a resolution on representation by the Senate Legal Counsel and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 70) to direct the Senate Legal Counsel to represent Senators KENNEDY, THURMOND, HOLLINGS, GORE, WILSON, and BIDEN in the case of Rodney F. Stich v. Senator Edward Kennedy, et al.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, Rodney F. Stich, the plaintiff in an action filed in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, has brought a civil action against six Members of the Senate and five present or former Members of the House. Mr. Stich's complaint asserts that he has petitioned Members of the Congress about problems of airline safety, but that those Members have not responded adequately, in his estimation, to those petitions.

Every citizen has a constitutionally protected right to petition the Government for the redress of grievances. In turn officials of the Government have the discretion to decide how to respond to the many problems that are presented to them by concerned citizens. The following resolution will authorize the Senate Legal Counsel to represent the Senate defendants in this action and to move to dismiss the complaint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 70) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 70

Whereas, in the case of Rodney F. Stich v. Senator Edward Kennedy, et al., No. 89-0170, pending in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, the plaintiff has named Senators Kennedy, Thurmond, Hollings, Gore, Wilson, and Biden as defendants;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(1) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288b(a) and 288c(a)(1) (1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to defend the members of the Senate in civil actions relating to their official responsibilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Senators Kennedy, Thurmond Hollings, Gore, Wilson, and Biden in the case of Rodney F. Stich v. Senator Edward Kennedy, et al.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 433. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide for centralized acquisition of property and services for the Department of Defense, to establish in the Department of Defense a Defense Acquisition Agency, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE ACQUISITION REORGANIZATION ACT

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today legislation to create a Civilian Acquisition Agency in the Department of Defense. This proposal would amend title 10, of the United States Code, to establish a Defense Acquisition Agency to perform all weapons acquisition functions within DOD. This agency, staffed by well-trained, experienced, career experts, would assume responsibility for the management of weapons acquisition programs from the military services. I firmly believe that this approach will result in more effectively managed and less costly weapons programs.

When I first proposed this idea 4 years ago, it received little attention because it was considered too radical a concept. But the continuing problems in the DOD procurement process, and the public outrage over the recent Pentagon procurement scandal, point to the need for a basic system overhaul. Clearly Defense experts are coming around to support my proposal for a Civilian Acquisition Agency.

For example, during a July 8, 1988, Federal Services Subcommittee hearing on DOD consultants, Dr. Lawrence Korb and Mr. James Falk, both former high ranking DOD officials, stated that my proposal for a Civilian Acquisition Agency was on the right track and that such a concept could only be beneficial. Dr. Korb went on to state that the time was right to take a hard new look at a radically different approach to the way we go about procuring our weapon systems.

Additionally, President Bush has indicated that he plans to make Defense procurement reform a top priority in his new administration. I welcome the opportunity to work with President Bush and the Secretary of Defense in reforming our Defense procurement process.

Mr. President, the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition will be the Director of the Agency. Under this concept, the military will continue to perform the military functions of identifying threats, developing requirements for weaponry to fight those threats, and commanding combat units. Only the management of the actual acquisition of weapons would be changed. The acquisition work force will be selected by the Under Secretary for Acquisition from among the best qualified civilian applicants. The Agency is intended to encourage a career service of acquisition experts much like the Foreign Service. The personnel of the new Acquisition Agency will be highly professional, with required degrees in science, engineering, business, financial management, or other related disciplines. I envision a corp of procurement professionals who are also professional career arms designers and buyers, trained to understand both the mechanics of weapons systems and the politics of the armed services.

Mr. President, I would point out that in creating such an agency, we should be fully prepared to adequately compensate the procurement professionals employed there. That is why my bill would set up a special salary scale and bonus system based on achievement, to recruit and retain the professional work force that the Agency will attract. Personnel in the Agency would be eligible for higher compensation, and agency managers would be granted greater flexibility in personnel matters. This bill would also require agency members to continue training and development in their assigned fields.

Mr. President, the current investigation into the DOD procurement process is one more example of the massive problem that we face as we attempt to clean up the Defense procurement system. What my bill is designed to do, is to focus on the problem of weapons acquisition on a long term basis; to fundamentally reform the Defense acquisition process to ensure that we begin to make some of the critically needed changes in how we go about producing and purchasing the weapons that are used to defend this country.

The concept of a Civilian Acquisition Agency, which will assume responsibility for the procurement function, will help to alleviate many of the problems that the procurement process is experiencing. I think that it would be appropriate here to mention that the Agency will not take over the common supply procurement function from the Defense Logistics Agency. The CAA, will be strictly limited to procuring weapon systems for DOD.

Mr. President, I would be the first to acknowledge that it is no simple task to develop, produce and manage complex weapon systems and to hold down the cost growth which routinely affects them. If it were, the dozens and dozens of acquisition improvement efforts which have been initiated by virtually every administration would certainly by now have given us a more efficient and well managed acquisition process.

The reform goals have not been achieved, however. In fact, the problems in the acquisition process are as serious today as they have ever been and the public has the perception that the United States really doesn't know how to build dependable, reasonably priced weapon systems. David Packard, former Chairman of the Blue Ribbon Procurement Commission better known as the Packard Commission, was quoted recently as saying that "The system for buying weapons is Mickey Mouse and that contracts might as well be awarded by throwing darts." Packard went on to say that the Department of Defense, the administration, and Congress together have created an environment in which honest and efficient military acquisition is impossible to implement.

The current procurement process is frustrating not only the procurement experts, but the public is beginning to believe that the entire system is rife with corruption. The fact is, that the public's view of Defense matters is greatly influenced by their perceptions of the way in which weapon programs and spare parts purchases are managed. I am concerned, as I know are other Senators, that the public is becoming convinced the Defense Department cannot effectively and honestly manage the Defense acquisition process and hold down program costs. The public's growing disillusionment with the management of the acquisition process is a serious matter and one that I, as a strong proponent of a revitalized Defense, am anxious to see reversed. The job of buying weapons and equipment not only must be done well, the public must truly believe it is being done well and honestly.

Mr. President, the acquisition process has been examined repeatedly over the years. We are all familiar with the many problems cited at one time or another as major factors in cost growth and mismanagement: Poor or overly optimistic cost estimates, "gold-plating", poor testing, lack of competition in contracting and so on.

In outlining the serious problems we face in improving the management of acquisition programs, it becomes apparent to me that the solutions of the past are no longer adequate. I believe we should consider more comprehensive, and far reaching changes, which may threaten the status quo, but could help set the stage for real and lasting improvements.

Our current military service dominated acquisition system results in a confusing morass of different procurement organizations and policies, high turnover or procurement personnel, poor training and experience for the government's work force and almost no accountability for the success or failure of weapons programs. For military offices, managing an acquisition program is not often a career goal and few officers want to stay for a long period of time as a program manager or other procurement official.

A centralized civilian weapons acquisition management agency in DOD would help ensure the continuity of key personnel, reduce duplication and ultimately result in greater economies. Further, procurement is a business function, not a military one. Taking it out of the hands of the services would free up valuable military personnel to be concentrated on true military functions, such as military strategy formulation and contingency planning.

The Acquisition Agency that I am proposing, will be staffed by civilian professionals, trained and prepared to devote their careers to acquisition management. They would direct the acquisition of a weapon system and would be assigned to manage the program for many years, remaining fully accountable for its success or failure.

Such problems as interservice rivalries and military service domination of acquisition also makes it difficult, if not impossible, to implement uniform department wide policies for procurement or to pursue potentially money-saving acquisition strategies such as joint service purchasing of weapons. The morass of different procurement organizations and policies, the high turnover of procurement personnel, the poor training and experience that characterizes the Government's work force, and the lack of accountability for the success or failure of weapons programs are problems my bill seeks to address.

I urge my colleagues to review this proposal, to weigh it against our current procurement system in DOD, and to join with me as the debate begins on how best to create a more effective, less costly approach to securing the weapons to defend our Nation.

Mr. President, I ask that the complete text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 433

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Department of Defense Acquisition Reorganization Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. CENTRALIZATION OF PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY IN THE UNDER SECRETARY OF DEFENSE FOR ACQUISITION

Section 133 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), by striking out clause (1) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) subject to section 2303a of this title, conducting all Department of Defense acquisitions, including construction;"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(f)(1) In planning and conducting a program for the acquisition of a weapon system, the Under Secretary—

"(A) shall consult with and receive information, evaluations, analyses, and advice from the Secretaries of the military departments and the heads of appropriate Defense Agencies with regard to the need and justification for such system;

"(B) shall have final decisionmaking authority for selection of (i) the weapon system for which research and development is to be conducted for the Department of Defense, and (ii) the weapon system to be acquired for the Department of Defense;

"(C) shall carry out functions, consistent with the provisions of this title and applicable acquisition regulations, relating to the research for, development of, and production of the weapon system, including—

"(i) determining the feasibility of conducting research for, development of, and production of such weapon system for two or more military departments;

"(ii) preparing solicitations;

"(iii) evaluating bids and proposals;

"(iv) selecting contractors;

"(v) managing the acquisition of the weapon system;

"(vi) establishing and improving programs and methods that foster maximum cost control and enhance productivity and manufacturing operations;

"(vii) establishing schedule goals and determining compliance with such goals;

"(viii) making contract payments;

"(ix) making contract changes;

"(x) modifying the weapon system acquisition program; and

"(xi) terminating contracts;

"(D) during the conduct of the weapon system acquisition program for a military department, shall consult on a continuing basis with the Secretary of such department and shall request the advice and comments of such Secretary on the conduct of the acquisition; and

"(E) shall be the sole representative of the Department of Defense in negotiating with representatives of the private sector in the acquisition of the weapon system.

"(2) In this section, the term 'weapon system' includes a subsystem and any component related to the weapon system.

"(g) The Under Secretary shall—

"(1) determine funding priorities for acquisitions of weapon systems for the Department of Defense; and

"(2) in connection with the preparation of each request for an appropriation for weapon systems acquisitions for the Department of Defense under section 1108 of title 31, submit to the Secretary of Defense a proposed appropriation request reflecting the priorities determined pursuant to clause (1).".

SEC. 3. DEFENSE ACQUISITION AGENCY

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—(1) Part IV of subtitle A of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 135 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 136—DEFENSE ACQUISITION AGENCY

"Sec.
"2281. Establishment.
"2282. Duties.
"2283. Civilian personnel.
"2284. Members of the armed forces.

"§ 2281. Establishment

"There is a Defense Acquisition Agency in the Department of Defense. The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition is the head of the Defense Acquisition Agency.

"§ 2282. Duties

"The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition shall conduct weapon system acquisition programs through the Defense Acquisitions Agency.

"§ 2283. Civilian personnel

"(a) CIVILIAN PERSONNEL SYSTEM.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall establish by regulation a special personnel system for civilian employees of the Defense Acquisition Agency. The regulations establishing such system shall—

"(A) establish the rates of pay for employees of the Defense Acquisition Agency not to exceed the maximum rate of basic pay payable for the Senior Executive Service under section 5382 of title 5;

"(B) provide for removal of an employee of the Defense Acquisition Agency to a position outside the Defense Acquisition Agency consistent with the terms, conditions, and procedures provided in section 3592 of such title for removal of a career appointee in the Senior Executive Service to a position outside the Senior Executive Service, except that any hearing or appeal to which an employee of the Defense Acquisition Agency is entitled shall be held and decided pursuant to procedures prescribed by the Secretary of Defense in such regulations;

"(C) provide for removal or suspension of an employee of the Defense Acquisition Agency for a period of more than 14 days consistent with subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 7543 of title 5 (relating to the removal or suspension for such a period of a career appointee in the Senior Executive Service), except that any hearing or appeal to which an employee of the Defense Acquisition Agency is entitled shall be held and decided pursuant to procedures prescribed by the Secretary of Defense in such regulations;

"(D) permit the payment of performance awards to employees of the Defense Acquisition Agency consistent with the provisions applicable to performance awards under section 5384 of title 5; and

"(E) establish career recruiting and training (including high-technology training) programs for the Defense Acquisition Agency that promote (i) the recruitment of personnel capable of attaining expertise in a broad range of acquisition functions, (ii) the attainment of such expertise by each acquisition employee of the agency, and (iii) the retention of employees who attain such expertise.

"(2) Subject to paragraph (1), the Secretary of Defense may—

"(A) make applicable to employees of the Defense Acquisition Agency any of the provisions of title 5 that are applicable to applicants for or members of the Senior Executive Service; and

"(B) appoint, promote, and assign individuals to acquisition positions in the Defense Acquisition Agency without regard to the provisions of such title governing appointment, promotions, and assignments for personnel in the competitive service.

"(b) QUALIFICATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall make appointments to acquisition positions in the Defense Acquisition Agency from among applicants who, by reason of education, experience, training, and performance on relevant examinations, are best qualified to perform the duties of that agency.

"(c) PERFORMANCE MANAGEMENT AND RECOGNITION.—The Secretary of Defense may establish and administer a performance management and recognition system for such employees of the Defense Acquisition Agency as the Secretary considers appropriate. Such system shall be consistent with the purposes set out in section 5401 of title 5 and with subsection (a)(1)(D) of this section.

"(d) ASSIGNMENTS.—The Secretary of Defense may assign and reassign an employee of the Defense Acquisition Agency to any position in that agency in which such employee is qualified to serve, as determined by the Secretary taking into consideration the needs of the agency.

"(e) INAPPLICABILITY OF OTHER PERSONNEL LAW.—The provisions of the personnel system established for civilian employees of the Defense Acquisition Agency pursuant to this subsection shall apply to such employees in lieu of the provisions of any personnel system relating to pay, removal to another position, adverse personnel actions, payment of performance awards, appointments, performance management and recognition, and assignments that, except for this subsection, would otherwise apply to such employees.

"§ 2284. Members of the armed forces

"A member of the armed forces may be detailed to the Defense Acquisition Agency to participate in the conduct of a weapon system acquisition program.".

(2) The tables of chapters at the beginning of subtitle A of title 10, United States Code, and at the beginning of part IV of such subtitle, are each amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 135 the following new item:

"136. Defense Acquisition Agency..... 2281".

(b) TERMINATION OF PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY OF MILITARY DEPARTMENTS.—(1) Section 2302(1) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out "the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Air Force,".

(2) Section 2303(a) of such title is amended—

(A) by striking out paragraphs (2), (3), and (4); and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (5) and (6) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively.

(c) TRANSITION PROVISION.—To the extent practicable, the Secretary of Defense shall make appointments to acquisition positions in the Defense Acquisition Agency under section 2283 of title 10, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)) from among the best qualified civilians serving in acquisition positions in the Department of Defense during the implementation of the provisions of this Act and the amendments made by this Act.

SEC. 4. RESPONSIBILITY FOR DETERMINING PROCUREMENT NEEDS

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 137 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 2303 the following new section:

"§ 2303a. Determinations of procurement needs

"(a) MILITARY DEPARTMENTS.—The Secretary of each military department shall determine and define the procurement needs of that department and report such needs to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition.

"(b) DEFENSE AGENCIES.—The head of each Defense Agency shall determine and define the procurement needs of that agency and report such needs to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition.

"(c) FINALITY OF DETERMINATIONS.—The procurement needs reported to the Under Secretary of Defense pursuant to subsections (a) and (b) may not be revised by the Secretary of Defense or the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 2303 the following:

"2303a. Determinations of procurement needs.".

SEC. 5. REVIEW OF MAJOR DEFENSE ACQUISITION PROGRAMS

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 144 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 2439. Approval of program stages

"(a) PROGRAM REVIEW.—(1) The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition shall review each major defense acquisition program before such program proceeds into each of the following stages:

"(A) Concept exploration.

"(B) Demonstration and validation.

"(C) Full-scale development.

"(D) Production.

"(2) The review of each major defense acquisition program required by paragraph (1) shall include an evaluation of each of the following:

"(A) The plans and requirements for such program.

"(B) The need for the system to be acquired under such program.

"(C) In the case of a program for the acquisition of a weapon system for two or more military departments, the extent to which there is a commonality of parts and components among the systems to be acquired for such military departments.

"(D) The complexity and practicality of such program.

"(b) LIMITATION RELATING TO APPROVAL OF PROGRAM STAGE.—Funds may not be obligated or expended with respect to a stage of a major defense acquisition program specified in clauses (A)–(D) of subsection (a)(1) unless the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition has reviewed the program for such stage as required by subsection (a) and, based on such review, approved the program for such stage.

"(c) NONDELEGABILITY.—The Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition may not delegate any duty under this section to the Secretary of a military department.".

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 144 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"2439. Approval of program stages.".

SEC. 6. SAVINGS PROVISIONS

(a) CONTINUED EFFECTIVENESS OF ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS.—All contracts, orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, grants, certificates, licenses, and privileges—

(1) which have been issued, made, granted, or allowed to become effective by the Secretary or other officer or employee of a military department, or by the head or other officer or employee of a Defense Agency of the Department of Defense, or by a court of competent jurisdiction, in connection with any acquisition activity of a military department or a Defense Agency, and

(2) which are in effect on the effective date of this Act, shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, superseddate of this Act, shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or revoked in accordance with law by the Secretary of Defense, the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, or another authorized official, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

involving a claim or application, in connection with any acquisition activity of a military department that is pending before any military department on the effective date of this Act.

(B) Orders may be issued in any such proceeding, appeals may be taken therefrom, and payments may be made pursuant to such orders, as if this Act had not been enacted. An order issued in any such proceeding shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or revoked by the Secretary of Defense or the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(C) Nothing in this paragraph prohibits the discontinuance or modification of any such proceeding under the same terms and conditions and to the same extent that such proceeding could have been discontinued or modified if this Act had not been enacted.

(2) The Secretary of Defense may prescribe regulations providing for the orderly transfer of proceedings continued under paragraph (1) to the Secretary of Defense or to the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition.

By Mr. REID (for himself, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. SYMMS):

S. 435. A bill to amend section 118 of the Internal Revenue Code to provide for certain exemptions from certain rules for determining contributions in aid of construction; to the Committee on Finance.

TREATMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS ON AID OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this Congress and this country are faced with some challenging problems.

At the forefront of our concerns is the lack of affordable housing.

The ability of Americans to provide a roof over the heads of themselves and their families is progressively weakening.

The affordability crisis among prospective first-time homebuyers across the Nation is the worst it has been since the end of World War II.

How can we rectify this situation? How can we restore a basic standard of living to all Americans? Today, I am proposing a bill that responds to this Nation's housing needs.

I am joined by my distinguished colleagues, Senator JOHN DANFORTH, of Missouri, Senator BOB GRAHAM, of Florida, and Senator STEVE SYMMS, of Idaho.

We propose a change to a little-known provision in the Tax Reform Act of 1986. This change will not call for the Federal Government to acquire, construct or rehabilitate affordable housing.

But it will help developers build the houses—it will help prospective homeowners afford what to some is little more than a dream.

Our bill will reinstate the tax exemption for contributions-in-aid-of-construction. In many cases, when housing is being constructed, builders extend gas and water mains and electric lines into their developments. They then turn this property over to the utilities without charge, or they pay the utilities to install the lines themselves. The utilities receive this financial or property compensation from the developers for establishing service to the new homes and buildings.

Prior to 1986, these contributions were not taxable as income. But in 1986, the tax reform law changed that principle. The impact of this seemingly innocuous technical change is significant.

It increases the cost of housing by as much as $2,000 for a new home.

By accepting this tax, we are undermining our basic but paramount aim to promote affordable housing. This new tax means increased revenue for the Federal Treasury. But at what cost?

The intention of the tax was to place part of the new corporate tax burden on utilities. This may have made sense in theory, when the 1986 tax reform bill was being drafted. But it has failed miserably in practice. Why? Because utilities pass the tax onto consumers in the form of higher rates.

If the tax burden is shifted to builders, they merely incorporate that extra cost into the purchase price of their homes. The buck stops, once again, at the prospective or current homeowner. A tax intended for a corporation has instead fallen on consumers.

The tax has led to some unusual maneuvering which takes its toll on the homeowner. I was first alerted to such problems by my constituents. They told me that in Reno, NV, the water utility obtains rights to deliver water from the State.

These water rights are considered taxable income, even though they have no fair market value and cannot be depreciated. The additional costs borne by the utility are passed on to Reno homebuilders, schools, and homeowners.

Texas also provides an interesting example. There are over 800 small, investor-owned utilities in Texas. They can't afford the extra tax, so they pass the cost back to developers.

Some developers have chosen to circumvent this cost by creating their own utilities and drilling their own wells. The result is a massive decentralized network of small utilities. This is not good because it leads to uneconomical, inefficient utility service that proves costly and frustrating for the homeowner.

Added taxation is not the solution to the affordability problem. Our bill to restore the tax exemption is not a solution in itself. But it is certainly a move toward a solution.

A companion bill has been introduced in the House by my good friend and colleague from California, Congressman BOB MATSUI. His legislation enjoys the support of numerous Members, many of whom serve on the Ways and Means Committee.

The legislation is also supported by a wide range of organizations, including the National Association of Regulatory Utility Commissioners, the National Association of State Utility Consumer Advocates, the National Association of Water Companies, the National Association of Homebuilders, the American Public Power Association, the Consumer Federation of America, the Edison Electric Institute, the American Public Transportation Association, and the National Association of Realtors.

We hope to generate an equally strong level of support from our colleagues in the Senate.

Federal expenditures to stimulate production of affordable housing have declined 70 percent since 1981.

Our bill to restore the tax exemption for contributions-in-aid-of-construction is not a spending measure, but its impact will help stimulate affordable housing.

Its impact will increase the likelihood that all Americans who so desire can purchase and maintain a place to live.

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues today in originally cosponsoring a bill that addresses a provision in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 law regarding contributions-in-aid-of-construction.

The issue created by the 1986 Tax Act is as follows: The developer contributes property or cash to the utility and under the Tax Reform Act of 1986 this creates a taxable transaction. The utility then generally charges the developer for income tax burden, created by this contribution. This charge is itself a taxable transaction to the utility, the utility again charges the developer for the income tax burden now created by this second charge. This creates a pyramid of taxable transactions.

Prior to 1987, contributions-in-aid-of-construction [CIAC] received by an investor-owned utility were not included in the taxable income of the utility. Rather, they were considered capital contributions and given a zero basis—meaning they were not subject to depreciation. Effective in 1987, the Tax Reform Act requires that utilities include all money and property received as contributions-in-aid-of-construction in their gross income.

In order to meet the income tax burden created by the virtue of receiving the CIAC, the utility has the option of raising all of the customers' utility rates or causing the contributing developer to bear the burden of the additionally created income tax. This burden inflates the costs of rent, home purchases, consumption of utility services, and development in general.

Data from the National Association of Homebuilders indicates that in some cases, this new tax burden has caused an increase in the price of new homes by as much as $2,000 per unit. This cost is passed on to the homebuyer, and thus, makes worse this Nation's housing affordability crisis. Frequently, the pre-sale burden is so great on the builder that production must be curtailed.

Taxation of contributions-in-aid-of-construction is wrong in concept, because it takes capital formations, creating a disincentive to economic growth. It is a serious problem in States like Florida where rapid development has outstripped the capacity of municipal and county-owned utilities.

Not only have residential and commercial developers felt the negative impact of the CIAC tax, which in turn affects Florida's homebuyers and businesses, utilities have also been affected. I fear that we could see an increasing negative impact for consumers in the long run because of the potential for higher housing costs and utility bills. The Florida Public Service Commission has written to me with their support for all of the above reasons. And have reiterated that one possible result of the CIAC tax is a general increase across the board for all consumers for their utility bills.

This bill will restore the original pre-1986 language regarding contributions-in-aid-of-construction. I urge my colleagues to closely examine the situation created by the 1986 tax law, and favorably consider the bill as a reasonable and fair remedy.●

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. SIMON, Mr. PELL, Mr. DODD, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. LEVIN, and Mr. KENNEDY):

S. 436. A bill to strengthen the protection available to employees against reprisals for disclosing information, to protect the public health and safety, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EMPLOYEE HEALTH AND SAFETY WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act. This bill is designed to protect workers from reprisal when they blow the whistle on unlawful or dangerous activities that threaten the public health and safety. Too often, these courageous employees are discharged, demoted, harassed or intimidated for simply telling the truth. The fear of reprisal has silenced many workers who otherwise could help Federal authorities enforce health and safety laws.

Protecting the public health and safety is in everyone's interest. It is not a partisan issue. I am proud that Senator GRASSLEY of Iowa is the lead cosponsor of this legislation. He has been a consistent champion for whistleblowers in the Senate not only in the health and safety area but with regard to civil service reform, defense fraud and false claims against the Government. I have worked closely with Senator GRASSLEY to draft a bill that provides necessary protections for workers and includes procedural safeguards to ensure expedited fair resolution of whistleblower complaints. Senator GRASSLEY and I are joined by Senators SIMON, PELL, DODD, MIKULSKI, HARKIN, LEVIN, and KENNEDY as original cosponsors of the bill.

Punishing workers for reporting health and safety violations is intolerable. It is a fundamental principle of good Government that citizens should assist in the enforcement of our laws by reporting illegal activities to the proper authorities. But if we expect workers to help us enforce Federal health and safety laws, we must do more than provide public praise and encouragement. Employee health and safety whistleblowers need and deserve effective Federal laws—laws with real teeth—to protect them from reprisal. That is what this bill is all about. It will prohibit employers from firing, harassing, intimidating, demoting or blacklisting employees for reporting violations of Federal health and safety laws.

The Administrative Conference of the United States, in its detailed study of Federal protection for employee health and safety whistleblowers, found that the current system is a patchwork collection of laws with glaring loopholes and inconsistencies. The bill we are introducing today incorporates a number of the conference's recommendations. It closes the loopholes in employee protection and alleviates several of the procedural inconsistencies.

Because of current gaps in coverage, millions of workers, in such critical public safety areas as aviation, food processing, nuclear weapons production, drug and medical device manufacturing and pesticide application have no Federal statutory whistleblower protection. Employees of Government contractors and certain State and local employees who report health and safety violations are excluded from coverage in most cases.

This is no theoretical problem. It is happening every day to real people who are trying to do the right thing:

A number of pilots, including several helicopter pilots who fly emergency medical flights, have been fired summarily for reporting unsafe aircraft to the Federal Aviation Administration.

I heard harrowing testimony last year from a woman who was harassed and intimidated out of a job for cooperating with Federal meat inspectors in an investigation that uncovered sanitary conditions at a chicken processing plant that would make your stomach turn.

In my own State of Ohio, a technician at a nuclear weapons facility was fired for reporting radiation safety hazards to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

A foreign company fired its import manager who reported to the Food and Drug Administration that the company's artificial kidneys did not meet American safety standards.

In perhaps the most celebrated incident, engineers working for the Government contractor that built the solid rocket motors for the space shuttle were demoted after testifying before Congress about their unheeded safety warnings in advance of the Challenger disaster.

Moreover, gaps in coverage are not the sole problem. Those workers who are protected under current Federal law face unrealistic time limits for filing complaints. For example, a construction inspector who was fired for reporting falsified safety records to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission lost his claim because he failed to file a complaint within 30 days. In addition, the Department of Labor, which has the responsibility to process the majority of whistleblower complaints, too often lacks the authority to conduct meaningful investigations.

The Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act will improve the Federal protection system by: First, closing existing gaps in coverage so that workers in all industries—including employees of Government contractors and certain public employees—who currently have no statutory remedy against reprisal will have some protection; second, creating a uniform 180-day statute of limitations for filing health and safety whistleblower complaints; third, authorizing the Secretary of Labor to issue subpoenas to investigate whistleblower complaints; and fourth, ensuring that the underlying health and safety issues reported by the whistleblowers are referred to the appropriate Federal agency for further investigation.

Let me be clear about the limited scope of this bill. With the exception of the extended statute of limitations and the authorization of subpoena power, which were both specifically called for by the Administrative Conference covered by current Federal statute. For example, a coal miner protected under the whistleblower provisions of the Mine Safety and Health Act or a trucker covered under the Surface Transportation Act would not be affected by the bill. Those workers, and millions of others, already have Federal statutory remedies against whistleblower reprisal. This bill merely provides whistleblowers who have been left out in the cold a Federal statutory remedy patterned after current law.

We are all a little safer thanks to the efforts of employee health and safety whistleblowers. As a matter of justice and equity, we owe those whistleblowers at least an opportunity to protect themselves from reprisal for their unselfish acts.

Senator GRASSLEY and I intend to move this bill quickly through the Senate. The Labor Subcommittee will hold hearings on the bill on March 7. Representatives HAWKINS, chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, intends to introduce companion legislation soon in the House. We are eager to work with the House and with the Bush administration so that the bill can become law this year.

I urge all my colleagues to join us in supporting this bipartisan good government legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the tact of the bill, a summary of the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 436

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) employees who report unlawful or hazardous activities are performing an important public service by helping ensure the health and safety of workers and the general public;

(2) employees should be able to report unlawful or hazardous activities without fear of reprisal; and

(3) employees who make such reports are not adequately protected against reprisal by the current Federal laws designed to protect private sector whistleblowers.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to strengthen and improve protection for employees who report unlawful or hazardous activities, to prevent retaliation against employees, and to improve the health and safety of workers and the general public by—

(1) extending whistleblower protection regarding health and safety matters to all employees not currently protected by Federal law;

(2) creating a uniform statute of limitations for all whistleblower complaints by private sector employees;

(3) ensuring that the Secretary of Labor has subpoena power to investigate whistleblower complaints;

(4) providing for a limited private right of action for certain whistleblower complaints; and

(5) ensuring that reports of unlawful or hazardous activities are referred to the appropriate Federal agencies for investigation.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) COMMERCE.—The term "commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several States, or between a State and any place outside thereof, or within the District of Columbia, or a possession of the United States, or between points in the same State but through a point outside thereof.

(2) EMPLOYEE.—The term "employee" means any individual who is employed by an employer, or who is a former employee of an employer, to the extent that—

(A) such individual is discharged or discriminated against for any of the conduct described in section 4; and

(B) no remedy is available to such individual for such discharge or discrimination under an existing Federal whistleblower protection law.

(3) EMPLOYER.—The term "employer"—

(A) means a person engaged in a business affecting commerce who has employees;

(B) includes—

(i) a State or political subdivision of a State, or an interstate governmental agency; and

(ii) an agent of an employer and an employer of an employee; and

(C) does not include the United States, except for a government corporation (as defined in section 103(1) of title 5, United States Code) and the United States Postal Service.

(4) EXISTING FEDERAL WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION LAW.—The term "existing Federal whistleblower protection law" means those provisions of Federal law that protect employees against discharge or discrimination for any of the conduct described in section 4, that are contained in—

(A) section 942 of Department of Defense Authorization Act of 1987 (10 U.S.C. 2409);

(B) section 23 of the Toxic Substances Control Act (15 U.S.C. 2622);

(C) section 211 of the Asbestos Hazard Emergency Response Act of 1986 (15 U.S.C. 2651);

(D) section 11(c) of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (29 U.S.C. 660(c));

(E) section 505(a) of the Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act (29 U.S.C. 1855(a));

(F) section 105(c) of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 815(c));

(G) section 703 of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 1293);

(H) section 507 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1367);

(I) section 1450 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300j-9);

(J) section 210 of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5851);

(K) section 7001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6971);

(M) section 110 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9610);

(N) section 212 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 441);

(O) section 7 of the International Safe Container Act (46 U.S.C. 1506); or

(P) section 405 of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (49 U.S.C. App. 2305).

(5) FEDERAL AGENCY.—The term "Federal agency" means each authority of the Government of the United States, whether or not it is within or subject to review by another agency, or any interstate governmental agency or commission. For purposes of section 4, the term includes each authority of the Government of a State or a political subdivision of a State that administers or enforces a Federal health or safety law.

(6) FEDERAL HEALTH OR SAFETY LAW.—The term "Federal health or safety law" means any Federal law, or any portion thereof, including any Federal regulation, rule, or order implementing such law or portion thereof, a primary purpose or effect of which is to protect health or safety. The term includes a State law, regulation, rule, or order, enacted as part of a State plan established to carry out a Federal health or safety law.

(7) INVESTIGATION OFFICE.—The term "investigation office" means the office or unit created or designated within the Department of Labor pursuant to section 5(c)(1).

(8) PERSON.—The term "person" means one or more individuals, partnerships, associations, corporations, business trusts, legal representatives, or any organized group of persons.

(9) PROCEEDING.—The term "proceeding" means a trial, hearing, investigation, inquiry, inspection, administrative rulemaking, or adjudication involving a Federal agency.

(10) RESPONDENT.—The term "respondent" means a person named in a complaint as a respondent.

(11) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Labor.

(12) STATE.—The term "State" means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or any other Territory or possession of the United States.

SEC. 4. EMPLOYEE PROTECTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—No person shall discharge or in any other manner discriminate against any employee because the employee—

(1) discloses, or demonstrates an intent to disclose, an activity, policy, or practice that the employee believes evidences a violation of a Federal health or safety law;

(2) initiates, assists, or participates, or demonstrates an intent to initiate, assist, or participate, in a proceeding with respect to—

(A) an activity, policy, or practice that the employee believes evidences a violation of a Federal health or safety law;

(B) enactment, adoption, promulgation, issuance, or amendment of a Federal health or safety law; or

(C) administration or enforcement of a Federal health or safety law or of this Act; or

(3) refuses to participate in an activity, policy, or practice when—

(A) such participation constitutes a violation of a Federal health or safety law; or

(B)(i) the employee has a reasonable apprehension of serious injury to the employee, other employees, or the public due to such participation;

(ii) the activity, policy or practice causing the employee's apprehension of such injury is of such a nature that a reasonable person, under the circumstances then confronting the employee, would conclude there is a bona fide danger of an accident, injury, or serious impairment of health or safety, resulting from participation in the activity, policy, or practice; and

(iii) before refusing to participate, the employee, where possible, sought, and was unable to obtain, a correction of the dangerous activity, policy, or practice.

(b) WAIVER.—Except as provided in section 5(l) or pursuant to any court supervised settlement agreement, an agreement by an employee, express or implied, written or oral, purporting to waive or modify the rights of the employee under this Act shall be void as contrary to public policy.

(c) EXEMPTION.—This Act shall not apply under circumstances where an employee acted without direction from the employee's employer, deliberately causing a violation of a Federal health or safety law.

SEC. 5. REMEDY.

(a) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.—The statute of limitations for filing a complaint pursuant to this Act or an existing Federal whistleblower protection law shall be 180 days after the later of the date—

(1) an alleged violation occurs;

(2) the discharge or other discrimination has taken effect; or

(3) the employee first learns or reasonably should have learned of the violation.

(b) COMPLAINT.—

(1) FILING.—Any employee who believes the employee has been discharged or otherwise discriminated against by any person in violation of section 4 may, within the period prescribed in subsection (a), file (or have filed by any person on the employee's behalf) a complaint with the Secretary alleging such violation. Except as provided in section 4(a)(3)(B)(iii), the complaint may be filed without regard to exhaustion of any other remedies.

(2) COPY.—On receipt of a complaint, the Secretary shall cause a copy of the complaint to be served on the respondent and on any Federal agency that may have jurisdiction over the activity, policy, or practice alleged in the complaint.

(c) INVESTIGATION.—

(1) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—The Secretary shall create or designate an identifiable office or unit within the Department of Labor that shall be responsible for investigation of complaints filed under subsection (b). The Secretary shall refer all such complaints immediately to the investigation office.

(2) IN GENERAL.—Within 60 days of the receipt of a complaint filed under subsection (b), the investigation office shall conduct an investigation, determine whether there is reasonable cause to believe the complaint has merit, and make findings of fact. If there is reasonable cause to believe a violation of this Act has occurred, the investigation office shall accompany the findings of fact with a preliminary order providing the relief prescribed by subsection (i), including immediate reinstatement of the employee pending a final order on the complaint.

(3) HEARING.—The findings and any preliminary order issued by the investigation office shall be served on all parties to the investigation and shall include a statement of the right of any party to request a hearing pursuant to subsection (d). Where a hearing is not timely requested, the findings and any preliminary order issued by the investigation office shall be deemed the final order of the Secretary and shall not be subject to judicial review.

(4) HEARING PROCEDURE.—In all hearings conducted under this Act, once the complainant has established by a preponderance of the evidence that an activity protected by this Act was a factor in the alleged discharge or discrimination, the burden of proof shall be on the respondent to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged discharge or discrimination would have occurred even if the employee had not engaged in activities protected by this Act.

(d) HEARING REQUEST.—

(1) TIMING.—The complainant or the respondent may request a hearing before an administrative law judge—

(A) within 30 days of receipt of the findings or preliminary order of the investigation office; or

(B) if no findings have been issued on or before the 60th day of receipt of the complaint, within 30 days thereafter.

(2) JURISDICTION.—The jurisdiction of the investigation office to make findings or issue a preliminary order shall cease on the filing of a request by the complainant for a hearing or the expiration of the period for filing such a request, whichever occurs first. Once the investigation office has lost jurisdiction to make findings or issue a preliminary order, any investigative material compiled by the investigating office in connection with the investigation shall be made available to the complainant or the respondent on request, subject to section 552a of title 5, United States Code.

(3) FILING WITH DEPARTMENT.—Any request for a hearing shall be filed with the investigation office. The investigation office shall file the request with the Office of Administrative Law Judges in the Department of Labor within 5 days of receipt.

(4) NO STAY OF REINSTATEMENT.—Such a request shall not operate to stay any reinstatement remedy contained in a preliminary order issued by the investigation office.

(5) NO FINDINGS.—If the investigation office has failed to make findings within the time period prescribed, the complainant may include in the hearing request a request to the administrative law judge for a preliminary order for immediate reinstatement.

(e) INTERVENTION.—

(1) VIOLATION DETERMINED BY INVESTIGATION OFFICE.—If the investigation office has determined there has been a violation of section 4, the investigation office shall intervene on behalf of the complainant in the proceedings authorized under this section.

(2) VIOLATION NOT DETERMINED.—In all other cases, within 15 days after receipt of a request for a hearing, the investigation office shall make a determination in writing whether, in its discretion, to intervene on behalf of the complainant.

(3) REPRESENTATION.—Such determination or the intervention by the investigation office shall not preclude the complainant or any other person on behalf of the complainant from representing the complainant in the proceedings authorized under this section.

(f) SUBPOENA AND RULEMAKING.—

(1) SUBPOENA POWER.—For purposes of any hearing or investigation provided for in this Act, or any hearing or investigation conducted pursuant to an existing Federal whistleblower protection law where the Secretary has authority to conduct investigations or hearings, the provisions of sections 9 and 10 (relating to attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 49 and 50) shall be applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary.

(2) RULEMAKING AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall promulgate such rules and regulations as may be appropriate to administer this Act.

(g) HEARING PROCEDURE.—

(1) TIME FOR COMPLETION.—Any hearing requested pursuant to subsection (d) shall be conducted by an administrative law judge and completed within 180 days of receipt of the request for a hearing by the Office of Administrative Law Judges.

(2) NOTICE.—The parties shall have a reasonable opportunity for prehearing discovery and shall be given written notice of the time and place of the hearing at least 15 days prior to the hearing.

(3) ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEDURE.—The hearing shall be subject to the requirements of section 554 of title 5, United States Code.

(4) TRIAL DE NOVO.—The hearing shall be de novo, except that any preliminary order directing immediate reinstatement shall be enforceable.

(5) DECISION.—Within 60 days after the conclusion of the hearing on the record, or within 240 days after receipt of the hearing request by the investigation office, whichever is sooner, the administrative law judge shall issue a decision containing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the remedy ordered, if any. The decision shall be served on the Secretary and on all parties to the hearing and shall include a statement to the parties of their right to appeal.

(h) ADMINISTRATIVE APPEAL.—

(1) REVIEW.—Any decision issued pursuant to subsection (g) shall be the final order of the Secretary subject to judicial review pursuant to subsection (k) unless a party petitions the Secretary for review or the Secretary issues an order of review within 30 days after the issuance of the decision.

(2) TIME FOR REVIEW.—Within 60 days after receipt of the petition for review or issuance of an order of review, the Secretary shall issue a final order, based on the record and the decision of the administrative law judge, which shall be served on all parties. If the Secretary does not issue a final order within the period prescribed by this subsection, the decision of the administrative law judge shall become the final order of the Secretary.

(i) REMEDIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If, in response to a complaint filed under subsection (b), the Secretary, investigation office, or administrative law judge determines that a violation of this Act occurred, the Secretary, investigation office, or administrative law judge shall order—

(A) the person who committed the violation to take affirmative action to abate the violation;

(B) such person to reinstate the complainant to the complainant's former position, if reinstatement is sought, together with compensation, including back pay and lost benefits, terms, conditions, and privileges of the complainant's employment;

(C) compensatory damages; and

(D) such equitable relief as is necessary to correct any violation of this Act or to make the complainant whole.

(2) COSTS.—On the issuance or designation of a final order of the Secretary sustaining the complainant's complaint, the Secretary, at the request of the complainant, may assess against the respondent a sum equal to aggregate amount of all costs and expenses (including attorney's fees) reasonably incurred, as determined by the Secretary, by the complainant for or in connection with, the bringing of the complaint on which the order was issued.

(j) PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If no decision by an administrative law judge is issued within the period prescribed by subsection (g), the complainant may file a civil action against the respondent within 60 days for damages and declaratory and equitable relief in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction over the parties, without regard to the amount in controversy, the citizenship of the parties, or further exhaustion of any administrative remedies provided in this Act, except that the court shall not take jurisdiction if the decision of the administrative law judge is issued before the filing of any civil action. The complainant may not file a civil action against the respondent under this subsection once the filing period has expired.

(2) LOSS OF JURISDICTION.—The jurisdiction of the Administrative Law Judge and the Secretary shall cease upon the filing of such civil action. The filing of such civil action shall not operate to stay any preliminary orders, including any orders for immediate reinstatement, issued by the investigation office or by the administrative law judge, unless otherwise ordered by the court.

(3) NOTICE.—On expiration of the period prescribed by subsection (g), the Secretary shall notify the complainant of the opportunity to file a civil action pursuant to this subsection.

(4) COSTS.—On the issuance or designation of a final order of the court sustaining the complainant's complaint, the court, at the request of the complainant, may assess against the respondent a sum equal to aggregate amount of all costs and expenses (including attorney's fees) reasonably incurred, as determined by the court, by the complainant for or in connection with, the bringing of the complaint on which the order was issued.

(5) EVIDENTIARY RECORD.—If the complainant files a civil action within the period prescribed in this subsection, either party to that action may request that the Administrative Law Judge provide the complete evidentiary record compiled during the administrative hearing to the district court. Provision of the evidentiary record shall not preclude either party from supplementing the record before the district court.

(k) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any person adversely affected or aggrieved by a final order issued pursuant to subsection (h) may obtain review of the order in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the violation allegedly occurred. The petition for review must be filed within 60 days after the issuance or designation of the final order. The review shall be conducted in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code. The filing of a petition for review under this subsection shall not, unless ordered in accordance with the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, operate as a stay of the order. A final order of the Secretary with respect to which review could have been obtained under this paragraph shall not be subject to judicial review in any criminal or other civil proceeding.

(l) SETTLEMENT OR ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION.—

(1) SETTLEMENT.—On receipt of a complaint pursuant to subsection (b), the investigation office shall attempt to reach a settlement between the complainant and the respondent. The Secretary, investigation office, or administrative law judge shall not enter into a settlement terminating a proceeding without the participation and written consent of the complainant. Any settlement order issued pursuant to this subsection shall be a final order of the Secretary and shall include findings that the settlement is fair, adequate, reasonable, and in the public interest.

(2) ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION.—While the complaint is pending within the Department of Labor, the Secretary may use alternative means of dispute resolution to resolve the complaint, but the parties must consent, in writing, before the Secretary may employ such means.

(m) TIME COMPUTATIONS.—Except as otherwise provided in this Act, for purposes of a proceeding on a complaint, all time computations shall be made in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

(n) POSTING.—Each employer subject to this Act shall post and keep posted in conspicuous places on its premises a notice to be prepared or approved by the Secretary setting forth such information as the Secretary considers appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 6. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) BY THE SECRETARY.—Whenever a person has failed to comply with an order issued under this Act, the Secretary may file a civil action in the United States district court for the district in which the violation is alleged to have occurred to enforce such order. In an action brought under this subsection, the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant all appropriate relief, including injunctive and declaratory relief and compensatory and exemplary damages.

(b) BY THE PARTIES.—Any person on whose behalf an order is issued pursuant to this Act may commence a civil action against the person named in the order to require compliance with such order. The appropriate United States district court shall have jurisdiction, without regard to the amount in controversy or the citizenship of the parties, to enforce such order. On issuance of an order on behalf of any person seeking enforcement under this subsection, the court may award costs of litigation (including reasonable attorney and expert witness fees) to the person seeking enforcement.

SEC. 7. COMPLAINT REFERRAL.

(a) REFERRAL.—On issuance of a final order (including an order approving a settlement pursuant to section 5(1)) by the Secretary, investigation office, or administrative law judge, the Secretary shall cause a copy of such order, but only the relevant portions of a settlement order, to be served on each Federal agency that may have jurisdiction over the activity, policy, or practice alleged in the complaint. Any such Federal agency shall take appropriate action with respect to the activity, policy, or practice. Within 30 days after taking such action any Federal agency shall inform the parties to the complaint filed under section 5(b) of any action taken and shall inform the relevant committees of Congress. If appropriate, the Federal agency shall inform the parties and Congress in the form of a report.

(b) OTHER INVESTIGATIVE AUTHORITY.—Subject to section 8, nothing in this section shall limit the authority of any Federal agency under any other law.

SEC. 8. EFFECT ON OTHER RIGHTS AND REMEDIES.

(a) FEDERAL RIGHTS AND REMEDIES.—It is the express intent of Congress to supersede an existing Federal whistleblower protection law only insofar as such law—

(1) may provide a statute of limitations for filing complaints that is less than 180 days; and

(2) does not authorize subpoena power for the Secretary as provided in section 5(f).

(b) STATE RIGHTS AND REMEDIES.—The rights and remedies provided to employees by this Act are in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other rights and remedies of the employees provided under State law, and are not intended to alter or effect such rights and remedies.

(c) CONTRACTUAL RIGHTS AND REMEDIES.—The rights and remedies provided to employees by this Act are in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other contractual rights and remedies of the employees, and are not intended to alter or effect such rights and remedies.

SEC. 9. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This Act shall become effective on the date of enactment.

(b) PENDING CASES.—This Act shall apply only to those complaints filed on or after the effective date of this Act.

SUMMARY OF EMPLOYEE HEALTH AND SAFETY WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT

Employees who "blow the whistle" on employers by reporting unlawful or hazardous activities need protection. These courageous individuals should be honored as heroes for protecting the public health and safety. Instead, too often they are discharged, demoted, harassed or intimidated for telling the truth. Worse, many workers are afraid to report unlawful activities because of the threat of personal reprisal.

The current federal statutory scheme to protect employee whistleblowers is a patchwork collection of over a dozen laws. Millions of workers, in such critical industries as aviation, food processing, drug and medical device manufacturing, and pesticide application, have no protection under these laws. Those workers who are protected face unrealistic time limits for filing complaints and the administrative agencies lack the authority to investigate complaints most effectively.

The Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act would improve the current federal protection system by (1) closing existing gaps in coverage so that employees in all industries are protected; (2) creating a uniform 180-day statute of limitations so employees can have adequate time to file a complaint; (3) granting subpoena power to the Secretary of Labor to ensure effective investigation of complaints; and (4) ensuring that the underlying health or safety complaints are referred to the appropriate federal agency for further investigation.

CLOSING GAPS

The current federal protection system has enormous gaps in coverage that make no sense. For example, truckers are protected from reprisal if they report truck safety or health hazards, but airline personnel—pilots, flight attendants or mechanics—have no protection whatsoever. Food processors may be protected if they report hazards that affect their own personal safety, but they are unprotected if they tell government inspectors about tainted or diseased food that endangers consumers.

This bill eliminates the gaps in coverage. The bill generally does not affect those employees already covered by current law. Instead, the bill protects only those employees whose actions are not otherwise protected by existing federal whistleblower statutes. For that limited class of employees, the Act prohibits discrimination against an employee who (1) discloses an activity the employee reasonably believes violates a federal health and safety law; (2) assists or participates in a federal proceeding relating to a federal health and safety law; or (3) refuses to participate in an activity when such participation violates a federal health and safety law or where the employee has reasonable apprehension of serious injury to the employee or the public due to the participation.

The bill creates an administrative procedure in the Department of Labor. All complaints would be investigated initially by the Department. After the investigation, any party could request a full hearing on the record before an administrative law judge within the Department. The bill clarifies each party's burden of proof for an evidentiary hearing. The Secretary of Labor could review a decision by the hearing officer and any party could appeal the Secretary's decision to the court of appeals.

Quick resolution of a whistleblower's complaint furthers everyone's interests. Therefore, the bill includes specific, realistic time limits at each stage of the procedure to insure expeditious consideration of the complaint. If the Department of Labor fails to issue a final decision within the prescribed time period, the employee may then, and only then, bring a civil action seeking protection. The bill provides for standard "make whole" remedies. In addition, copies of complaints and final decisions are forwarded to the appropriate federal agency for further investigation of the substantive health or safety violations uncovered by the whistleblower.

STRENGTHENING PROCEDURES

In addition to closing gaps in coverage, the Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act strengthens several key procedures for existing whistleblower protection statutes. The bill addresses two procedural issues—statute of limitations and subpoena power.

Statute of limitations

Under the current federal system, the statute of limitations—the time one has to file a complaint—ranges from 30 to 180 days. There is no apparent reason for these different statutes of limitations. The resulting confusion in filing deadlines has diminished the effectiveness of the federal protection system. The bill provides a uniform 180-day statute of limitations to provide adequate time to file a complaint and to eliminate unnecessary confusion.

Subpoena power

The Secretary of Labor enforces the majority of existing whistleblower protection statutes. In many cases, however, the Secretary lacks subpoena power to investigate whistleblower complaints fully. The bill remedies that problem by conferring such power on the Secretary for investigative purposes.

In sum, the Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act is designed to eliminate glaring gaps in current federal whistleblower laws and strengthen key enforcement procedures. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE EMPLOYEE HEALTH AND SAFETY WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ACT

SHORT TITLE

Section 1 establishes the short title of the Act as the "Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act."

FINDINGS

Section 2(a) lists the findings: (1) employees who report unlawful or hazardous activities are performing an important public service; (2) employees should be able to report such activities without fear of reprisal; and (3) current federal laws designed to protect employee health and safety whistleblowers are inadequate.

PURPOSE

Section 2(b) states the purposes of the Act: (1) to extend protection to employee health and safety whistleblowers who currently have no federal statutory remedy; (2) to create a uniform 180-day statute of limitations for filing whistleblower complaints; (3) to provide the Secretary of Labor with subpoena power to investigate complaints; (4) to provide a limited private right of action for health and safety whistleblowers without current federal statutory remedy; and (5) to ensure that substantive health and safety complaints are referred to the appropriate federal agency.

DEFINITIONS

Section 3(2) defines the term "employee" as any individual employed by an employer, including a former employee, who has been retaliated against for reporting a health or safety violation and who currently has no remedy under an existing federal whistleblower protection law.

Section 3(3) defines the term "employer" as a person engaged in a business affecting commerce who has employees. The term "employer" includes a government corporation, the U.S. Postal Service, a State or subdivision of a State, or an interstate governmental agency, but does not include the United States. Agents or employers of an employer are considered "employers."

Section 3(4) defines "existing federal whistleblower protection law" by listing those sections of 16 federal statutes that protect employees from retaliation for reporting unlawful or hazardous activities.

Section 3(6) defines the term "federal health or safety law" as any federal law, regulation, rule, or order, a primary purpose or effect of which is to protect health or safety. The term includes any State law, regulation, rule or order enacted as part of a State plan to carry out a federal health and safety law.

Section 3 also provides standard statutory definitions for the following terms; "commerce," "federal agency," "investigation office," "person," "proceeding," "respondent," "Secretary," and "State."

PROTECTED ACTIVITY

Section 4(a) prohibits retaliation against an employee because that employee (1) discloses an activity that the employee believes evidences a violation of a federal health or safety law; (2) initiates, assists, or participates in a proceeding before a federal agency regarding an activity that the employee believes evidences a violation of a federal health or safety law or which relates to enactment, administration, or enforcement of such a law; or (3) refuses to participate in an activity when such participation constitutes a violation of a federal health or safety law or when the employee has reasonable apprehension of serious injury to the employee, other employees, or the public due to such participation and the employee has sought and been unable to obtain a correction of the dangerous activity.

WAIVER

Section 4(b) establishes that an employee cannot waive the rights provided under this Act, except through a settlement agreement.

EXEMPTION

Section 4(c) provides that the protection afforded by the Act does not apply to an employee who deliberately causes a violation of a federal health or safety law.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Section 5(a) creates a uniform 180-day statute of limitations for filing a complaint pursuant to this Act or an existing federal whistleblower protection law.

COMPLAINT PROCEDURE

Section 5(b) allows any employee to file a complaint with the Secretary to redress a violation of the Act. The Secretary shall serve the complaint on the respondent and refer the underlying safety or health allegations to the appropriate federal agency.

INVESTIGATION

Section Section 5(c)(1) requires the Secretary to create or designate an investigation office to investigate complaints. The Secretary must refer all complaints immediately to that office.

Section 5(c)(2) requires that the investigation office, within 60 days of receipt of the complaint, conduct an investigation, determine whether there is reasonable cause to believe the complaint has merit, and make findings of fact. If the investigation office finds reasonable cause to believe a violation of the Act has occurred, it shall issue a preliminary order providing for relief, including immediate, temporary reinstatement.

Section 5(c)(3) requires the investigation office to serve the findings on all parties, and to inform the parties of the right to request a hearing before an administrative law judge (ALJ). If no hearing is requested, the findings issued by the investigation office are final and not subject to judicial review.

BURDEN OF PROOF

Section 5(c)(4) establishes the burden of proof for all hearings conducted under the Act. The complainant must prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, the protected activity was a factor in the employment action. If the complainant meets that burden, the respondent must prove by clear and convincing evidence that the employment action would have occurred regardless of the complainant's participation in protected activity.

HEARING REQUEST

Section 5(d)(1) states the time for filing a hearing request: (1) within 30 days of receipt of the findings of the investigation office; or (2) if the investigation office has issued no findings on or before the 60th day of receipt of the complaint, within 30 days thereafter.

Section 5(d)(2) provides that the investigation office loses jurisdiction upon the filing of a hearing request by the complainant or when the filing period for a hearing request expires, whichever occurs first. Once the investigation office loses jurisdiction, either party may obtain any investigative material compiled by that office, subject to the limits of the Privacy Act.

Section 5(d)(3) directs the parties to file hearing requests with the investigation office, which will file such requests with the Office of Administrative Law Judges within 5 days.

Section 5(d)(4) establishes that a hearing request shall not stay any reinstatement remedy contained in a preliminary order.

Section 5(d)(5) states that if the investigation office has failed to make findings within the time period prescribed, the complainant may seek a preliminary order for immediate, temporary reinstatement from the ALJ.

INTERVENTION

Section 5(e) directs the investigation office to intervene on behalf of the complainant if the office finds the complainant has been retaliated against for engaging in protected activity. In all other cases, the investigation office shall make a written determination whether to intervene for the complainant, within 15 days after receipt of a hearing request. Intervention by the investigation office shall not preclude the complainant from obtaining separate representation.

SUBPOENA AND RULEMAKING

Section 5(f) provides the Secretary with subpoena power identical to the power currently provided by the Federal Trade Commission Act for any hearing or investigation under this Act or any existing federal whistleblower protection law. The section also directs the Secretary to promulgate rules necessary to administer this Act.

HEARING PROCEDURE

Section 5(g)(1) directs the ALJ to complete the hearing within 180 days of receipt of a hearing request. Section 5(g)(2) allows all parties to have a reasonable opportunity for discovery and to be given written notice of the hearing at least 15 days in advance.

Sections 5(g)(3-4) provide that the Administrative Procedure Act rules for adjudications should apply to the hearing and that all hearings shall be de novo, except that any preliminary order for immediate temporary reinstatement shall be inforceable.

Section 5(g)(5) directs that within 60 days after conclusion of the hearing, or within 240 days after the investigation office receives a hearing request, whichever is sooner, the ALJ shall issue a decision containing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the remedy ordered. The ALJ shall serve the decision on the Secretary and all parties, along with a statement concerning the right to appeal.

ADMINISTRATIVE APPEAL

Section 5(h)(1) deems ALJ's decision as the final order of the Secretary, subject to judicial review, unless a party petitions the Secretary for review or the Secretary orders review within 30 days after the issuance of a decision.

Section (5)(h)(2) states that the Secretary shall issue a final order within 60 days after receipt of a petition for review. If the Secretary fails to act within the 60-day period, the decision of the ALJ becomes the final order of the Secretary.

REMEDIES

Section 5(i)(1) provides for the following remedies: (1) affirmative action to abate the violation; (2) reinstatement of the complainant to the complainant's former position, together with compensation, including back pay and lost benefits; (3) compensatory damages; and (4) equitable relief as necessary to correct any violation or make the complainant whole.

Section 5(i)(2) allows the Secretary to assess against the respondent all costs and expenses reasonably incurred by a successful complainant incuding attorney's fees.

PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION

Section 5(j)(1) creates a private right of action for the complainant against the respondent if the ALJ fails to issue a decision within 60 days after completion of the hearing or within 240 days after the investigation office receives a hearing request, whichever is sooner. In that limited circumstance, the complainant may file a civil action within 60 days in any United States district court with jurisdiction over the parties. The court shall not take jurisdiction if the ALJ issues a decision before the filing of the civil action. The complainant is barred from filing a civil action once the filing period has expired.

Section 5(j)(2) provides that the ALJ and the Secretary lose jurisdiction once the complainant files a civil action. The filing, however, does not stay a preliminary order unless ordered by the court.

Section 5(j) (3) specifies that the Secretary shall notify the complainant of the opportunity to file a civil action when that opportunity becomes available.

Section 5(j) (4) allows the court to assess against the respondent all cost and expenses reasonably incurred by a successful complainant, including attorney's fees.

Section 5(j) (5) provides that either party may request that the ALJ transmit the complete evidentiary record compiled during the administrative hearing to the court. This request does not preclude supplementing the court record.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

Section 5(k) provides that any person adversely affected by the Secretary's final order may obtain judicial review in the United States court of appeals. The petition for review must be filed within 60 days after the issuance of the final order. The court will apply the judicial review provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act. The petition does not stay any order of the Secretary unless otherwise ordered by the court. If the parties do not seek judicial review, a final order shall not be reviewable in any other proceeding.

SETTLEMENT OR ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Section 5(1)(1) establishes that investigation office shall attempt to reach a settlement between the parties. There cannot be a settlement without the written consent of the complainant, and without a finding by the Secretary that the settlement is fair, adequate, reasonable, and in the public interest.

Section 5(1)(2) states that the Secretary may use alternative means of dispute resolution to resolve the complaint, so long as all parties consent in writing.

TIME COMPUTATIONS

Section 5(m) provides that time computations, not otherwise provided for in this Act, shall be made in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

POSTING

Section 5(n) requires each employer to post a notice containing information the Secretary deems appropriate to effectuate the Act.

ENFORCEMENT

Section 6 states that if a person fails to comply with an order issued under this Act, the Secretary, or any person on whose behalf an order is issued, may file a civil action in the United States district court to enforce such an order.

COMPLAINT REFERRAL

Section 7 requires the Secretary to serve each final order on any federal agency that may have jurisdiction over the underlying health or safety allegations in the complaint. Such agency shall take appropriate action regarding the allegations. Within 30 days after taking such action, the agency shall inform the involved parties and the relevant committees of Congress as to any action taken.

EFFECT ON OTHER RIGHTS AND REMEDIES

Section 8 establishes that Congress intends this Act to supersede existing federal whistleblower protection laws only insofar as such laws: (1) may provide a statute of limitations for filing complaints that is less than 180 days; and (2) do not authorize subpoena power for the Secretary. The rights and remedies provided to employees by this Act are in addition to, not in lieu of, any other rights and remedies as provided by State law or by contract.

EFFECTIVE DATE

Section 9 provides that this Act shall become effective on the date of enactment, but that it will apply only to those complaints filed on or after the effective date.●

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator METZENBAUM in introducing the Employee Health and Safety Whistleblower Protection Act. As I have stated on numerous occasions on this floor, we must praise courageous employees who come forward to disclose wrongdoing. Instead, our system has a peculiar way of "rewarding" these employees: they are discharged, demoted, transferred, and harassed.

This bill addresses itself to employees who blow the whistle on violations of Federal health and safety laws. Currently, there are more than a dozen Federal laws that regulate health and safety at the workplace. Many of these laws contain protections for whistleblowers, but some of these laws, enacted decades ago, don't cover whistleblowing activity. This bill is designed to fill in the gaps.

Let me cite a couple of examples of the loopholes in our laws. An employee in the food service industry who is fired for complaining to the U.S. Department of Agriculture that the products don't meet USDA standards has no protection. Likewise, an employee in a company under Federal contract to make nuclear weapons may have no way to protect his job when he goes to the regulatory agency to disclose that the work doesn't meet safety standards.

This bill will afford employees in these kinds of situations appropriate protection. It vests the Department of Labor with the authority to investigate whistleblower complaints, as well as to refer the underlying health or safety complaint to the appropriate regulatory agency. If the DOL investigator cannot resolve the matter, the case can go to an administrative law judge for a hearing. The administrative proceedings are geared to resolve the case quickly and efficiently. In the event the administrative law judge does not conclude the case within specified time limits, then, and only then, the employee will have the right to proceed in Federal court to redress the discrimination.

While this bill does not attempt to create complete uniformity in the existing whistleblower protections, it does address two inconsistencies. First, all employees who disclose a health or safety violation would be entitled to 180 days in which to file a charge of retaliation or discrimination. Currently, the more than 12 statutes which exist provide for varying time limits. Second, the bill would vest the Department of Labor with subpoena power to investigate the retaliation claim brought by the employee.

About 2 years ago, the Administrative Conference of the United States held a hearing on the issue of health and safety whistleblowing activity, at which I testified. Based upon that hearing and various other research, the Administrative Conference concluded that our existing laws lacked uniformity and coverage was incomplete. The legislation we are introducing today closes the loopholes and reduces the number of inconsistencies.

Employees who point out health and safety violations serve the public interest. They help protect workers and the public at large. We want to make sure that an individual can disclose a dangerous situation without the fear of reprisal. That's why this legislation is so important. I look forward to speedy passage of this bill.●

By Mr. DIXON:

S. 437. A bill to temporarily suspend the duty on certain glass bulbs; to the Committee on Finance.

DUTY SUSPENSION ON CERTAIN GLASS BULBS

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, a company in my State, the Clinton Electronics Corp. of Rockford, is facing an unnecessary trade problem.

Clinton makes monochrome cathode ray tubes for use in word processors, computer terminals, and other similar products. They are the only domestic producer of monochrome cathode ray tube. Their competition is solely international and comes mainly from Japan.

One the most essential components of this product is not produced in the United States. Consequently, Clinton imports this part, a monochrome glass bulb, from Taiwan. Due to Taiwan's former generalized system of preference [GSP] status, Clinton had been able to import this part duty free.

The competition in the monochrome cathode ray tube market is fierce and, as a result, the profit margin is slim.

The Japanese, in particular, sell their product at a very low price. Clinton's ability to import monochrome glass bulbs duty free has allowed them to keep their costs low and to remain competitive in the monochrome cathode ray tube market.

Last year, President Reagan decided that Taiwan should no longer merit GSP status. The loss of GSP status for all of Taiwan's products means that monochrome glass bulbs can no longer be imported into the United States duty free. As a result, Clinton petitioned the U.S. Trade Representative to preserve the duty-free status of monochrome glass bulbs. Unfortunately, because similar products—which cannot be used in the manufacture of Clinton's cathode ray tubes—are made in the United States, USTR refused to grant the exemption Clinton needed.

The problem stems from the Government's broad classification of glass bulbs. Customs does not make any distinction between monochrome and other types of glass bulbs. Consequently, although U.S. law mandates the restoration of duty-free status for a product if there is no domestic production of a like or competitive item, according to Customs' classification there is domestic production of a competitive item. In other words, because Customs sees no evil, there is no evil.

The USTR's decision not to grant a duty exemption to monochrome glass bulbs is bad trade policy. It was a mistake because it unnecessarily places the sole remaining U.S. supplier of a product at a competitive disadvantage for no other reason than for adherence to out-of-date rules.

We in the Congress can rectify Clinton's situation by directing Customs to allow Clinton Electronics to continue to import monochrome glass bulbs duty free. I am introducing a bill which would direct the Customs Department to retain the duty-free status of monochrome glass bulbs. Clinton Electronics represents the kind of company we want to help. They are the kind of company we should encourage and not discourage to compete in the international market.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 437

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CERTAIN GLASS BULBS.

Chapter 99 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

"990270.10	Monochrome glass enveloped for cathode ray tubes (provided for in subheading 7011.20.00.	Free....	No change.	No change.	On or before 12/31/93".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendment made by this Act shall apply with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the date that is 15 days after the date of enactment of this Act.●

By Mr. DECONCINI (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. SYMMS):

S. 438. A bill to amend chapter 96 of title 18, United States Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RICO REFORM ACT

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am introducing today, along with my colleagues Senators HATCH, HEFLIN, and SYMMS, legislation to reform the racketeer influenced and corrupt organizations [RICO] statute. The legislation's purpose is to restore the usefulness and effectiveness of the RICO statute that existed prior to the explosion of abusive and harassing lawsuits filed in the 1980's. I am a strong believer in the use of RICO, both civil and criminal, to penalize and prosecute organized crime and habitual criminals. I believe that this intended use of RICO has been undercut and thwarted by the misuse of RICO by plaintiffs and their attorneys who have employed RICO to extort and blackmail defendants by bringing a RICO action every time they are involved in a commercial dispute.

The racketeer influenced and corrupt organizations statute was enacted in 1970 at a time when Congress was increasingly worried about the power and influence of organized crime. Congress had devoted much time and attention to studying the activities of organized crime syndicates and their efforts to infiltrate legitimate businesses and unions. The result of these studies was the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970. Title IX of that act was RICO.

In order to understand what Congress had in mind when it adopted RICO, it is instructive to read the congressional findings which preceded the text of the statute.

The Congress finds that (1) organized crime in the United States is a highly sophisticated, diversified, and widespread activity that annually drains billions of dollars from America's economy by unlawful conduct and the illegal use of force, fraud, and corruption; (2) organized crime derives a major portion of its power through money obtained from such illegal endeavors as syndicated gambling, loan sharking, the theft and fencing of property, the importation and distribution of narcotics and other dangerous drugs, and other forms of social exploitation; (3) this money and power are increasingly used to infiltrate and corrupt our democratic processes; (4) organized crime activities in the United States weaken the stability of the Nation's economic system, harm innocent investors and competing organizations, interfere with free competition, seriously burden interstate and foreign commerce, threaten the domestic security, and undermine the general welfare of the Nation and its citizens; and (5) organized crime continues to grow because of defects in the evidence-gathering process of the law inhibiting the development of the legally admissible evidence necessary to bring criminal and other sanctions or remedies to bear on the unlawful activities of those engaged in organized crime and because the sanctions and remedies available to the Government are unnecessarily limited in scope and impact.

In light of these findings it was the declared purpose of Congress:

To seek the eradication of organized crime in the United States by strengthening the legal tools in the evidence-gathering process, by establishing new penal prohibitions, and by providing enhanced sanctions and new remedies to deal with the unlawful activities of those engaged in organized crime.

There have been numerous judicial decisions which have called upon Congress to modify the RICO statute. Most of these decisions have been in cases in which the judge felt bound by the law and by Supreme Court decisions to reach a result of allowing a RICO count to continue or to uphold a RICO award. These judges have stated that RICO is too broad and that it has become a windfall for plaintiffs.

Among the statements made by Federal judges in published decisions, the following are particularly noteworthy:

Justice Byron White:

In its private civil version, RICO is evolving into something quite different from the original conception of its enactors. (majority opinion, Sedima, S.P.R.I. v. Imrex Co., Inc.)

Justice Lewis Powell:

It defies rational belief, particularly in light of the legislative history, that Congress intended this far reaching result. (dissenting, Sedima, S.P.R.I. v. Imrex Co., Inc.)

Justice Thurgood Marshall:

Many a prudent defendant, facing ruinous exposure, will decide to settle a case with no merit. It is thus not surprising that civil RICO has been used for extortive purposes, giving rise to the very evils that it was designed to combat. (dissenting, Sedima, S.P.R.I. v. Imrex Co., Inc.)

Judge Anthony Kennedy:

A company eager to weaken an offending competitor obeys no constraints when it strikes with the sword of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. . . . It is most unlikely that Congress envisaged use of the RICO statute in a case such as the one before us, but we are required to follow where the words of the statute lead. . . . (Schreiber Distributing v. Serv-Well Furniture Co., 9th Cir.)

The Court stated in Van Schaick versus Church of Scientology:

We do not believe Congress intended Section 1964(c) to afford a remedy to every consumer who could trace purchase of a product to a violation of Section 1962. Such an interpretation would open the federal courts to frequent RICO treble damage claims by federalizing much consumer protection law and by inviting plaintiffs to append RICO claims for consumer fraud to nonfederal claims thereby achieving treble damage recovery and a federal forum. Yet the legislative history contains no hint that Congress intended RICO as a remedy for private plaintiffs alleging consumer fraud. (D.Mass. 1982)

The Court stated in HMK Corporation versus Walsey:

In enacting RICO, Congress did not intend to preempt and federalize the field of state business law. . . . Such familiar state causes of action as common law misrepresentation and fraud, unfair trade practices, and wrongful franchise termination, not to mention the general run of commercial and contractual disputes, could be eclipsed or resolved primarily as pendant claims in federal court. . . . To permit plaintiffs injured in such schemes to bring their claims under RICO would consign state law to unprecedented federal oversight irrespective of the parties' citizenship, and would deprive the states of jurisdiction over these local controversies in a way Congress never intended. (HMK Corporation v. Walsey, 4th Cir. 1987)

In addition, a number of Federal Judges have made public statements regarding what they believe is the breadth of RICO and the need for reform. Two of the more interesting are the following:

Judge Abner Mikva, U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia:

I stand amazed . . . to realize that my hyperbolic horrible examples of how far the law would reach pale into insignificance when compared to what has actually happened. . . . What started out as a small cottage industry for federal prosecutors has become a commonplace weapon in the civil litigation arsenal. (Hearing before the House Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Oct. 9, 1985)

Judge Pollack, U.S. District Court of the Southern District of New York:

[O]ne of the proliferating developments in civil litigation has been the use of RICO . . . in civil claims, in routine commercial disputes, including those arising under the federal securities laws. I think that the proliferation of these claims and the use of a law that was designed to eliminate organized crime is a very bad influence on the commercial community. (Symposium Highlighting Developments in Securities Law Over Past Century, January 30, 1984)

I believe it is clear from the record and from the urgings of those judges charged with enforcing our criminal and civil laws that Congress act expeditiously to make the necessary changes in RICO. To this end we have made several changes in the bill from the one that was reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee last year. Working with the Justice Department and with House Members, we have added a number of important new predicate offenses dealing with terrorism and organized crime. Because the standard by which a judge was to determine whether punitive damages were appropriate existed no where else in statutes or court decisions, we have adopted the punitive damage standard developed by the Supreme Court of Arizona.

In addition, we have made two changes in the controversial section of the bill dealing with its application to pending lawsuits. First, we have expanded the definition of prior criminal conviction to include any felony conviction arising out of the same conduct on which the lawsuit is based. Last year's bill would have limited the provision to convictions of RICO predicate offenses. This change will give prosecutors more flexibility in charging defendants in criminal proceedings and will make clear that our intent is to penalize criminals, including white collar criminals, for their criminal acts. The second change is to allow RICO plaintiffs to recover reasonable litigation costs incurred in bringing a civil RICO suit. While we do intend to take away the windfall that many RICO plaintiffs are seeking to gain, we do believe it fair to make the plaintiff whole in his reliance on RICO and the way the courts have recently interpreted it.

Legislation similar to that which I am introducing today has been considered by the Congress before. In the 99th Congress, legislation to reform RICO passed the House and was voted on by the Senate as an amendment to the continuing resolution at the end of the Congress. Last Congress, a bill introduced by Senator METZENBAUM was reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee, but was not considered by the full Senate. I am hopeful and optimistic that the 101st Congress will see the enactment of this important legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 438

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as "The RICO Reform Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. ADDITION OF PREDICATE OFFENSES.

Section 1961(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by inserting "prostitution involving minors," after "extortion,";

(2) in subparagraph (B)—

(A) by striking "section 201" and inserting the following: "Section 32 (relating to destruction of aircraft or aircraft facilities), section 81 (relating to arson), section 112 (a), (c)-(f) (relating to protection of foreign officials and other persons), section 115 (relating to acts against Federal officials and other persons), section 201";

(B) by inserting after "sections 471, 472, and 473 (relating to counterfeiting)", the following: "section 510 (relating to forging of Treasury or other securities), section 513 (relating to forgery of State and other securities),";

(3) by striking out "or" at the end of subparagraph (D);

(4) by striking out the semicolon at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting in lieu thereof ", (F) any offense under section 134 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1644), or (G) section 5861(b)-(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to firearms controls) (26 U.S.C. 5861(b)-(k));"

SEC. 3. BURDEN OF PROOF.

Section 1964(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after "of this chapter by issuing" the following: ", upon proof by a preponderance of the evidence,".

SEC. 4. CIVIL RECOVERY.

Subsection (c) of section 1964 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1)(A) A governmental entity (excluding a unit of local government other than a unit of general local government), whose business or property is injured by conduct in violation of section 1962 of this title may bring, in any appropriate United States district court, a civil action therefore and, upon proof by a preponderance of the evidence, shall recover threefold the actual damages to the business or property of the governmental entity sustained by reason of such violation, and shall recover the costs of the civil action, including a reasonable attorneys' fee.

"(B) A civil action under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph must be brought by—

"(i) the Attorney General, or other legal officer authorized to sue, if the injury is to the business or property of a governmental entity of the United States;

"(ii) the chief legal officer of a State, or other legal officer authorized to sue, if the injury is to the business or property of a governmental entity of the State;

"(iii) the chief legal officer, or other legal officer authorized to sue, of a unit of general local government of a State, if the injury is to the business or property of the unit of general local government; or

"(iv) a court-appointed trustee, if the injury is to the business or property of an enterprise for which the trustee has been appointed by a United States district court under section 1964(a) of this title.

"(2) A person whose business or property is injured by conduct in violation of section 1962 of this title may bring, in any appropriate United States district court, a civil action therefore and, upon proof by a preponderance of the evidence, shall recover—

"(A) the actual damages to the person's business or property sustained by reason of such violation;

"(B) the costs of the civil action, including a reasonable attorney's fee, if the person whose business or property is injured is—

"(i) a unit of local government other than a unit of general local government; or

"(ii)(I) a natural person, or an organization meeting the definition of exempt organization under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 501(c)(3)), or an organization meeting the definition of an indenture trustee under the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 (15 U.S.C. 77jjj, et seq.), or an organization meeting the definition of a pension fund under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (29 U.S.C. 1001, et seq.), or an organization meeting the definition of an investment company under the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-1, et seq.); and

"(II) the person is injured by conduct proscribed by section 21(d)(2)(A) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u(d)(2)(A)); or

"(iii)(I) a natural person and the injury occurred in connection with a purchase or lease, for personal or noncommercial use or investment, of a product, investment, service, or other property, or a contract for personal or noncommercial use or investment, including a deposit in a bank, thrift, credit union, or other savings institution; and

"(II) neither State nor Federal securities or commodities laws make available an express or implied remedy for the type of behavior on which the claim of the plaintiff is based; and

"(C) punitive damages up to twice the actual damages if the plaintiff may collect costs under the provisions of subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, and the plaintiff proves by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant's actions were consciously malicious, or so egregious and deliberate that malice may be implied.

In actions in which the plaintiff may collect costs under the provisions of subparagraph (2)(B)(ii) of this paragraph, the calculation of punitive damages also shall be consistent with section 21(d)(2)(C) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u(d)(2)(C)), and the assessment of punitive damages against a person employing another person who is liable under this clause shall be consistent with section 21(d)(2)(B) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78u(d)(2)(B)).

"(3) A natural person who suffers serious bodily injury by reason of a crime of violence that is racketeering activity and that is an element of a violation of section 1962 of this title may bring a civil action in an appropriate United States district court, and, upon proof by a preponderance of the evidence, shall recover—

"(A) the costs of the civil action, including a reasonable attorneys' fee;

"(B) the actual damages to the person's business or property sustained by reason of such violation;

"(C) the actual damages sustained by the natural person by reason of such violation, as allowed under applicable State law, (excluding pain and suffering); and

"(D) if the plaintiff proves by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant's actions were consciously malicious or so egregious and deliberate that malice may be implied, punitive damages of up to twice the actual damages.

"(4) In an action under this subsection, evidence relevant only to the amount of punitive damages shall not be introduced until after a finding of liability, except the court may permit, for good cause shown and in the absence of any undue prejudice to the defendant, introduction of such evidence prior to a finding of liability on motion of a party or in the exercise of it discretion.

"(5)(A) A person whose business or property is injured by conduct in violation of section 1962 of this title may bring, in any appropriate United States district court, a civil action therefore and, upon proof by a preponderance of the evidence of such violation, shall recover threefold the actual damages to the person's business or property sustained by reason of such conduct, and the costs of the civil action, including a reasonable attorneys' fee, from any defendant convicted of a Federal or State offense described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) The offense referred to in subparagraph (A) must—

"(i) be based upon the same conduct upon which the plaintiff's civil action is based;

"(ii) include a showing of a State of mind as a material element of the offense; and

"(iii) be punishable by death or imprisonment for a term of more than one year.

"(6)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a civil action or proceeding under this subsection may not be commenced after the latest of—

"(i) four years after the date the cause of action accrues; or

"(ii) two years after the date of the criminal conviction required for an action or proceeding under paragraph (5) of this subsection.

"(B) A civil action brought pursuant to subsection (c)(1)(B) (i), (ii), or (iii) may not be commenced more than 6 years after the date the cause of action accrues.

"(C) The period of limitation provided in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this paragraph on a cause of action does not run during the pendency of a government civil action or proceeding or criminal case relating to the conduct upon which such cause of action is based.

"(7)(A) It shall be an affirmative defense to an action brought under this subsection that a defendant acted in good faith and in reliance upon an official, directly applicable regulatory action, approval, or interpretation of law by an authorized Federal or State agency in writing or by operation of law.

"(B) Before the commencement of full discovery on and consideration of the plaintiff's claim, the court shall determine, upon defendant's motion, the availability of any affirmative defense asserted under this paragraph. The discovery of any such affirmative defense shall be allowed, as provided by law or rule of procedure, prior to the court's determination of the availability of such an affirmative defense.

"(8) In an action under this subsection, facts supporting the claim against each defendant shall be averred with particularity.

"(9)(A) An action or proceeding under this subsection shall not abate on the death of the plaintiff or defendant, but shall survive and be enforceable by and against his estate and by and against surviving plaintiffs or defendants.

"(B) An action or proceeding under this subsection shall survive and be enforceable against a receiver in bankruptcy but only to the extent of actual damages.

"(10) In a civil action or proceeding under this subsection in which the complaint does not allege a crime of violence—

"(A) the term 'racketeer' or the term 'organized crime' shall not be used by any party in any pleading or other written document submitted in the action, or in any argument, hearing, trial, or other oral presentations before the court; and

"(B) the terms used to define conduct in violation of section 1962 of this title shall be referred to as follows:

"(i) 'racketeering activity', as defined in section 1961(1) of this title, shall be referred to as 'unlawful activity'; and

"(ii) 'pattern of racketeering activity', as defined in section 1961(5) of this title, shall be referred to as 'pattern of unlawful activity'.

"(11) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'governmental entity' means the United States or a State, and includes any department, agency, or government corporation of the United States or a State, or any political subdivision of a State which has the power (i) to levy taxes and spend funds, and (ii) to exercise general corporate and police powers;

"(B) the term 'unit of general local government' means any political subdivision of a State which has the power (i) to levy taxes and spend funds, and (ii) to exercise general corporate and police powers; and

"(C) the term 'crime of violence' means an offense involving—

"(i) when chargeable under State law the following: murder, kidnapping, arson, robbery, or dealing in narcotic or other dangerous drugs;

"(ii) when indictable under title 18, United States Code, and when accompanied by serious bodily injury the following: destruction of aircraft or aircraft facilities as defined by section 32; arson as defined by section 81; acts against foreign officials and other persons as defined by section 112 (a), (c) through (f); acts against Federal officials and other persons as defined by section 115; threats and extortion as defined by section 878; loansharking and other extortionate credit transactions as defined by sections 891–894; homicide as defined by sections 1111–1112, 1114, 1116–1117; hostage taking as defined in section 1203; obstruction of justice as defined in sections 1501–1506, 1508–1513, and 1515; extortion as defined by section 1951; murder-for-hire as defined by section 1958; sexual exploitation of children as defined in sections 2251–2252 and 2256; explosives or dangerous weapons aboard vessels as defined in section 2277; terrorist acts abroad as defined in section 2331; or

"(iii) the felonious manufacture, importation, receiving, concealment, buying, selling, or otherwise dealing in narcotic or other dangerous drugs, punishable under any law of the United States.".

SEC. 5. INTERNATIONAL SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Section 1965 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b) by striking "residing in any other district";

(2) in subsection (b) by striking "in any judicial district of the United States by the marshal thereof" and inserting "anywhere the party may be found";

(3) in subsection (c) by striking "in any other judicial district" and inserting "anywhere the witness is found";

(4) in subsection (c) by striking "in another district"; and

(5) in subsection (d) by striking "in any judicial district in which" and inserting "where".

SEC. 6. EXCLUSIVE FEDERAL JURISDICTION.

Chapter 96 of title 18, United States Code, shall not be construed to confer jurisdiction to hear a criminal or civil proceeding or action under its provisions on a judicial or other forum of a State or local unit of government.

SEC. 7. STYLISTIC AMENDMENT.

The analysis of chapter 96 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out the item for section 1962 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"1962. Prohibited activities.".

SEC. 8. JUDICIAL STANDARD TO DETERMINE REMEDY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this Act shall apply to any civil action or proceeding commenced one day after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) In any pending action under section 1964(c) of title 18, United States Code, in which a person would be eligible to recover only under paragraph (2)(A) of section 1964(c) as amended by this Act because the action does not meet the requirements of paragraph (2)(B) of section 1964(c), if this Act had been enacted before the commencement of that action, the recovery of that person shall be limited to the recovery provided under paragraph (2)(A), unless in the pending action—

(A) there has been a jury verdict or district court judgment, establishing the defendant's liability, or settlement has occurred; or

(B) the judge determines that, in light of all the circumstances, such limitation of recovery would be clearly unjust.

(b) EXCEPTION FOR COSTS OF CIVIL ACTION.—For purposes of this subsection, in any action in which a person would be eligible, by operation of subsection (a), to recover only under paragraph (2)(A) of section 1964(c) of title 18, as amended by this Act, the person shall also recover the cost of the civil action, which includes, in addition to a reasonable attorneys' fee, reasonable litigation expenses.●

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senators DECONCINI, HEFLIN, and SYMMS in introducing a bill that provides needed changes to chapter 96 of title 18 of the United States Code better known as RICO, the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act. Congress enacted RICO in 1970 principally as a weapon to attack organized crime, including organized crime activity that promotes and profits from the international drug trade. This bill is the product of 3 years of bipartisan efforts in both Houses of Congress and will focus RICO more effectively on organized crime.

The civil provisions of the RICO statute, available to private plaintiffs, like the rest of RICO, were intended to combat the infiltration of legitimate businesses by organized crime. Unfortunately, private plaintiffs have seriously abused civil RICO to harm legitimate businesses. As a result of judicial construction of the civil RICO provisions, particularly the Supreme Court's ruling in Sedima v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479 (1985), RICO has evolved to encompass situations never intended by Congress to be covered by that act. The Supreme Court's decision, handed down on July 1, 1985, has greatly burdened the caseload of the Federal courts, as well as undermined RICO as a weapon against organized crime. Perhaps this result may be more aptly blamed on loose drafting of the civil RICO provisions by Congress, but the need for action is clear. As then Judge Anthony Kennedy, in a concurring opinion in Schreiber Distributing v. Serv-well Furniture Co., 806 F. 2d 1393, 1402 (9th Cir. 1986), said:

> A company eager to weaken an offending competitor obeys no constraints when it strikes with the sword of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Practice Act. . . . It is most unlikely that Congress envisaged use of the RICO statute in a case such as the one before us, but we are required to follow when the words of the statute lead. . . .

When RICO was first enacted, the provisions for civil suits within its purview were little used. In recent years, however, garden-variety business and contractural disputes have blossomed into extensive Federal litigation under 18 U.S.C. section 1964(c). The Court's ruling in Sedima allows a civil RICO action based on nothing more than two allegedly fraudulent mailings or uses of the wire occurring within 10 years of each other. For example, a business which transmits two or more accounting errors through the mails within a 10-year period could conceivable be subject to treble damages in a civil suit. Even the Supreme Court concedes in the majority opinion in Sedima that "in its private civil version, RICO is evolving into something quite different from the original conception of its enactors." 473 U.S. at 500. The Court goes on to conclude that it is compelled by the statutory language to construe section 1964(c) to encompass small-time fraud and breach of contract cases. An examination of the statute's legislative history indicates that the Court was correct in noting that the abuse of civil RICO provisions is quite different from Congress' intent.

RICO was enacted as a response to a growing concern on the part of Congress and the public about the ability of organized crime to profit from illegal activity. The avowed purpose of RICO was to decrease the incidence of, and act as a deterrent to, organized crime. Nowhere do the purposes of the legislation outlined by Congress mention private business litigation. The only reason RICO contained civil provisions at all was that some of its authors were concerned about limited enforcement capability on the part of the Government in the fight against organized crime. Therefore, RICO was written broadly to fill an existing gap in civil remedies and to provide a means of compensation that otherwise did not exist for the honest businessman harmed by the unfair economic pressure of "racketeers."

PRESENT CIVIL RICO PROVISIONS

As I mentioned, the provisions for private civil suit were included in RICO to provide economic victims of organized crime adequate redress for their injuries. Section 1964(c) of title 18, United States Code, grants a private right of action to any person "injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." Section 1962, in turn, makes it unlawful to invest funds "derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity," or to acquire or operate an interest in a business enterprise through "a pattern of racketeering activity." "Racketeering activity" is defined to include any of numerous acts "chargeable" under enumerated State laws, including murder, arson, robbery, bribery, or "indictable" under Federal laws, including bribery, mail fraud, wire fraud, and the anti-fraud provisions of Federal securities laws. It states that "a pattern" of racketeering activity requires at least two acts of racketeering within 10 years of each other.

Section 1964(c) further states that any person so "injured in his business property * * * may sue therefor in any appropriate U.S. district court and * * * recover threefold the damages he sustains and the cost of the suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee." Congress intended the private civil action to be linked to "racketeering activity" in order to enhance law enforcement against organized crime. This provision was not intended to create a vehicle for treble damage recoveries in ordinary commercial and business litigation. Unfortunately, however, alleging that a business has breached the Federal mail fraud and wire fraud statutes made it easy for plaintiffs, including business plaintiffs, to bring their litigation within the ambit of the civil RICO provisions. Indeed, the breadth of the definition of "pattern of racketeering activity" made it possible for two technical violations of those broad statutes to give rise to Federal civil litigation under RICO. The breadth of this definition has contributed to the utterly unanticipated, broad-gauged civil use of RICO.

For example, under recent caselaw, civil RICO can be used in wrongful discharge cases, e.g., Williams v. Hall, 683 F. Supp. 639 (E.D. Ky. 1988), and sexual discrimination and harassment cases, Hunt v. Weatherbee, 626F. Supp. 1097 (D. Mass. 1986). Now, obviously, persons may be entitled to relief in these and other circumstances of business wrongdoing, but trebling damages in such cases is not appropriate and may eventually work a revolution in our law. See "Look Who's Using RICO," ABA Journal, February, 1989. As the judge in Lode v. Leonardo, 557 F. Supp. 675, 681 (N.D. I11. 1982), a civil RICO action brought by shareholders against bank holding companies and their officers and directors alleging misrepresentation concerning commercial loans, stated:

> Congress may not have envisioned that the civil remedies it supplied in RICO would find the widespread use that they have in commercial fraud cases. And such use of RICO's remedies may well be somewhat undesirable. But, when a plaintiff makes allegations which appear to state a claim under the statute as it is written, courts are bound to what Congress said in the statute. . . .

FEDERALIZATION OF STATE LAW

The Supreme Court's interpretation of the civil RICO statute federalizes broad areas of State law concerning fraud. It also displaces well-established Federal remedial provisions. Prior to RICO, no Federal statute expressly provided a private damage remedy based on a violation of the broadly written mail or wire fraud statutes, which make it a Federal crime to use the mail or wires in furtherance of a scheme to defraud. Moreover, courts of appeals consistently had held that no implied Federal private causes of action accrued to victims of these Federal violations. The victims were restricted to bringing actions in State courts under common law fraud theories.

Since the Supreme Court's ruling, two fraudulent mailings or uses of the wires occurring within 10 years of each other might lead to civil RICO liability. In recent years, there has been an extraordinary expansion of mail and wire fraud statutes to permit Federal prosecution for conduct that some had though was subject only to State criminal and civil law. In bringing criminal actions under those statutes, prosecutors need not show either a substantial connection between the scheme to defraud and the mail and wire fraud statutes, see Pereira v. U.S., 347 U.S. 1, 8 (1954), or that the fraud involved money or property.

The only restraining influence on the inexorable expansion of the mail and wire fraud statutes has been the prudent use of prosecutorial discretion. Prosecutors simply do not invoke the mail and wire fraud provisions in every case in which a violation of the relevant statute can be proved. The responsible use of prosecutorial discretion is particularly important with respect to criminal RICO prosecutions, which often rely on mail and wire fraud as predicate acts.

In the context of civil RICO, however, the restraining influence of prosecutors is completely absent. Unlike the Government, private litigants have no reason to avoid displacing State law remedies. On the contrary, such litigants, lured by the prospect of treble damages and attorney's fees, have a strong incentive to invoke RICO's provisions whenever they can allege two instances of mail or wire fraud. The defendant, facing financial exposure and the threat of being labeled a racketeer, has a strong incentive to settle the dispute. Many a prudent defendant, facing ruinous exposure, will decide to settle even a case with little merit. It is thus not surprising that civil RICO has been used for extortive purposes.

The civil RICO provisions consequently are used to stretch the mail and wire fraud statutes to their absolute limits and federalize important areas of civil litigation that until now were solely within the domain of the States.

DISPLACEMENT OF FEDERAL LAW

In addition to fundamentally altering the Federal-State balance in civil remedies, the broad reading of the civil RICO provision also displaces important areas of Federal law. For example, one predicate offense under RICO is "fraud in the sale of securities." By alleging two instances of such fraud, a plaintiff may bring a case within the scope of the civil RICO provision. It does not take great legal insight to realize that such a plaintiff would pursue the case under RICO rather than do so solely under the Securities Act of 1933 or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which provide both express and implied causes of action for violations of the Federal securities laws. The Federal securities laws contemplate only compensatory damages and ordinarily do not authorize recovery of attorney's fees. By invoking RICO, in contrast, a successful plaintiff will recover both treble damages and attorney's fees.

The civil RICO provisions, as now construed, substantially supplant decades of legislative and judicial development of private civil remedies under the Federal securities laws. Securities law has developed special requirements regarding standing, culpability, causation, reliance and materiality, as well as definitions of "securities" and "fraud." See, for example, Blue Chip Stamps v. Manor Drug Stores, 421 U.S. 723 (1975). All these requirements of securities law can be circumvented because plaintiffs can avoid the carefully developed limitations of securities law merely by alleging violations of predicate acts constituting an alleged "pattern of racketeering activity" such as mail or wire fraud. For example, even if cases in which the investment instrument is not a "security" covered by the Federal securities laws, RICO provides a treble damage remedy to a plaintiff who can prove the required pattern of mail or wire fraud. Before RICO, the plaintiff could not have recovered damages under Federal law for the mail or wire fraud violation.

Nothing in the language or legislative history of RICO suggests that Congress intended either the federalization of State common law or the displacement of existing Federal remedies.

DESCRIPTION OF THE RICO REFORM ACT OF 1989

The bill introduced by Senators DECONCINI, LEAHY, myself, and others not only curtails the abuses of RICO in the area of garden-variety litigation between businesses, but it strengthens the statute as an effective law enforcement tool. This bill adds a substantial number of Federal offenses to the existing list of so-called predicate acts under RICO. The "predicate acts" are the underlying offenses that make up the proof of the organized criminal activity that is the hallmark of a proper RICO claim. Many of these new predicate offenses, such as ones relating to acts against Federal officials, forgery of securities, fraud in relation to computers, hostage taking, and others, will enhance significantly the flexibility of RICO to respond to different manifestations of organized crime.

In addition, those who have been the victim of defendants that have any prior felony conviction with a state of mind element, based upon the same conduct upon which the RICO action is based, may recover treble damages, costs, and attorney's fees in a RICO action. Federal and State governments, and units of general local government are also entitled to this relief under RICO, as amended by this Act.

Moreover, a series of plaintiffs are permitted, under this act, to recover not only actual damages, but costs and reasonable attorney's fees, plus punitive damages of up to twice the amount of actual damages if the defendant's actions were consciously malicious or so egregious and deliberate that actual malice may be implied. These plaintiffs include: units of local government other than a unit of general local government; natural persons, charitable organizations and ERISA pension funds injured by insider trading; consumers defrauded in connection with a variety of consumer transactions—unless a remedy is available under securities or commodities law for the type of behavior at issue. Persons who suffer serious bodily injury by reason of a crime of violence which is racketeering activity under RICO may receive actual damages for both the harm to their business or property and personal injuries, together with the costs, reasonable attorney's fees and punitive damages just described.

Plaintiffs in ordinary business versus business commercial and contract litigation will be able to receive actual damages in such cases, under the act.

The act will apply to all actions commenced 1 day after enactment. The act treats pending actions as follows:

First, for those pending actions which would be eligible only for actual damages as a result of enactment of this act, recovery is limited to actual damages, unless, in the pending action: there has been a jury verdict or district court judgment establishing defendant's liability, or settlement has occurred; or the judge determines, in light of all of the circumstances, that such limitation on recovery would be clearly unjust.

Second, where a pending case is limited to actual damages, the plaintiff will be able to recover all reasonable litigation expenses, including reasonable attorney's fees.

Third, in all other pending actions, that is, those which would not be limited to actual damages by this act, plaintiffs will be able to obtain treble damages.

In addition, this act would permit RICO damage suits to continue against the estate of a defendant even after the individual dies. I see no reason why the heirs of someone who has profited from organized criminal activity should be immunized from the claims of victims. This bill would facilitate those suits.

Finally, this bill makes other changes that are designed to address the misuse of the law that currently undermines the effectiveness of RICO as a weapon in the war on drugs and other forms of organized crime.

This act will clarify the scope of the civil remedies available under section 1964(c) and restore displaced State and Federal law. The RICO Reform Act of 1989 eliminates the award of mandatory treble damages and attorneys' fees in ordinary civil suits between two businesses. These types of garden variety business and contractual disputes were not intended to fall under the purview of RICO and eliminating automatic treble damages and attorneys' fees awards will reduce the incentive to bring these suits under RICO.

Mr. President, we urge our colleagues to join us in sponsoring this important legislative reform.

By Mr. PELL (for himself and Mr. COCHRAN):

S. 439. A bill to establish a program of grants to consortia of local educational agencies and community colleges for the purpose of providing technical preparation education, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

TECH-PREP EDUCATION ACT

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing the "Tech-Prep Education Act. I am very pleased to be joined by my colleague, Senator COCHRAN, in its introduction. This legislation, which I introduced last Congress, authorizes $100 million for demonstration grants to technology education partnerships between local educational agencies and community colleges.

This bill provided discretionary grants to programs which coordinate 2 years of instruction at the high school level with 2 years of instruction at a community college in technology education. This approach offers high school students an alternative course of study that culminates in an associate degree in tech-prep from a community college. The legislation is modeled after a program initiated by Dale Parnell, president of the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges. Its development was prompted by a growing recognition that future occupational needs will require a work force equipped with an education that goes beyond high school instruction, but not necessarily as far as 4 years of postsecondary instruction.

These occupational needs were confirmed by a recent report of the Department of Labor that indicates that the fastest growing jobs will require a considerable degree of technological literacy. This includes computer service technicians, computer systems analysts, programmers and operators, electrical and electronic technicians, mechanical engineers and mechanical engineering technicians.

The tech-prep program is an example of what can be accomplished when secondary schools and community colleges work together. Coordination of 2 years of high school with 2 years at a community college offers an educational channel to a growing group of students who are not part of the college preparatory track, and who are not necessarily part of the vocational educational track, a group of students, who as part of a general educational track, do not have a clear hold on their future direction. This two-plus-two program enables high school students to meet and talk with faculty advisers at the community college, thereby developing a sense of the opportunity that such a course of applied instruction at the community college will offer them. In this manner, it can ignite their interest in pursuing an education beyond the high school level—a pursuit that can have a significant effect on their employment prospects upon graduation.

It is my firm belief that we have a considerable responsibility at the Federal level to break through the convention of 12 years of formal education and go at least as far as 14 years. it is clear that the needs of the sophisticated work force demand education beyond high school. Moving beyond what I would call the 12-year barrier will mean the difference between riding the wave of prosperity and growth, or being sucked under by the drain of inadequate skills. To my mind, the two-plus-two program is an important initiative that begins the groundwork toward achieving this goal.

Tech-prep programs have already been launched at the Community College of Rhode Island with successful results. Eleven high schools currently participate in the program, and an additional five will participate next year. I am very hopeful that we can build on this success in Rhode Island and throughout the Nation.

The legislation we are introducing today enables both community colleges and high schools to establish model technology education programs which can then be repeated nationwide. Assistance under this legislation is designed to encourage these educational partnerships to begin a program that will continue when Federal aid ends. This, therefore, is the basis for a gradual decline in the Federal aid share.

Special emphasis in funding would be placed on applications which successfully assist students with job placement or enrollment in a 4-year postsecondary program. And, additional consideration is given to applications which involve business, industry and labor unions.

This legislation will be a particular focus during the reauthorization of the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act this Congress. Similar legislation has been introduced in the House by Congressman WILLIAM D. FORD. Congressman FORD's views on this legislation are outlined in a recent interview in the Community Technical and Junior College Journal. I would recommend this article to my colleagues as background on this legislation, and ask that this interview be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

Mr. President, we have an opportunity through this legislation to strengthen the linkages between secondary and postsecondary instruction. Such linkages are clearly in our national interest, as they improve the relationship between course work at both institutions. This is something that can often encourage students to continue their education beyond high school by improving the transition from high school to college so that the time spent in college is more productive and less duplicative. It also offers high school instructors greater access to training, facilities and equipment at the community college, and enables community colleges to become even more responsive to their communities by giving them a greater sense of the needs of local schools, their students and their teachers.

I commend this legislation to my colleagues, and urge that they give it very careful consideration. I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 439

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Tech-Prep Education Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Rapid technological advances and global economic competition demand increased levels of skilled technical education preparation and readiness on the part of youths entering the work force.

(2) Effective strategies reaching beyond the boundaries of traditional schooling are necessary to provide early and sustained intervention by parents, teachers, and educational institutions in the lives of students.

(3) A combination of nontraditional school-to-work technical education programs, using state of the art equipment and appropriate technologies, will reduce the dropout rate for secondary school students in the United States and will produce youths who are mature, responsible, and motivated to build good lives for themselves.

(4) The establishment of systematic technical education articulation agreements between secondary schools and community colleges is necessary for providing youths with skills in the liberal and practical arts and in basic academics with the intense technical preparation necessary for finding a position in a changing workplace.

(5) By the year 2000 an estimated 15 million manufacturing jobs will require more advanced technical skills, and an equal number of service jobs will become obsolete.

(6) More than 50 percent of jobs that are currently developing will require skills greater than those currently provided by existing educational programs.

(7) Dropout rates in urban schools are currently 50 percent or higher, and more than 50 percent of all Hispanic youth drop out of high school.

(8) Each year, as a result of 1 million youths dropping out of secondary school with inadequate preparation to enter the work force, the United States loses $240,000,000,000 in earnings and taxes.

(9) Employers in the United States pay an estimated $210,000,000,000 annually for formal and informal training, remediation, and in lost productivity as a result of untrained and unprepared youth joining, or attempting to join, the work force of the United States.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to provide planning and demonstration grants to consortia of local educational agencies and community colleges, for the development and operation of 4-year technical preparation education programs leading to an associate degree for youths; and

(2) to provide, in a systematic manner, strong, comprehensive links between secondary schools and community colleges.

SEC. 3. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary of Education shall make grants to pay the Federal share of the cost of activities carried out under this Act to consortia of—

(1) local educational agencies or area vocational schools serving secondary school students; and

(2) community colleges (including postsecondary vocational technical schools).

(b) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the cost of any activity carried out with assistance under this Act may not exceed—

(1) for the first year that a grant is received, 80 percent of such cost with respect to planning purposes;

(2) for the second year that a grant is received, 60 percent of such cost with respect to implementation and operation;

(3) for the third year that a grant is received, 40 percent of such cost with respect to operation; and

(4) for the fourth and fifth year that a grant is received, 20 percent of such cost with respect to operation.

SEC. 4. TECHNICAL PREPARATION EDUCATION PROGRAMS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Each grant recipient shall use amounts paid under this Act to develop and operate a 4-year technical preparation education program.

(b) CONTENTS OF PROGRAM.—Each such program shall—

(1) be carried out under an articulation agreement between the participants in the consortium;

(2) consist of the 2 years of secondary school preceding graduation and 2 years of higher education, with a common core of required proficiency in mathematics, science, communications and technologies designed to lead to an associate degree in a specific career field;

(3) include the development of technical preparation education program curriculum appropriate to the needs of the consortium participants; and

(4) include in-service training for teachers that—

(A) is designed to train teachers to implement effectively technical preparation education curriculum;

(B) provides for joint training for teachers from all participants in the consortium; and

(C) may provide such training in weekend, evening and summer sessions, institutes or workshops.

(c) ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—Each such program may—

(1) provide for training programs for counselors designed to enable counselors more effectively to recruit students for technical preparation education programs, and ensure their successful completion of such programs and their placement in appropriate employment; and

(2) provide for the acquisition of technical preparation education program equipment.

SEC. 5. APPLICATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each consortium that desires to receive a grant under this section shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time and in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(b) FIVE-YEAR PLAN.—Each application submitted under this section shall contain a 5-year plan for the development and implementation of activities under this Act.

(c) APPROVAL.—The Secretary shall approve applications based on their potential to create an effective technical preparation education program as described in section 4.

(d) SPECIAL CONSIDERATION.—The Secretary shall give special consideration to applicants whose applications—

(1) provide for effective employment placement activities or transfer of students to four-year baccalaureate degree programs;

(2) demonstrate commitment to continue the program after the termination of assistance under this Act; and

(3) are developed in consultation with business, industry and labor unions.

(e) EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE.—In making grants, the Secretary shall ensure an equitable distribution of assistance among the States and among a cross section of urban and rural consortium participants.

SEC. 6. REPORTS.

Each grant recipient shall, with respect to assistance received under this Act, submit to the Secretary such reports as may be required by the Secretary to ensure that such grant recipient is complying with the requirements of this Act.

SEC. 7. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "articulation agreement" means a commitment to a program designed to provide students with a nonduplicative sequence of progressive achievement leading to competencies in a technical preparation education program.

(2) The term "community college" has the meaning provided in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 for an institution which provides not less than a two-year program which is acceptable for full credit toward a bachelor's degree.

(3) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education.

(4) The term "local educational agency" has the meaning provided in section 1471(12) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

(5) The term "technical preparation education program" means a combined secondary and postsecondary program which—

(A) leads to an associate degree;

(B) provides technical preparation in at least 1 field of mechanical, industrial or practical art, trade or applied science;

(C) provides competence in mathematics, science and communications (including through applied academics); and

(D) leads to placement in employment.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years to carry out the provisions of this Act.

THE FORD BILL: CREATING A WORLD-CLASS WORK FORCE

(By Frank Mensel)

How often has a community college president or school superintendent been frustrated by a local employer's request for a special technician's course, because the college or school district's math, science, and technical courses fell short of meeting the employer's standards?

Many such frustrations will disappear—and American technical education will become a more formidable force in the global skills derby—if the $200 million Tech-Prep Education Act authored by Rep. William D. Ford, (D-MI), becomes law. Ford, widely recognized as the foremost voice of the House on postsecondary issues, has signaled his determination to win passage of Tech-Prep by reintroducing the bill in the first minutes of the new Congress as H.R. 22.

Ford has summed up the purpose of his bill as "a program of matching grants to consortia consisting of secondary schools and community colleges to encourage them to provide a four-year program of tech-prep education . . . which, first, leads to an associate degree; second, provides technical preparation in at least one mechanical, industrial, or practical field; third, provides a high level of competence in mathematics, science, and communications; and fourth, leads to job placement.

"Our society," he stresses, "needs workers well-trained in technology and well-versed in basic skills if we are to forge the world-class work force for the future.

"We simply have to out-produce them," he says, as his way of summing up the urgency of moving vocational technical education into the forefront of American education, in order to give it the quality and appeal necessary to make the U.S. skill base the best in the world.

Twice the former chair of the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education, and the ranking Democrat of the Education and Labor Committee, Ford chairs the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. In asking the chair of a full committee to chair a subcommittee of another standing committee, the House made an exception to its own rules in asking him four years ago to lead the Postsecondary Subcommittee in complex reauthorization of the 1986 Higher Education Act.

AACJC's Frank Mensel recently met with Ford to discuss the workforce needs of the future.

MENSEL. Do you see a connection between vocational-technical education and what is happening to the U.S. economy and work force in global competition?

FORD. Well, anybody who comes from an industrial area like mine has had to see it for a number of years. The requirements of the work force are changing dramatically. I frequently refer to the period we are going through as the second industrial revolution of the 20th Century. People refer to the period leading up to World War I as our industrial revolution, a dramatic turn from agriculture as the primary economic base to manufacturing. Today's revolution is every bit as important because it is condensing into a relatively short period of time radical changes in what the American work force looks like . . . as in the service industries, with the kinds of things that people are relying on other people to do for them.

From the end of the Depression until probably the late 1970s, you could afford to ignore the fact that high schools were not really doing a good job with vocational education in terms of matching skills to actual job requirements. There were plenty of industrial jobs around that people literate could handle and learn on the job and in a few years be making a very respectable, middle-class income.

Today, I tell high school students in my area that unless they are fortunate enough to get more education than their parents had, the likelihood that they will be able to provide for their own families the life style that their parents provided for them, as an auto worker, steel worker, or chemical worker, is very slight. Most of the available jobs that are still left in industry—require far more entry-level training than they did just a generation ago.

MENSEL. What is the impact of such change on the American work force?

FORD. When we were going at it in the late 1960s, we did a number of things to try to redirect vocational education away from traditional ideas of what it was—elementary wood shop, elementary metal shop, homemaking, all those titles they used to have that bore no real relevance to what the labor market out there was or was likely to be. We started a number of incentives with federal money that go far beyond the value of a dollar in tailoring a change of attitudes.

Now we have to continue. In my district educators have understood a need for change longer than parents. Parents saw no reason why their children could not repeat their own experiences. Now parents are beginning to understand, and the kids have been figuring this out in high school for some time. There is a strong and increasing realization on the part of young people themselves that they cannot make it the way dad did or mother did.

The other thing is the rapid movement of women into the work force—not precipitated by some exceptional factor like war work—but the first infusion of women into jobs that have been nontraditional for them. It was the country's attitude in the past that the workplace would do everything it could for women when they were needed in a national emergency, but to hell with them the rest of the time. Now we know that most women are planning to be in the work force. They expect to work most of the years that men have traditionally felt they had to work. Women are not working anymore because it is something nice to do to get away from the kids. They are working because they want to work, and we have got to do things to advance training that we haven't done in the past.

MENSEL. What I hear you saying, then, is that these changes are coming about as much from internal pressures in our society as from global pressures.

FORD. All you have to do is look at Census figures. When we were doing the Higher Education Act reauthorization, we got tired of listening to people talk about a typical family, about how parents ought to do more to help their kids go to college. We asked the Library of Congress and the Census people who was really out there and who we were passing the legislation for. What we are going to have in a very short time is a new underclass of people who used to be middle class, and a population that could fall very short of the kind of workers that are going to be needed. We will always have plenty of people coming out of the big schools to be the managers of the companies. But there has to be somebody who really makes the thing work: people who can adapt to new technologies that are coming along—not just machines, but processes, compounds, chemicals, and all sorts of new things. A barely literate person is lost. No longer can we contemplate people being able to function effectively with the skills they leave high school with. They are continually going to have to get more education, more training. There is nothing that I have seen that indicates to me that we are going to have any substantial enlargement of the work force in a way that is either going to affect the strength of this country, the strength of the economy, or the welfare of the workers that is not tied to more education or more training.

MENSEL. That transition from high school to adult training points up the need for the two-plus-two Tech-Prep concept.

FORD. What we need is something more than teaching kids how to fry hamburger, but teaching them how to figure out how the business runs, how to order and estimate things, and to do all the rest of it. This is all part of what we are aiming at in the partnership arrangement between community colleges and the high schools in the two-plus-two approach. Now, I wish I could say that we thought this up, but, as a matter of fact, in my area some of this is already going on.

MENSEL. Yes, the idea has been around. As a matter of fact, several states are trying it.

FORD. In places where you have people of good will who have really tried to make it work, it is working. And everybody that gets hands-on experience with it seems to be saying, Hey, why didn't we do this sooner? So it's not just a good idea for Michigan; it should be a good idea for the country. My area is a microcosm, moving perhaps a bit ahead of others because we have had a firm industrial base that has been going overseas, and it is being replaced by technology.

MENSEL. How does this slippage in voc ed relate to our trade deficit?

FORD. If you only look at the part of the trade deficit that is represented by our ability to produce goods. I don't think that's a big part of our problem at this point. If the trade bill and the Bush administration produce some slowdown in the artificial factors that discriminate against our exports, what do you do then?

We can't crank up what we had in World War II again and be competitive because too many countries have emerged that, on that basis, are better than competitive with us. If you look at national training needs with the selfish idea of how do I make this a strong country for our grandchildren, or will we let it fall down around our ears, it won't be because we don't have enough rocket scientists. We will be turning out rocket scientists—the rewards for being a rocket scientist in our society are sufficient. What I am worried about is the sort of journeyman worker who can adapt to new ways of doing things and grow with change and benefit from that growth. You are not going to outproduce the other guy by manpower, by numbers of people; we are going to have to have better people. . . . And, in fact, American industries are catching up on quality. In the process of catching up, they are changing the work force dramatically.

With Washtenaw Community College retraining machinists for General Motors, GM makes transmissions for some 28 companies around the world. The Rolls Royce transmission is made there, not by fine craftsmen in England, but by fine American auto workers. GM came to the conclusion that if they were going to upgrade, it was better to re-educate a machinist to be compatible with computers and robots than to train others in computers and robots and turn them into machinists. They turned to Washtenaw Community College, and they started training employees. Almost immediately they discovered something interesting, which is reflected in a way in our bill. Just training them to become computer literate won't get the job done. So they added to the vocational element, if you will, a course in psychology. It was designed to deal with the psychology of reaching 30- to 40-year-olds so that in working with the upgraded machinery, they would be convinced that they could grow as the technology grows, and that they were not going to be replaced but were going to be part of what goes on. Until Washtenaw added the psychology program, there was a tremendous dropout problem.

In essence, Ford believes American vocational-technical education will not meet the long-term challenge of global competition unless the community colleges and secondary education "get their act together." The articulation, improved content, and increased student appeal that his bill seeks to foster are vital keys to a winning human resource initiative. "We have to out-produce the competition . . . and we will, "he concludes, in a tone of optimism borne of many legislative successes.

By Mr. BIDEN:

S. 440. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to extend Medicaid coverage to certain low-income children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

HEALTH CARE FOR CHILDREN ACT

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing, along with Senator INOUYE, the Health Care For Children Act. This legislation seeks to fill some of the serious gaps in Medicaid's coverage of poor children and pregnant women. The bill expands Medicaid's income eligibility rules so that all children aged 18 and under in families with incomes below 100 percent of the Federal poverty line would be covered by 1993. The bill also addresses a number of other barriers to care for both children and pregnant women, including abolishing the use of asset tests and improving reimbursement levels.

We are in the midst of a great national debate on how to provide medical care to the 37 million Americans who have no health insurance. Some argue that businesses should be required to provide insurance to their employees, some argue that the Government must fill this gap, some argue that the uninsured must themselves play a role in solving their problems, and some like me argue for a combination of these strategies. One thing that is clear, however, is that this debate is almost certain to range on for several years to come. Rather than waiting indefinitely for a total solution to the problems of the uninsured, we must quickly take the crucial interim step of addressing the needs of the most vulnerable members of our society—poor children.

Medicaid is the only source of health insurance for most poor children, but there are major gaps in its coverage. In 1985, Medicaid served fewer than half of all poor children. While the program has been expanded several times in recent years, there are still millions of poor children who are not covered by Medicaid or any other health insurance.

Similarly, our disgracefully high infant mortality rate could be reduced with timely prenatal care. While Congress has recently expanded Medicaid's coverage of poor pregnant women, a number of barriers in addition to income eligibility continue to prevent many women from receiving needed care.

This is not simply a matter of abstract rules—lack of Medicaid coverage can have a dramatic effect on the lives of these women and children. A number of studies have documented that people without health insurance are less likely to receive needed medical care, and that failure to receive needed care often leads to preventable death and illness. The evidence is overwhelming. A study by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation found that only 40 percent of persons without health insurance seek help when they have such worrisome symptoms as chest pains or frequent loss of consciousness, while more than 65 percent of similar sufferers who have insurance go to a doctor. According to the Children's Defense Fund, low-income children with no health insurance receive only about one-half the medical care received by insured children. Another study by the researchers at the University of Pittsburgh found that two-thirds of the uninsured who needed health care did not seek it.

It is not acceptable for these children to go without medical care. These children are not "somebody else's" children. They're our children—American children—and they're our future. We can no longer allow young children to be denied the basic human right of medical care, simply because they were born into proverty. For no child can hope to develop to his full potential if his abilities are stunted by a lack of health care. Today, however, our poor children are not protected against health problems that slow their development and sap the energies they need to achieve in school.

GAPS CAUSED BY INCOME ELIGIBILITY RULES

The problem arises because Medicaid is generally only available to persons with family incomes below their State's welfare eligibility level, rather than the Federal poverty line—which is $9,690 for a family of three. The only major exception is that States are required to provide Medicaid coverage to all pregnant women and infants in families with incomes below 100 percent of the Federal poverty line.

Under recent expansions of the program, States have the option of covering children aged 7 and younger up to 185 percent of the Federal poverty line. While a number of States have seized all or a part of this option, millions of poor children still have no coverage.

The problem with covering the majority of our children only up to State welfare eligibility lines is that these levels are frequently extremely low. In the average State, a family must have an income of less than half of the Federal poverty level to be eligible for Medicaid. In nine States, the Medicaid eligibility level is less than 25 percent of the Federal poverty line. As of last July, for example, a child in a three-person family with an annual income of $1,417 was not considered poor enough to receive Medicaid in Alabama.

Even though many States have medically needy programs for families with high medical expenses and incomes up to 33 percent above State welfare eligibility levels, in the average State these programs still only extend Medicaid coverage to persons with incomes of 60 percent or less of the Federal poverty level. In any case, some States—including my own State of Delaware—do not even have a medically needy program.

Finally, even some children in families with incomes below State welfare eligibility levels may not receive Medicaid because of their family structure.

The Health Care for Children Act would help reverse this situation. While I would prefer to have these children covered immediately, due to budgetary and administrative constraints this legislation will require States to provide Medicaid coverage for all children 18 years of age or younger with family incomes below 100 percent of the Federal poverty line within the next 4 years. This coverage would be phased in as follows: States would be required to cover all children aged 7 and younger by 1990; aged 12 and younger by 1991; aged 15 and younger by 1992; and aged 18 and younger by 1993. To phase in full coverage for poor children more slowly would raise the possibility that some children in a family could have adequate medical insurance at a time when their older siblings were still uninsured.

GAPS CAUSED BY RESOURCE ELIGIBILITY RULES

In addition to income tests, families must often meet stringent asset tests to be eligible for Medicaid. As a result, in many States, a child can be denied Medicaid coverage if the family has a car worth $1,501, even if that is the only way the parent can get to work or transport the child to a doctor. The Health Care for Children Act would require States to eliminate asset tests for poor pregnant women and children aged 18 or under.

Sarah Shuptrine has studied the reasons that some families who apply for AFDC/Medicaid benefits are denied benefits. She found that, according to official records, 4 percent of all eligibility denials are due to findings that the applicants had too many resources.

Asset tests also create a more hidden barrier to medical care, by generating redtape that prevents some eligible families from receiving coverage. There can be little doubt that redtape blocks many eligible persons from receiving Medicaid. Sarah Shuptrine reported that of over 2.6 million persons, mostly children, denied eligibility in fiscal year 1986, 60 percent of these applicants were turned down because they failed to comply with procedural requirements. In another 7.8 percent of these denials, the client withdrew the application before the agency had made a decision. While she reports that the exact reasons that so many applicants failed to complete the eligibility process are unknown, I suspect that it could well be that many of these applicants withdrew because they either realized that they could not meet their State's asset tests or failed to comply with procedures because they could not complete the lengthy and difficult application form.

Unfortunately, the information and documentation required by some States to verify that applicants meet their asset tests often add to the length and complexity of application forms. When one State recently eliminated its asset test for pregnant women, its Medicaid application form dropped from 14 pages to 4 pages.

Some will wonder about the wisdom of simply eliminating asset tests, and will argue that it would be better to merely reduce them. The experience of many States leads me to disagree. The 1986 Omnibus Budget reconciliation Act allowed States to do away with asset tests for pregnant women and infants. As a result, 44 States modified their asset tests. While a few of these States reduced their asset tests or changed them around, 37 of the States completely eliminated their asset tests for this population.

In addition, there is very little risk that this provision will lead to abuse. I suspect that very few, if any, children in families which have so many assets that they are objectively well off, will sneak into the program if there are no asset tests. The income requirements are simply so stringent that almost all families with substantial assets would already be ineligible even without resource tests.

Finally, the only way to seriously reduce the redtape and the length of application forms is to eliminate asset tests. Simply increasing the amount of assets allowed will do little to cut this redtape.

PRESUMPTIVE ELIGIBILITY

Medicaid's application process often takes several months, and this delay can be very harmful for children. Many parents do not apply for Medicaid for their children until after they discover that their child is ill. Because of the waiting period, some children do not receive coverage of medical care until well after they are ill. This is unfortunate, because delaying medical care often exacerbates ailments that could have been easily cured with timely care.

Congress recently gave the States the option of extending presumptive eligibility to pregnant women, and about 20 States have taken this option so far. Some have argued that the Congress should mandate this option, and require all States to extend presumptive eligibility to pregnant women. I do not agree with this proposal, however, not much data has come back from the field, yet, to demonstrate in hard evidence the effectiveness of the current presumptive eligibility option. In addition, there is still substantial opposition from some State Medicaid directors to this process. Before we mandate that the remaining States also adopt this system, it would be better to first offer the States even more presumptive eligibility options, and let the system prove itself in the field.

Accordingly, this bill would extend the current presumptive eligibility option, so that States could offer presumptive eligibility to all children aged 18 and younger.

PROVIDER REIMBURSEMENTS

Under current regulations, State Medicaid plans must offer sufficient reimbursements to providers so that "care and services are available under the plan at least to the extent that such care and services are available to the general population."

This regulation is rarely enforced, however, and Medicaid's reimbursements to its providers are extremely low. While many commentators on this topic focus on reimbursements to physicians—and particularly the wholly inadequate reimbursements to obstetricians—we should not overlook the effect of low reimbursements on hospitals as well. According to a study by the National Association of Children's Hospitals and Related Institutions, in 1986 children's hospitals lost 23 cents for every dollar of medical care provided to children covered by Medicaid.

As a result of poor reimbursements, many providers refuse to treat Medicaid patients. In some cities, only one hospital will take any Medicaid patients except in emergencies. In some rural areas, patients must travel great distances to find a provider who will treat them.

This legislation seeks to remedy this situation by strengthening the enforcement of existing law relative to reimbursements. First, the Health Care for Children Act would codify the above cited regulatory language into statutory law. Second, the legislation would establish a structure to enforce this law. Under this structure, States would be required to submit their reimbursement rate schedules for Medicaid care to pregnant women and children aged 18 and under annually to the Department of Health and Human Services. This requirement would extend both to reimbursement rates for care by pediatricians, obstetricians and other physicians and to care provided by hospitals. States would also be required to submit a variety of other information that will help the Secretary of HHS evaluate the adequacy of these schedules. If the Secretary determines from this data that a State's reimbursement rates are insufficient, he or she could order the State to improve its fees as a condition to continued participation in the Medicaid Program.

Mr. President, this legislation will not solve the problems of all of the uninsured, and it is far from a complete answer to America's health needs. Nonetheless, this bill would help provide basic, needed medical care to the youngest, the most vulnerable and the poorest among us. We can afford to do no less.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the Health Care for Children Act be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 440

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Health Care for Children Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS OF CONGRESS WITH RESPECT TO MEDICAID COVERAGE.

The Congress finds that—

(1) millions of poor children in America have no health insurance, and there are substantial gaps in medicaid's coverage of these children;

(2) to fill gaps in medicaid coverage, it is necessary to expand medicaid's income and resource eligibility rules;

(3) even for those persons who are eligible for medicaid, a variety of daunting procedural barriers often prevent such persons from receiving coverage; and

(4) children without health insurance are less likely to receive needed medical care, and failure to receive medical care often results in preventable death and illness.

SEC. 3. PHASED-IN MANDATORY COVERAGE OF CERTAIN LOW-INCOME CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1902 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(10)(A)(i)—

(A) by striking "or" at the end of subclause (IV),

(B) by striking the semicolon at the end of subclause (V) and inserting ", or", and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subclause:

"(VI) who are described in subparagraph (C) of subsection (l)(1) and whose family income does not exceed the income level the State is required to establish under subsection (l)(2)(B) for such a family;";

(2) in subsection (a)(10)(A)(ii)(IX), by inserting "or clause (i)(VI)" after "clause (i)(IV)"; and

(3) in subsection (l)—

(A) by striking subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) and inserting the following:

"(C) Children who—

"(i) after September 30, 1990, have attained one year of age but have not attained 9 years of age,

"(ii) after September 30, 1991, have attained one year of age but have not attained 13 years of age,

"(iii) after September 30, 1992, have attained one year of age but have not attained 16 years of age, and

"(iv) after September 30, 1993, have attained one year of age but have not attained 19 years of age,"; and

(B) by striking subparagraph (B) of paragraph (2) and inserting the following:

"(B) For purposes of paragraph (1) with respect to individuals described in subparagraph (C) of that paragraph, the State shall establish an income level which is equal to the minimum percentage provided under subclause (I) or (II) of subparagraph (A)(ii) of the income official poverty line described in subparagraph (A) applicable to a family of the size involved.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1905(n)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(n)(2)) is amended by striking "age of 7" and all that follows through "(or such earlier date as the State may designate)," and inserting in lieu thereof "age of 19".

(c) ADDITIONAL CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1903(f)(4) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(f)(4)) is amended by inserting "(a)(10)(A)(i)(VI)," after "(a)(10)(A)(i)(IV),".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—For purposes of section 1905(n)(2) of the Social Security Act (as amended by subsection (b)) for medical assistance provided—

(1) during fiscal year 1991, any reference to "age of 19" is deemed to be a reference to "age of 9";

(2) during fiscal year 1992, any reference to "age of 19" is deemed to be a reference to "age of 13"; and

(3) during fiscal year 1993, any reference to "age of 19" is deemed to be a reference to "age of 16".

SEC. 4. ELIMINATION OF ASSET TEST FOR CERTAIN PREGNANT WOMEN AND LOW-INCOME CHILDREN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (3) of section 1902(l) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(l)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) Notwithstanding subsection (a)(17), for individuals who are eligible for medical assistance because of subsection (a)(10)(A)(i)(III), (IV) or (VI), the State shall not apply a resource standard with respect to such individuals for the purpose of determining eligibility for or the extent of medical assistance under the plan.

"(B) Notwithstanding subsection (a)(17), for individuals who are eligible for medical assistance because of subsection (a)(10)(A)(ii)(IX)—

"(i) application of a resource standard shall be at the option of the State;

"(ii) any resource standard or methodology that is applied with respect to an individual described in subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) may not be more restrictive than the resource standard or methodology that is applied under title XVI;

"(iii) any resource standard or methodology that is applied with respect to an individual described in subparagraph (B) or (C) of paragraph (1) may not be more restrictive than the corresponding methodology that is applied under the State plan under part A of title IV;

"(iv) the income standard to be applied is the appropriate income standard established under paragraph (2); and

"(v) family income shall be determined in accordance with the methodology employed under the State plan under part A or E of title IV (except to the extent such methodology is inconsistent with clause (D) of subsection (a)(17), and costs incurred for medical care or for any other type of remedial care shall not be taken into account.

"(C) Any different treatment provided under this paragraph for individuals described in subparagraph (A) or (B) shall not, because of subsection (a)(17), require or permit such treatment for other individuals.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall become effective on July 1, 1990.

SEC. 5. OPTIONAL PRESUMPTIVE ELIGIBILITY FOR CERTAIN CHILDREN PROVIDED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title XIX of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"PRESUMPTIVE ELIGIBILITY FOR CHILDREN

"SEC. 1927. (a) A State plan approved under section 1902 may provide for making medical assistance available to any individual under the age of 18 during a presumptive eligibility period.

"(b) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'presumptive eligibility period' means, with respect to any individual under the age of 18, the period that—

"(A) begins with the date on which a qualified provider determines, on the basis of preliminary information, that the family income of such individual does not exceed the applicable income level of eligibility under the State plan, and

"(B) ends with (and includes) the earlier of—

"(i) the day on which a determination is made with respect to the eligibility of the individual for medical assistance under the State plan,

"(ii) the day that is 45 days after the date on which the provider makes the determination referred to in subparagraph (A), or

"(iii) in the case of an individual who does not file an application for medical assistance within 14 calendar days after the date on which the provider makes the determination referred to in subparagraph (A), the fourteenth calendar day after such determination is made; and

"(2) the term 'qualified provider' means any provider that—

"(A) is eligible for payments under a State plan approved under this title,

"(B) provides services of the type described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 1905(a)(2) or in section 1905(a)(9),

"(C) is determined by the State agency to be capable of making determinations of the type described in paragraph (1)(A), and

"(D)(i) receives funds under—

"(I) section 329, 330, or 340 of the Public Health Service Act,

"(II) title V of this Act, or

"(III) title V of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act,

"(ii) participates in a program established under—

"(I) section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, or

"(II) section 4(a) of the Agriculture and Consumer Protection Act of 1973, or

"(iii) is the Indian Health Service or is a health program or facility operated by a tribe or tribal organization under the Indian Self-Determination Act (Public Law 93-638).

"(c)(1) The State agency shall provide qualified providers with—

"(A) such forms as are necessary for an individual under the age of 18 (or a guardian of such individual under State law) to make application for medical assistance under the State plan, and

"(B) information on how to assist such individual in completing and filing such forms.

"(2) A qualified provider that determines under subsection (b)(1)(A) that an individual under the age of 18 is presumptively eligible for medical assistance under a State plan shall—

"(A) notify the State agency of the determination within 5 working days after the date on which determination is made, and

"(B) inform the individual (or such individual's guardian) at the time the determination is made that the individual is required to make application for medical assistance under the State plan within 14 calendar days after the date on which the determination is made.

"(3) An individual under the age of 18, who is determined by a qualified provider to be presumptively eligible for medical assistance under a State plan shall make application for medical assistance under such plan within 14 calendar days after the date on which the determination is made.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, medical assistance that—

"(1) is furnished to an individual under the age of 18—

"(A) during a presumptive eligibility period,

"(B) by a provider that is eligible for payments under the State plan; and

"(2) is included in the care and services covered by a State plan; shall be treated as medical assistance provided by such plan for purposes of section 1903.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall become effective on July 1, 1990.

SEC. 6. PAYMENT FOR SERVICES PROVIDED TO PREGNANT WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

(a) CODIFICATION OF ADEQUATE PAYMENT LEVEL PROVISIONS.—Section 1902(a)(30))(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(30)(A)) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: "and are sufficient to enlist enough providers so that care and services are available under the plan at least to the extent that such care and services are available to the general population".

(b) ASSURING ADEQUATE PAYMENT LEVELS FOR CERTAIN SERVICES.—Title XIX of such Act, as amended by section 5, is further amended by redesignating section 1926 as section 1928 and by inserting after section 1925 the following new section:

"ASSURING ADEQUATE PAYMENT LEVELS FOR SERVICES PROVIDED TO PREGNANT WOMEN AND CHILDREN

"SEC. 1926. (a)(1) A State plan under this title shall not be considered to meet the requirement of section 1902(a)(30)(A) with respect to services provided to individuals described in section 1902(l)(1) as of July 1 of each year (beginning with 1990), unless, by not later than April 1 of such year, the State submits to the Secretary an amendment to the plan that specifies, the payment rates to be used for such services under the plan in the succeeding period and includes in such submission such additional data as will assist the Secretary in evaluating the State's compliance with such requirement.

"(2) The Secretary, by not later than 90 days after the date of submission of a plan amendment under paragraph (1), shall—

"(A) review each such amendment for compliance with the requirement of section 1902(a)(30)(A), and

"(B) approve or disapprove each such amendment.

If the Secretary disapproves such an amendment, the State shall immediately submit a revised amendment which meets such requirement.

"(b) For amendments submitted under subsection (a)(1) in 1991 and thereafter, the data submitted under such subsection shall include, for the second previous year, the following:

"(1) The number of pediatricians, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, obstetricians, family practitioners, and certified nurse midwives who were licensed in the State in the year, and, of such providers, the number of each class of provider who provided services in the State and the number who provided services to medicaid beneficiaries.

"(2) An estimate of—

"(A) the number of pregnant women who were in the State in the year, and the percentage of such women who received prenatal services in the State in the year, and

"(B) the number of pregnant women who were medicaid beneficiaries in the State in the year, and the percentage of such women who received prenatal services in the State in the year.

"(3) An estimate of—

"(A) the number of children aged 18 and under who were in the State in the year, and the percentage of such children who received medical care in the State in the year; and

"(B) the number of children aged 18 and under who were medicaid beneficiaries in the State in the year, and the percentage of such children who received medical care in the State in the year.

"(4) The statewide average payment rates under the State plan for services furnished by pediatricians, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, obstetricians, family practitioners, and certified nurse midwives, by procedure, stated in dollar amounts and as a percentage of the statewide average payment rates for such procedures other than under the State plan.

"(5) The statewide average payment rates under the State plan and the statewide reasonable cost (as that term is defined by the appropriate State regulatory agency or agencies) for inpatient and outpatient services furnished by teaching hospitals, nonteaching hospitals, children's hospitals, rural hospitals, urban hospitals, and disproportionate share hospitals (within the meaning of section 1923(a)(1)), by procedure, stated in dollar amounts and as a percentage of the statewide average payment rates for such procedures other than under the State plan.

"(6) The statewide average payment rates and the statewide reasonable cost (as that term is defined by the appropriate State regulatory agency or agencies) for inpatient services for infants aged one and under furnished by disproportionate share hospitals (within the meaning of section 1923(a)(1)).

Information described in paragraphs (1) and (4) shall be provided separately for providers located in rural areas and for providers located in urban areas and the information described in paragraphs (2) and (3) shall be provided separately, to the extent practicable, for individuals located in rural areas and for individuals located in urban areas. In this section, the term 'medicaid beneficiaries' means individuals (as described in section 1902(l)(1)) entitled to benefits for services under the State plan under this title.

"(c) Nothing in this title (including section 1902(a)(30)(A)) shall be construed as preventing a State from establishing payment levels for services delivered to individuals described in section 1902(l)(1) that are higher for those services furnished in rural areas than those furnished in urban areas.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall become effective upon the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 7. OPTIONAL AND MANDATORY CONTINUITY OF CARE.

(a) OPTIONAL CONTINUED ELIGIBILITY.—Section 1902a(e)(6) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(e)(6)) is amended by inserting "(A)" after "(6)" and by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) At the option of a State, in the case of an individual described in subsection (a)(10)(A)(i)(IV), (a)(10)(A)(i)(VI), or (a)(10)(A)(ii)(IX) who, because of a change in income of the family of which the individual is a member, would not otherwise continue to be described in such subsection, the State may nonetheless treat the individual as being an individual described in such subsection and subparagraph (B) or (C) of subsection (1)(1) (as the case may be) without regard to such change of income through the end of the 1-year period beginning on the last date on which the individual was determined to be eligible for medical assistance as an individual described in such subsection.".

(1) in the first sentence of paragraph (4), by striking "so long as" and all that follows through "the woman remains eligible for such assistance"; and

(2) in paragraph (6)(A) (as redesignated by subsection (a))—

(A) by striking "At the option of a State, in" and inserting "In", and

(B) by striking "the State plan may nonetheless treat the woman as being" and inserting "the woman shall be deemed to continue to be".

(1) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to individuals born on or after July 1, 1990, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendment have been promulgated by such date.

(2) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply to women effective with respect to determinations to terminate eligibility, based on change of income, made on or after July 1, 1990, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendments have been promulgated by such date. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a woman who is provided ambulatory prenatal care pursuant to section 1920 of the Social Security Act during a presumptive eligibility period, the determination that the woman is not eligible for medical assistance (other than under such section) shall not constitute a termination of eligibility.●

By Mr. GRAHAM (for himself, Mr. MACK, and Mr. BENTSEN):

S. 441. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to make available funds to reimburse localities which are impacted by substantial increases in aliens applying for political asylum; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN LOCALITIES FOR COSTS OF POLITICAL REFUGEES

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, many of the fastest-growing communities in our Nation have an unanticipated growth factor which is severely straining financial resources and social services and at times—the very fabric of those communities.

That growth is the arrival of thousands of refugees, undocumented aliens, asylum applicants—by whatever name, people from other countries who arrive in Miami or Brownsville or Los Angeles with nothing but their hopes and their needs.

Those people are not statistics—but they create some alarming ones for the local governments which must absorb the cost of caring for them. It is an unfair burden—Federal immigration policy and enforcement, Federal judicial decisions, all impact a few communities without the backing of Federal resources.

The bill I am introducing today cosponsored by Senator CONNIE MACK will amend section 404 of the Immigration Act to allow the U.S. Attorney General to release up to $20 million from the Immigration Emergency Fund to communities impacted by the recent influx of asylum seekers, many of those from Central America.

It does not require a declaration of emergency—the discretion to reimburse would be triggered by a significant increase in arrivals—an increase of 1,000 asylum applications experienced in an Immigration and Naturalization Service district during a calendar quarter over the previous quarter.

This is realistic and human legislation. Influxes of asylum seekers are a reality of the 1980's. We cannot pretend they don't exist and we cannot shift the entire burden of caring for them to local communities.

Just how severely these arrivals impact an area can be seen in the example of a single Nicaraguan family. We will call them the Cardozas: Manuel, Juana, who is expecting a child, 8-year-old Oscar, and 4-year-old Blanca.

The Cardozas arrive in Miami during 1988. In that year, Dade County, which includes the city of Miami, expended over $14 million in services to Nicaraguans. That figure does not include most costs to the city of Miami nor does it include the $104 million in new school facilities the county must now build.

It does include use of the existing school system, hospital services, emergency housing in a baseball stadium, and social and community college services. We can see the scope of the impact more clearly when we relate it to a single Nicaraguan family.

Upon arrival in Miami the Cardozas are temporarily housed in Bobby Maduro Baseball Stadium. Their stay costs about $232 per person. Then they find housing through a local church group at a cost of $400 a month. Pro bono legal counsel to assist them in filling out an asylum application is worth $300.

Oscar is enrolled in public school at a cost to the State and county school board of $3,930 a year. His sister, Blanca, will be in day care after Juana has her baby and that cost is picked up by volunteer groups or families.

Manuel goes to English language and vocational skills training at Miami Dade Community College on a $420 scholarship—but he has no legal work permit—so he looks for illegal work at very low pay. The family is now living on charity. Medical and educational services are still provided for them.

Juana gives birth to a son at Jackson Memorial Hospital. If it is a normal birth, the cost to the hospital is $2,500. If there are complications, if the baby requires neonatal care—the cost is between $10,000 and $15,000.

The Cardozas are not a family of extraordinary needs but the cost of supplying their most basic needs fast becomes astronomical. These costs do not take into account untold charitable donations, police and municipal services which must now be stretched to encompass thousands of new people, or the tensions the community experiences.

Our old definition of an emergency doesn't quite fit the Cardozas and the thousands of families like them. But they are an urgent problem all the same. That is why it makes sense to empower the Attorney General to designate funds—at his discretion—to those areas absorbing large numbers of asylum seekers.

This is a short term strategy to deal with a present crisis. The next step will be to appropriate the money authorized for the immigration emergency fund which has not yet been funded.

We cannot, in good conscience, turn our backs on the communities which are bearing the brunt of these influxes. The issues at stake in asylum applications are complex ones, but the simple fact of feeding and clothing and caring for people who arrive on our doorstep without warning and without resources is an inescapable reality.

Immigration control is a Federal responsibility. Clearly, any costs to local communities resulting from refugee arrivals stimulated by foreign policy decisions or a failure to control U.S. borders should be borne by the Federal Government.

Our support of this bill will send an unmistakable signal to local governments that the Federal Government is prepared to act responsibly and fairly in dealing with the special problems arising from influxes of refugees and asylum seekers.

Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill as well as a report from GAO be printed in the RECORD

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 441

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 404(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 note) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(b)"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Whenever a district director of the Service certifies to the Commissioner that the number of asylum applications filed in the respective district during a calendar quarter exceeded by 1,000 or more the number of asylum applications filed in that district during the preceding calendar quarter, then funds which are authorized to be appropriated by paragraph (1), subject to the dollar limitation contained in subsection (b), shall be available for the reimbursement of localities providing assistance to aliens in that district who have asylum applications pending.

"(B) Not more than $20,000,000 shall be available for all localities eligible for benefits under this paragraph.

"(C) For purpose of subparagraph (A), the requirement of paragraph (1) that an immigration emergency be determined shall not apply.".

[Factsheet from the General Accounting Office for Hon. Bob Graham and Hon. Connie Mack]

Asylum Applicants—Financial Impact on Local Services in the Miami Area

In response to your joint request, we met individually with Miami area officials [1] on February 1, 1989, to discuss how the influx of Nicaraguans entering the country at Brownsville, Texas, has affected local service providers in Miami. The Miami officials expressed concern about (1) the financial strain on their public and private organizations providing services to the aliens (e.g., education for children and health needs) and (2) the aliens' general welfare.

After briefing your offices on the result of the meetings with Miami officials, you asked us to provide you with a written summary of the information provided to us. The information Miami officials provided was (1) derived from the data they had at the time of the meetings and (2) not verified by us. The Greater Miami Chamber of Commerce set the agenda and invited the participants. Representatives from your Miami offices were present.[2]

BACKGROUND

United States law allows aliens legally or illegally in this country to apply for asylum. To be granted asylum, an alien is required to demonstrate a well-founded fear of persecution in his or her home country (or country of habitual residence for those persons having no nationality) because of race, religion, nationality, political opinion, or membership in a social group.

The Refugee Act of 1980 established the authority for any alien present in the United States, or at a land border or port-of-entry, to apply for asylum irrespective of the alien's immigration status. The act authorizes the Attorney General at his discretion to grant asylum to an alien who meets the definition of a refugee and requires that the Attorney General establish a uniform procedure for determining the eligibility of an alien for asylum. The Attorney General has delegated his authority to grant asylum to the 33 district directors of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) and the immigration judges in the Department of Justice's Executive Office for Immigration Review.

According to an INS official, the 10 INS district offices with the largest volume of asylum applications received 56,067 applications in fiscal year 1988. The INS Los Angeles District Office received the most applications (28,491), and the INS Miami District Office was second with 8,214 applications. INS estimates that these 10 districts will receive 76,857 applications in fiscal year 1989, or a 37-percent increase from the previous fiscal year. Fiscal year 1989 estimates show that the Los Angeles District will remain first with 33,857 applications and that the Miami District will remain second with 15,021 applications. The estimate for the Miami District shows an 83-percent increase to 15,021.

According to INS statistics, of the 6,270 aliens applying for asylum in INS' Harlingen District in Texas between January 9 and 27, 1989, 38 percent were from Nicaragua and 29 percent were from El Salvador. Miami was the most frequent destination given (31 percent) and Los Angeles the second (19 percent). of the 1,947 applicants going to Miami, about three-fourths (1,440) were Nicaraguans. The remainder were Hondurans (237), Guatemalans (121), and El Salvadoreans (75). The country of origin for 68 aliens was unknown and 6 came from 5 other countries.

INFORMATION DADE COUNTY PUBLIC SCHOOLS OFFICIALS PROVIDED

Dade County has the largest school enrollment in Florida—an estimated 323,380 students for the 1988 to 1989 school year—and the largest estimated increase in enrollment (67,008) from 1980 to 1990. Both its current enrollment and estimated increase is about twice that (1) of the second largest school district and (2) of the district with the next largest estimated increase. The district is beginning a massive construction and renovation program to accommodate student growth. Forty-nine schools are scheduled for construction in the next 5 to 7 years. Although voters passed a $980 million bond referendum in March 1988, the construction plans did not consider the substantial increase in Nicaraguans. The District has now tapped all available state and local funding sources for its capital construction program and must now address the influx of aliens. According to the district, its present student space is already 20 percent less than what is needed for just its current enrollment. To handle the overcrowding, class size has been increased, space is being rented, and rooms not intended to be used as classrooms are being used as such.

According to officials from Dade County Public Schools, a critical problem is a lack of classroom space, but the district has operating expenses of $5.8 million for school years 1987 to 1988 and 1988 to 1989 that were not reimbursed by the state. They added that illiteracy levels among the new aliens place even more demands on the district school system.

INFORMATION THE OFFICE OF THE METRO-DADE COUNTY MANAGER PROVIDED

In calendar year 1988, Nicaraguans received an estimated $4 million in social services in addition to those provided by the school system. At Jackson Memorial Hospital, an estimated $3,350,00 was spent to provide health services to Nicaraguan patients classified as indigent or temporarily indigent. The Community Action Agency provided about $480,000 in social services to Nicaraguans for education, health, and nutrition programs. In addition, the Department of Human Resources spent $50,000 for such things as neighborhood emergency services and child and elderly services for about 2,000 Nicaraguans.

INFORMATION CITY OF MIAMI OFFICIALS PROVIDED

On December 14, 1988, the City of Miami offered an emergency shelter at the Bobby Maduro Stadium for the homeless, who included Nicaraguan refugees. The City provided dormitory/sleeping arrangements, meals, job placement, and transportation assistance. City staff have also coordinated volunteer case management services and mental health and primary health services through local agencies. A total of 808 people received services: 433 Nicaraguans and 375 other homeless individuals.

The city estimated the cost of these services since December 14, 1988, to be about $4,000 a day. Most of the daily cost ($3,336) was for personnel and labor (e.g., police, and parks and recreation staff). The remaining daily cost ($683) was for such things as cars, supplies, and property maintenance. Costs are also being incurred for Nicaraguans sheltered at another facility (Pastoral Activity Center).

The Miami City officials said that the Nicaraguans were not causing a crime problem and expressed concern about their plight and the need to find a permanent solution to their problem. The officials believed that if INS denies the aliens' asylum requests, they would try to remain there illegally.

INFORMATION UNITED WAY OFFICIALS PROVIDED

Officials from the United Way of Dade County discussed activities being provided to the Nicaraguans by the private sector. While data was not available from all the member organizations, United Way officials said that one of the United Way agencies provided assistance to 584 Nicaraguans at a cost of $24,744 during the 6 months ending December 31, 1988.

INFORMATION MIAMI-DADE COMMUNITY COLLEGE OFFICIALS PROVIDED

During the 1987 to 1988 school term, Miami-Dade Community College provided education to 1,890 Nicaraguans [3] at a cost of $2,7132,000, which the college bore. The college expects the number of Nicaraguan students to increase by 40 percent to 2,646 in 1989 to 1990.

By Mr. HOLLINGS:

S. 442. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to impose a value added tax and to provide a trust fund in the Department of the Treasury restricting the use of revenues from the value added tax to deficit and debt reduction; to the Committee on Finance.

DEFICIT AND DEBT REDUCTION ACT

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise to introduce in the Senate a bill aimed at enacting a 5-percent value added tax beginning in fiscal year 1990. I do so knowing full well that, as a revenue bill, this measure must find an appropriate legislative vehicle in the other body. Nonetheless, it is urgently important that this proposal be on the table and under discussion in the Senate.

Likewise, Mr. President, I introduce this bill knowing full well that the VAT is a tax that everyone loves to hate. But I am convinced that it is our best bet for reining in America's self-destructive borrowing binge and returning the Federal budget to balance.

Before discussing the virtues of VAT, let us bear in mind the fiscal realities that make this new revenue initiative so imperative. For 8 years now we have listened to the gospel of "no new taxes" and "economic growth will balance the budget." But the fact is that the deficit picture is getting worse, not better. Last year's deficit was $155 billion. This year's is projected at $161 billion.

The Republican President and Democratic Congress are bipartisan to a fault on spending—and taxes. Both are eager to spend more for child care, education, the environment, fighting drugs, and so forth. And neither is willing to raise taxes to pay for it. Under the cloak of bipartisanship, the President and Congress are ready, willing, and able to spend more and pay less.

Now the rude awakening. Yes, we have cut domestic programs over the last 8 years. But by opposing taxes, by refusing to pay for the increases in defense and entitlement programs, the national debt has tripled to nearly $2.6 trillion. Annual interest costs are now $130 billion more than when President Reagan took office in 1981.

In other words, Mr. President, we have begun a permanent new $130 billion spending program that buys not even a paperclip for the American people—indeed, some 30 percent of the interest on our national debt goes to foreigners, most of them Japanese. The days of Rome have returned whereby we in Government are buying the votes of the people with bread and circuses—and debt.

The games we play in Washington must stop. In the Budget Committee and elsewhere, I have outlined my prescription for the Federal budget mess: Freeze most Government spending and enact a 5-percent value added tax [VAT]. Let me make clear right up front my two stipulations regarding the VAT: First, it must exempt food, housing, and health care, thus preventing undue impact on lower income households; and second, all VAT revenues must be placed in an untouchable escrow trust fund earmarked exclusively to reduce the deficit and debt. We must not use these new revenues to stoke up the Federal gravy train again.

What exactly is a VAT? In a nutshell, a VAT is a consumption tax very similar to a retail sales tax. The difference is that, instead of being collected at the cash register, it is collected at each stage in the production and distribution process. Consider, for example, a simple loaf of bread. The farmer, miller, baker, trucker, and grocer are all involved in growing the ingredients, producing the bread, and delivering it to the consumer. A VAT would be assessed on the value added by each firm that is involved in the production and distribution of the loaf of bread. Lest there be any misunderstanding, let's be clear that we are talking about a 5-percent tax strictly on the added increment of value at each stage of production. The net effect then, is an overall 5-percent tax on the total value of the product or service.

VAT's are currently in place throughout the industrialized world. European nations average a 16-percent VAT; in Korea, its 25 percent. As their experience demonstrates, a VAT fosters higher savings, lower interest rates, and—after the first year—lower inflation. It does this by giving people an incentive to cut back on their consumption of nonnecessities. Bear in mind, too, that a VAT poses no threat whatsoever to economic prosperity. A recent study compared 12 industrialized nations that levy a VAT with 12 nations that do not; the study found no difference in overall growth rates between the VAT and non-VAT nations.

A VAT would also serve to reduce the United States huge trade deficit. After all, many of those nonnecessities are luxury consumer goods imported from abroad. Even more important, under international agreements, a VAT is the only kind of tax that can be legally rebated on exported items. In other words, when Mercedes-Benz exports a car to the United States, the German Government rebates the VAT to the manufacturer; this saves Mercedes-Benz on its tax bill, and it makes German cars less expensive and more competitive on the United States market. As Lester Thurow, dean of the business school at MIT, says:

The rules of international trade are structured to make you stupid if you don't have a value added tax.

Of course, the best rationale for a VAT is that, even at a lower percentage rate, it raises one heck of a lot of money. A 5-percent VAT will bring in $70 billion. We need every penny of it. We can't afford another round of the old game of cutting and pasting, selling assets and adopting marginal revenue enhancements to raise $15 billion; meanwhile, interest costs will jump $20 billion and nullify our efforts.

Mr. President, there is no free lunch. Every year that we delay facing reality on the Federal budget, we deepen the harm to our Nation and further mortgage our children's future. We need the freeze, the VAT tax, and the trust fund—now. I urge my colleagues' support for this important bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 442

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Deficit and Debt Reduction Act of 1989".

TITLE I—VALUE ADDED TAX

SEC. 101. IMPOSITION OF VALUE ADDED TAX.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle D of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to miscellaneous excise taxes) is amended by inserting before chapter 31 the following new chapter:

"CHAPTER 30—VALUE ADDED TAX

"SUBCHAPTER E. Definitions and special rules; treatment of certain transactions.

"Subchapter A—Imposition of Tax

"Sec. 4001. Imposition of tax.

"SEC. 4001. IMPOSITION OF TAX.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—A tax is hereby imposed on each taxable transaction.

"(b) AMOUNT OF TAX.—Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the amount of the tax shall be 5 percent of the taxable amount.

"Subchapter B—Taxable Transaction

"Sec. 4003. Taxable transaction.

"Sec. 4004. Commercial-type transaction.

"Sec. 4005. Taxable person.

"Sec. 4006. Transactions in the United States.

"Sec. 4007. Rules relating to other terms used in section 4003.

"SEC. 4003. TAXABLE TRANSACTION.

"For purposes of this chapter, the term 'taxable transaction' means—

"(1) the sale of property in the United States,

"(2) the performance of services in the United States, and

"(3) the importing of property into the United States, by a taxable person in a commercial-type transaction.

"SEC. 4004. COMMERCIAL-TYPE TRANSACTION.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this chapter, the term 'commercial-type transaction' means a transaction engaged in by—

"(1) a corporation, or

"(2) any person (other than a corporation) in connection with a business.

"(b) SALES AND LEASES OF REAL PROPERTY; IMPORTS.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'commercial-type transaction' includes—

"(A) any sale or leasing of real property, and

"(B) any importing of property, whether or not such transaction is described in subsection (a).

"(2) CERTAIN IMPORTED ARTICLES.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1)(B), the importing of an article which is free of duty under part 2 of schedule 8 of the Tariff Schedules of the United States shall not be treated as a commercial-type transaction unless such transaction is described in subsection (a).

"SEC. 4005. TAXABLE PERSON.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, for purposes of this chapter, the term 'taxable person' means a person who engages in a business or in a commercial-type transaction.

"(b) TREATMENT OF EMPLOYEES, ETC.—For purposes of this chapter, an employee shall not be treated as a taxable person with respect to activities engaged in as an employee.

"SEC. 4006. TRANSACTIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

"(a) SALES OF PROPERTY.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the sale of property shall be treated as occurring where delivery takes place.

"(2) REAL PROPERTY.—The sale of real property shall be treated as occurring where the real property is located.

"(b) PERFORMANCE OF SERVICE.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, a service shall be treated as occurring where it is performed.

"(2) SERVICES PERFORMED INSIDE AND OUTSIDE UNITED STATES.—If a service is performed both inside and outside the United States, such service shall be treated as performed—

"(A) inside the United States, if 50 percent or more of such service is performed inside the United States, and

"(B) outside the United States, if less than 50 percent of such service is performed inside the United States.

"SEC. 4007. RULES RELATING TO OTHER TERMS USED IN SECTION 4003.

"(a) EXCHANGES TREATED AS SALES.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) an exchange of property for property or services shall be treated as a sale of property, and

"(2) an exchange of services for property or services shall be treated as the performance of services.

"(b) CERTAIN TRANSFERS TO EMPLOYEES TREATED AS SALES.—For purposes of this chapter, the transfer of property to an employee as compensation (other than a transfer of a type for which no amount is includible in the gross income of employees for purposes of chapter 1) shall be treated as the sale of property.

"(c) PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) CERTAIN ACTIVITIES TREATED AS PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES.—Activities treated as included in the performance of services shall include (but shall not be limited to)—

"(A) permitting the use of property,

"(B) the granting of a right to the performance of services or to reimbursement (including the granting of warranties, insurance, and similar items), and

"(C) the making of a covenant not to compete (or similar agreement to refrain from doing something).

"(2) EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) SERVICES FOR EMPLOYER.—An employee's services for his employer shall not be treated as the performance of services.

"(B) SERVICES FOR EMPLOYEE.—An employer's services for his employee shall not be treated as the performance of services unless such services are of a type which constitute gross income to the employee for purposes of chapter 1.

"(3) PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES TREATED AS SALE OF SERVICES.—The performance of services shall be treated as the sale of services.

"Subchapter C—Taxable Amount; Rate of Tax for Certain Transactions; Credit Against Tax

"Sec. 4011. Taxable amount.

"Sec. 4012. Zero rating for food, housing, and medical care.

"Sec. 4013. Zero rating for farmers, fishermen, mass transit, exports, and interest.

"Sec. 4014. Governmental entities.

"Sec. 4015. Exempt organizations.

"Sec. 4016. Credit against tax.

"SEC. 4011. TAXABLE AMOUNT.

"(a) AMOUNT CHARGED CUSTOMER.—For purposes of this chapter, the taxable amount for any transaction for which money is the only consideration shall be the price charged the purchaser of the property or services by the seller thereof—

"(1) including all invoiced charges for transportation, and other items payable to the seller with respect to this transaction, but

"(2) excluding the tax imposed by section 4001 with respect to this transaction and excluding any State and local sales and use taxes with respect to this transaction.

"(b) EXCHANGES.—For purposes of this chapter, the taxable amount in any exchange of property or services shall be the fair market value of the property or services transferred by the person liable for the tax (determined as if such person had sold the property or services to the other party to the exchange).

"(c) IMPORTS.—For purposes of this chapter, the taxable amount in the case of any import shall be—

"(1) the customs value plus customs duties and any other duties which may be imposed, or

"(2) if there is no such customs value, the fair market value (determined as if the importer had sold the property).

"(d) SPECIAL RULE IN THE CASE OF SALES OF CERTAIN USED CONSUMER GOODS.—For purposes of this chapter, if—

"(1) a taxable person acquires any tangible personal property in a transaction which was not a taxable transaction, and

"(2) such property had been used by an ultimate consumer before such acquisition, the taxable amount in the case of any sale of such property by such taxable person (determined without regard to this subsection) shall be reduced by the amount paid for such property by such taxable person.

"SEC. 4012. ZERO RATING FOR FOOD, HOUSING, AND MEDICAL CARE.

"(a) ZERO RATING FOR FOOD, HOUSING, AND MEDICAL CARE.—The rate of the tax imposed by section 4001 shall be zero with respect to the following:

"(1) FOOD.—The retail sale of food and nonalcoholic beverages for human consumption (other than consumption on the premises).

"(2) HOUSING.—The sale and renting of residential real property for use by the purchaser or tenant as a principal residence.

"(3) MEDICAL CARE.—Medical care.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) NONALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES.—The term 'nonalcoholic beverages' does not include any article which is taxable under chapter 51.

"(2) MEDICAL CARE.—The term 'medical care' means the performance of any service, and the retail sale of any property, payment for which by the purchaser would constitute medical care within the meaning of section 213.

"(3) MOBILE HOMES, ETC., TREATED AS REAL PROPERTY.—A mobile or floating home shall be treated as real property.

"(c) ADVANCE ZERO RATING.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations under which any item which becomes clearly identifiable as an item to which subsection (a) will apply when it reaches the retail stage shall be zero rated for all transactions after it becomes so clearly identifiable.

"SEC. 4013. ZERO RATING FOR FARMERS, FISHERMEN, MASS TRANSIT, EXPORTS, AND INTEREST.

"The rate of the tax imposed by section 4001 shall be zero with respect to the following:

"(1) SALES BY FARMERS OR FISHERMEN.—The sale (other than at retail) of—

"(A) agricultural commodities by the producer of such commodities, or

"(B) fish (or other form of aquatic animal life) by a person in whose business such fish (or other forms) were caught.

"(2) MASS TRANSIT.—The performance of mass transportation services in urbanized areas.

"(3) EXPORTS.—Exports of property.

"(4) INTEREST.—Interest.

"SEC. 4014. GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES.

"(a) ZERO RATING FOR SALES TO GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES AND EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES OF GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES.—The rate of the tax imposed by section 4001 shall be zero with respect to the following:

"(1) SALES TO GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES.—Any sale of property or services to a governmental entity.

"(2) EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES.—The providing by a governmental entity of property and services in connection with the education of students.

"(b) SALES, ETC., BY GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES TAXABLE ONLY WHERE SEPARATE CHARGE IS MADE.—For purposes of this chapter, the sale of property and the performance of services by a governmental entity shall be a taxable transaction if (and only if) a separate charge or fee is made therefor.

"(c) GOVERNMENTAL ENTITY DEFINED.—For purposes of this chapter, the term 'governmental entity' means the United States, any State or political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, a Commonwealth or possession of the United States, or any agency or instrumentality of any of the foregoing.

"SEC. 4015. EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.

"(a) ZERO RATING FOR SECTION 501(c)(3) ORGANIZATIONS; CREDIT ALLOWED FOR ALL PURCHASES.—

"(1) ZERO RATING.—The rate of the tax imposed by section 4001 shall be zero with respect to any taxable transaction engaged in by a section 501(c)(3) organization other than as part of an unrelated business.

"(2) CREDIT ALLOWED FOR ALL PURCHASES.—For purposes of this chapter, a section 501(c)(3) organization shall be treated as engaged in a business with respect to all of its activities.

"(b) TAXABLE TRANSACTIONS IN CASE OF OTHER EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.—For purposes of this chapter, the sale of property and the performance of services by any exempt organization other than a section 501(c)(3) organization shall be a taxable transaction if (and only if) a charge or fee is made for such services.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) SECTION 501(C)(3) ORGANIZATIONS.—The term 'section 501(c)(3) organization' means an organization described in section 501(c)(3) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a).

"(2) OTHER EXEMPT ORGANIZATION.—The term 'other exempt organization' means any organization (other than a section 501(c)(3) organization) which is exempt from tax under chapter 1.

"SEC. 4016. CREDIT AGAINST TAX.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by section 4001 the aggregate amount of tax imposed by section 4001 which has been paid by sellers to the taxpayer of property and services which the taxpayer uses in the business to which the transaction relates.

"(b) EXEMPT TRANSACTIONS, ETC.—If—

"(1) property or services are used partly in the business and partly for other purposes, or

"(2) property or services are used partly for taxable transactions and partly for other transactions, the credit shall be allowable only with respect to the property and services used for taxable transactions in the business. No credit shall be allowable for any transaction occurring when the taxpayer was a nontaxable person.

"(c) EXCESS CREDIT TREATED AS OVERPAYMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If for any taxable period the aggregate amount of the credits allowable by subsection (a) exceeds the aggregate amount of the tax imposed by section 4001 for such period, such excess shall be treated as an overpayment of the tax imposed by section 4001.

"(2) TIME WHEN OVERPAYMENT ARISES.—Any overpayment under paragraph (1) for any taxable period shall be treated as arising on the later of—

"(A) the due date for the return for such period, or

"(B) the date on which the return is filed.

"Subchapter D—Administration

"Sec. 4021. Seller liable for tax.
"Sec. 4022. Tax invoices.
"Sec. 4023. De minimis exemption.
"Sec. 4024. Time for filing return and claiming credit; deposits of tax.
"Sec. 4025. Treatment of related businesses, etc.
"Sec. 4026. Secretary to be notified of certain events.
"Sec. 4027. Regulations.

"SEC. 4021. SELLER LIABLE FOR TAX.

"The person selling the property or services shall be liable for the tax imposed by section 4001.

"SEC. 4022. TAX INVOICES.

"(a) SELLER MUST GIVE PURCHASER TAX INVOICE.—Any taxable person engaging in a taxable transaction shall give the purchaser a tax invoice with respect to such transaction if the seller has reason to believe that the purchaser is a taxable person.

"(b) CONTENT OF INVOICE.—The tax invoice required by subsection (a) with respect to any transaction shall set forth—

"(1) the name and identification number of the seller,

"(2) the name of the purchaser,

"(3) the amount of the tax imposed by section 4001, and

"(4) such other information as may be prescribed by regulations.

"(c) NO CREDIT WITHOUT INVOICE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), a purchaser may claim a credit with respect to a transaction only if the purchaser—

"(A) has received from the seller and has in his possession a tax invoice which meets the requirements of subsection (b), and

"(B) is named as the purchaser in such invoice.

"(2) EMPLOYEES OR OTHER AGENTS NAMED IN INVOICES.—To the extent provided in regulations, the naming of an employee or other agent of the purchaser shall be treated as the naming of the purchaser.

"(3) WAIVER OF INVOICE REQUIREMENT IN CERTAIN CASES.—To the extent provided in regulations, paragraph (1) shall not apply—

"(A) where the purchaser without fault on his part fails to receive or fails to have in his possession a tax invoice,

"(B) to a taxable transaction (or category of transactions) where—

"(i) the amount involved is de minimis, or

"(ii) the information required by subsection (b) can be reliably established by sampling or by another method and can be adequately documented.

"(d) TIME FOR FURNISHING INVOICE.—Any invoice required to be furnished by subsection (a) with respect to any transaction shall be furnished not later than 15 business days after the tax point for such transaction.

"SEC. 4023. DE MINIMIS EXEMPTION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Under regulations, a person—

"(1) whose aggregate taxable transactions for the calendar year do not exceed $20,000, and

"(2) whose aggregate taxable transactions for the next calendar year can reasonably be expected not to exceed $20,000, may elect to be treated as a person who is not a taxable person for the next calendar year.

"(b) EXCEPTIONS.—Subsection (a) shall not apply—

"(1) to any sale or leasing of real property, and

"(2) to any importing of property.

"(c) TERMINATION OF ELECTION.—Any election under subsection (a) for a calendar year shall terminate if the aggregate taxable transactions—

"(1) for the first calendar quarter in such year exceed $7,000,

"(2) for the first 2 calendar quarters in such year exceed $12,000, or

"(3) for the first 3 calendar quarters in such year exceed $17,000.

Such termination shall take effect on the first day of the second month following the close of the first period in which the requirements of paragraph (1), (2), or (3) are met.

"(d) TAXABLE AMOUNT TREATED AS ZERO FOR ZERO-RATED TRANSACTIONS.—For purposes of this section, the taxable amount of any zero-rated transaction shall be treated as zero.

"(e) CONDITION OF ELECTION.—In the case of a person who is a taxable person for any period, an election under subsection (a) may be made for succeeding periods only with the consent of the Secretary. Such consent shall be conditioned on placing such person, for all succeeding periods, in the same position with respect to the tax imposed by section 4001 (and the credit allowed by section 4016) he would have been in if all property and services he holds at the time he becomes a nontaxable person had been acquired as a nontaxable person.

"(f) CASUAL SALES AND LEASES OF REAL PROPERTY EXCLUDED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'taxable transaction' does not include a transaction which is treated as a commercial-type transaction solely by reason of section 4004(b)(1)(A).

"SEC. 4024. TIME FOR FILING RETURN AND CLAIMING CREDIT; DEPOSITS OF TAX.

"(a) FILING RETURN.—Before the first day of the second calendar month beginning after the close of each taxable period, each taxable person shall file a return of the tax imposed by section 4001 on taxable transactions having a tax point within such taxable period.

"(b) CREDIT ALLOWED FOR TAXABLE PERIOD IN WHICH PURCHASER RECEIVES INVOICE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a credit allowable by section 4016 with respect to a transaction may be allowed only for the first taxable period by the close of which the taxpayer—

"(A) has paid or accrued amounts properly allocable to the tax imposed by section 4001 with respect to such transaction, and

"(B) has a tax invoice (or equivalent) with respect to such transaction.

"(2) USE FOR LATER PERIOD.—Under regulations, a credit allowable by section 4016 may be allowed for a period after the period set forth in paragraph (1).

"(c) TAXABLE PERIOD.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'taxable period' means a calendar quarter.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—

"(A) ELECTION OF 1-MONTH PERIOD.—If the taxpayer so elects, the term 'taxable period' means a calendar month.

"(B) OTHER PERIODS.—To the extent provided in regulations, the term 'taxable period' includes a period, other than a calendar quarter or month, selected by the taxpayer.

"(d) TAX POINT.—For purposes of this chapter—

"(1) CHAPTER 1 RULES WITH RESPECT TO SELLER GOVERN.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the tax point for any sale of property or services is the earlier of—

"(A) the time (or times) when any income from the sale should be treated by the seller as received or accrued (or any loss should be taken into account by the seller) for purposes of chapter 1, or

"(B) the time (or times) when the seller receives payment for the sale.

"(2) IMPORTS.—In the case of the importing of property, the tax point is when the property is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption in the United States.

"(e) MONTHLY DEPOSITS REQUIRED.—To the extent provided in regulations, monthly deposits may be required of the estimated liability for any taxable period for the tax imposed by section 4001.

"SEC. 4025. TREATMENT OF RELATED BUSINESSES, ETC.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this chapter (other than section 4023), to the extent provided in regulations, the taxpayer may elect—

"(1) to treat as 1 taxable person 2 or more businesses which may be treated under section 52(b) as 1 employer, and

"(2) to treat as separate taxable persons separate divisions of the same business.

"(b) GIFTS RELATED TO BUSINESS PROMOTION ACTIVITIES.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term 'gift' includes any gift of property or services transferred in connection with business promotion activities.

"SEC. 4035. SPECIAL RULES FOR DISPOSITIONS OF NONBUSINESS REAL PROPERTY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any sale of real property which is treated as a commercial-type transaction solely by reason of section 4004(b)(1)(A), for purposes of this chapter, the taxable amount shall be the excess (if any) of—

"(1) the amount realized on such sale, over

"(2) the adjusted cost to the taxpayer of such real property.

"(b) ADJUSTED COST.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the term 'adjusted cost' means, with respect to any property, the basis of such property increased by expenditures properly chargeable to capital account (other than taxes or other carrying charges described in section 266) for periods during the holding period for such property.

"(2) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—The adjusted cost of any property shall include only amounts incurred during periods after December 31, 1989.

"(c) VALUE ADDED TAX NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—For purposes of this section, the amount realized on any sale of real property shall not include any amount attributable to the tax imposed by this chapter.

"SEC. 4036. SPECIAL RULE FOR INSURANCE CONTRACTS.

"In the case of any contract of insurance, for purposes of this chapter, the taxable amount is the excess of—

"(1) the portion of the premium attributable to insurance coverage, over

"(2) the actuarial cost to the insurer of providing such insurance coverage.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for subtitle D of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting before the item relating to chapter 31 the following:

"CHAPTER 30. Value added tax.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transactions occurring after December 31, 1989.

TITLE II—ALLOCATION OF REVENUES FROM VALUE ADDED TAX

SEC. 201. REVENUE FROM VALUE ADDED TAX TO BE USED TO REDUCE THE PUBLIC DEBT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 3114. Certain proceeds of value added tax to reduce public debt

"(a) There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the 'Deficit Reduction Trust Fund'.

"(b)(1) There is appropriated to the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund amounts equivalent to amounts received in the Treasury after December 31, 1989, from the tax imposed under section 4001 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to the value added tax).

"(2) The amounts appropriated by paragraph (1) shall be transferred at least monthly from the General Fund in the Treasury to the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts referred to in paragraph (1). Proper adjustments shall be made in amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of or less than the amounts required to be transferred.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall use the money in the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund solely to—

"(1) pay at maturity, or to redeem or buy before maturity, an obligation of the Government included in the public debt, and

"(2) pay for any administrative costs in collecting the tax imposed under section 4001 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or in operating the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund.

"(d) Any obligation of the Government which is paid, redeemed, or bought with money from the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund shall be canceled and retired and may not be reissued.

"(e) In calculating for any fiscal year the deficit under section 3(6) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for purposes of comparison with the maximum deficit amount under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (and in calculating the excess deficit under sections 251 and 252 of such Act)—

"(1) amounts received in the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund during such fiscal year shall not be included in total revenues, and

"(2) the disbursements out of such Trust Fund for such fiscal year shall not be included in total budget outlays.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subchapter I of chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"3114. Proceeds of value added tax to reduce public debt.".●

S. 443. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating to convey the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse to the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse Foundation; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

SOUTHEAST LIGHTHOUSE PRESERVATION ACT

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce legislation today that will transfer the historic Southeast Lighthouse on Block Island from the U.S. Coast Guard to the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse Foundation. This measure represents the first step in the renovation and renewal of one of Rhode Island's most memorable landmarks; the Southeast Light.

Lighthouses have played a glorious role in maritime history. From their beginning as beacon fires in the days of the ancient Egyptians to their latest incarnation as steel towers, lighthouses have guided, warned, and reassured mariners during their sea journeys.

Lighthouses have played a particularly special role in the History of the United States. Colonial settlers depended upon the sea for communication and travel, as well as for trade. As our country grew, our maritime traffic became heavier, and lighthouses began to spread along America's coasts. Today, lighthouses serve as monuments to the skill and determination of those who built them. They are inspiring reminders of our rich maritime heritage, and have become part of our national folklore.

The Southeast Lighthouse, located atop the dramatic Mohegan Bluffs on the south shore of Block Island, was erected in 1873 to guide vessels safely past the perils of the rocky coastline. First illuminated on February 1, 1875, it cast a light visible from 35 miles at sea, and represented the Federal Government's commitment to aid navigation around the island. With the establishment of the Federal Lighthouse Service in 1789, the light took its place as an important element in the Government's fight for marine safety.

But it was the lighthouse's combination of utility and beauty that stirred the pride and emotion of the islanders. With its imposing structure and the powerful light of its imported Fresnel lens, the lighthouse was the object of intense local pride, and became a favorite sight for visitors. Tourists, visiting Block Island in the late 19th century, wrote admiringly of the impressive red brick tower and its light.

That same local pride exists today. Block Islanders continue to cherish the light with the same enthusiasm. Indeed, the image of the light has become one of the most recognizable symbols of Rhode Island, used by many state agencies and commercial organizations to represent the State of Rhode Island and her maritime history.

Unfortunately, the rich and colorful era of traditional lighthouses has ended. Most modern lighthouses are automated, and many of the older lighthouses have fallen into disrepair. Of the more than 1,400 lighthouses that were once operational, only 750 are still standing today. The Southeast Light, located less than 100 feet from the eroding cliff edge, is in real danger of joining the shipwrecked vessels at the base of the cliffs.

But a rescue attempt is in progress. The Southeast Lighthouse Foundation, in conjunction with the Rhode Island Historical Preservation Commission, the U.S. Coast Guard, and Block Island residents, is making a valiant effort to raise the money needed for the light's restoration and relocation.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing will transfer ownership of the Southeast Lighthouse from the Coast Guard to the Southeast Lighthouse Foundation. The Coast Guard, in its role as custodian, has done a commendable job in its efforts to preserve the light as a monument to maritime history in Rhode Island. But the Guard is hindered by the constraints of time and budget.

The Southeast Lighthouse Foundation, with the full approval of the Coast Guard, will take on full responsibility for the light's renovation. It hopes to raise the necessary funding for the light's survival, and help make the lighthouse a center for the interpretation and preservation of Block Island's rich maritime culture. Already the foundation has staged a successful exhibit celebrating the history of the lighthouse and of Block Island.

It is my hope that, with this legislation, the Southeast Light will be preserved for the sake of future generations. Given the strong commitment of the U.S. Coast Guard, the Block Island Southeast Light Foundation, the Rhode Island Historical Society, and Block Island residents, I believe that we can successfuly maintain this important State landmark.

Thank you, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 443

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Southeast Lighthouse Preservation Act of 1989".

PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The purpose of this Act is to enable the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse Foundation to establish and maintain a nonprofit center for public benefit at the property commonly referred to as the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse in the town of New Shoreham, Rhode Island, for the interpretation and preservation of the material culture of the United States Coast Guard and Block Island's maritime history.

TRANSFER OF LIGHTHOUSE

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating is authorized to convey, by any appropriate means of conveyance, to the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse Foundation (hereinafter referred to as the "Foundation") of the town of New Shoreham, State of Rhode Island, all right, title, and interest of the United States, in and to certain property comprising the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse in the town of New Shoreham.

TERMS AND CONDITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) The conveyance pursuant to section 3 shall be made without the payment of consideration and shall be made subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating shall impose.

(b) In addition to any term or condition imposed pursuant to subsection (a), any such conveyance pursuant to this Act shall be made subject to the condition that if the property, or any part thereof, ceases to be used for the purpose of this Act, title to all such property so conveyed shall be deemed to have immediately reverted to the United States.

(c) Such conveyance shall include provisions necessary to assure that—

(1) the light, antennas, sound signal and associated equipment located on the property conveyed, which are active aids to navigation, shall continue to be operated and maintained by the United States;

(2) the Foundation will not interfere or allow interference in any manner with such aids to navigation without express written permission from the United States;

(3) there is reserved to the United States the right to relocate, replace, or add any aids to navigation or make any changes on any portion of such property conveyed as may be necessary for navigation purposes;

(4) the United States shall have the right, at any time, to enter such property without notice for the purpose of maintaining navigation aids; and

(5) the United States shall have an easement of access to such property for the purpose of maintaining the navigational aids in use on the property conveyed pursuant to this Act.

(d) In no case, however, shall the Foundation have any obligation to maintain any active aid to navigation equipment on such property.

DEFINITION

SEC. 5. For purposes of this Act, the term "Block Island Southeast Lighthouse" means the lighthouse and attached keeper's dwelling, several ancillary buildings, a fog signal, together with such land as may be necessary for the purpose of this Act.

DESCRIPTION

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the department in which the Coast Guard is operating, in his discretion, is authorized to identify, describe, and determine the property and the amount thereof to be conveyed pursuant to this Act.

GRANT

SEC. 7. (a) Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary of Transportation is authorized to make a grant of $2,000,000 to the Block Island Southeast Lighthouse Foundation to enable it to carry out the provisions of section 2. Such grant shall be made at such time and subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe.

(b) No grant shall be made pursuant to subsection (a) unless the Secretary of Transportation has first determined that such Foundation has available to it, from a non-Federal source, not less than $2,000,000 for use in carrying out the purposes of section 2.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 8. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Transportation the sum of $2,000,000 for use in making grants in accordance with this Act.●

By Mr. GLENN:

S. 444. A bill to amend the Federal Advisory Committee Act; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ACT AMENDMENTS

● Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I join with my distinguished colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee, Senators LEVIN, ROTH, PRYOR, KOHL, HEINZ, LIEBERMAN, STEVENS, and SASSER to introduce the Federal Advisory Committee Act Amendments of 1989. This bill represents a slightly modified version of legislation I introduced late in the 100th Congress (S. 2721) to amend FACA, and is part of the Governmental Affairs Committee's ongoing review of the operation of and compliance with this important open Government law.

FACA was enacted 16 years ago last October to provide a means for the Federal Government to account for and manage Federal advisory committees. In 1971 when FACA legislation was first introduced, Congress didn't even know how many advisory committees there were, how much they cost, or what they did, and there was no way to find out. Educated guesses on the number of advisory committees in existence ranged from 1,000 to 3,000 and no agency had the responsibility to monitor them.

In addition, there were no guarantees of public access to the deliberations of these advisory committees. Some met in closed sessions, and there was no requirement that public notice be given of advisory committee meetings that were open to the public. Concern was voiced that special interests could exercise undue influence on Government decisions without scrutiny.

These issues were addressed in FACA. FACA originally provided for OMB to conduct an annual review of all advisory committees, whether they were created by the executive branch or the Congress, and for OMB to review the charters of agency-created committees before they were established. President Carter transferred this responsibility to the General Services Administration in 1977. FACA required that advisory committee deliberations be in public, subject to certain exceptions which are set forth in the Government in the Sunshine Act. FACA also required that advisory committees be terminated after 2 years unless their charter was renewed by the parent agency. This was intended to slow the proliferation of unnecessary and duplicative committees, which were perceived as the largest problem area with advisory committees.

I think it is fair to say that FACA has served the Government and the public quite well. The real costs to the taxpayer have been held reasonably stable, as evidenced by a few very telling statistics. For instance, the total number of chartered advisory committees has remained relatively constant since 1979 with approximately 1,000 committees, councils, and advisory groups of one type or another in existence at any one time. During fiscal year 1988 alone, over 21,000 individuals served on 1,020 committees providing advice and recommendations to 58 departments and agencies.

The total committee costs have fluctuated, rising from $25 million in 1972 to over $92 million in 1988. However, when we convert these cost figures to 1972 dollars to account for inflation, the increase is much smaller—from $25 million in 1972 to only $35 million in 1988, a very modest increase. And though the nominal cost of each expert's advice per year has risen from $1,800 in 1974 to $4,360 in 1988, when we discount these figures for inflation, the cost per expert in real dollars has actually decreased to only $1,666 in 1988.

However, the story of FACA is not contained in the number of committees or their costs or the numbers of people involved. There is still, even after 16 years, considerable confusion concerning the interpretation of the most fundamental provisions of the act.

I am disturbed to find continued litigation over basic questions such as whether a specific group is an advisory committee as defined in the act or whether the group meets the act's balanced membership requirement. Over the years portions of the act have been criticized by several Federal court judges called upon to interpret its provisions and Congress' legislative intent.

Indeed, one Federal judge commenting on FACA said that it was:

> Obscure, imprecise, and open to broad interpretations. If more expertise were applied to such enactments to ensure that Congress states with more precision what it intends, the rules of the game would be more sharply drawn and court involvement could be less.

In another case involving a dispute over the balanced membership provision of FACA, the Federal district court judge commented that the requirement of FACA that advisory committees be fairly balanced "embodies inherent conceptual and practical difficulties." This very clearly puts the burden on Congress to resolve any difficulties inherent in the act.

Over the last 16 years the Governmental Affairs Committee has held a number of hearings on FACA. In 1976 the committee heard testimony from James Lynn, Director of OMB. He raised a number of questions about attaining an appropriate balance of membership on an advisory committee, open meetings, and the proliferation of advisory committees created by Congress. These comments were echoed again in 1984 by Joseph Wright, Deputy Director of OMB. In his testimony before the Committee's Information Management and Regulatory Affairs Subcommittee, he said:

> Some of the Act's provisions are not drawn, (we see in retrospect), with great clarity. Some are written in a fashion that permit lawyers to argue over their meaning almost endlessly. And, they have. There is also criticism of the way that the Act has been interpreted by the courts, and the effect that these decisions and the ambiguities of the Act have had on the ability of agency officials to obtain advice promptly or even to meet with members of the public.

Mr. Wright went on to cite specific problems with the language of FACA, including the definition and applicability of "balanced membership," the lack of definition of "meeting," and the applicability of FACA to subcommittees.

In response to this record, the Governmental Affairs Committee held two oversight hearings during the 100th Congress on compliance with FACA by the President's AIDS Commission (S. Hrg. 100-538, December 3, 1987) and the Department of Defense/SDIO (S. Hrg. 100-681, April 19, 1988). At both hearings the committee received a number of specific suggestions as to how the act should be clarified and improved. Again, the main areas of concern were the definition of balanced membership, the definition of advisory committee, the openness of meetings and availability of documents, and the need to ensure that members of advisory committees do not have conflicts of interest.

One area of particular concern to me that was highlighted at our oversight hearings is the proliferation of advisory committees created by Congress. So often our response to a problem is to create a committee or commission to study it. And while that in many cases may be the correct thing to do, a number of these committees linger on because Congress has either made the committee permanent, or given it too long a life span, or exempted it from FACA altogether. Mr. Paul T. Weiss, Associate Administrator for Administration of GSA, testified at our December 3 hearing:

> The number of committees directed by the Congress, as a percentage of the total inventory, has doubled over the past 10 years. While the majority of these committees no doubt serve useful purposes, many are established with no fixed date for termination. Consequently, when such groups have accomplished their missions, Federal departments and agencies are hindered in their efforts to comply with FACA's provisions for terminating unneeded advisory committees by the necessity of entering an oftentimes protracted process of seeking legislative relief.

These comments and suggestions received from the witnesses at these hearings formed the basis for the legislation I introduced on August 10, 1988 (S. 2721). S. 2721 was cosponsored by Senators LEVIN, ROTH, PRYOR, STEVENS, CHILES and HEINZ and was the subject of a hearing before the Governmental Affairs Committee on October 5, 1988 (S. Hrg. 100-945). With some minor changes, it is similar to the legislation we are introducing today.

This bill accomplishes three main goals. First, it reorganizes and makes logically consistent the five sections of the act which discuss the establishment, chartering, and management of advisory committees and the responsibilities of Congress, the President, agency heads, and the Administrator of GSA. Second, it clarifies a number of terms, such as "balanced membership," "meeting," and "subcommittee or other subgroup" which have been problematic throughout FACA's history, as well as spelling out more clearly the duties and responsibilities of parties responsible for creating, managing and terminating committees. Third, it clarifies and strengthens ethics controls on advisory committee members.

The amendment will not create many changes in the way the FACA system is implemented, although it is designed to make the current system function much more efficiently. Perhaps the most significant change is that agencies are given the authority to terminate statutorily-created committees in their agencies before the statutory termination date of the committee, after giving 180 days notice to the authorizing committees in both Houses. Congress could during that 180-day period reauthorize the existence of the committee. Another significant change is that for the first time each agency will issue its own annual report, and the President will issue a summary annual report. This is designed to give the committee management secretariat, located in GSA and charged with managing advisory committee functions, more time to selectively monitor agency performance rather than merely collecting and tabulating information from each agency.

This is important because at our October 5, 1988 hearing, GAO testified that the Committee Management Secretariat has not carried out many of its statutory duties, including ensuring that advisory committees are properly established, that each committee was reviewed annually, and that reports on Presidential advisory committees' recommendations were prepared for Congress. For example, as part of its study, GAO reviewed 114 proposed charters and justification letters submitted to GSA by agency heads and found that 52—(or 46 percent)—of these documents were missing items required by the act or the regulations that GSA follows pursuant to the act. However, GSA did not ask the agencies to supply the missing information for any of the 52 committees.

I find it very troubling that the agency charged with Government-wide enforcement of the act is neither enforcing the law nor following its own regulations. I also find encouraging that in recent months efforts have been made by management at GSA to see that this situation is being corrected.

With my colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee, I hope to introduce legislation later this year along the lines of an Advisory Committee Elimination Act, which will seek to terminate committees that have outlived their usefulness. We will work with GSA, OMB, GAO, other congressional committees, and the agencies themselves to identify these committees.

Finally, language has been included which will require members of a committee who are Federal employees, prior to participation in any committee meeting or work, to disclose in writing any financial or other interest which may be affected by the work of the committee, or which may present the appearance of a conflict of interest. In addition, all members of a committee should receive ethics counseling prior to their participation in any committee meeting or work. My distinguished colleague on the Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator LEVIN, has devoted a great deal of time and attention to this important element of open and accountable Government.

By passing FACA in 1972, Congress recognized the merits of allowing the Government to draw upon the knowledge and experience of public experts, and at a reasonable cost. In return, the public is given an opportunity to participate actively in the Government's decisionmaking process. These are excellent goals, and FACA has to a large extent furthered them, but we need to ensure that the system continues to improve so that the Government receives the best advice possible, in an open and efficient manner.

Mr. President, what follows is a short summary of the major proposed changes to current FACA. Basically, sections 5-9 of the current laws have been reorganized and split into seven sections—5-11—but sections 1-4 and 10-14 of current law remain substantially the same.

SUMMARY

SECTION 1—SHORT TITLE

SECTION 2—FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

This section reinforces the notion that advisory committees, while a useful and necessary part of government, are not to be created unnecessarily, and that their membership should be fairly balanced in terms of functions to be performed and views represented.

SECTION 3—DEFINITIONS

The definitions for "subcommittee or other subgroup" and "meeting" are intended to clear up confusion which exists over the precise meaning of those terms in the implementation of FACA. These definitions would include any interaction of members, or subgroups of members, authorized to act on behalf of the committee. Exemptions from the definition of "advisory committee" include any committee composed wholly of full-time officers or employees of State or local governments acting in their official capacities who are required by statute to meet with Federal officials regarding programs that are shared by Federal, State, and local Governments or which are administered by State and local governments.

SECTION 4—APPLICABILITY

SECTION 5—ESTABLISHMENT OR AUTHORIZATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES BY CONGRESS

Section 5 states criteria Congress should consider in establishing or authorizing the establishment of advisory committees. Congress is required, when creating advisory committees through legislation, to provide that the membership of advisory committees be fairly balanced in terms of the points of view represented and the committees functions to be performed by the advisory committee, and Congress shall prescribe the factors to be considered in achieving balanced membership. Moreover, the legislation shall include the appointing authority for the committee members whether members of the committee are appointed as Federal employees or not.

SECTION 6—ESTABLISHMENT OR UTILIZATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES BY PRESIDENT OR AGENCY

This section outlines the requirements and procedures for establishing or utilizing advisory committees by the President or an agency. This replaces the current law's vague "guidelines" for President- and agency-established committees. It states that advisory committees can only be established if they are specifically authorized or established by statute, Presidential directive, or agency directive after consultation between the agency head and the Administrator. The requirements for establishing or utilizing a committee are similar to those required of Congress, including indicating the appointing authority for the committee members and whether members of the committee are appointed as Federal employees or not.

SECTION 7—CHARTERING OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES

This section provides that each committee's charter shall specify which authority created the committee, to whom the committee reports, the plan for achieving a balance in committee membership in terms of the points of view represented and committee functions to be performed, whether committee members are to serve as Federal employees or not, and which agency or official shall be responsible for counseling advisory committee members on Federal ethics rules and criminal conflict of interest statutes.

SECTION 8—RESPONSIBILITIES OF CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES

This section specifies the ongoing review function of Congressional Committees.

SECTION 9—ADDITIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE PRESIDENT

This section provides that the President shall ensure that charters are filed in accordance with Section 7 above, except that he may delegate that authority. In addition, the President shall ensure that ethics counseling is provided for all committee members and that members who are Federal employees file financial disclosure forms before they begin work on a Presidential advisory committee. The President may also delegate this authority. The President's annual report summarizing committee activities has been modified to a summary report which will build upon reports that each agency will write. Ideally the President's summary report, which will actually be prepared by GSA, will contain much more significant analysis of advisory committee activities than the current annual report prepared by GSA for the President's submission to Congress.

SECTION 10—ADDITIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES OF AGENCY HEADS

This section provides that agency heads shall: file charters in accordance with Section 7 above; publish timely notice in the Federal Register of meetings; designate a Committee Management Officer; appoint a Designated Federal Official; require committee members who are Federal employees to file financial disclosure forms before they begin work of the committee and for all members of a committee, to address with the designated agency ethics official any conflict of interest or other possible ethical problem; review committees and other groups established, utilized, or contracted for by the agency to determine whether they are subject to FACA and if so, bring into compliance with FACA; and terminate committees when appropriate.

Each agency is tasked with producing an annual report to GSA summarizing its committee activities for the year. The duties of the agency's Committee Management Office include coordinating with the designated agency ethics official to provide counseling on ethics issues and financial disclosure obligations

SECTION 11—RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE ADMINISTRATOR, GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

This section provides that agencies have final authority over establishment and termination of advisory committees and that the GSA Administrator shall establish guidelines for the agencies annual reports so they are all uniform. GSA shall also review committees and other groups established, utilized, or contracted for by agencies to determine whether they are subject to FACA and if so, bring into compliance with FACA.

SECTION 12—ADVISORY COMMITTEE PROCEDURE

This section specifies that meetings will be held in an accessible place and that documents will be available for inspection. The duties of the Designated Federal Official are set forth.

SECTION 13—AVAILABILITY OF TRANSCRIPTS

SECTION 14—FISCAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

This section specifies the support services for advisory committees which may be supplied either by an agency or the GSA Administrator to an advisory committee.

SECTION 15—RESPONSIBILITY OF LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

SECTION 16—TERMINATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES

This section provides that agency heads have the authority to terminate certain statutorily-created committees after giving 180 days notice to the standing Congressional Committees with jurisdiction over the advisory committees. However, Congress could reauthorize the committee within the 180 day period. This provision is being added to provide some mechanism to terminate statutory advisory committees other than the passage of separate legislation. Currently, more than half of all advisory committees are statutorily created, and many have outlived their usefulness.

Mr. President, I hope that our colleagues will join us in enacting this legislation in the 101st Congress. I ask unanimous request that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 444

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Advisory Committee Act Amendments of 1989".

"(ii) any committee established or utilized by the Central Intelligence Agency;

"(iii) any committee established or utilized by the Federal Reserve System;

"(iv) any committee composed wholly of full-time officers or employees of State or local governments acting in their official capacities who are required by statute to meet with Federal officers and employees regarding programs that are shared by Federal, State, and local Governments, or which are administered by State and local Governments;

"(v) any committee which is composed wholly of full-time officers or employees of the Federal Government;

"(vi) any local civic group whose primary function is that of rendering a public service with respect to a Federal program; and

"(vii) any State or local committee established to advise or make recommendations to State or local officials or agencies."; and

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) as paragraphs (5) and (6), respectively, and inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraphs:

"(3) The term 'subcommittee or other subgroup' as used in paragraph (2) means any group established by a committee (regardless of whether its members are drawn in whole or in part from the parent committee) which is authorized to act on behalf of the committee and which reports either to the committee or directly to the President or one or more agencies, officers or employees of the Federal Government.

"(4) The term 'meeting' includes any interaction between either a majority of the members of an advisory committee, or a subcommittee or other subgroup thereof, or any smaller number of members which is authorized to act on behalf of the committee, or subcommittee or other subgroup thereof.".

PROHIBITIONS AND APPLICABILITY

SEC. 5. Section 4 of the Act is amended to read as follows:

"PROHIBITIONS AND APPLICABILITY

"SEC. 4. (a) No advisory committee shall be established or utilized by the President or by one or more agencies of the Federal Government, unless the establishment or utilization is—

"(1) specifically authorized by statute or by the President; or

"(2) specifically determined as a matter of formal record, by the head of the agency involved, after consultation with the Administrator, to be in the public interest in connection with the performance of duties imposed on that agency by law.

"(b) No advisory committee shall meet or take any action with respect to its purpose and objectives for the Federal Government unless a committee charter has been filed in accordance with section 7.

"(c) The function of advisory committees shall be advisory only, unless otherwise specifically provided by a statute or Presidential directive. Determinations of action to be taken and policy to be expressed with respect to matters upon which an advisory committee reports or makes recommendations shall be made solely by the President or an officer or employee of the Federal Government.".

ESTABLISHMENT OR AUTHORIZATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES BY CONGRESS

SEC. 6. Section 5 of the Act is amended—

(1) by amending the section heading to read as follows:

"ESTABLISHMENT OR AUTHORIZATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES BY CONGRESS";

(2) by amending subsection (a) to read as follows:

"(a) The Congress may by statute establish or authorize the establishment of an advisory committee.";

(3) in subsection (b)—

(A) in the first sentence by—

(i) striking out "In" and inserting in lieu thereof "When";

(ii) striking out "each standing committee" and inserting in lieu thereof "a Committee";

(ii) striking out "will" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "shall"; and

(E) by striking out paragraphs (4) and (5) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) indicate whether members of the committee shall—

"(A) be appointed as Federal employees; or

"(B) represent the views of non-Federal interests;

"(5) contain provisions dealing with authorization of appropriations, the duration of the advisory committee if other than the two-year period provided for under section 16(a), and dates for the completion and publication of any reports; and

"(6) contain provisions to assure that the advisory committee shall have adequate staff, quarters, and funds to meet necessary expenses, and for Presidential advisory committees and committees reporting to more than one agency, to indicate the agency responsible for providing support services (as defined in section 14(c)).."; and

(4) by striking out subsection (c).

RESPONSIBILITIES AND ADVISORY COMMITTEE PROCEDURES

SEC. 7. The Act is amended by—

(1) striking out section 15;

(2) redesignating sections 12 through 14 as sections 14 through 16, respectively; and

(3) striking out sections 6 through 11 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sections:

"ESTABLISHMENT OR UTILIZATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES BY PRESIDENT OR AGENCY

"SEC. 6. (a) The President or an agency head may establish or utilize an advisory committee pursuant to a statute, Presidential directive, or agency directive. Any agency directive shall be a matter of formal record, subsequent to consultation with the Administrator.

"(b) When considering establishing or utilizing any advisory committee the President or agency head shall consider whether the functions of the proposed advisory committee are being or could be performed by one or more agencies or by an advisory committee in existence, or by enlarging the mandate of an existing advisory committee. At the time any advisory committee is first established or utilized, the President or agency head shall make a determination in writing which shall—

"(1) contain the clearly defined and detailed purpose for and objectives of the advisory committee;

"(2) require the membership of the committee to be fairly balanced in terms of the points of view represented and the committee functions to be performed, and shall prescribe the factors to be considered in achieving balanced membership;

"(3) contain provisions to indicate the appointing authority for the members of the advisory committee and to assure that the advice and recommendations of the advisory committee shall not be inappropriately influenced by the appointing authority or by any special interest, but shall be the result of the independent judgment of the advisory committee;

"(4) indicate whether members of the committee shall—

"(A) be appointed as Federal employees; or

"(B) represent the views of non-Federal interests;

"(5) contain provisions dealing with authorization of appropriations, the duration of the committee if for a duration less than the two-year period provided for in section 16(a), and dates for the completion and publication of any reports; and

"(6) contain provisions to assure that the advisory committee shall have adequate staff, quarters, and funds to meet necessary expenses, and for Presidential advisory committees and committees reporting to more than one agency, to indicate the agency responsible for providing support services (as defined in section 14(c)).

"(c) The information required under subsection (b) shall be in—

"(1) the Presidential directive in the case of an advisory committee established or utilized by the President; or

"(2) a timely notice published in the Federal Register in the case of an advisory committee established or utilized by an agency.

"CHARTERING OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES

"SEC. 7. (a) The charter of an advisory committee shall contain at least the following information:

"(1) the name of the committee;

"(2) whether the committee is—

"(A) established or authorized by statute;

"(B) established or utilized by the President; or

"(C) established or utilized as a matter of formal record by the head of the agency involved;

"(3)(A) the date the charter is filed;

"(B) whether such charter is an original charter or a renewal; and

"(C) if a renewal charter, the date when the committee was first chartered;

"(4)(A) the agency responsible for providing support services to the committee; and

"(B) the agency or official to whom the committee reports;

"(5) the clearly defined and detailed purpose for and objectives of the committee;

"(6) the appointing authority for the advisory committee members and the plan for achieving a fair balance in committee membership in terms of the points of view represented and committee functions to be performed;

"(7) whether committee members are to serve as Federal employees or representatives of non-Federal interests and which agency or official shall be responsible for counseling advisory committee members on Federal ethics rules and criminal conflict of interest statutes;

"(8) the estimated number and frequency of committee meetings and the estimated total period of time necessary for the committee to complete all tasks;

"(9) the location of the records and documents of the committee during its existence and for at least one year after the committee ceases to exist;

"(10) the estimated annual operating costs in dollars and person-years for such committee; and

"(11) the termination date of the committee, if other than the two-year period provided for in section 16(a).

"(b) For each advisory committee, a charter in accordance with this section shall be filed with—

"(1) the Administrator;

"(2) the head of the agency which establishes, utilizes, or provides support services for such advisory committee or in the case of an advisory committee not assigned to an agency for support services, the advisory committee itself; and

"(3) the standing committees, in the Senate and the House of Representatives, having jurisdiction over such advisory committee.

"RESPONSIBILITIES OF CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES

"SEC. 8. In the exercise of its legislative and oversight functions, each standing committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives may review the activities of each advisory committee under its jurisdiction to determine whether—

"(1) such advisory committee should be terminated or merged with any other advisory committee;

"(2) the responsibilities of such advisory committee should be revised; and

"(3) such advisory committee complies with this Act and any other rule, order, regulation, or policy governing advisory committees.

"ADDITIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE PRESIDENT

"SEC. 9. (a) The President may delegate responsibilities for evaluating and taking action, where appropriate, with respect to all formal recommendations made to him by Presidential advisory committees.

"(b) Within one year after the date on which a Presidential advisory committee submits formal recommendations to the President, the President or a delegate shall submit a report to the Congress describing either proposals for action or reasons for inaction, with respect to such recommendations.

"(c)(1) The President shall ensure that committee charters required by this Act for Presidential advisory committees are filed in accordance with section 7.

"(2) The President shall also ensure that prior to their participation in any meeting or work of a Presidential advisory committee—

"(A) all members receive counseling on the Federal ethics rules and conflict of interest statutes; and

"(B) those members who are Federal employees disclose in writing any financial or other interest which may be affected by the work of the committee, or create the appearance of a conflict of interest.

"(3) The President may delegate the responsibilities described under paragraphs (1) and (2).

"(d)(1) No later than February 1 of each year, the President shall make an annual summary report to the Congress on the activities, status, and changes in the composition of advisory committees in existence during the preceding fiscal year. The report shall be a summary and analysis of information contained in the annual report of each agency which established or utilized an advisory committee during that period. The summary report shall include—

"(A) the name of every advisory committee and the total estimated annual cost to the United States to fund, service, supply, and maintain such committees;

"(B) a summary and analysis of data regarding the establishment and termination of advisory committees during the preceding fiscal year;

"(C) whether such committees are ad hoc or standing committees;

"(D) the membership of such committees;

"(E) the frequency and openness of meetings;

"(F) the number of reports submitted;

"(G) a list of the advisory committees which terminated or were abolished by the President or an agency during the preceding year;

"(H) in the case of advisory committees established by statute, a list of those advisory committees which the President recommends be abolished before their specified termination dates, together with the reasons therefor and the statutory authority for their creation; and

"(I) any issues of concern in the functioning of advisory committees or this Act.

"(2) The President may exclude from the annual summary report any information which the President determines should be withheld for reasons of national security, and in lieu thereof shall include in such report a statement that such information has been excluded.

"ADDITIONAL RESPONSIBILITIES OF AGENCY HEADS

"SEC. 10. (a)(1) Each agency head shall establish uniform administrative guidelines and management controls for advisory committees. Such guidelines and controls shall be consistent with this Act and any rule, order, regulation, or policy of the Administrator under sections 11 and 12.

"(2) Each agency head shall conduct annual reviews of committees or other groups established, utilized, or contracted for by the agency to determine whether any are advisory committees subject to this Act and, if so, to bring such committees or groups into compliance with the requirements of this Act.

"(b) Each agency shall maintain systematic information on—

"(1) the nature, functions, and operations of each advisory committee (including each subcommittee or other subgroup as defined in section 3(3)) within the jurisdiction of the agency; and

"(2) the agency's compliance with this Act and with its own rules for advisory committees.

"(c) The agency head shall—

"(1) designate an Advisory Committee Management Officer for the agency;

"(2) comply with section 6 in establishing or utilizing any advisory committee;

"(3) file a charter in accordance with section 7 of this Act for each advisory committee—

"(A) which is established or utilized by the agency; or

"(B) for which the agency has been delegated this responsibility by the President;

"(4) appoint a designated Federal official for each such advisory committee;

"(5) require members of each committee established or utilized by the agency or of any Presidential advisory committee designated by the President, before participation in any committee meeting or work—

"(A) if they are Federal employees, to disclose in writing any financial or other interest which may be affected by the work of the committee, or create the appearance of a conflict of interest; and

"(B) to address with the designated agency ethics official the Federal ethics rules and conflict of interest statutes, and any possible ethical problem which may arise from serving on the advisory committee;

"(6) publish timely notice of committee meetings in the Federal Register, oversee timely completion of detailed committee minutes and otherwise oversee committee compliance with the procedures in section 12; and

"(7) abolish advisory committees before their specified termination dates when appropriate.

"(d)(1) No later than December 1 of each year, the head of each agency which establishes, utilizes, or provides support services to an advisory committee shall submit an annual report to the Administrator on the activities, status, and changes in the composition of such advisory committees during the preceding fiscal year. The Administrator shall make such reports available to Congress upon request.

"(2) The agency head shall follow guidelines set forth by the Administrator for such annual report by the agency head.

"(3) The report shall include—

"(A) the name of each advisory committee which the agency has established, utilized, or provided support services during the preceding year;

"(B) the date of establishment, authority for creation, and expected termination of each committee;

"(C) whether such committee is an ad hoc or standing committee;

"(D) a list of each subcommittee or other subgroup (as defined in section 3(3)) in existence for each advisory committee;

"(E) the functions of each such committee;

"(F) the number and dates of meetings of each such committee during the preceding year;

"(G) the names and occupations of the current members of each such committee;

"(H) the total estimated annual cost to the United States to fund, service, supply, and maintain each such committee;

"(I) a list of the advisory committees which terminated or were abolished by the agency head during the preceding year;

"(J) in the case of advisory committees established by statute, a list of those advisory committees which the agency head recommends be abolished before their specified termination dates, together with the reasons therefor and the statutory authority for their creation; and

"(K) any issues of concern in the functioning of advisory committees or this Act.

"(4) The agency head may exclude from such annual report any information which such agency head determines should be withheld for reasons of national security, and in lieu thereof shall include in such report a statement that such information has been excluded.

"(e) Each advisory committee management officer shall—

"(1) exercise control and supervision over the establishment, operation, and procedures of advisory committees established or utilized by that agency;

"(2) assemble and maintain the reports, records, and other papers of any such committee during existence of the committee;

"(3) carry out, on behalf of that agency, the provisions of section 552 of title 5, United States Code, with respect to such reports, records, and other papers;

"(4) coordinate with the designated agency ethics official to ensure appropriate counseling on ethics issues and timely completion of any written disclosure obligations;

"(5) maintain in a single location a complete set of the charters and membership lists of each of the advisory committees (including each subcommittee or other subgroup as defined in section 3(3)) of such agency;

"(6) maintain information on the nature, functions, and operations of the advisory committees (including each subcommittee or other subgroup as defined in section 3(3)) of such agency; and

"(7) provide upon request copies of minutes of meetings and reports of the advisory committees (including each subcommittee or other subgroup as defined in section 3(3)) of such agencies.

"RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE ADMINISTRATOR OF GENERAL SERVICES

"SEC. 11. (a) The Administrator shall establish and maintain within the General Services Administration a Committee Management Secretariat, which shall be responsible for all matters relating to advisory committees.

"(b) The Administrator may from time to time request such information as the Administrator determines necessary to carry out the functions under this section. Each agency head and advisory committee members shall cooperate by providing such information to the Administrator.

"(c) The Administrator shall—

"(1) prescribe administrative guidelines and management controls applicable to advisory committees;

"(2) to the maximum extent feasible, provide advice, assistance, and guidance to the President, agency heads, advisory committees, and committee members to ensure compliance with this Act;

"(3) establish guidelines for the annual report required of each agency under section 10(d);

"(4) review committees or other groups established, utilized, or contracted for by an agency to determine whether any are advisory committees subject to this Act and, if so, to bring such committees or groups into compliance with the requirements of this Act; and

"(5) when designated by the President, appoint a designated Federal official for Presidential advisory committees.

"(d)(1) The Administrator shall periodically conduct a comprehensive review of each existing advisory committee to determine whether—

"(A) such committee is carrying out its purpose;

"(B) consistent with the provisions of applicable statutes, the responsibilities assigned to the committee should be revised;

"(C) such committee should be merged with other advisory committees; or

"(D) such committee should be abolished before its specified termination date.

"(2) Upon the completion of a review, the Administrator may make recommendations to the President, an agency head, or the Congress with respect to any action that should be taken.

"(e)(1) The Administrator shall establish guidelines with respect to uniform fair rates of pay for comparable services of members, staffs, and consultants of advisory committees in a manner which gives appropriate recognition to the responsibilities and qualifications required and other relevant factors. Such regulations shall provide that—

"(A) no member of any advisory committee or of the staff of any advisory committee shall receive compensation at a rate in excess of the rate specified for GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code;

"(B) such members, while engaged in the performance of their duties away from their homes or regular places of business, may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons employed intermittently in the Government service; and

"(C) services may be provided pursuant to section 3102 of title 5, United States Code, for members while in performance of advisory committee duties who—

"(i) are blind or deaf or who otherwise qualify as handicapped individuals (within the meaning of section 501 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794)); and

"(ii) do not otherwise qualify for assistance under section 3102 of title 5, United States Code, by reason of being an employee of an agency (within the meaning of section 3102(a)(1) of such title).

"(2) Nothing in this subsection shall prevent—

"(A) an individual who (without regard to service with an advisory committee) is a full-time employee of the United States; or

"(B) an individual who immediately before service with an advisory committee was such an employee, from receiving compensation at the rate at which such individual otherwise would be compensated (or was compensated) as a full-time employee of the United States.

"(f) If there is disagreement on a material matter between the Administrator and an agency head regarding the establishment, management, or termination of advisory committees, the agency head shall have final authority, but a notice and description of the areas of such disagreement may be placed in the annual summary report required under section 9(d).

"ADVISORY COMMITTEE PROCEDURES

"SEC. 12. (a)(1) Each advisory committee meeting shall be open to the public and held—

"(A) at a reasonable time and in a place reasonably accessible to the public; and

"(B) in a meeting room sufficient to accommodate advisory committee members, committee or agency staff, and interested members of the public.

"(2) Except when the President determines otherwise for reasons of national security, timely notice of each such meeting shall be published in the Federal Register, and the Administrator may prescribe regulations to provide for other types of public notice to insure that all interested persons are notified of such meeting prior thereto.

"(3) Interested persons shall be permitted to attend meetings of, appear before, or file statements with any advisory committee, subject to such reasonable rules or regulations as the Administrator may prescribe.

"(b) An advisory committee may not report advice or recommendations to the President or one or more agencies or officers or employees of the Federal Government without first holding a meeting at which a majority of the committee members approve the advice or recommendations to be reported.

"(c)(1) Subject to section 552 of title 5, United States Code, records, which were made available to or prepared for or by each advisory committee, including reports, transcripts, minutes, appendixes, working papers, drafts, studies, agenda, or other documents, shall be considered created by the committee. Such records shall be available for public inspection and copying—

"(A) at the time the records are distributed to the advisory committee members;

"(B) at a single location in the offices of the advisory committee or the agency which established, utilizes, or provides support services to the advisory committee during the existence of the advisory committee; and

"(C) at a single location to be specified in the committee's charter for at least one year after the committee ceases to exist.

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), five years after the date on which a record is first created by a committee, such record may be stored in accordance with the provisions of the National Archives and Records Administration Act of 1984, and regulations promulgated thereunder by the National Archives and Records Administration.

"(d) Detailed minutes of each meeting of each advisory committee (including each subcommittee or other subgroup as defined in section 3(3)) shall be kept and shall contain a record of the persons present, a complete and accurate description of matters discussed and conclusions reached, and copies of all reports received, issued, or approved by the advisory committee. The accuracy of all minutes shall be certified by the chairman of the advisory committee, or if appropriate, the chairman of the subcommittee or other subgroup, within forty-five days after the meeting.

"(e) Subsections (a) (1) and (3) of this section shall not apply to any advisory committee meeting which the President, or the head of the agency to which the advisory committee reports, determines that such portion of such meeting may be closed to the public in accordance with subsection (c) of section 552b of title 5, United States Code. Any such determination shall be in writing and shall contain the reasons for such determination. If such a determination is made, the advisory committee shall issue a report at least annually setting forth a summary of its activities and such related matters as would be informative to the public consistent with the policy of section 552b of title 5, United States Code.

"(f)(1) Unless otherwise provided by statute, Presidential directive, or agency directive, the designated Federal official appointed under section 10(c)(4) or section 11(b)(5) shall attend the meetings of an advisory committee and no advisory committee shall conduct any meeting in the absence of such official. The designated Federal official is authorized to—

"(A) adjourn the meetings when such official determines that adjournment is in the public interest;

"(B) approve or call the meeting;

"(C) chair the meeting when so determined by the involved agency head; and

"(D) except for Presidential advisory committees, approve the agenda of the meeting.

"AVAILABILITY OF TRANSCRIPTS

"SEC. 13. (a) Agencies and advisory committees shall make available to any person, at actual cost of duplication, copies of transcripts and minutes of agency proceedings or advisory committee meetings.

"(b) As used in this section 'agency proceeding' means any proceeding as defined in section 551(12) of title 5, United States Code.".

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 8. Section 14 of the Act (as redesignated by section 7(2) of this Act) is amended—

(1) in the third sentence of subsection (b) by inserting "on a reimbursable basis" before the period; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'support services' means the provision of office space, telephone and computer service, and other administrative or clerical services that the advisory committee may need.".

TERMINATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEES

SEC. 9. Section 16 of the Act (as redesignated by section 7(2) of this Act) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by—

(A) striking out paragraph (1);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (2) as subsection (a) and redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively; and

(C) striking out "established after such effective date" in the first sentence of subsection (a) (as redesignated in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph); and

(2) by amending subsections (b) and (c) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) In the case of an advisory committee established by statute with a specified duration longer than the two-year period provided for in subsection (a), the President or an agency head may abolish such committee after the two-year period and before its specified termination date if—

(A) the President or agency head gives one-hundred eighty days written notice of the intention to abolish such committee to the standing committee in each House of the Congress with jurisdiction over such advisory committee; and

(B) the President or an agency head first makes a finding that—

"(i) the tasks assigned to such committee are complete or obsolete;

"(ii) the primary functions of such committee have been assumed by another entity; or

"(iii) the termination of such committee is otherwise in the public interest.

"(2) If the Congress determines that the committee is necessary, the Congress may reestablish it within the one-hundred eighty-day period.

"(c)(1) To renew an advisory committee established or utilized by the President or an agency, the President or an agency head shall file, before the date of the scheduled termination of the committee, a committee charter in accordance with section 7.

"(2) An advisory committee may be renewed for a period not to exceed 2 years from the date a new charter is filed.

"(3) Subsequent renewals may be achieved in the same manner before the date on which such advisory committee would otherwise terminate.

"(4) A committee charter shall be filed in accordance with section 7 on behalf of each advisory committee established by statute prior to the expiration of each successive two-year period following the date of the enactment of the Act establishing such advisory committee.".●

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator JOHN GLENN, today in introducing the Federal Advisory Committee Act Amendments of 1989.

The Federal Advisory Committee Act or "FACA" is a statute that was first enacted in 1972 and has proven to be an essential mechanism for keeping track of the 1,000 Federal advisory committees now in operation. Before its passage, advisory committees operated outside any government-wide rules requiring cost effectiveness and accountability. No one knew how many there were, how mcuh they cost, or what they were doing.

FACA changed that by imposing, for the first time, basic management controls on Federal advisory committees. For the first time, it required agencies to keep track of their committees, to justify creating new ones, and to terminate those whose tasks were complete. It required committees to file charters with basic information about their purpose, membership and activities. It imposed cost controls and recordkeeping requirements so we'd know how much we were spending and what our taxpayer dollars were paying for. It opened committee meetings to the public, unless a valid reason justified closing them, so we'd know what our committees were doing and whether they were engaging in fair and open deliberations. It even appointed an advisory committee watchdog called the Committee Management Secretariat, now operated by the General Services Administration.

FACA's management controls brought a lot more information and accountability to Federal advisory committees. The statute also succeeded in stopping the proliferating number and cost of these committees, holding their number to about 1,000 for the past 10 years and permitting only a modest cost increase since 1972. At the same time, the law has not solved all of the problems associated with these committees.

Three hearings held by the Governmental Affairs Committee last year documented numerous problems with committee operations, including agency and committee non-compliance with FACA's controls. The first hearing examined an independent Presidential Advisory Commission on AIDS, documenting the confusion and inefficiency that then dominated the Commission's activities. Several resignations of Commission members, including the chairman, led to the appointment of a new chairman who was able to pull the group together and produce a useful report. The Commission's initial difficulties, however, illustrated a number of problems with advisory committee operations as well as with FACA.

The second hearing examined advisory committees sponsored by the Department of Defense [DOD] and, in particular, the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization [SDIO]. It documented poor committee management practices overall and an SDIO record that was simply disgraceful.

The hearing showed, for example, that at least five SDIO advisory committees had ignored FACA's requirements for cost controls, chartering, recordkeeping and open meetings, as well as DOD's rules for filing financial disclosure forms and obeying conflict of interest rules. An example of a possible conflict of interest was discussed in which an SDIO Advisory Committee Chairman played a key role in obtaining a contract for his employer on the very matters his committee was advising SDIO to undertake. SDIO's one chartered committee, the SDI Advisory Committee, also displayed a disturbing insensitivity to ethical concerns. All 12 members of that committee began work prior to receiving an official committee appointment, which means prior to the time they became subject to Federal ethics rules. Nine of the 12 members began committee work prior to filing required financial disclosure forms, and everyone began work before SDIO got around to reviewing the forms for possible conflicts of interest. That's significant, because it turned out that all of the committee members had potential conflicts of interest, due to service as consultants, directors, trustees or stockholders of firms or universities doing SDI related work.

DOD's committee management officials testified that they were unaware of SDIO's FACA violations, despite their responsibility to implement FACA. They acknowledged that, over the past 5 years, they had fallen behind generally in their efforts to review DOD advisory committees for FACA compliance. Instead of reviewing its 60 advisory committees every 3 years, as DOD had promised Congress, DOD conducted 25 committee reviews in 1984, 17 in 1985, 8 in 1986, 6 in 1987, and 0 as of April 1988. DOD and SDIO promised to improve their committee management practices and have since initiated efforts to correct the identified deficiencies.

A third Governmental Affairs hearing received testimony from a university about widespread noncompliance with and resistance to acknowledging FACA's requirements. This university had surveyed its faculty to determine who was serving on Federal advisory bodies and which of these groups were subject to FACA. The school's objective was to ensure that all faculty members serving on FACA committees had complied with appropriate conflict of interest and financial disclosure rules. At the hearing, the school said federal agencies reacted in a "hostile" manner to its inquiries and even made veiled threats to exclude faculty members who pressed questions about particular groups' FACA compliance. The school also reported widespread discrepancies in how Federal agencies interpreted FACA, and numerous advisory groups that should have been complying with FACA but were not, and which were attempting to avoid the advisory committee label by calling themselves "summer studies" or "working groups."

This hearing also revealed a GSA Committee Management Secretariat which was reticent in its oversight responsibilities and apparently preoccupied with bureaucratic concerns. Examples included increasingly late annual reports with less and less analysis of committee management problems, numerous deficient committee charters which had been approved by GSA, weak oversight of DOD and SDIO committee management practices, and a lengthy list of inactive committees which GSA had not recommended for termination. GSA candidly acknowledged its shortcomings, described recent actions taken to strengthen the Secretariat, and promised to renew its commitment to a strong oversight program. The Governmental Affairs Committee has continued to monitor the Secretariat to make sure these promises are kept.

The hearings held by the Governmental Affairs Committee helped improve FACA compliance by alerting individual agencies, as well as GSA, to their committee management responsibilities. They also uncovered deficiencies in FACA itself. Improving that statute is the goal of the bill that Senator GLENN and I are introducing today.

A key change that the bill would make in FACA would be to strengthen its provisions on ethics. The bill would require agencies to evaluate committee members for potential conflicts of interest before those persons begin work on the committee. It would require agencies to determine explicitly whether particular committee members are expected to provide advice as independent consultants or as representatives of interests whose opinions or expertise are being solicited. The bill would also explicitly require agencies to counsel committee members on ethics issues and any disclosure obligations.

A second important change that the bill would make would be to obligate GSA and individual agencies to search for advisory committees that aren't chartered under FACA and aren't complying with the act, but should be. We need to make sure that the distressing example of SDIO, which had 5 unchartered committees to one chartered committee, is not repeated in other parts of the Government. The bill would perform that function by explicitly obligating GSA and individual agencies to examine their operations to determine whether a committee or group, which may have been overlooked for some reason, should be chartered and made subject to FACA's management controls.

Senator GLENN has described a number of other improvements that the bill would make in FACA, such as clarifying the requirement that committees have a balance of viewpoints, establishing a process for the orderly termination of statutorily created committees, and generally reorganizing and simplifying some of the provisions in the act. These changes are valuable, timely and needed.

Federal advisory committees play an important role in public life and warrant careful attention. I commend Senator GLENN for his leadership in addressing this issue and making sure that advisory committees are held accountable. I hope that our colleagues will join us in enacting this worthwhile legislation.●

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senators GLENN, LEVIN, PRYOR, KOHL, HEINZ, LIEBERMAN, STEVENS, and SASSER in introducing the Federal Advisory Committee Act Amendments of 1989. As one of the cosponsors of the original Act in the 92d Congress, I continue to have a keen interest in maintaining an orderly advisory committee system. I also continue to believe that advisory committees can and do contribute substantially to effective Federal policymaking.

Since its enactment in 1972, the Federal Advisory Committee Act [FACA] has been successful in terms of imposing management controls over the advisory committee system where they did not previously exist. During this same period, we have also seen that some problems remain, particularly with respect to interpretation of the law. The measure we are introducing today is intended to address many of those remaining problems, the most important of which, in my opinion, is the proliferation of unnecessary and duplicative committees.

I would be less than candid, Mr. President, if I did not express my continuing sense of frustration over our inability to effectively limit the number of Federal advisory committees. One of the most important provisions in the original act is the requirement that each advisory committee be terminated 2 years following its establishment unless specifically reauthorized or renewed by the appointing authority. Some committees are eliminated as a direct result of this sunset provision. However, as the functions of Government have become more complex, we find new committees being chartered every year in virtually the same numbers as those that are eliminated. It is seemingly a never-ending cycle.

A key provision in the measure we are introducing today authorizes agencies to terminate statutorily-established committees prior to their scheduled termination dates after providing notice to the authorizing committees. If advisory committees are inactive or have fulfilled their mandates, I firmly believe they should be eliminated. The time has arrived for us to renew our efforts to keep the number of committees to the minimum necessary. Enactment of this measure will facilitate the elimination of unnecessary advisory committees, and I urge my colleagues' support for it, as well as companion legislation we hope to introduce shortly to automatically terminate committees that have outlived their usefulness.●

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join Senator GLENN and my other colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee in sponsoring the Federal Advisory Committee Amendments Act of 1989.

This bill is a follow-up to S. 2721, which was introduced last year and was the subject of a very constructive hearing chaired by the distinguished Senator from Ohio last October. With some minor changes and clarifications, suggested as a result of that hearing, this bill will accomplish some salutary reforms in the way Federal advisory committees are formed, overseen, and terminated when their objectives have been met.

These advisory committees, composed of members from both the public and private sectors, are found throughout agencies of the Federal Government. I understand there are presently about 1,000 such committees, 600 of which were created pursuant to statutes enacted by the Congress. However, the General Accounting Office has reported that as many of 100 of these advisory committees could be deauthorized and their affairs wound up. In some cases, the committees have already achieved the purpose for which they were formed, and continue to exist simply because their statutory authorization has not expired yet.

Now, the total annual cost of Federal advisory committees is about $93 million. At a time when we are all concerned with reducing unnecessary Federal expenditures, anything we can do to retire an obsolete or superfluous government entity should be pursued. The bill we are introducing today will help in reaching that goal, and make other improvements in the way advisory committees function. Let me point out just a few of the more significant features of this legislation.

First, it will permit executive agencies themselves to terminate Federal advisory committees, including those created by congressional mandate, upon giving 180 days' notice to the authorizing congressional committee. On the one hand, this will facilitate the elimination of unnecessary advisory bodies. On the other hand, the 6-month notice provision will afford Congress ample time to reauthorize the advisory committee in question, if deemed appropriate.

Another issue which this bill addresses is that of balance in membership and viewpoints represented on advisory committees. In recent years, questions have been raised about the composition and outlook of advisory committees on AIDS and on the strategic defense initiative, to cite just two examples. Under present law, written factors and criteria for insuring balanced viewpoints on advisory committees are required, but only when the actual membership is being formed. Our bill will require preparation and publication of such criteria at the outset, when the proposal for an advisory committee is drawn up, and again at several stages in its formation and operation. This will focus attention on the issue of "balance" early and often, and will, I believe, enhance public confidence in the work and findings of these committees.

Another reform will improve annual reporting by the President on the status of Federal advisory committees. Currently, it is the responsibility of the General Services Administration to gather and collate such data. Our bill will require each of the responsible agencies to furnish GSA promptly with the needed information. That will permit GSA to devote fewer resources to gathering primary source data, and more attention to analysis and preparation of its report to the President.

In short, Mr. President, this legislation will help us see to it that Federal advisory committees are not perceived as devices that the government "winds up and lets go" without more supervision. They serve a much more important function than that, one which we hope to improve even further by the passage of this bill.●

By Mr. NICKLES (for himself and Mr. BOREN):

S. 445. A bill to delay the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 for 2 years and to establish a Commission to assess the health care needs of the elderly as it relates to catastrophic illness; to the Committee on Finance.

CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE DELAY ACT OF 1989

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation for myself and Senator BOREN which deals with the Catastrophic Health Insurance Program that passed last year, 1988.

I traveled throughout the State, as many of my colleagues did, I am sure, during the break in January. I heard a lot of things from my constituents. I heard my constituents speak out very loudly that they were opposed to the 51-percent pay raise for Members of Congress and Federal officials and Federal judges.

I also heard very clearly—I am going to say equally as clear—very strong statements in every community meeting I had, and I had over dozen around the State of Oklahoma, concern about the catastrophic health insurance expansion that passed last year, 1988. Senior citizens came up to me and said, "What are you doing to me? I already had this coverage or comparable coverage, and Congress came in and mandated catastrophic health insurance in addition to what I already had, which was very expensive." They said, "How can you do this to us? You are going to cost me a thousand dollars." I have heard people say, "You are going to cost me $2,000 or maybe in a couple of years $3,000." Senior citizens time and time again say, "Why are you doing this? My employer was providing this for me. My employer was paying all of the costs throughout my Medigap policy." In other words, the policy to provide what Medicare was not providing for. "My previous employer was providing this insurance for me at little cost to me, and now you in Congress have mandated a very expensive program that will cost me individually maybe $1,000 a year or $2,000 a year per couple."

All I could do was tell them I agreed. I think Congress made a mistake. We went too far. Congress had a good intention, and I do not fault anyone in the House or the Senate for their intentions. They wanted to help those people, and I think we should help those people, senior citizens, who did not have catastrophic insurance, who could not afford it.

Maybe a senior citizen was in a catastrophic situation—they had to be in the hospital for an extended period of time, beyond the 60 days, as previously provided for under Medicare. Maybe they had an extended stay and they had to be in the hospital for 6 months. It is OK with this Senator if we provide catastrophic insurance for those people who cannot afford it. What we did, we provided the insurance not only for those who could not afford it; we provided it for those people who already had it in the private sector. As a matter of fact, it has been estimated by many different groups that between 70 and 75 percent of senior citizens, Medicare-eligible senior citizens, 65 or older, already had Medigap coverage. So they already had the coverage in the private sector, either paid for by themselves or, as I mentioned, many employers provided it for them.

Congress mandated that they had to have this coverage instead or in addition to the coverage that they already had. Right now, we have a lot of "in addition to." We have a lot of duplication; we have a lot of people paying for Medigap policies in the private sector and, in addition, they are going to have to pay and are paying for the Federal policy that we enacted last year that went into effect on January 1. It is a very expensive Federal policy that went into effect for this year.

If you just look at the supplemental premium, for 1989, it is 15 percent of their tax liability. In the year 1990, it goes to 25 percent of tax liability. That is the supplemental tax surcharge. Some people call it a premium, but it is a tax surcharge. Then we also have a flat premium that is $4 a month, $48 a year. Some people say, "Well, this supplemental premium just applies to fat cats, just those people who make a lot of money." I said, "I beg to differ."

If an individual has a taxable income of $18,000, and I do not think that means that you are a fat cat, their tax liability would be about $2,700, and their supplemental premium would be over $400, plus they have to pay $48 of the flat premium.

So they had to pay over $450 per year for this new benefit that, again, 75 percent of senior citizens already had. It gets progressively worse.

If they made $24,000, their tax liability was $3,600, and the catastrophic premium for an individual would be $549. Add that to the flat premium of $48, and they are paying $600 for a benefit that, again, three-fourths already have. If they made $34,000 taxable income, their tax liability before the supplemental premium was $5,600. Now, the catastrophic add-on premium, add-on tax surcharge, is $800, plus the flat fee of $48, and that is $848 more that they have to pay this year than they paid last year to give them this benefit that three-fourths of the senior citizen population already had.

I am not insensitive to senior citizens who were falling between the cracks. I am not insensitive to those people who could not afford the private insurance and did not have the employers who picked up this cost. My bill would delay the catastrophic proposal as passed last year. It would delay the taxes for 2 years, and it would set up a commission for 1 year to evaluate, to try to come up with the means of financing and the coverage necessary to provide this type of insurance for those people who do not have it and who cannot afford it. That is who the Government should be helping in this category. We do not need to duplicate the coverage that people already have. They do not want that help. They are not asking for it. As a matter of fact, they are downright mad about it, and I venture to say that if any of my colleagues in the House or the Senate have had town meetings, they would find out how mad the senior citizen population is about this issue. They are quite upset.

That is the reason why there has been a variety of bills, legislative corrections introduced, to try to change the bill that passed last year, because people are hot about it. They want to see it changed. They do not like Congress mandating a benefit they already have. This bill may cost an individual $848 for the year 1989. For the year 1990, it becomes progressively worse, much worse.

The flat premium, as we will recall, is $4 per month. It only goes to $4.90 per month, or $58.80 per year.

But the catastrophic tax surcharge is 25 percent and so you can just look at the figures very quickly and, Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD three detailed tables that will show taxable income, tax liabilities and catastrophic supplemental premiums, the flat premiums, the total catastrophic charges, based on payroll, what it would cost for couples as well, and it is mindboggling how expensive this program is; it is mindboggling.

I ask unanimous consent to print these tables in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. NICKLES. I certainly will not read everything from the tables, but I will highlight just a couple things.

For the year 1990, on this table it shows that if an individual made $18,000 he would pay a tax of about $2,700. The tax surcharge to pay for catastrophic is almost $700 plus the $58. It is $753 additional tax, if a person had taxable income of $18,000.

If they had taxable income over $24,000 the tax surcharge will be $850 or a total when you add the flat premium of over $900.

So again we are not just talking about the fat cats. We are not talking about the ultrawealthy. We are talking about middle-income America and a great percentage of these people, actually a majority of senior citizens already had this coverage. We are saying we do not care if you had it or not, here is what you have to pay. We are going to duplicate the coverage that you already had.

That is what people are upset about. These are people who worked hard all their lives to save a little money to provide for their postretirement years and maybe they have saved a little bit and Congress is coming up with a new bill to duplicate coverage they already have and charge them as much as $900 or $1,000.

It is a lot worse for couples. If you just look at a couple—I do not have this on this visible chart, but I will enter it into the RECORD—if you have a couple that has a taxable income of say $24,000, that couple will pay $975. If the couple has a taxable income of $34,000, that couple will pay $1,471 just for the catastrophic coverage, $1,471 if their taxable income was $34,000.

That is a big "if." That is a big tax increase. That is an expensive tax increase on senior citizens.

And, frankly, I will tell my colleagues if you hear from your constituents, I think you will find out they are quite upset.

I show one additional table because this is a table on what it will be in the year 1993. A lot of people are not aware of this fact that, yes, the supplemental premium, the tax surcharge which is 15 percent in the year 1989, it is 25 percent in the year 1990, it escalates—it is 28 percent in the year 1993, and it does not cap at that. It continues to escalate. So it can escalate. It will be 28 percent in the year 1993 unless we change it, but it could easily be 35 percent, it could be 50 percent in the future years. Actually, it could be 50 percent in the year 2005. It sounds like a long time. It is not that long. When you are talking about retirement, you are going to have a lot of people say, "Well, OK, if I am 50 years old and am planning on retiring at age 65," do they know that they may have a tax surcharge of 50 percent by the year 2005 by the legislation that was passed last year? Did any of our colleagues know that that supplemental premium or tax surcharge could continue to escalate by 1 percent per year? They should be aware of it because it is very expensive.

The tax liability for the year 1993, the taxable income of $10,500, tax liability is about $1,500. The catastrophic supplemental premium is $441, flat premium. It is $122, in other words, $10 a month per person. The total premium is $563.

If you had income of $27,000, taxable income of $27,000, the tax liability is a little over $4,000, the supplemental premium we used on last year would be over $1,000 per person, $1,050 per person. Add that to the $122 flat premium, you are talking about $1,172 on an individual plan again to provide insurance that Medicare was not paying. We call it Medigap and provide that and charge almost $1,200. Seventy-two percent of senior citizens already had this coverage in the private sector and we said we are sorry, we are going to duplicate it and here is what you get to pay for. If you add the cost of what that is for a couple, it is even more expensive.

That is not fair. We should not do it. We should not penalize those senior citizens for saving for their retirement. We should not penalize those senior citizens for providing for their own Medigap policies.

So what I have proposed is, say, let us just postpone, let us postpone the supplemental premium, let us postpone the flat premium and let us establish a bipartisan commission, let us tell them they have 1 year to report, have them report back to Congress, give us some suggestions on how we can help those who need the help, how we can help those who do not have the coverage and who cannot afford the coverage. I think it is sensible.

Somebody might say how would you help the person during this 2-year period that might fall between the cracks? Since this $4 premium has already been charged and is being charged today, this flat $4 a month premium that is on every senior citizen in America today, $48 per individual, $96 per couple, that is accumulating some money. We can leave that money in escrow and have the Secretary of Health and Human Services come up with a plan that would help those who maybe did fall between the gaps. I am talking about a very small percentage. It is estimated that only 7 percent of the senior citizen population would benefit from this proposal, even benefit in any way from this proposal.

Again, three-fourths of those already have private coverage. Those who do not have private coverage that would fall in the gaps there are some funds in there available to help them. I think that would make sense.

Mr. President, I would like to enter into the RECORD a few comments from a couple of constituents that have written me. One came in from a man whose wife is ill from Stillwater, OK:

> Senator, what are we to do? We know we are in a catastrophic situation. We are being assessed costs for the 1988 Catastrophic Act. No benefits are available to us under the Act. Surely, this situation is not fair or equitable. We ask for your assistance. We have no objection to affordable cost, if there is opportunity to share in the benefits. Otherwise, we ask that the 1988 Catastrophic Act be discontinued or amended. Otherwise, it will continue to increase our health costs, serve no benefit to us, and add to our distress.

Finally, a letter from Arcadia, OK, and I quote:

> Let me explain what you (Congress) have done for myself, and hundreds of other retired teachers across Oklahoma and the nation. The legislation provides us with no benefits we do not already possess through the teacher retirement program. However, it will cost myself and my wife more than $10,000 over the next five years for benefits I neither want nor need. This is an onerous tax. Do not think for a minute that this fact is misperceived by your thousands of constituents. It harms my retirement fund; it harms that for which I have so diligently and carefully planned; it harms my legacy to my children. . . .

That was a teacher in the Oklahoma retirement system that has Medicap coverage and frankly most of the civil servants have Medigap coverage. We all have thousand of civil servants who have this coverage. We did not need to duplicate it for them. We do not need to sock this heavy burden, this heavy taxation on them.

I urge my colleagues to look at this proposal. There are several other proposals that are similarly aimed. I hope that the Finance Committee will take a look at it. If they have not done so, I hope that they will have some town meetings and meet with their constituents and I think they will find that there is ample reason, amply urgency throughout America to make these changes.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 445

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Catastrophic Coverage Delay Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. DELAY OF THE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT OF 1988.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-360) is hereby delayed for two years.

(b) EFFECT OF OTHER LAWS.—Any provision of law amended or repealed by such Act is hereby restored or revived, and shall be effective as if such Act had not been enacted.

(c) TRANSITION.—

(1) PREMIUMS.—Premiums collected under section 1839(g) of the Social Security Act for months before the effective date of this Act shall, instead be transferred to (or deposited to the credit of) the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, be transferred to (or deposited to the credit of) the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, except that the amounts so transferred shall not exceed the amount of net additional expenditures that the Secretary of Health and Human Services estimates were made from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund as a result of the changes made by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (as in effect before the delay effected by this section).

(2) BENEFITS.—Under regulations to be promulgated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary shall provide for an appropriate transition so as to assure that individuals affected by this law are not put at an unfair disadvantage during the delay period of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

SEC. 3. COMMISSION TO REVIEW THE MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established a Commission to be known as The Commission to Review the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Commission").

(b) DUTIES.—The Commission shall—

(1) determine how to incorporate the spousal impoverishment provisions of the current Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act as it relates to Medicaid.

(2) evaluate the needs of Medicare beneficiaries for extended acute illness care beyond what Medicare currently provides;

(3) evaluate differences between the acute care experiences of Medicare beneficiaries who have supplemental insurance or comparable coverage (such as retirement health benefits) and the acute care experiences of those without such coverage;

(4) determine ways in which Medicare benefits may be complimented by government-backed private supplemental insurance or comparable coverage to protect low income persons not covered by Medicaid from excessive acute medical care expenses;

(5) evaluate the relative needs of retirees for extended acute care compared to long-term home care and nursing home insurance for non-acute care situations;

(6) evaluate short and long-term costs and funding mechanisms and other studies and proposals for providing protection against excessive costs of catastrophic illness beyond the scope of current Medicare coverage;

(7) develop proposals to make available extended acute care insurance protection, taking into consideration and not eliminating existing coverage, supplemental insurance, and comparable coverage.

(8) determine the benefits which Medicare beneficiaries prefer and their preferences in methods of financing such benefits;

(9) investigate the effect of catastrophic illness and related expenses, upon non-Medicare eligible individuals; and

(10) evaluate associate health care matters within the discretion of the Chairman.

(c) MEMBERSHIP.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Commission shall be composed of 9 members appointed as follows:

(A) The President shall appoint 5 members. In the Senate, the Majority Leader shall appoint 1 member and the Minority Leader shall appoint 1 member. In the House, the Speaker of the House shall appoint 1 member and the Minority Leader shall appoint 1 member to the Commission.

(B) No member of Congress shall be appointed or designated as a member of the Commission. The members of the Commission shall be individuals who have experience in such relevant disciplines as tax matters, actuarial matters, and health care and its delivery, and shall include individuals who are representatives of senior citizens.

(2) VACANCIES.—Any vacancy in the membership of the Commission shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made and shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the duties of the Commission.

(3) QUORUM.—A quorum shall consist of 7 members of the Commission, except that, under the Chairman's discretion, 2 members may conduct a hearing under subsection (e)(1).

(4) MEETINGS.—The Commission shall meet at the call of its chairman or a majority of its members if under the direction of the chairman.

(5) COMPENSATION AND REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES.—Members of the Commission are not entitled to receive compensation for service on the Commission. Members may be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in carrying out the duties of the Commission.

(d) STAFF AND CONSULTANTS.—

(1) STAFF.—The Commission may appoint and determine the compensation of such staff as may be necessary to carry out the duties of the Commission. Such appointments and compensation may be made without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, that govern appointments in the competitive service, and the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title that relate to classifications and the General Schedule pay rates.

(2) CONSULTATIONS.—The Commission may procure such temporary and intermittent services of consultants under section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, as the Commission determines to be necessary to carry out the duties of the Commission.

(e) POWERS.—

(1) HEARINGS AND OTHER ACTIVITIES.—For the purpose of carrying out its duties, the Commission may hold such hearings and undertake such other activities as the Commission determines to be necessary to carry out its duties, including but not exclusively, public hearings throughout the United States.

(2) COST ESTIMATES BY CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE.—

(A) Upon the request of the Commission, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall provide to the Commission such cost estimates as the Commission determines to be necessary to carry out its duties.

(B) The Commission shall reimburse the Director of the Congressional Budget Office for expenses relating to the employment in the office of the Director of such additional staff as may be necessary for the Director to comply with requests by the commission under subparagraph (A).

(3) DETAIL OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.—Upon the request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency is authorized to detail, without reimbursement, any of the personnel of such agency to the Commission to assist the Commission in carrying out its duties. Any such detail shall not interrupt or otherwise affect the civil service status or privileges of the Federal employee.

(4) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—Upon the request of the Commission, the head of a Federal agency shall provide such technical assistance to the Commission as the Commission determines to be necessary to carry out its duties.

(5) USE OF MAILS.—The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as Federal agencies.

(6) OBTAINING INFORMATION.—The Commission may secure directly from any agency information necessary to enable it to carry out its duties, if the information may be disclosed under section 552 of title 5, United States Code. Upon request of the Chairman of the Commission.

(7) ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT SERVICES.—Upon the request of the Commission, the Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a reimbursable basis such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(f) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit to Congress a report containing its findings and recommendations on an appropriate method for providing extended acute care coverage to Medicare beneficiaries which provides a role for private insurance and which minimizes duplicate coverage by Medicare, current supplemental insurance, other private insurance, and comparable coverage.

(g) TERMINATION.—The Commission shall terminate 30 days after the date of submission of the report required in subsection (f).

By Mr. METZENBAUM:

S. 446. A bill to amend the Price-Anderson provisions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 to provide for the financial accountability of certain contractors of the Department of Energy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

PRICE-ANDERSON FINANCIAL ACCOUNTABILITY AMENDMENTS

● Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce legislation today that will hold Department of Energy nuclear contractors more accountable for their work. This legislation will give DOE nuclear contractors the financial incentive to improve the quality of their work by extending a modest degree of liability for accidents caused by their willful misconduct or gross negligence.

Currently the contractors have no legal liability for such accidents, leaving the Federal Government and the taxpayers to pick up the tab for any damage done. This lack of liability is in contrast to the law governing commercial nuclear plant operators, who may have to pay over $7 billion in damages resulting from an accident, whether or not they were negligent. This legislation would have no impact whatsoever on the commercial plant operators.

At his confirmation hearing yesterday, Energy Secretary-designate Adm. James D. Watkins, agreed that the contractors should be held more liable. In reference to a question I posed he responded, "I am of the same mind you are that there is a limit to the degree to which we can accept all liability for any event, particularly negligence."

Admiral Watkins' statement in this respect is very encouraging and gives us reason to be optimistic that the administration will support our call for greater contract accountability.

Under this legislation, the Attorney General would be given the authority to sue a contractor who has been grossly negligent or has engaged in willful misconduct, with a maximum liability of 1 year's value of the contract. Furthermore, the legislation would bar any contractor found guilty under its provisions from receiving any Federal contract for a 5-year period. A contractor could be exempted from these provisions if the President determined that the contractor's services were necessary for national security purposes.

Mr. President, the Price-Anderson Financial Accountability Amendments of 1989 will greatly strengthen the authority of the Secretary of Energy in improving the accountability of nuclear contractors, and in enhancing the public safety. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this legislation.●

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. GORTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. BOND, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. RUDMAN, and Mr. MCCAIN):

S. 447. A bill to require the Congress and the President to use the spending levels for the current fiscal year (without adjustment for inflation) in the preparation of the budget for each new fiscal year in order to clearly identify spending increases from one fiscal year to the next fiscal year; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

COMMON SENSE BUDGET ACT

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, today I am introducing with nine of my colleagues the Common Sense Budget Act of 1989. This bill would, quite simply, require the administration and Congress to draft their budgets based on the current level of spending, not a "current services" baseline.

For years, I have been pointing out that we can balance the Federal budget by just restraining the growth in Federal spending. If we hold the increase in Federal spending to 3 or 4 percent, the natural growth in revenues, which historically runs at about 8 percent, will close the gap and eliminate the deficit.

The problem is, we start every year of budget negotiations with a "Current services" budget baseline that assumes automatic growth in all programs. That makes it far more difficult to restrain—not cut, just restrain— the growth in Federal spending.

To end the bias in favor of higher spending, we need a baseline based on the current level of spending, not an estimate of current services. In my opinion, current services—with all its built-in assumptions of spending growth—misrepresents the budget to the American people. Each year we project an increase in all programs, only restrain the growth in a few areas, and then pat ourselves on the back for "cutting" the Federal budget. The truth is, every year we've let Federal spending increase.

This becomes obvious when you look at the results over a period of years. According to the baseline for the 1986 fiscal budget, for instance, Congress reduced the deficit by a total of $239 billion over the previous 5 years. While we were cutting spending so aggressively, however, Federal spending increased by two-thirds and the deficit almost tripled.

The Budget Summit Agreement of 1987 is another example of manipulating the baseline. Congress claimed credit for $76 billion in deficit reduction in the agreement, but the figures were always based on savings from the current services baseline. In fact, spending will increase almost 15 percent during those 2 years, and both the 1988 and 1989 deficit will be higher than the 1987 deficit of $150 billion.

Current services is—at best—a confused way to debate the budget. Our constituents don't talk about their budgets in these terms and they don't understand us when we do. Try explaining to a town meeting in Minnesota why a 10-percent increase is really a cut, and you quickly discover how senseless the whole system sounds. The American people shouldn't have to learn a new language, where words like "cut" and "increase" have a completely different meaning than in any other context. It's time Congress started using the American people's language.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing has three main provisions.

First, it would require the President to present a budget which estimates spending for the current year and then recommends increase—or, in rare cases, decreases—based on the actual level.

Second, my legislation would require Congress to draft its budget in the same way. The starting point would be this year's spending, not a projected "baseline" for next year. The committee report would list proposed spending for each function and indicate the percentage increase, or decrease, over the current year's level.

Finally, my bill would also require the Congressional Budget Office to submit a so-called "current law" baseline. That baseline would project growth under current law for entitlement programs and include all discretionary spending at the current year's level, without an automatic increase for inflation.

It's time to talk about the Federal budget like the rest of the country talks about theirs. We need to replace the arcane concept of a current services baseline with the commonsense notion of a current level baseline. When we do that, we'll stop calling increases "cuts," and we'll start talking straight to the American people.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the Common Sense Budget Act of 1989 be inserted into the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 447

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Common Sense Budget Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET.

Paragraph (5) of section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(5) except as provided in subsection (b) of this section—

"(A) estimated expenditures and proposed appropriations for each function and subfunction in the current fiscal year;

"(B) estimated expenditures and proposed appropriations the President decides are necessary to support the Government for each function and subfunction in the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted; and

"(C) a comparison of levels of estimated expenditures and proposed appropriations for each function and subfunction in the current fiscal year and the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted, along with the proposed increase or decrease of spending in percentage terms for each function and subfunction;".

SEC. 3. CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET.

Section 301(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by—

(1) inserting after the second sentence the following: "The starting point for any deliberations in the Committee on the Budget of each House on the concurrent resolution on the budget for the next fiscal year shall be the estimated level of outlays for the current year in each function and subfunction. Any increases or decreases in the Congressional budget for the next fiscal year shall be from such estimated levels.";

(2) striking paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting the following:

"(2) a comparison of levels for the current fiscal year with proposed spending for the subsequent fiscal years along with the proposed increase or decrease of spending in percentage terms for each function and subfunction;

"(3) information, data, and comparisons indicating the manner in which and the basis on which, the committee determined each of the matters set forth in the concurrent resolution, including information on outlays for the current fiscal year and the decisions reached to set funding for the subsequent fiscal years;";

(3) inserting "and" after the semicolon in paragraph (7);

(4) striking paragraph (8); and

(5) redesignating paragraph (9) as paragraph (8).

SEC. 4. CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE REPORT TO COMMITTEES.

The first sentence of section 202(f)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended to read as follows: "On or before February 15 of each year, the Director shall submit to the Committees on the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Senate a report, for the fiscal year commencing on October 1 of that year, with respect to fiscal policy, including (A) estimated budget outlays in all functions and subfunctions for appropriated accounts for the current fiscal year and estimated budget outlays under current law for all entitlement programs for the next fiscal year, (B) alternative levels of total revenues, total new budget authority, and total outlays (including related surpluses and deficits), and (C) the levels of tax expenditures under existing law, taking into account projected economic factors and any changes in such levels based on proposals in the budget submitted by the President for such fiscal year.".●

● Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, today I join my colleague from Minnesota in introducing what may be the most significant piece of legislation to be introduced in the 101st Congress. The "Common Sense Budget Act" is something that has been long overdue in a budgetary process continually lacking in fiscal restraint.

I have heard many of my colleagues stand here and talk about the budget deficit and recognize the negative economic effects of Congressional spending habits. And there are a great number of theories on the issue of deficit spending. However, the problem is simple—Congress continues to spend more than it can afford. And the solution is just as elementary—Congress must limit Government spending below the level of what it takes in every year.

Each year, Congress starts at a spending disadvantage right from the beginning of the budget process. By adding automatic inflation adjustments to the budget baseline figure, Congress is wasting a great deal of taxpayer dollars on portions of the budget that do not need increases, and in some cases, deserve decreases.

We cannot continue to provide unchallenged, automatic, across-the-board spending increases at such a critical time in our Nation's economic history.

The legislation we are introducing today will put an end to automatic inflation adjustments and provide Congress with a real budget baseline.

This bill will require the President to submit a budget that estimates current year spending and then makes recommendations as to whether certain programs deserve increased funding or, in some cases, reduced funding.

Congress will also be required to prepare a budget resolution listing the current level of spending in each budget function and then listing any necessary increases or decreases in spending levels for each function.

Under the current system of across-the-board increases, Federal programs seem to take on a life of their own as they grow from year to year without any justified benefit to the American taxpayer. The legislation we are introducing today will bring an increased level of accountability to costly Federal programs. It will assist in prioritizing our budgetary needs while helping to curb wasteful spending.

It is about time the American public knows the truth about what is really happening in our current budget process. They hear representatives from various Federal programs complaining about the budgetary "cuts" they are facing. When in reality, what these people call "cuts" are actually increases from what they received the previous year. Their real complaint is not getting their full requested increase for that fiscal year.

Recently, one of my colleagues pointed out a good example of this situation. If an employee making $20,000 a year goes to his boss and asks for a $10,000 raise, and instead his boss gives him a $5,000 raise, only in Washington would this be considered a 50-percent pay cut.

It is time for Congress to live in budgetary reality. We cannot continue to spend money we do not have. Congress must learn to spend its money sparingly. Much thought must go into the usefulness and effectiveness of certain Government spending. Today, with the introduction of this legislation, we are moving ourselves one step closer to fiscal responsibility.●

By Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mr. CRANSTON, and Mr. DASCHLE):

S. 448. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to change the level, and preference system for admission, of immigrants to the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEGAL IMMIGRATION REFORM ACT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise in order to introduce the Legal Immigration Reform Act of 1989. I am happy to be joined in this effort by my good friends ALAN CRANSTON and THOMAS DASCHLE from California and South Dakota, respectively. This legislation is a comprehensive effort to make changes to our system of granting immigrant visas.

I have always believed that family reunification is a cornerstone to our immigration policy. Therefore, the Legal Immigration Reform Act makes available additional visas for the spouses and children of permanent residents. Currently, a husband who petitions for his wife and children from Mexico must wait over 10 years for their visa application to be acted upon. That is an intolerably long wait. In fiscal year 1987, we admitted approximately 110,000 second preference holders. The legislation I am introducing today would expand that number to slightly more than 200,000.

Another important change I would make is on the fifth preference visa for the brother or sister of a U.S. citizens. This visa is most frequently used by Asian and Pacific American citizens to be reunited with their adult siblings in the United States. However, in recent years, we have experienced a tremendous backlog in the processing of applications so that there is now a 7-year wait from India, an eight-year wait from Korea and China, a 10-year wait from Hong Kong despite the increase in the Hong Kong quota, and a 12-year wait from the Philippines and Mexico. This is clearly inequitable. My legislation would add additional visas to the fifth preference to address this long backlog. On the fifth preference, I depart from the approach taken by my colleagues on the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs Senators EDWARD KENNEDY and ALAN SIMPSON in their legal immigration bill. Their bill would reduce the number of fifth preference visas and restrict future eligibility to only unmarried brothers and sisters of U.S. citizens. One result of their bill would be to increase the wait for a visa to over 25 years and require an individual to agree at the start of that quarter century wait to remain unmarried as a condition to be reunited with a brother or sister in this country. We can do better than that and my legislation shows the way.

Another major provision in my bill increases the per country ceiling of visas from the current 20,000 to 22,000. For the people whose only shortcoming in the visa process is to come from a country that already uses a lot of visas, this change is the only way for their wait to be reunited with a father, mother, or spouse to be shortened. My legislation also seriously addresses the concerns of those individuals who do not currently have family ties in the United States but want to come here as independent immigrants. My legislation, much like the bill offered by Senators KENNEDY and SIMPSON, creates a point system taking into account the prospective immigrant's age, education, job skills, experience, and interest in a job in which there are shortages of American workers and in areas of low unemployment. I also include 9,900 investor visas for those people, not faceless foreign corporations, who will come to and invest in our country and create at least 10 new American jobs.

The Legal Immigration Reform Act of 1989 also makes three changes in the area of naturalization. First, it provides justice for veterans of World War II who are of Filipino ancestry. They fought for our country in the Pacific and, in large part because of Japanese occupation of their island in the mid-1940's, were kept from applying for naturalization as U.S. citizens. As a nation, we made this offer to Filipino fighters in the 1940's but it has never been fully implemented. My legislation would remove the remaining barriers to enabling these patriots to apply for U.S. citizenship.

Second, it reduces the waiting period for naturalization of permanent residents to become citizens from the current 5 to 3 years. This is the same proposal that the Immigration and Naturalization Service made last year in its legal immigration reform package. To quote the INS report, "The current law's 5-year residency requirement to become a citizen adversely affects the backlog in immigration to this country and delays the reunification of families." I agree. My legislation would provide for all eligible permanent residents the same waiting period we now require for aliens who marry U.S. citizens. This naturalization waiting period has fluctuated over the years and I believe that 3 years is appropriate. We now have many permanent residents who are taxpayers and law-abiding citizens in virtually every sense of the word but one and contribute to our society and our economy. By reducing this barrier to citizenship, we will further bring them into the mainstream of our country.

Third, my legislation eases the burden on seniors to become citizens. Currently, the law exempts from the language requirement on the naturalization test those individuals who have been in permanent residence for at least 20 years and are over 50 years of age. This bill will apply that same exemption to individuals who are over 65 years of age and have been in permanent residence for at least 10 years. The cognitive obstacles to learning a second language at that age are so great that I believe this exception from current law is warranted.

I have outlined the major provisions of the Legal Immigration Reform Act of 1989. As a member of the Immigration and Refugee Affairs Subcommittee, I want to work with my chairman and ranking subcommittee member in enacting legislation this year. The bill I offer today contains the improvements I would make to the Kennedy-Simpson bill which the Senate passed last year and that they reintroduced earlier this month. I hope all my colleagues will join me in this endeavor to tap the immigrant energy and vitality that has always meant so much to us as a nation. Immigrants continue to make positive contributions to the United States of America. Each one of them is here not because they were lucky enough to be born here but because they have seen other regimes and seek America's freedom. My legislation ensures that these Americans-by-choice can be reunited with their close families without having to wait over a decade; that new immigrants who by dint of their hard work can contribute to the Nation can do so; and that, once they are here for a time and been law-abiding contributors, they can step up and be naturalized as full partners in America.●

DOMESTIC ENERGY SECURITY ACT

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, today I would like to introduce the Domestic Energy Security Act of 1989 along with my colleagues Senators JOHNSTON, BINGAMAN, NICKLES, DOMENICI, WALLOP, and SIMPSON. This legislation is to be the Senate companion to H.R. 664 as introduced by Congressmen ARCHER and ANDREWS. I have previously stated my concerns about the health of our domestic energy industry and I will not repeat my arguments here. It should, however, be noted that President Bush has recognized the problems we are facing and has proposed his own solutions. It is important that we consider every possible option available to us. I would ask that a brief summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD along with the text of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TITLE I. NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY TAX CREDITS

Sec. 101. Crude oil and natural gas exploration and development credit.
Sec. 102. Marginal production credit.

TITLE II. ADDITIONAL EXPLORATION AND PRODUCTION INCENTIVES

Sec. 201. Expensing of geological, geophysical and surface casing costs.
Sec. 202. Percentage depletion permitted after transfer of proven property.
Sec. 203. Net income limitation on percentage depletion not to apply to oil and gas wells.
Sec. 204. Repeal of taxable income limitation on percentage depletion.
Sec. 205. Credit for producing fuel from nonconventional sources.

TITLE III. AMENDMENTS TO THE ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX

Sec. 301. Removal of percentage depletion and intangible drilling costs from the alternative minimum tax.

TITLE IV. MISCELLANEOUS TAX AND ADMINISTRATIVE AMENDMENTS

Sec. 401. Repeal of Rev. Rul. 77-176.
Sec. 402. Accrual of offshore production facility dismantlement costs.
Sec. 403. Exemption of oil and gas exploration and production activities from the uniform capitalization rules.

TITLE I—NATIONAL ENERGY SECURITY TAX CREDITS

SEC. 101. CRUDE OIL AND NATURAL GAS EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CREDIT.

(a) CRUDE OIL AND NATURAL GAS EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CREDIT.—Subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding the following new section:

"SEC. 30. CRUDE OIL AND NATURAL GAS EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CREDIT.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 20 percent of the taxpayer's qualified investment for the taxable year.

"(b) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified investment' means amounts paid or incurred—

"(1) for geological and geophysical expenditures incurred for the purpose of ascertaining the existence, location, extent, or quality of any crude oil or natural gas deposit, including core testing and drilling test wells,

"(2) for the purpose of drilling and equipping crude oil and natural gas wells (including pollution control equipment used in connection with such wells), or

"(3) for the purpose of performing secondary or tertiary recovery techniques, on properties located in the United States or in a possession of the United States as defined in section 638 (relating to Continental Shelf areas), but only to the extent that the expenditure is not a qualifying cost under section 30A.

"(c) LIMITATION BASED ON AMOUNT OF TAX.—

"(1) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—The credit allowable under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed—

"(A) the sum of—

"(i) the taxpayer's minimum tax liability under section 55(a) for such taxable year, plus

"(ii) the taxpayer's regular tax liability for such taxable year (as defined in section 26(b)), over

"(B) the sum of the credits allowable against the taxpayer's regular tax liability under subparts A and D of this part and sections 27, 28, and 29.

"(2) CARRYBACK AND CARRYFORWARD OF UNUSED CREDIT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the amount of the credit allowed under subsection (a) for any taxable year exceeds the limitation under paragraph (1) for such taxable year (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'unused credit year'), such excess shall be—

"(i) an oil and gas production credit carryback to each of the 10 taxable years preceding the unused credit year, and

"(ii) an oil and gas production credit carryforward to each of the 15 taxable years following the unused credit year, and shall be added to the amount allowable as a credit under subsection (a) for such years. If any portion of such excess is a carryback to a taxable year beginning on or before the date of the enactment of this section, this section shall be deemed to have been in effect for such taxable year for purposes of allowing such carryback as a credit under this section. The entire amount of the unused credit shall be carried to the earliest of the 25 taxable years to which such credit may be carried, and then to each of the other 24 taxable years to the extent that, because of the limitation contained in paragraph (1), such unused credit may not be added for a prior taxable year to which such unused credit may be carried.

"(B) LIMITATIONS.—The amount of the unused credit which may be taken into account under subparagraph (A) for any succeeding taxable year shall not exceed the amount by which the limitation provided by paragraph (1) for such taxable year exceeds the sum of—

"(i) the credit allowable under subsection (a) for such taxable year, and

"(ii) the amounts which, by reason of this paragraph, are added to the amount allowable for such taxable year and which are attributable to taxable years preceding the unused credit year."

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The last sentence of section 38(c)(1) of such Code is amended by striking "subparts A and B" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "subpart A and sections 27 and 28".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 30. Crude oil and natural gas exploration and development credit."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to expenditures paid or incurred after the date of enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

SEC. 102. MARGINAL PRODUCTION CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding the following new section:

"SEC. 30A. MARGINAL PRODUCTION CREDIT.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year to the producer of eligible crude oil an amount equal to 20 percent of the qualified cost of each barrel of such oil (or fractional part thereof) produced during the taxable year.

"(b) QUALIFIED COST.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified cost' means, with respect to each barrel of eligible crude oil, the sum of—

"(1) such barrel's pro rata share of the lease operating expenses (other than business overhead expenses) paid or incurred by the producer of such barrel during the taxable year in which such barrel was produced, plus

"(2) the amount of severance tax paid or incurred by such producer with respect to such barrel.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) ELIGIBLE CRUDE OIL.—The term 'eligible crude oil' means domestic crude oil which is—

"(A) from a stripper well property,

"(B) heavy oil,

"(C) oil recovered through a tertiary recovery method, or

"(D) harsh environment oil.

"(2) OTHER DEFINITIONS.—

"(A) CRUDE OIL.—The term 'crude oil' has the meaning given to such term by the June 1979 energy regulations.

"(B) BARREL.—The term 'barrel' means 42 United States gallons.

"(C) DOMESTIC.—The term 'domestic' when used with respect to crude oil, means crude oil produced from a property located in the United States or a possession of the United States.

"(D) UNITED STATES.—The term 'United States' has the meaning given to such term by paragraph (1) of section 638 (relating to Continental Shelf areas).

"(E) POSSESSION OF THE UNITED STATES.—The term 'possession of the United States' has the meaning given to such term by paragraph (2) of section 638.

"(F) STRIPPER WELL PROPERTY.—The term 'stripper well property' means any property that produced less than ten barrels per day during any consecutive 12-month period beginning after December 31, 1972.

"(G) PROPERTY.—The term 'property' means property as defined in section 614.

"(H) HEAVY OIL.—The term 'heavy oil' means all crude oil which is produced from a property if crude oil produced and sold from such property during—

"(i) the last month before July 1979 in which crude oil was produced and sold from such property, or

"(ii) the taxable year had a weighted average gravity of 20 degrees API or less (corrected to 60 degrees Fahrenheit).

"(I) TERTIARY RECOVERY METHOD.—The term 'tertiary recovery method' means—

"(i) any method which is described in subparagraphs (1) through (9) of section 212.78(c) of the October 1979 energy regulations, or

"(ii) any other method to provide tertiary enhanced recovery (including steam generation) which is approved by the Secretary for purposes of this section.

"(J) HARSH ENVIRONMENT OIL.—The term 'harsh environment oil' means oil produced from a property located north of the 49th parallel or under at least 400 feet of water.

"(K) SEVERANCE TAX.—The term 'severance tax' means a tax imposed by a State or political subdivision thereof with respect to the extraction of crude oil.

"(L) ENERGY REGULATIONS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'energy regulations' means regulations prescribed under section 4(a) of the Energy Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 (15 U.S.C. 753(a)).

"(ii) JUNE 1979 ENERGY REGULATIONS.—The June 1979 energy regulations shall be the terms of the energy regulations as such terms existed on June 1, 1979.

"(iii) OCTOBER 1979 ENERGY REGULATIONS.—The October 1979 Energy Regulations shall be the terms of the energy regulations as such terms existed on October 30, 1979.

"(iv) CONTINUED APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS AFTER DECONTROL.—Energy regulations shall be treated as continuing in effect without regard to decontrol of oil prices or any other termination of the application of such regulations.

"(d) SPECIAL RULE FOR OFFSHORE WELLS.—In the case of eligible crude oil produced from a property located under at least 400 feet (but less than 1,200 feet) of water, the percentage determined under the following table shall be substituted for '20 percent' in subsection (a):

"If distance (in feet) of the property under water is—		The percentage is—
At least	But less than
400	600	5 percent
600	900	10 percent
900	1,200	15 percent

"(e) LIMITATION BASED ON AMOUNT OF TAX.—

"(1) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—The credit allowable under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed—

"(A) the sum of—

"(i) the taxpayer's minimum tax liability under section 55(a) for such taxable year, plus

"(ii) the taxpayer's regular tax liability for such taxable year (as defined in section 26(b)), over

"(B) the sum of the credits allowable against the taxpayer's regular tax liability under subparts A and D of this part and sections 27, 28, 29, and 30.

"(2) CARRYBACK AND CARRYFORWARD OF UNUSED CREDIT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the amount of the credit allowed under subsection (a) for any taxable year exceeds the limitation under paragraph (1) for such taxable year (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'unused credit year'), such excess shall be—

"(i) an oil and gas production credit carryback to each of the 10 taxable years preceding the unused credit year, and

"(ii) an oil and gas production credit carryforward to each of the 15 taxable years following the unused credit year, and shall be added to the amount allowable as a credit under subsection (a) for such years. If any portion of such excess is a carryback to a taxable year beginning on or before the date of the enactment of this section, this section shall be deemed to have been in effect for such taxable year for purposes of allowing such carryback as a credit under this section. The entire amount of the unused credit shall be carried to the earliest of the 25 taxable years to which such credit may be carried, and then to each of the other 24 taxable years to the extent that, because of the limitation contained in paragraph (1), such unused credit may not be added for a prior taxable year to which such unused credit may be carried.

"(B) LIMITATIONS.—The amount of the unused credit which may be taken into account under subparagraph (A) for any succeeding taxable year shall not exceed the amount by which the limitation provided by paragraph (1) for such taxable year exceeds the sum of—

"(i) the credit allowable under subsection (a) for such taxable year, and

"(ii) the amounts which, by reason of this paragraph, are added to the amount allowable for such taxable year and which are attributable to taxable years preceding the unused credit year."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Sec. 30A. Marginal production credit."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to expenditures paid or incurred after the date of enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

TITLE II—ADDITIONAL EXPLORATION AND PRODUCTION INCENTIVES

SEC. 201. INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS INCLUDE GEOLOGICAL, GEOPHYSICAL, AND SURFACE CASING COSTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 263 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to intangible drilling and development costs in the case of oil and gas wells and geothermal wells) is amended by inserting before the last sentence the following new sentence: "In the case of oil and gas wells, the tax treatment under this subsection which applies to the taxpayer's intangible drilling and development costs shall also apply to surface casing costs and to geological and geophysical costs for the purposes of ascertaining the existence, location, extent or quality of any deposit of oil or gas within the United States (within the meaning of section 638).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to costs paid or incurred after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 202. PERCENTAGE DEPLETION PERMITTED AFTER TRANSFER OF PROVEN PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 613A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitations on percentage depletion in case of oil and gas wells) is amended by striking out paragraphs (9) and (10) and by redesignating paragraphs (11), (12), and (13) as paragraphs (9), (10), and (11), respectively.

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (11) of section 613A(c) of such Code, as redesignated by subsection (a), is amended by striking out subparagraphs (C) and (D).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 203. NET INCOME LIMITATION ON PERCENTAGE DEPLETION NOT TO APPLY TO OIL AND GAS WELLS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The second sentence of subsection (a) of section 613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to percentage depletion) is amended by striking out "Such allowance" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except in the case of an oil or gas well, such allowance".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 204. REPEAL OF TAXABLE INCOME LIMITATION ON PERCENTAGE DEPLETION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 613A(d)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking "65 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "100 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 205. CREDIT FOR PRODUCING FUEL FROM NON-CONVENTIONAL SOURCES.

(a) 7-YEAR EXTENSION.—Clauses (i) and (ii) of section 29(f)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are each amended by striking out "January 1, 1991" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1998".

(b) TIGHT SANDS GAS ELIGIBLE FOR CREDIT.—Section 29(c)(2) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(2) GAS FROM GEOPRESSURED BRINE, ETC.—The determination of whether any gas is produced from geopressured brine, Devonian shale, coal seams, or a tight formation shall be made in accordance with section 503 of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to gas produced after the date of the enactment of this Act is taxable years ending after such date.

TITLE III—AMENDMENTS TO THE ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX

SEC. 301. REMOVAL OF PERCENTAGE DEPLETION AND INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS FROM THE ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.

(a) ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.—Sections 57(a)(1), 57(a)(2), and 57(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 are hereby repealed.

(b) CORPORATE PREFERENCE ITEMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 291(b) of such Code is amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount allowable as a deduction for any taxable year under section 616(a) or 617(a) (determined without regard to this section) shall be reduced by 30 percent."

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 291(b) of such Code are each amended by striking out "263(c), 616(a)," and inserting in lieu thereof "616(a)".

(B) Section 291(b) of such Code is amended by striking out paragraph (4) and by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4).

(C) Section 59(e)(2) of such Code is amended by striking out subparagraph (C) and by redesignating subparagraphs (D) and (E) as subparagraphs (C) and (D).

(D) Section 263(c) of such Code is amended by striking out the last sentence.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to costs paid or incurred after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS TAX AND ADMINISTRATIVE AMENDMENTS

SEC. 401. REPEAL OF REVENUE RULING 77-176.

(a) With respect to mineral sharing arrangements, the application of chapter 1 the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be determined—

(1) without regard to Revenue Ruling 77-176 (and without regard to any other regulation, ruling, or decision reaching the same result as, or a result similar to, the result set forth in such Revenue Ruling); and

(2) with full regard to the rules in effect before Revenue Ruling 77-176.

SEC. 402. ACCRUAL OF OFFSHORE PRODUCTION FACILITY DISMANTLEMENT COSTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 461(h)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to time when economic performance occurs) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If, under the terms of an offshore oil or gas lease, there is a liability for removal of the oil or gas production facilities, such liability shall be treated for purposes of this paragraph as arising out of the use of the facilities.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 403. EXEMPT OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION ACTIVITIES FROM THE UNIFORM CAPITALIZATION RULES.

(a) Section 263A(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(3) CERTAIN OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION ACTIVITIES AND OTHER MINERAL PROPERTY COSTS.—

"(A) This section shall not apply to any costs incurred relating to oil and gas exploration and development activities such as lease acquisition and maintenance activities, geological and geophysical activities, or drilling and completing oil and gas wells.

"(B) This section shall not apply to any cost allowable as a deduction under section 616(a) or 617(a)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by section shall apply to costs paid or incurred after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SUMMARY OF DOMESTIC ENERGY SECURITY ACT OF 1989

1. Exploration and Development Tax Credit. Provide a 20 percent tax credit for exploration and development expenditures. The credit would apply against both the regular and alternative minimum tax.

2. Production Credit for Maintaining Economically Marginal Wells: Provide a 20 percent credit on the costs of operating economically marginal wells. Marginal wells include oil and gas stripper wells, heavy oil wells and oil recovered through tertiary recovery methods. The credit would apply against both the regular and alternative minimum tax.

3. Alternative Minimum Tax: To encourage greater exploration activity, intangible drilling costs and excess depletion are eliminated as preference items.

4. Non-Conventional Fuels Production Credit: Extend the placed-in-service date for qualifying wells or facilities by seven years. Further, include tight sands gas production as qualifying for the credit. Tight sands production was inadvertently precluded from qualifying for the credit due to decontrol.

5. Immediate expensing of all exploration costs: Allow for the immediate expensing of geological, geophysical and unrecoverable surface casing costs.

6. Capitalization of IDC: Eliminate the requirement that integrated producers capitalize 30% of IDCs. Permit full deductibility.

7. Dismantlement Costs of Offshore Production Facilities: Allow for the accrual of costs to dismantle offshore production facilities.

8. Property Transfer Rule: Repeal the transfer rule whereby independent producers loose percentage depletion on properties purchased from major oil companies. This provision would provide an additional incentive to the more efficient independent operator to purchase economically marginal wells from major oil companies.

9. Depletion Limitations: Repeal the 50 percent of net income property limitation on percentage depletion, as well as the 65 percent of taxpayer net income limitation on sustainable depletion.

10. Uniform Capitalization Rules: Exempt all oil and gas exploration and development activities from the Uniform Capitalization rules. Currently, only IDC costs are exempted.

11. Revenue Ruling 77-176: An administrative item to statutorily overrule Rev. Rul. 77-176 relating to "deemed" income resulting from certain farmout agreements where acreage is earned outside of the drillsite.●

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to join my distinguished colleague from Oklahoma, Senator BOREN, in introducing the Domestic Energy Security Act of 1989. This legislation is needed to help reverse the alarming decline of our domestic oil and gas industry.

The pressing problem of revitalizing the oil and gas industry is one of the greatest challenges facing the Congress and the administration this year. The sense of urgency in dealing with these challenges is more pronounced when you review the industry-related statistics for the past year.

U.S. TRENDS

The United States had its lowest level of production and drilling in 1988, at less than 8 million barrels/day. This figure matches the lowest annual rate of domestic crude oil production in the past 25 years. Active drilling rigs, the key indicator of U.S. petroleum development activity were down to under 800 in January, the slowest January on record. This compared to a high of almost 4,000 in 1981.

Imports grew 9 percent last year. Imports counted for 42 percent of U.S. domestic consumption in 1988 and may exceed 50 percent by 1992, compared to 36 percent in 1973, the year the Nation was crippled by the Arab oil embargo. Since 1985, petroleum imports have grown by more than 2 million barrels per day.

OPEC counts for one-half of these imports, compared to 36 percent in 1973. And Arab OPEC countries accounted for 25 percent of the import activity in 1988 compared to 15 percent in 1973.

The United States is the only major producing area in the world where crude oil output has fallen.

At the same time, petroleum consumption is continuing to increase, 4.4 percent in 1988, and imports will continue to fill the gap.

One of the greatest losses to our domestic industry is our loss of infrastructure which cannot easily be replaced. Several hundreds of thousands of rig workers, oil well servicing employees, petroleum engineers, and geologists have lost their jobs and many will never return to the industry.

NEW MEXICO TRENDS

These national statistics reflect similar trends in New Mexico.

The average number of active rigs has declined from 135 in 1981 to 37 today.

Applications to drill are down from 2,964 in 1981 to 1,297 in 1988.

The average number of wells drilled and completed in New Mexico has declined from 2,720 in 1981 to 1,093 at the end of 1988.

LEGISLATION

If these alarming trends at both the State and national level are not reversed, our energy security will become increasingly threatened. Increasing world reliance on OPEC oil, particularly from the Middle East, strengthens the relative power of these countries to control world oil prices and supplies.

In order to reverse the trend we need to stabilize prices and provide economic incentives to the industry to continue exploration and drilling.

The bill I am cosponsoring today seeks to provide those economic incentives, which are needed to mitigate the negative effects of recent changes in the U.S. tax structure which have discouraged oil and gas investment.

The U.S. petroleum industry has been one of the most heavily taxed U.S. industries throughout the 1980's, a period in which energy prices have fallen almost continuously. This has placed domestic oil companies at a serious disadvantage in terms of competing with other industries for investment capital. The increase in the United States tax burden on oil and gas production has occurred at a time when other producing nations, for example, the United Kingdom, Norway, Canada, and Australia, among others, has begun to encourage energy investment by lowering their taxes on energy production.

CONCLUSION

Improvements to the tax treatment of oil and gas exploration and production is not the only solution to achieving national energy security. We clearly must stabilize the price of crude oil in order for the incentives to work. However, the enactment of improvements to the tax treatment of the industry is an important step.

I ask my colleagues to support this important legislation and protect our energy security.●

By Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. DODD, Ms. MIKULSKI, and Mr. KASTEN):

S. 450. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to increase the earned income tax credit on the basis of family size, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

FAMILY EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT ACT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am very pleased to introduce today the Family Earned Income Tax Credit Act and to have the cosponsorship of my committee colleagues, Senators DODD and MIKULSKI, as well as my friend from Wisconsin, Senator KASTEN. I hope other Senators will take a look at this proposal, and I especially invite Senators from the Finance Committee to join us in support of this bill which can provide substantive cash assistance to those in low- and moderate-income groups.

When President Bush was campaigning for office, he outlined a four-point child care initiative. The first element of his program was a tax credit which would help families underwrite the costs of child care. His tax proposal met several key criteria: First, it provided a substantial amount of credit; second, it was targetted to low-income families; third, it was based on an existing tax mechanism; and fourth, it was available to all families in the applicable income groups regardless of whether both parents worked or not. The Family Earned Income Tax Credit Act, or Family EITC, adheres to all of these criteria. This bill has the additional advantage of actually adding benefits for many families without reducing or eliminating benefits for others.

I believe a tax credit that meets the criteria described by the President should be a major part of any comprehensive child care program that Congress enacts.

Senator DODD has introduced the Act for Better Child Care, of which I am a cosponsor. This bill authorizes a discretionary program that will increase the availability of child care in areas where it is scarce and where there are few options for parents by permitting States to award grants to local organizations to develop child care programs. It will enhance the quality of child care by providing funds for the training of providers and the inspection of facilities. It will help low-income families by subsidizing the high cost of child care. I agree that such a discretionary program is a necessary part of a comprehensive approach to the child care issue.

The second element of President Bush's fall child care proposal was a block grant program designed to stimulate local initiatives in child care. President Bush's suggestion is very similar to the block grant program contained in the Child Care Services Improvement Act, which Congresswoman NANCY JOHNSON and I introduced in the 100th Congress and will reintroduce shortly.

But, realistically, this program cannot make a dent in the growing need for child care. Even if the ABC bill is fully funded at its authorized level of $2.5 billion, we can subsidize fewer than 700,000 full-time slots at an average cost of $3,000 per child. The need is far greater.

The Family Earned Income Tax Credit Act will provide substantive financial help for families all across America who are struggling to make ends meet.

Current law provides a 14-percent tax credit to families with one child and incomes of up to $6,521, which begins to phase out at a rate of 10 percent between $10,270 and $19,400. At the maximum level, a family receives $875. Under current law, there is no adjustment for family size.

Under the Family Earned Income Tax Credit Act, current law for families with one child—of any age—would be adjusted such that a family would receive a credit equal to 14 percent of their income up to $7,143. That means that a family would receive $1,000 at the maximum level. The credit would begin to phase out at $9,340 at a rate of 10 percent and break even at $19,340.

The Family EITC also provides two additional amounts of credit for families with young children. Care for young children, of course, is the most expensive. Under the Family EITC, a family with two children under age 6 would receive a 21-percent credit, equal to $1,500 at its maximum level. This credit would phase out at a rate of 9.7 percent and end at $23,500. A family with three or more children under age 6 would receive a 28-percent credit. This credit would phase out at a rate of 9.8 percent and end at $28,500. At its maximum level, a family would receive $2,000.

This proposal, which is very similar to separate proposals offered by Senator BRADLEY, Senator BOSCHWITZ, and Congressman TOM PETRI, has several advantages. First, it is geared to those families who traditionally do not benefit from the dependent care tax credit. The Family EITC is, of course, refundable. Second, it is a slight expansion of existing law and not a brand new provision of tax law to implement. Third, the earned income tax credit can be paid on a regular basis so families would have the benefit of an earnings increase all year around. Fourth, this approach recognizes the costs associated with caring for children, including the loss of a second income if a family elects to have a parent in the home on a full-time basis.

The total cost of this proposal is estimated to be $2.4 to $2.7 billion per year after it is phased in. There is no question that the price tag is high, but the benefits are broad based.

Once again, I am delighted to have Senators DODD, MIKULSKI, and KASTEN as cosponsors of this essential tax credit legislation. I believe it goes hand-in-hand with any discretionary program which might be entertained by the Congress. The Family EITC will provide unrestricted, financial resources for families while a grant program seeks to improve the availability and quality of child care options. They are complementary pieces of legislation, and it would be our intention to link them together at the appropriate time.

I urge Senators to give this legislation careful consideration and join us as cosponsors of this key legislation to assist American families.

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to join Senators HATCH, MIKULSKI and KASTEN in introducing the Family Earned Income Tax Credit Act of 1989. I would like to express my deep appreciation to Senator HATCH in particular for his hard work and leadership on this issue and in our mutual effort to enact comprehensive child care legislation for America's working families.

The purpose of this proposal is to supplement such child care legislation and to build upon recent congressional action on tax and welfare reform. The bill revises the existing earned income tax credit [EITC] to include a family size adjuster for low income families with more than one young child. Families with one child would continue to receive an EITC of 14 percent of their income up to a certain amount as under current law, with higher ceilings and phase-out levels to adjust for inflation. For the first time, families with more than one child under age 6 would be eligible for a higher credit equal to 21 percent for families with two children, and 28 percent for families with three or more children.

As with the existing EITC Program, this legislation would target the credit to low income families regardless of whether or not they have work-related child care expenses or annual tax liability. The EITC can be paid to families each month through negative tax withholding, thereby putting additional cash directly into the hands of families for critical expenses when that money is needed most.

Mr. President, Senators HATCH, MIKULSKI and I intend for this proposal to complement the Act for Better Child Care Services, of which I am the chief Senate sponsor. In practical terms, this could be accomplished through a packaging of the two bills into one legislative initiative or through separate legislative actions on the two proposals. But let me be clear about one thing. This measure is no substitute for comprehensive child care legislation nor for a much needed increase in the minimum wage. It can supplement such legislation but not supplant it.

Like the other tax credit proposals before the Congress, this EITC bill is an income supplement for low-income families; it is not child care legislation. Like the exemptions families are allowed on their personal income tax forms today, EITC is designed simply to recognize that familites with dependents need greater disposable income than those without children at similar income levels. This and other tax credit initiatives do not even require that the funds be used for child care expenses. Recipient families may use the money for household items and other expenses totally unrelated to the costs of caring for children.

By the same token, these credits do nothing as far as I am concerned to increase the supply or the quality of child care—two of the three founding principles behind the Act for Better Child Care Services. And while some will say the market effect of the credits will serve to increase supply indirectly, this seems to be nothing more than a rhetorical pipe dream. This trickle down theory is contradicted by the fact that the credit funds need not be used for child care services. Moreover, the sponsors of these credits have implicitly recognized the fallacy of this theory by sponsoring to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars separate grant proposals to increase child care supply.

Where tax credits can be effective is in helping families afford child care services where they are already available. To this end, the proposal we are introducing today would permit families to receive up to $1,000 per year, which could be applied to child care expenses. This is the most generous per-child credit currently before the Congress and even this would cover only one-third of the $3,000 average annual cost of child care in this country. The Act for Better Child Care Services, on the other hand, would provide low income families with funds up to 100 percent of the cost of care, while concurrently increasing the supply and quality of care under the guidance of parents, local businesses and communities.

For those concerned about the Federal deficit, I sound one last note of caution. Once a tax credit is enacted into law, it becomes an immediate negative entitlement which we cannot control. We would automatically be spending billions of Federal dollars each year, with no opportunity to posit the relative need for the credit against spending priorities in other areas. The Act for Better Child Care, conversely, permits Congress to put a national infrastructure in place and then determine appropriate funding levels each year based on competing priorities.

Mr. President, Senators HATCH, MIKULSKI, and I stand ready to work with other Senators in developing a comprehensive package for American families. In particular, we look to our friends and colleagues on the Finance Committeee for guidance and direction on any tax credit initiative. And should the Senate consider the Act for Better Child Care alone in a more expeditious fashion, we will continue to work for a supplementary income credit which Congress could consider later in the context of a subsequent tax or budget debate.

The American family—the children of this Nation—were just dealt about as good a political hand as any poker player could want. We have a new President who wants a kinder and gentler nation and is willing to invest money to make it happen. We have new leadership in the Senate which is committed to enacting a child care bill this year. We begin 1989 with a remarkable degree of consensus—on a new Federal role in America's child care system, on the targeting of Federal dollars to low-income families; on the importance of parental choice and variety in the delivery of child care services. I look forward to working with the new President and my colleagues in the Senate to see if—together—our mutual goals can be achieved.●

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleagues, Senators HATCH, DODD, and KASTEN, in introducing the Family Earned Income Tax Credit Act of 1989.

Expanding the earned income tax credit is a sensible approach to helping the working poor afford child care. We are building on an existing program that we know works if people take advantage of it. By adjusting the EITC by family size for the first time ever, we acknowledge that families with more children have more child care expenses, and that we want to help them meet those expenses.

Mr. President, the number of full-time working poor increased by more than 43 percent from 1978 to 1987. The EITC is designed to give these working moms and dads a little bit of a break on their taxes, so they can get the care for their children that they deserve. I would like to point out, however, that even with the increase we are proposing today, many of these families will still be below the poverty line. Thus, I would not want this legislation to be viewed as a substitute for an increase in the minimum wage, but rather as a complement to such an increase. In this country, families who are working hard full-time all year long should not be forced to live in poverty. This is not the American way.

Mr. President, last month I joined Senators DODD, HATCH and others in introducing a strong new bipartisan version of the Act for Better Child Care. That legislation, in combination with the bill we are introducing today, will go a long way toward meeting child care needs in this country. We need this tax credit bill to give the working poor a little more income they can use to help them afford child care; we need the ABC bill to assure that the child care they find will not only be affordable, but also accessible, competent and safe. It does us no good to give parents a little more money to pay for child care if we have not done all we can to be sure their kids will be safe and sound in their child care program.

In closing, Mr. President, I would like to commend Senator HATCH for his work on this bill and his powerful commitment to meeting the child care needs of families across the country. His willingness to work with me and that other tireless child care champion, Senator DODD, has strengthened our child care package tremendously—our collaboration has been a valuable experience for me.

Mr. President, children are our most valuable resource. And child care is one of the greatest needs working families face everyday. I believe that the bill we are introducing today, in combination with the ABC bill, will go a long way toward meeting those needs.●

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 451. A bill to provide grants to States for fellowships for individuals who have outstanding ability, demonstrate an interest in a teaching career, and will teach in areas of the State in which there is a shortage of quality elementary or secondary school teachers or in fields of study in which there is a shortage of quality elementary or secondary school teachers, or both, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

FUTURE TEACHER TRAINING CORPS ACT

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce the Future Teacher Training Corps Act, legislation to address the critical shortage of teachers in our country. Today's bill is identical to legislation I introduced in the 99th and 100th Congresses.

I introduced the Future Teacher Training Corps Act 3 years ago because I was gravely concerned about reports of a "future" shortage of quality teachers in our Nation's classrooms. The reports urged us to take action then—3, 5, 6 years ago—but we did not. Instead, we talked about the problem. We conducted more studies. We issued more reports.

Well, the "future" is here today, and the national teacher shortage is real. It is disheartening to report that despite a widespread awareness of the problem, in recent years we have taken precious few steps toward meeting the challenges posed by the Nation's teacher shortage. But it is even more disheartening to report that we have done little to assure our children of the quality education they deserve. Instead, we have spent years talking about these challenges.

Now, we must take action. if we do not, all of the debate about educational reform, all of our good intentions, wil be meaningless. I believe also that any attempt at educational reform will be meaningless if we do not first establish a firm foundation of qualified teachers who can nurture the necessary changes. But our foundation is eroding daily, and we are rapidly reaching the point where the Nation's schools will be besieged by a "teachers deficit."

This deficit comes at a particularly challenging time for us, a time when the effects of our Nation's economic condition threaten our long-term ability to compete in the international marketplace. As the world's nations move toward a global economy, if America is to remain a leader, we must remain competitive. To do this, we must motivate and prepare our children well. We must do all we can to ensure that they receive a quality education. And without question, quality begins in the classroom—in their classroom and in the classroom of their teachers.

Unfortunately, strong demographic and social forces must be overcome if we are to take the steps necessary to assure our children of a quality education. Estimates are that nearly 1 million people will have to enter the teaching profession by 1993 if our children are to have enough teachers to fill their classrooms. That means we will need about 360,000 more teachers than are expected to be available.

Two years ago, a school district in my home State of New Mexico conducted a survey of area colleges to determine the number of students who had chosen education as their profession. Of more than 95,000 undergraduates surveyed at selected universities in Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona, only 5 percent were enrolled in teacher training. At the University of New Mexico, only 3 percent of those surveyed planned to become teachers. This explains why school districts in New Mexico are forced to go beyond the State's borders to fill 50 percent of their teacher demand.

Adding to the problem is the increasing age of our teaching force. The Carnegie Forum estimates that half of the teachers in public schools today will retire within the next 6 years. This occurs at a time when the children of the "baby boomers" are swelling the enrollment in our schools.

School districts throughout the country are feeling the pinch. One of the largest school districts in my State, the Albuquerque Public School District, reported some time ago that for the 1987-88 school year, it would need 600 new teachers. Recruiters planned to find 375 of those teachers outside of New Mexico. Annually, the district must replace about 600 teachers from turnover, growth, and retirements. Yet this district is one of the most desirable places to teach in New Mexico. School districts in the remote areas of the State often have even more difficulty attracting and keeping teachers.

As I mentioned, these problems are not unique to New Mexico. School districts around the country have begun recruiting teachers from foreign countries. Many districts looked to Germany, Spain, and other nations with an oversupply of educators to fill their recruitment needs. Schools in New York reported recently that they had imported about 200 teachers from Spain between 1985 and 1987.

Because of the current shortage of trained educators, several States have begun issuing "emergency teaching certificates," thus putting less-qualified or inexperienced people into the classroom. Many of these new or reassigned educators are expected to teach subjects clearly outside of their field of competence. In 1981, the Federal Department of Education found that 58 percent of the Nation's new mathematics teachers were either uncertified or ineligible for certification to teach math courses. The Department also found that 55 percent of our science teachers and 50 percent of our English teachers were unqualified or ineligible to teach the courses to which they were assigned.

The teacher shortage may be felt most by minority children. This is because the proportion of minority teachers in our education work force is declining at a rate sharper than that of the teacher population as a whole. And the changing composition of the student body is directly opposite to the changing composition of our teaching force. Soon, minorities will constitute at least 30 percent of the total school population. Yet they will comprise less than 5 percent of the elementary and secondary teaching force. These students need role models and a teaching system that reflects the diversity of their unique racial and cultural heritage.

Mr. President, by no means do I believe that this legislation is a panacea for all of the challenges I have described. I do believe that it can serve as an excellent starting point from which we in the Federal Government can encourage students and mid-career individuals to go into teaching. At the same time, my bill includes incentives to help achieve excellence in our teaching force.

The Future Teacher Training Corps Act establishes a program through which States could award graduate fellowships to outstanding undergraduate students and mid-career people who are interested in the teaching profession. In return for the award, the recipient would agree to teach in geographical areas or in subject areas where a shortage exists. The bill names mathematics and the sciences as key subject areas, but would allow the States to identify three additional subject areas as being in need of teachers. States also would determine which districts suffer the greatest shortage of teachers, from remote rural areas to inner city schools.

States choosing to participate in the program would receive fellowship grants in proportion to their share of the total school-age population and would select recipients based upon undergraduate academic performance and, if appropriate, previous work experience.

The bill requires participating States to ensure that fellowship recipients attend institutions with State-approved clinical internship programs. States also must have a precertification teachers examination program in place before the first recipients graduate. Currently, more than 40 States have implemented or are considering a precertification exam for incoming teachers. Finally, participating States must ensure that practicing teachers receive continuing education. Whatever our profession, we must all work to maintain and improve our skills; but this is particularly true of teachers, whose profession is constantly evolving.

Because of the serious under-representation of minority teachers throughout the country, this bill encourages States to recruit black, Hispanic, Asian American, and native American teachers.

Mr. President, I will conclude by reiterating that the time to act is now. We in the Congress have talked about the problems facing our educational system long enough. For our children's sake, the talking must end and serious action at the Federal level must begin.

Education will continue to belong to the State and local governments, but I believe there is room for the Federal Government to encourage capable individuals to consider teaching careers. This Nation must be prepared for the challenges of the future, and I believe this legislation step toward that preparation. I urge my colleagues to support the Future Teacher Training Corps Act. ●

By Mr. WILSON:

S. 452. A bill entitled the "California Military Lands Withdrawal Act;" to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CALIFORNIA MILITARY LANDS WITHDRAWAL ACT

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to withdraw certain Federal lands in the State of California for military and other purposes for a 25-year period.

This bill is similar to legislation I introduced last Congress. It has since been modified such that it now enjoys all known interested parties. For example, the bill makes a minor boundary adjustment to the lands proposed to be withdrawn for the Chocolate Mountain Gunnery Range to exclude approximately 640 acres located at the extreme southern edge of the gunnery range. This boundary modification has the support of the Navy and does not infringe upon the mission of the gunnery range.

The bill is designed to allow for the continued, unimpeded use of certain Federal lands in the California desert for vital military purposes of training, research, and development. It is necessitated by the expiration of the existing withdrawal status of the China Lake Naval Weapons Center and the Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range. China Lake is the Navy's pricipal center for research, development, testing, and evaluation of air warfare and missile weapons systems. As the largest Defense Department gunnery range in the continental United States, Chocolate Mountain is an important Marine Corps training base for pilots in air combat, gunnery, and ordnance delivery.

Due to the full-time, extensive military use of these approximately 1,200,000 acres, this withdrawal is indispensable. These lands have been dedicated to military purposes since the 1940's and failure to reinstate the withdrawal status will seriously crippled DOD's capability to test new weapons and train new military personnel.

This bill contains an added feature that was not the part of the previous withdrawal that will enable greater utilization of the land by allowing mining and geothermal development activity to the extent consistent with military uses. It would permit limited access to potentially valuable geothermal and mineral resources under the cooperative management of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of the Interior.

Although we can't know what is out there until the miners are given a chance to do their exploration work, we do know that gold, silver, tungsten and other valuable minerals have been found throughout this section of California. It makes sense to allow these minerals to be extracted if it can be done in such a way as not to impair the military mission at China Lake and Chocolate Mountains. Under the terms of this bill, whatever lands deemed suitable by the Secretary of the Interior in concurrence with the Secretary of the Navy will be open to miners to stake claims in the traditional manner allowed by the 1872 mining law. The location and operation of these mines will be subject to whatever limitations are deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Navy.

This bill has been prepared in consultation with representatives of the mining industry, the Bureau of Land Management, and the Navy. I would hope that my colleagues will give this legislation the prompt consideration that it deserves.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 452

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subject to valid existing rights, the Federal lands located within the boundaries of the Naval Weapons Center, within Inyo, Kern, and San Bernardino Counties, California, comprising approximately one million one hundred thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "China Lake Naval Weapons Center Withdrawal-Proposed," dated June 1988 (hereinafter referred to as "China Lake") are hereby withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the public land laws, but not the mineral and geothermal leasing laws and to the extent provided in section 2 hereof the mining laws, and are reserved for use of the Naval Weapons Center, China Lake, of the Department of the Navy as a research, development, test and evaluation laboratory and range for air warfare weapons and weapons systems, a high hazard training area for aerial gunnery, rocketry, electronic warfare and countermeasures, tactical maneuvering and air support, and for other defense related uses consistent therewith.

(b) Subject to valid existing rights, approximately two hundred and twenty-six thousand seven hundred and twenty-nine acres of public land in Riverside and Imperial Counties, California, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range Withdrawal—Proposed," dated June 1988, and all other lands within the boundaries of the Chocolate Mountain Aerial Gunnery Range that are now or may become subject to the operation of the public land laws (hereinafter referred to as "Chocolate Mountain") are hereby withdrawn from all forms of appropriation under the public land laws, but not the mineral and geothermal leasing laws and to the extent provided by section 2 hereof the mining laws, and are reserved for use of the Department of the Navy as a testing and training area for aerial bombing, missile firing, tactical maneuvering and air support, and for other defense related uses consistent therewith.

(c)(1) As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(A) publish in the Federal Register a notice containing the legal description of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this Act; and

(B) file maps and the legal description of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this Act with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and with the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives.

(2) Such maps and legal descriptions shall have the same force and effect as if they were included in this Act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may correct clerical and typographical errors in such maps and legal descriptions.

(3) Copies of the maps and legal descriptions that are filed with the Committees shall be available for public inspection in the Office of the Director, Bureau of Land Management, Washington, District of Columbia; the Office of the Director, California State Office of the Bureau of Land Management, Sacramento, California; the Office of the Commander, Naval Weapons Center, China Lake, California; and the Office of the Commanding Officer, Marine Corps Air Station—Yuma, Arizona.

(4) The Secretary of the Navy shall reimburse the Secretary of the Interior for the cost of implementing section 1(c) of this Act.

SEC. 2. (a) As soon as possible after the enactment of this Act and at least every five years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior shall determine, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy, which public and acquired lands covered by the first section of this Act the Secretary of the Interior considers suitable for opening to the operation of the Mining Law of 1872, and the Mineral Leasing Act for Acquired Lands of 1947, or either of such Acts. The Secretary of the Interior shall publish a notice in the Federal Register listing the lands determined suitable pursuant to this section and specifying the opening date.

(b) On the date specified by the Secretary of the Interior in a notice published in the Federal Register pursuant to subsection (a), the land identified under subsection (a) of this section as suitable for opening to the operation of the laws specified in subsection (a) shall automatically be open to the operation of such laws subject to an orderly opening procedure identified in regulations promulgated under subsection (d).

(c) No deposit of minerals or materials of the types identified by section 3 of the Act of July 23, 1955 (69 Stat. 367), whether or not included in the term "common varieties" in that Act, shall be subject to location under the Mining Law of 1872 on lands described in section 1.

(d) The Secretary of the Interior, with the advice and concurrence of the Secretary of the military department concerned shall promulgate such regulations to implement this section as may be necessary to assure safe, uninterrupted, and unimpeded use of the lands described in section 1 for military purposes. Such regulations shall also contain guidelines to advise mining claimants of what environmental or other requirements shall be required on lands opened pursuant to this section.

(e) In the event of a national emergency or for purposes of national defense or security, the Secretary of the Interior, at the request of the Secretary of the military department concerned, shall close any lands that have been opened to mining pursuant to this section.

(f)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act, mining claims located pursuant to this Act shall be subject to the provisions of the mining laws. In the event of a conflict between those laws and this Act, this Act shall prevail.

(2) All mining claims located under the the terms of this Act shall be subject to the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.).

(g)(1) Patents issued pursuant to this Act for locatable minerals shall convey title to locatable minerals only, together with the right to use so much of the surface as may be necessary for purposes incident to mining under the guidelines for such use established by the Secretary of the Interior by regulation.

(2) All such patents shall contain a reservation to the United States of the surface of all lands patented and of all nonlocatable minerals on those lands.

(3) For the purposes of this section, all minerals subject to location under the Mining Law of 1872 are referred to as "locatable minerals".

SEC. 3. The responsibilities for the Management of the natural resources of the lands withdrawn by this Act are established as follows:

(a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall manage the lands and their resources, to the extent possible in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 2743, as amended; 43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), and other applicable laws for uses which may include, but are not limited to, grazing, management of wildlife habitat, mineral leasing, control of predatory animals, and the prevention and suppression of brush and range fires resulting from nonmilitary activities, and shall be responsible for the issuance of all easements, leases, permits, and rights-of-way over the lands withdrawn and reserved by this Act. All such uses, and the issuance of all leases, easements and rights-of-way, shall be secondary to the military use of the lands and shall be authorized only with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Navy.

(b) In recognition of the successful management of the lands and resources of China Lake, by the Department of the Navy since 1943, under a cooperative arrangement with the Department of the Interior, the Secretaries of the Navy and the Interior are authorized to continue such cooperative management practices, and the Secretary of the Interior may assign to the Secretary of the Navy the authority to manage the lands and resources withdrawn and reserved by this Act, and the authority to issue all easements, nonmineral leases, permits and rights-of-way on such lands, so long as such actions are consistent with the plan and program required by subsection (d) of this section, except the authority to administer geothermal leases issued by the Secretary of the Interior including the issuance of associated permits, rights-of-way, other authorizations, and approval of required environmental impact mitigation measures within the leasehold consistent with the Secretary of the Interior's authority under applicable federal laws. Leases, permits and rights-of-way that traverse the perimeter of the lands withdrawn by this Act and are required for activities administered by the Secretary of the Interior shall be issued by the Secretary of the Interior, with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy and subject to such conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

(c) Within three years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior in consultation with the Secretary of the Navy shall develop a land use plan and management program in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act for the use and management of Chocolate Mountain.

(d) Within three years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy shall develop a land use plan and management program for the use and management of China Lake.

(e) The Secretary of the Navy shall prepare and submit to the Secretary of the Interior, on an annual basis, a report on the status of the natural resources of the lands in China Lake.

SEC. 4. The responsibilities of the Secretary of the Navy for management of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this Act are established as follows:

(a) The Secretary of the Navy shall have the authority to control the military use of the lands and may authorize use of the lands by the other military departments and agencies of the Department of Defense, as appropriate.

(b) In accordance with the provisions of section 3(b) of this Act, the Secretary of the Navy may manage the lands and resources withdrawn and reserved by this Act for China Lake and may also be responsible for the issuance of all easements, nonmineral leases, permits, and rights-of-way on such lands.

(c) When military operations, public safety or national security, as determined by the Secretary of the Navy, require the closure of roads and trails commonly in public use, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to take such action: Provided, That such closures shall be limited to the minimum areas and periods required for the purposes specified in this subsection. A reasonable effort shall be made to maintain warning notices during closures.

(d) The Secretary of the Navy shall take necessary precautions to prevent and suppress brush and range fires occurring within and outside the lands as a result of military activities and may seek assistance from the Bureau of Land Management in the suppression of such fires. The memoranda of understanding referenced in section 5 of this Act shall provide for Bureau of Land Management assistance in the suppression of such fires, and for a transfer of funds from the Department of the Navy to the Bureau of Land Management as compensation for such assistance.

(e) On China Lake, the Secretary of the Navy (1) shall have responsibility for the management of the wild horses and burros and is authorized to utilize helicopters and motorized vehicles for the management and control of such animals, and (2) may utilize sand, gravel, or similar mineral or mineral material resources when the use of such resources is required for construction needs of China Lake.

(f) With respect to China Lake, nothing in this Act shall affect the geothermal exploration and development authorities granted to the Secretary of the Navy by section 6(c)(1) of the Act of July 12, 1982 (10 U.S.C. 2689), except that the Secretary of the Navy is required to obtain the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior prior to taking any action under that section.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Navy shall enter into a memorandum of understanding to implement the plan and program developed for Chocolate Mountain in accordance with section 3(c) of this Act and may continue the cooperative arrangement referred to in section 3(b) of this Act. The term of the memorandum of understanding shall be the same as the term of the withdrawal and reservation established by this Act; however, the provisions of the memorandum of understanding may be amended by the Secretaries.

SEC. 6. The withdrawals and reservations established by this Act are not intended to (a) reserve or otherwise withdraw any water for use in connection with the uses identified in the first section of this Act; (b) affect in any manner the future appropriation under State law, by the United States or others, of water in, under, or upon the lands withdrawn and reserved by this Act; (c) affect water rights acquired by the Department of the Navy or other components of the Department of Defense prior to the enactment of this Act for use in connection with military operations at China Lake and Chocolate Mountain.

SEC. 7. (a) DURATION.—The withdrawal and reservation established by this Act shall terminate 15 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) DRAFT ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STATEMENT.—No later than 12 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Navy shall publish a draft environmental impact statement concerning continued or renewed withdrawal of any portion of the lands withdrawn by this Act for which that Secretary intends to seek such continued or renewed withdrawal. Such draft environmental impact statement shall be consistent with the requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.) applicable to such a draft environmental impact statement. Prior to the termination date specified in subsection (a), the Secretary of the Navy shall hold a public hearing on any draft environmental impact statement published pursuant to this subsection. Such hearing shall be held in the State of California in order to receive public comments on the alternatives and other matters included in such draft environmental impact statement.

(c) EXTENSIONS OR RENEWALS.—The withdrawals established by this Act may not be extended or renewed except by an Act or joint resolution.

SEC. 8. (a) PROGRAM.—Throughout the duration of the withdrawals made by this Act, the Secretary of the Navy, to the extent funds are made available, shall maintain a program of decontamination of lands withdrawn by this Act at least at the level of decontamination activities performed on such lands in fiscal year 1986.

(b) REPORTS.—At the same time as the President transmits to the Congress the President's proposed budget for the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary of the Navy shall transmit to the Committees on Appropriations, Armed Services, and Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and to the Committees on Appropriations, Armed Services, and Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives a description of the decontamination efforts undertaken during the previous fiscal year on such lands and the decontamination activities proposed for such lands during the next fiscal year including:

(1) amounts appropriated and obligated or expended for decontaminate of such lands;

(2) the methods used to decontaminate such lands;

(3) amount and types of contaminants removed from such lands;

(4) estimated types and amounts of residual contamination on such lands; and

(5) an estimate of the costs for full decontamination of such lands and the estimate of the time to complete such decontamination.

SEC. 9. (a) NOTICE AND FILING.—(1) No later than three years prior to the termination of the withdrawal and reservation established by this Act, the Secretary of the Navy shall advise the Secretary of the Interior as to whether or not the Secretary of the Navy will have a continuing military need for any of the lands withdrawn under section 2 after the termination date of such withdrawal and reservation.

(2) If the Secretary of the Navy concludes that there will be a continuing military need for any of such lands after the termination date, the Secretary shall file an application for extension of the withdrawal and reservation of such needed lands in accordance with the regulations and procedures of the Department of the Interior applicable to the extension of withdrawals of lands for military uses.

(3) If, during the period of withdrawal and reservation, the Secretary of the Navy decides to relinquish all or any of the lands withdrawn and reserved by this Act, the Secretary shall file a notice of intention to relinquish with the Secretary of the Interior.

(b) CONTAMINATION.—(1) Before transmitting a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary of Defense, acting through the Department of the Navy, shall prepare a written determination concerning whether and to what extent the lands that are to be relinquished are contaminated with explosive, toxic, or other hazardous materials.

(2) A copy of such determination shall be transmitted with the notice of intention to relinquish.

(3) Copies of both the notice of intention to relinquish and the determination concerning the contaminated state of the lands shall be published in the Federal Register by the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) DECONTAMINATION.—If any land which is the subject of a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a) is contaminated, and the Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the Secretary of the Navy, determines that decontamination is practicable and economically feasible (taking into consideration the potential future use and value of the land) and that upon decontamination, the land could be opened to operation of some or all of the public land laws, including the mining laws, the Secretary of the Navy shall decontaminate the land to the extent that funds are appropriated for such purpose.

(d) ALTERNATIVES.—If the Secretary of the Interior, after consultation with the Secretary of the Navy, concludes that decontamination of any land which is the subject of a notice of intention to relinquish pursuant to subsection (a) is not practicable or economically feasible, or that the land cannot be decontaminated sufficiently to be opened to operation of some or all of the public land laws, or if Congress does not appropriate a sufficient amount of funds for the decontamination of such land, the Secretary of the Interior shall not be required to accept the land proposed for relinquishment.

(e) STATUS OF CONTAMINATED LANDS.—If, because of their contaminated state, the Secretary of the Interior declines to accept jurisdiction over lands withdrawn by this Act which have been proposed for relinquishment, or if at the expiration of the withdrawal made by this Act the Secretary of the Interior determines that some of the lands withdrawn by this Act are contaminated to an extent which prevents opening such contaminated lands to operation of the public land laws—

(1) the Secretary of the Navy shall take appropriate steps to warn the public of the contaminated state of such lands and any risks associated with entry onto such lands;

(2) after the expiration of the withdrawal, the Secretary of the Navy shall undertake no activities on such lands except in connection with decontamination of such lands; and

(3) the Secretary of the Navy shall report to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Congress concerning the status of such lands and all actions taken in furtherance of this subsection.

(f) REVOCATION AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Secretary of the Interior, upon deciding that it is in the public interest to accept jurisdiction over lands proposed for relinquishment pursuant to subsection (a), is authorized to revoke the withdrawal and reservation established by this Act as it applies to such lands. Should the decision be made to revoke the withdrawal and reservation, the Secretary of the Interior shall publish in the Federal Register an appropriate order which shall—

(1) terminate the withdrawal and reservation;

(2) constitute official acceptance of full jurisdiction over the lands by the Secretary of the Interior; and

(3) state the date upon which the lands will be opened to the operation of some or all of the public lands laws, including the mining laws.

SEC. 10. (a) DEFENSE.—The functions of the Secretary of Defense or the Secretary of the Navy under this title may be delegated.

(b) INTERIOR.—The functions of the Secretary of the Interior under this title may be delegated, except that an order described in section 7(f) may be approved and signed only by the Secretary of the Interior, the Under Secretary of the Interior, or an Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

SEC. 11. All hunting, fishing, and trapping on the lands withdrawn by this Act shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of section 2671 of title 10, United States Code.

SEC. 12. The United States and all departments or agencies thereof shall be held harmless and shall not be liable for any injuries or damages to persons or property suffered in the course of any mining, geothermal leasing or other authorized nonmilitary activity conducted on lands described in section 1 of this Act.

SEC. 13. (a) AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 2(c) of the Military Lands Withdrawal Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-606) is amended by striking out "the office of the commander, Barry M. Goldwater Air Force Base" and inserting in lieu thereof "the office of the commander, Luke Air Force Base".

(2) Section 3(a)(3)(A) of such Act is amended by striking out "other than" and by inserting in lieu thereof "including".

(3) Section 7(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "cleanup achieved" and by inserting in lieu thereof "decontamination activities performed".

(b) EL CENTRO RANGES.—The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit the Secretary of the Navy to use until January 1, 1990 the public lands in Imperial County, California, generally depicted on the map entitled "El Centro Ranges" dated July, 1987, for the same purposes and to no greater extent that such lands were used by the Secretary of the Navy as of July 1, 1987. Such permission shall be through a cooperative agreement or other appropriate means. Such use shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may require so as to protect the natural, environmetal, scientific, cultural, and other resources and values of such lands and to minimize the extent to which such use by the Secretary of the Navy impedes or restricts use of such or other public lands for recreational and other purposes.

(c) COACHELLA VALLEY.—The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to take all steps necessary to complete land exchanges between the Nature Conservancy and the Bureau of Land Management with regard to the Coachella Valley preserve, as described in Bureau Land Management case files CA 18891, CA 18781, CA 17921, CA 20260, CA 17772, and to consummate such exchanges.

(d) TRAINING CENTER.—Unless otherwise provided by law, the lands within the Toiyabe National Forest, in California, which have been used for purposes of the United States Marine Corps Mountain Warfare Training Center, shall be retained as part of such National Forest. The Secretary of Agriculture shall continue to make such lands available to the United States Marine Corps for purposes of such training center, subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of Agriculture finds appropriate to protect the natural, environmental, aesthetic, scientific, cultural, and other resources and values of such lands. So far as possible, consistent with use of such lands by the United States Marine Corps for purposes of the Mountain Warfare Training Center, the affected lands shall be open to public recreation and other uses.●

S.J. Res. 65. Joint resolution designating June 12, 1989, as "Anne Frank Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ANNE FRANK DAY

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, June 12, 1989, marks what would have been the 60th birthday of Anne Frank. It is an appropriate day to remember one of the blackest periods in world history, the Nazi Holocaust. I would like to take this opportunity to introduce this resolution asking the President of the United States to officially designate June 12 as Anne Frank Day.

The "Diary of Anne Frank" recounts the horror and the humiliation of a young girl living in Nazi-controlled Europe during the Holocaust. These years saw the systematic mass extermination of 6 million Jews in Nazi concentration camps. Over the past 40 years, atrocities continue to be committed against many racial, ethnic, and religious groups. Yet the Holocaust remains a singular experience which still today defines the concept of genocide.

Anne Frank's noble spirit and idealism stand as a model for the rest of humanity. Her story provides inspiration and encouragement to people everywhere. Despite her ordeal and that of her family, she concluded: "In spite of everything, I believe that people are basically good."

The commemoration of "Anne Frank Day" will serve an important function. By remembering the story of Anne Frank, we may work to ensure that such a tragedy never happens again.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 65

Whereas, Anne Frank's Diary, which has recounted the horror and humiliation of living in Nazi-controlled Europe during the Holocaust, has been an inspiration to young and old throughout the world; and,

Whereas, Anne Frank's spirit, despite her ordeal and that of her family, led her to conclude: "In spite of everything, I believe that people are basically good;" and,

Whereas, Anne Frank's story gives hope that the tragedies and horrors of another Holocaust can be prevented by learning the causes and teaching the remedies; and,

Whereas, June 12, which would have been Anne Frank's 60th birthday, is an appropriate day to remember her courage and wisdom; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That June 12, 1989, is designated as Anne Frank Day. The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 15—RELATING TO PEACE AND FAMINE RELIEF IN SUDAN

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. PELL, Mr. SIMON, and Mrs. KASSEBAUM) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 15

Whereas starvation and civil war have killed nearly 1,000,000 southern Sudanese civilians since 1983 and displaced 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 of southern Sudan's 6,000,000 people;

Whereas numerous and reliable reports from the field document that both sides of the conflict, the Government of Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army (hereafter in this concurrent resolution referred to as the "SPLA"), have not only neglected the welfare of southern Sudanese people, but in many instances have deliberately deprived southern Sudanese of food and medicine and have used food as a weapon of war;

Whereas combatants have massacred untold numbers of civilians, destroyed entire villages, and decimated the infrastructure in southern Sudan;

Whereas a national peace accord, which is essential both to an effective emergency relief effort and to a negotiated peace settlement, was endorsed by the SPLA and the Democratic Unionist Party in November 1988, but did not receive the agreement of the Government of Sudan;

Whereas the United States and other international donors have taken several significant steps to alleviate famine, including an October 1988 emergency airlift by the United States Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance and a relief operation carried out by the International Committee of the Red Cross in both rebel and government-held areas in southern Sudan;

Whereas such humanitarian efforts are crucial first steps, but assist only a small fraction of the more than 2,000,000 Sudanese in dire need of relief;

Whereas the United States has a special relationship with the people and Government of Sudan, including the provision of more than $100,000,000 in bilateral and multilateral assistance in fiscal year 1988, the largest amount received by any nation in sub-Saharan Africa;

Whereas Secretary of State James A. Baker III, in a statement on February 8, 1989, emphasized that "starvation will almost certainly not end until the fighting ends," urged both the Government of Sudan and the SPLA to "put peace first and to agree to an early ceasefire" in order to facilitate relief, and called on "authorities at all levels on both sides to remove remaining obstacles and do everything possible to provide emergency relief to victims caught in garrison towns and other areas of the war zone"; and

Whereas the Secretary General of the United Nations, at the invitation of the Government of Sudan, has announced a relief conference to be held in Khartoum in March 1989: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) commends Secretary of State Baker's statement of February 8, 1989, as a major step forward in dramatically focusing world attention upon the humanitarian disaster in Sudan and the urgent need for responsible action by the Government of Sudan and the SPLA to bring about a ceasefire, effective emergency relief, and implementation of a meaningful peace accord;

(2) commends the relief activities in Sudan of the Agency for International Development, the Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance, international organizations, and American, international, and indigenous private and voluntary agencies;

(3) condemns and deplores the use of food as a weapon by the Government of Sudan and the SPLA and calls upon each of them to respect and honor the safe passage of food and emergency relief supplies to civilians in affected areas;

(4) supports all efforts by the international community, private and voluntary agencies, and concerned governments to provide assistance to imperiled Sudanese, including cross-border feeding operations and pre-positioning of food in southern Sudan;

(5) commends the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) for its success in working simultaneously with the Government of Sudan and the SPLA to deliver food and emergency assistance to civilians on both sides of the conflict, and supports efforts by the ICRC to rapidly expand the volume of relief delivered and the number of sites reached;

(6) supports the expanding involvement of the Secretary General of the United Nations in promoting peace and relief activities in Sudan and commends the Government of Sudan for welcoming these efforts;

(7) urges the President and the Secretary of State to exercise vigorous international leadership in pressing for a genuine national reconciliation and an end to widescale starvation and suffering in Sudan, through forceful direct representations to the Government of Sudan and the SPLA, through sustained multilateral, diplomatic initiatives, and active United States-Soviet collaborations, and through the designation of a special United States Government envoy;

(8) urges the President and the Secretary of State to conduct a comprehensive reassessment of the United States' relationship with the Government of Sudan, including a critical examination of future bilateral and multilateral assistance given by the United States to Sudan (other than humanitarian assistance), unless within 6 months after the date of adoption of this concurrent resolution—

(A) the Government of Sudan has made demonstrable progress in facilitating increased relief to displaced populations in areas it controls, through for instance, increased mobilization of key government resources and improved controls over government-armed militias, and

(B) the Government of Sudan has made significant progress in negotiations with the SPLA for a national peace accord and a cease-fire; and

(9) urges the President and the Secretary of State to impress upon the SPLA its special responsibility to permit the flow of international relief to civilians in government-controlled southern cities and towns, the imperative for the SPLA to facilitate assistance to noncombatants in SPLA-controlled areas and, finally, the importance for the SPLA to negotiate independently with the Government of Sudan for a national peace accord.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this concurrent resolution to the President and the Secretary of State.

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join today with my colleague on our Immigration and Refugee Affairs Subcommittee, Senator PELL, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and Senator SIMPSON, our colleagues on the Foreign Relations African Affairs Subcommittee, Senator SIMON and Senator KASSEBAUM, in submitting this concurrent resolution calling for peace and relief in Sudan.

For many months newspapers around the world have carried the story of the extraordinary tragedy that has besieged the people of southern Sudan. The haunting images of masses of starving people have once again filled our television screens.

To help support international efforts to respond to this humanitarian crisis, we are introducing this resolution to express the concern of Congress that far greater international action is required if an even greater human tragedy is to be avoided.

In December, the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs sent a special study mission to the Horn of Africa specifically to look into the question of peace and relief in the Sudan. What the mission witnessed, Mr. President, was tragedy of tremendous proportions requiring the urgent attention of Congress and the new administration, as well as the international community at large.

Certainly, famine is no stranger to the Sudan. But in this case, unlike the famine of 1984–85, the shortages are not due to natural disaster, but are man made. This time food shortages are primarily the result of the ongoing civil war in southern Sudan. Elements in southern Sudan—from Sudanese military officers and local militias to representatives of the rebel Sudanese Peoples Liberation Army [SPLA]—have sought to block food convoys, have fired upon airborne relief supplies, and have prevented the passage of food barges on the Nile.

In fact, not since the Biafra conflict of 1967–70 has food been so cynically used by both sides as a weapon of war.

The result of these actions has been the death due to starvation and violence of an estimated 1 million southern civilians and the displacement of half of the 6 million people in the south.

But, Mr. President, there are some hopeful signs in recent days, and the resolution we are introducing today is intended to support them.

For instance, some relief efforts have begun to succeed even in the presence of civil conflict. Foremost among these is the agreement achieved a few months ago by the International Committee of the Red Cross [ICRC] to deliver food to civilians on all sides of the conflict. The ICRC began its relief flights into southern Sudan on December 3, and has managed to maintain its operations despite the political sensitivities and suspicions which exist between the Khartoum government and the SPLA.

In addition, the U.S. Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance has managed to fly some food into towns bordering the southern region and has been instrumental in a recent food delivery to the south by train. There is also heightened activity by American voluntary agencies and the U.N. community.

But more importantly, Mr. President, there has been increased diplomatic activity to help break the remaining logjams. Our resolution comments the statement of Secretary of State Baker this month placing the U.S. Government strongly in support of expanded relief efforts, and of putting "peace first and to agree to an early ceasefire" to facilitate expanded relief.

And, a few days ago, at the initiative of the United Nations Secretary General, with the agreement of the Government of Sudan, a relief conference will be held in Khartoum in March.

These are important diplomatic initiatives and our resolution calls upon our Government and others in the international community to give them strong support.

But all of these efforts will only buy limited time as long as the war continues. The United States, therefore, must be vigorous in furthering the peace process.

In November, the Democratic Unionist Party, then a part of the Khartoum government, reached a peace agreement with the SPLA which enjoyed broad popular support in the Sudan. Incredibly, this agreement did not receive the support of the government.

Prime Minister Sadiq al-Mahdi rejected the proposal and recently formed a new government. I know I share the hopes of many in the United States that the first actions of his new government will be to move ahead boldly in achieving the peace that is so desperately needed for his country.

Mr. President, the people and Government of the Sudan have long been friends of the United States. Sometimes even between friends it is necessary to speak frankly, as this resolution does, over the need for all sides to seek peace in Sudan.

Rather than dwell solely on the problems of the past, our resolution today seeks to provide some direction for the future—on questions of peace and ongoing relief efforts and the ways in which the administration and Congress should address these over the coming months.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that correspondence which Senator SIMPSON and I have had with the Secretary General, as well as recent articles on the Sudan crisis be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, January 10, 1989.

H.E. JAVIER PEREZ DE CUELLAR,
Secretary General, United Nations, New York, NY.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY GENERAL: Recently our Subcommittee sent a special study mission to the Horn of Africa to examine the many humanitarian and relief needs in the region and to explore the prospects for peace. Their report to us on conditions in the field was extraordinarily distressing. We believe there is an urgent need for you to exercise the good offices of the United Nations in the region to advance the cause of peace and relief in Sudan, Ethiopia and Somalia.

While our mission focused primarily on the crisis in southern Sudan, it is clear from their findings that the conflicts are continuing to extract a heavy toll on civilians in the region—as evidenced by the hundreds of thousands of displaced persons and refugees fleeing across international borders.

Despite the widespread popular support for peace initiatives in all of the countries—particularly with regard to southern Sudan—bold international leadership on these questions is currently lacking. Peace talks have occurred in a number of forums in the region, and some peace discussions are continuing, but the prospects remain uncertain. On the humanitarian side, the International Committee of the Red Cross recently succeeded in finally establishing some mechanisms for the delivery of urgently needed food to civilians on both sides of the conflict in southern Sudan.

Given these conditions, we believe that the United Nations could perform an invaluable service to the international community by appointing a high-ranking, experienced United Nations negotiator and humanitarian envoy to the Sudan—much as you have so successfully done for the people of Afghanistan. Such an eminent individual could seek peaceful solutions to the conflicts in Sudan, and perhaps later to related humanitarian and refugee issues in Ethiopia and Somalia. The immediate task would be to coordinate a more effective international response to the urgent relief needs in the Sudan.

A resolution of the humanitarian and political problems in Sudan, as well as Ethiopia and Somalia, will obviously not be a simple task—but the seeds of peace are clearly there, and may grow with the responsible international stewardship which you and the United Nations have ably demonstrated in recent times in so many other parts of the world. We are convinced that an initiative by you in this area would be welcomed internationally, and we are confident our country stands ready to assist you in any way it can.

Many thanks for your consideration, and we look forward to being in touch on these issues in the days ahead.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

ALAN K. SIMPSON,
Ranking Member.
EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL,
New York, NY, January 19, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugee Affairs, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: I wish to thank you for your letter of 10 January 1989 and to assure you that I fully share your concerns regarding the distressing humanitarian problems which plague the Horn of Africa as a result of internal conflicts, political turmoil and famine-related disasters.

I have taken careful note of your proposal that I should consider the appointment of a special envoy to help promote the establishment of peace in the region, particularly in the Sudan, and to enhance the effective delivery of relief assistance. There is, of course, some difficulty in this regard as the governments involved view the political situation in their countries as purely internal matters, falling solely within their sovereign competence. None of the governments have requested any change in the primarily humanitarian role which the United Nations is currently playing nor have the political issues which are at stake in these countries been brought before the United Nations for consideration, as in the case of Afghanistan. Nevertheless, I will certainly look into the matter in the course of my contacts with the governments and explore various alternatives for expanding the role of the United Nations, including the proposal you have suggested.

With regard to the serious humanitarian situation in the Horn of Africa, I should like you to know that there has been a strong response from the United Nations. In two of the three countries mentioned in your letter, namely Sudan and Ethiopia, emergency relief operations have been in force for some time now.

In the Sudan, the situation, unfortunately, has shown few signs of improvement. Following a meeting which I had with Prime Minister Sedeq al-Mahdi in May 1988, and several meetings thereafter with various ministers of his Government, I have strengthened the United Nations' capacity to respond to the situation and reinstituted several emergency relief programmes in the affected provinces of the country. Unfortunately, the military and civil situation in these provinces has continued to prevent the free movement and distribution of humanitarian supplies to affected population centres, although arrangements worked out with the rebels to enable supplies to be delivered to some of the areas controlled by them supplements the ICRC initiative. However, we all recognize that the amount of emergency assistance that we have been able to provide so far is well below what is needed to satisfy the current needs of the affected population, and that major stockpiling of food and emergency commodities must take place before the rains close off these areas in late May.

On the political side, I had hoped that the encouraging developments which took place in late November 1988, involving peace talks between an official Sudanese delegation and the rebel leaders in Addis Ababa, would have borne fruit and created conditions allowing relief and humanitarian agencies to have full and unimpeded access to areas of need. While there has been a general improvement in access to all affected areas as well as a lull in the fighting, this is by no means good enough, and I agree that the suffering being endured by a large part of the civilian population in the south must be brought to an end as rapidly as possible. I am currently reviewing the situation with my collaborators who are actively involved in the Sudan to see what action could be taken to help bring an end to the conflict and improve the flow of emergency supplies to the affected people.

In Ethiopia, the famine situation is practically over as a result of last year's good rains and harvest, and there are now some hopeful signs of national reconciliation in the provinces where conflict has taken a heavy toll on the civilian population. Unfortunately, during the past year, a massive influx of refugees from the Sudan and Somalia has created new strains on the social and economic fabric of the country.

The tragic events in the northwest provinces of Somalia have been of great concern to all of us. In response to an appeal from the Head of State, an inter-agency mission will visit Somalia early next month to help the authorities in developing a programme of emergency assistance for large numbers of people who have been rendered homeless and displaced. Recent statements made by the Government regarding the need for the country to heal itself and for the immediate implementation of a national reconciliation programme are encouraging signs for the future.

I trust that the above information will provide you with a better understanding of the constraints under which the United Nations operates in the Horn of Africa and of the measures which we have taken to address the humanitarian concerns which we all share.

I should like you to know that I have addressed a similar letter to Senator Simpson.

Yours sincerely,

JAVIER PÉREZ DE CUÉLLAR

SUDAN: HEADING OFF HUNGER

Some steps are being taken to avert a new famine in southern Sudan, but whether they will do the job is up in the air. The problem lies in the increment of hardship that civil war has added to underdevelopment and drought. It is established to the satisfaction of relief providers that the government, run by moslems of the north, has routinely denied food to the insurgent Christian and animist population of the south. Under pressure by food donors, relief agencies and others, however, the government seems to be relenting to a degree. The Red Cross is being permitted conditionally to supply some rebel-held areas. A first truckload of U.S. government emergency food has been dispatched into southern Sudan from Kenya. The Sudanese government is to host a relief conference in Khartoum next month under United Nations auspices.

The question remains of whether such efforts will actually put food in the mouths of the million or more Sudanese at risk in their country's sprawling south. The season of their greatest vulnerability approaches, and the famine toll last year was estimated to be in the hundreds of thousands. Information about need is not reliable, and there are plenty of opportunities for food aid to be misused. The sad fact is that despite recurrent famines in Africa, no reliable system of intelligence and monitoring exists. This is apart from the logical and financial problems of delivering food once a relief effort is set in train.

The real problem in Sudan, of course, is not relief but the six-year war, driven now apparently by official insistence on imposing Islamic law on the non-Moslem south. Prime Minister Sadiq Mahde, caught between fundamentalists and trade unionists in his government, rejected a draft peace accord the latter group negotiated with the rebel south, and is instead reported to be organizing an initiative of his own. It has yet to take specific shape, however. One difficulty seems to lie in the interlocking insurgencies that Sudan and Ethiopia support against each other.

The United States tends to see Sudan as a friendly, moderate Arab state that has cooperated with American interests in the region. In the past anyway, this pattern seems to have induced in Washington a certain hesitation to press the Sudanese government to expedite relief and peace alike. Such hesitation does Sudan no favor. The Bush administration has spoken out pointedly for the free transit of relief. This is the necessary policy.

AT LAST, PLAIN WORDS ABOUT THE SUDAN

Secretary of State James Baker has broken an unbecoming silence on the Sudan. Pressed by Congress, Mr. Baker has issued a written statement expressing "profound concern" about "massive human suffering" caused by the Sudan's six-year civil war: "Most of the war's victims are civilians who are displaced and impoverished, or who starve to death for lack of delivery of available food. The death toll from starvation in 1988 alone is estimated to range in the hundreds of thousands."

Mr. Baker rightly urges both the Khartoum Government and the insurgent Sudanese People's Liberation Army to "remove remaining obstacles" to emergency relief for victims caught in garrison towns and elsewhere in the war zone.

It might have been fairer to place larger blame on the Sudanese Government for blocking relief shipments, but the Secretary's words represent an immense improvement on previous mumbling. Finally, a high official in Washington is saying out loud that thousands are dying for political reasons.

A State Department policy paper calls on both the Islamic North and non-Islamic South to compromise differences and end the fighting. The department's annual human rights report searingly describes the sectarian nature of the conflict and excesses by both sides: the Government's slaughter of noncombatant tribal peoples, and the execution of dissidents by insurgents. Such frankness has been avoided until now for fear of unsettling a Sundanese Government loosely allied to the United States.

Getting food to stricken areas is difficult. For weeks relief workers have labored to fill barges with food meant for Malakal, a town where thousands now starve. Midway, the barges halted on the Nile, allegedly for "lack of parts." Nobody can be sure whether that's true. What is certain is that without someone making a fuss, the barges are unlikely ever to budge. Secretary Baker's firm words are a good beginning.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 65—DESIGNATING THE "ROBERT C. BYRD ROOMS" IN THE U.S. CAPITOL

Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 65

Whereas, Senator Robert C. Byrd has served in the Senate with great distinction for more than thirty years, twenty-two of which he served in positions of leadership within the Senate, including six years as Majority Leader and six years as Minority Leader;

Whereas, his service to the Senate has been characterized by diligent work, attention to detail, boundless energy, and intense loyalty;

Whereas, Senator Byrd was the first Majority Leader in Senate history to occupy the suite of rooms S221, S222, S223, and S224 in the United States Capitol Building;

Whereas, Senator Byrd, during the past decade, has prepared a monumental written history of the Senate, which will be widely consulted as the authoritative text on the Senate's past, both now and for decades to come; and

Whereas, by virtue of these extraordinary achievements it is appropriate that he be remembered for as long as there is a Senate of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the suite of rooms S221, S222, S223, and S224 in the United States Capitol Building is hereby designated as, and shall hereafter be known as, the "Robert C. Byrd Rooms", in recognition of the unequaled service in this body of Robert C. Byrd on behalf of the people of the United States.

SENATE RESOLUTION 66—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED AUTHORIZING BIENNIAL EXPENDITURES BY COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE

Mr. FORD, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, reported the following original resolution; which was placed on the calendar:

(b) The expenses of the committee for the period March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, under the section shall not exceed $4,951,018 of which amount (1) not to exceed $49,326 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and (2) not to exceed $2,470 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of such Act).

(c) For the period March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, expenses of the committee under this section shall not exceed $5,051,556, of which amount (1) not to exceed $49,326 may be expended for the procurement of the services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof (as authorized by section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended), and (2) not to exceed $2,470 may be expended for the training of the professional staff of such committee (under procedures specified by section 202(j) of such Act).

(d)(1) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to study or investigate—

(A) the efficiency and economy of operations of all branches of the Government including the possible existence of fraud, misfeasance, malfeasance, collusion, mismanagement, incompetence, corruption, or unethical practices, waste, extravagance, conflicts of interest, and the improper expenditure of Government funds in transactions, contracts, and activities of the Government or of Government officials and employees and any and all such improper practices between Government personnel and corporations, individuals, companies, or persons affiliated therewith, doing business with the Government; and the compliance or noncompliance of such corporations, companies, or individuals or other entities with the rules, regulations, and laws governing the various governmental agencies and its relationships with the public;

(B) the extent to which criminal or other improper practices or activities are, or have been engaged in the field of labor-management relations or in groups or organizations of employees or employers, to the detriment of interests of the public, employers, or employees, and to determine whether any changes are required in the laws of the United States in order to protect such interests against the occurrence of such practices or activities;

(C) organized criminal activity which may operate in or otherwise utilize the facilities of interstate or international commerce in furtherance of any transactions and the manner and extent to which, and the identity of the persons, firms, or corporations, or other entities by whom such utilization is being made, and further, to study and investigate the manner in which and the extent to which persons engaged in organized criminal activity have infiltrated lawful business enterprise, and to study the adequacy of Federal laws to prevent the operations of organized crime in interstate or international commerce; and to determine whether any changes are required in the laws of the United States in order to protect the public against such practices or activities;

(D) all other aspects of crime and lawlessness within the United States which have an impact upon or affect the national health, welfare, and safety; including but not limited to investment fraud schemes, commodity and security fraud, computer fraud, and the use of offshore banking and corporate facilities to carry out criminal objectives;

(E) the efficiency and economy of operations of all branches and functions of the Government with particular reference to—

(i) the effectiveness of present national security methods, staffing, and processes as tested against the requirements imposed by the rapidly mounting complexity of national security problems;

(ii) the capacity of present national security staffing, methods, and processes to make full use of the Nation's resources of knowledge, talents;

(iii) the adequacy of present intergovernmental relations between the United States and international organizations principally concerned with national security of which the United States is a member; and

(iv) legislative and other proposals to improve these methods, processes, and relationships;

(F) the efficiency, economy, and effectiveness of all agencies and departments of the Government involved in the control and management of energy shortages including, but not limited to, their performance with respect to—

(i) the collection and dissemination of accurate statistics on fuel demand and supply;

(ii) the implementation of effective energy conservation measures;

(iii) the pricing of energy in all forms;

(iv) coordination of energy programs with State and local government;

(v) control of exports of scarce fuels;

(vi) the management of tax, import, pricing, and other policies affecting energy supplies;

(vii) maintenance of the independent sector of the petroleum industry as a strong competitive force;

(viii) the allocation of fuels in short supply by public and private entities;

(ix) the management of energy supplies owned or controlled by the Government;

(x) relations with other oil producing and consuming countries;

(xi) the monitoring of compliance by governments, corporations, or individuals with the laws and regulations governing the allocation, conservation, or pricing of energy supplies; and

(xii) research into the discovery and development of alternative energy supplies; and

(G) the efficiency and economy of all branches and functions of Government with particular reference to the operations and management of Federal regulatory policies and programs:

Provided, That, in carrying out the duties herein set forth, the inquiries of this committee or any subcommittee thereof shall not be deemed limited to the records, functions, and operations of any particular branch of the Government; but may extend to the records and activities of any persons, corporation, or other entity.

(2) Nothing contained in this section shall affect or impair the exercise of any other standing committee of the Senate of any power, or the discharge by such committee of any duty, conferred or imposed upon it by the Standing Rules of the Senate or by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended.

(3) For the purpose of this section the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, or its chairman, or any other member of the committee or subcommittee designated by the chairman, from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, and March 1, 1990, through February 28, 1991, is authorized, in its, his, or their discretion (A) to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and production of correspondence, books, papers, and documents, (B) to hold hearings, (C) to sit and act at any time or place during the sessions, recess, and adjournment periods of the Senate, (D) to administer oaths, and (E) to take testimony, either orally or by sworn statement, or, in the case of staff members of the Committee and the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, by deposition in accordance with the Committee Rules of Procedure (4) All subpoenas and related legal processes of the committee and its subcommittees authorized under S. (d)(1) The Special Committee on Investigations (hereafter in this section referred to as the "special committee"), a duly authorized subcommittee of the select committee, is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 23, 1990, to study or investigate any and all matters pertaining to problems and opportunities of Indians and the Federal administration of mineral resources, including but not limited to State governments, Indian education, health, special services, and other Federal programs, and related matters.

(d)(2) For the purpose of this section the special committee is authorized from March 1, 1989, through February 28, 1990, in its discretion (A) to adopt rules (not inconsistent with this resolution and the Standing Rules of the Senate) governing its procedure, to be published in the Congressional Record, (B) to make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction, (C) to make expenditures from the contingent fund of the Senate, (D) to employ personnel, (E) to sit and act at any time or place during the sessions, recess, and adjourned periods of the Senate, (F) to hold hearings and to take staff depositions and other testimony, (G) to require, by subpoena or order, the attendance of witnesses and the production of correspondence, books, papers, and documents at hearings or at staff depositions, (H) to procure the services of individual consultants or organizations thereof, in accordance with the provisions of section 202(i) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, and (I) with the prior consent of the Government department or agency concerned and the Committee on Rules and Administration, to use on a reimbursable, or non-reimbursable basis the services of personnel of any such department or agency.

(d)(3) The chairman of the special committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses, and, at staff depositions authorized by the special committee, oaths may be administered by any individual authorized by local law to administer oaths.

(d)(4) Subpoenas authorized by the special committee may be issued over the signature of the chairman, or any member of the special committee designated by the chairman or the member signing the subpoena.

(e) The special committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, to the Senate through the select committee at the earliest practicable date, but not later than February 28, 1990.

SPECIAL RESERVE

SEC. 22. Of the funds authorized for any Senate committee by Senate Resolution 381, agreed to February 26, 1988 for the funding period ending on the last day of February 1989, any unexpended balance remaining after such last day shall be transferred to a special reserve for such committee, which reserve shall be available to such committee for the period commencing March 1, 1989, and ending with the close of September 30, 1989, for the purpose of (1) meeting any unpaid obligations incurred during the funding period ending on the last day of February 1989, and (2) meeting expense of such committee incurred after such last day and prior to the close of September 30, 1989.

SEC. 23. Of the funds authorized for any Senate committee by this resolution for the funding period ending on the last day of February 1990, any unexpended balance remaining after such last day shall be transferred to a special reserve for such committee, which reserve shall be available to such committee for the period commencing March 1, 1990, and ending with the close of September 30, 1990, for the purpose of (1) meeting any unpaid obligations incurred during the funding period ending on the last day of February 1990, and (2) meeting expenses of such committee incurred after such last day and prior to the close of September 30, 1990.

LIMITS ON FRANKED MAIL MAILED WITH A SIMPLIFIED FORM OF ADDRESS

SEC. 24. (a) Senate Resolution 458, agreed to September 9, 1988, is hereby repealed.

(b) The total number of pieces of mail which may be mailed as franked mail under section 3210(d) of title 39, United States Code, during any calendar year by a Senator entitled to mail franked mail may not exceed an amount equal to six multiplied by the number of addresses to which such mail may be delivered in the State from which the Senator was elected. Any mail matter which relates solely to a notice of appearance or a scheduled itinerary of a Senator or such Senator's personal staff representative in the State from which such Senator was elected shall not count against the limitation set forth in the preceding sentence.

SENATE RESOLUTION 67—TO REFER THE BILL S. 423 TO THE COURT OF CLAIMS

Mr. FORD submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 67

Resolved, That the bill (S. 423) entitled "For the relief of land grantors in Henderson, Union, and Webster Counties, Kentucky, and their heirs," now pending in the Senate, together with all accompanying papers, is referred to the Chief Judge of the United States Court of Claims. The Chief Judge shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of Sections 1492 and 2059 of Title 28, United States Code, and report back to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions that are sufficient to inform Congress of the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimants individually.

SENATE RESOLUTION 68—CONDEMNING THE THREATS AGAINST THE AUTHOR AND PUBLISHERS OF "SATANIC VERSES"

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. PELL, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. SANFORD, and Mr. GORTON) submitted the following resolution; which was ordered held at the desk:

S. RES. 68

Whereas, on February 14, 1989 Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini of the Islamic Republic of Iran called for the assassination of Salman Rushdie, author of "Satanic Verses," and of the officers of Viking, the U.S. publisher of the book;

Whereas, Viking officers have received death threats since the publication of the book, and Viking offices have been evacuated several times following bomb threats;

Whereas, on February 21, 1989 President George Bush condemned Iran's threat against Mr. Rushdie and his publisher as "deeply offensive to the norms of civilized behavior": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That in recognition of threats of violence made against the above mentioned author and publisher, the Senate—

(1) declares its commitment to protect the right of any person to write; publish, sell, buy, and read books without fear of intimidation and violence;

(2) unequivocally condemns as state-sponsored terrorism, the threat of the government of Iran and Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to assassinate citizens of other countries on foreign soil;

(3) expresses its support for the publishers and booksellers who have courageously printed, distributed, sold, and displayed "Satanic Verses" despite the threats they have received;

(4) applauds President Bush for his strongly worded statement of outrage against the Iranian government's actions and calls upon the President to continue to condemn publicly any and all threats made against the author and his publishers;

(5) commends the European Community member states for withdrawing their diplomatic corps from Iran in response to the Ayatollah's death sentences;

(6) repudiates religious intolerance and bigotry;

(7) calls upon the President of the United States to take swift and proportionate action in consultation, as appropriate, with other interested governments, in the event that violent acts should occur.

SENATE RESOLUTION 69—DIRECTING REPRESENTATION BY THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 69

Whereas, in 1987 and 1988 the Subcommittee on Terrorism, Narcotics, and International Operations of the Committee on Foreign Relations conducted an investigation of the foreign policy and international implications of narcotics trafficking;

Whereas, in the case of United States v. Norman LeFevre, et al., No. 88-131 CR-T-17, pending in the United States District court for the Middle District of Florida, a defendant is seeking a subpoena for the production of documents from the investigation by Senator John Kerry or employees on the staff of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Department of Justice has requested that the documents be provided to it so that appropriate materials can be produced for the defendant;

Whereas, pursuant to section 703(a) and 704(a)(2) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288b(a) and 288c(a)(2) (1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to represent Members and employees of the Senate with respect to subpoenas issued to them in their official capacity;

Whereas, by the privileges of the Senate of the United States and Rule XI of the standing Rules of the Senate, no evidence under the control or in the possession of the Senate can, by the judicial process, be taken from such control or possession but by permission of the Senate: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Senator Kerry and employees of the Senate in the case of United States v. Norman LeFevre, et al.

SEC. 2. That the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, acting jointly, are authorized to provide records of the Subcommittee's investigation, if in their judgment circumstances so warrant.

SENATE RESOLUTION 70—DIRECTING REPRESENTATION BY THE SENATE LEGAL COUNSEL

Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. DOLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 70

Whereas, in the case of Rodney F. Stich v. Senator Edward Kennedy, et al., No. 89-

0170, pending in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, the plaintiff has named Senators Kennedy, Thurmond, Hollings, Gore, Wilson, and Biden as defendants;

Whereas, pursuant to sections 703(a) and 704(a)(1) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, 2 U.S.C. 288b(a) and 288c(a)(1) (1982), the Senate may direct its counsel to defend the members of the Senate in civil actions relating to their official responsibilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate Legal Counsel is directed to represent Senators Kennedy, Thurmond, Hollings, Gore, Wilson, and Biden in the case of Rodney F. Stich v. Senator Edward Kennedy, et al.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

SEC. 111. DELETION OF SECTION 161v.—Subsection 161v. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, is deleted and the remaining subsections are relettered accordingly.

SEC. 112. REDIRECTION OF THE URANIUM ENRICHMENT ENTERPRISE OF THE UNITED STATES.—The Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. Sections 2011-2296) is further amended by—

"a. inserting at the commencement thereof after the words 'ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1954':

" 'TITLE I—ATOMIC ENERGY'; and

"b. adding at the end thereof the following:

" 'TITLE II—UNITED STATES ENRICHMENT CORPORATION

" 'CHAPTER 21. FINDINGS

" 'SEC. 1101. FINDINGS.—The Congress of the United States finds that:

" 'a. The enrichment of uranium is essential to the national security and energy security of the United States.

" 'b. A competitive, well-managed and efficient enrichment enterprise provides important economic benefits to the United States and contributes to a highly favorable foreign trade balance.

" 'c. A strong United States enrichment enterprise promotes United States nonproliferation policies by requiring accountability for United States enriched uranium.

" 'd. The operation of uranium enrichment facilities must meet high standards for environmental health and safety.

" 'e. The operation and management of a uranium enrichment enterprise requires a commercial business orientation in order to engender customer support and confidence, and customers, rather than the taxpayers at large, should bear the costs of uranium enrichment services.

" 'f. The optimal level of expenditures for the uranium enrichment enterprise fluctuates and cannot be accurately predicted or efficiently financed if subject to annual authorization and appropriation.

" 'g. Flexibility is essential to adapt business operations to a competitive marketplace.

" 'h. The events of the recent past, including the emergence of foreign competition, have brought new and unforeseen forces to bear upon the management and operation of the Government's uranium enrichment enterprise.

" 'i. The present operation of the uranium enrichment enterprise must be changed so as to further the national interest in the enterprise and respond to the competitive demand placed upon it by market forces, while continuing to meet the paramount objective of ensuring the Nation's common defense and security.

" 'CHAPTER 22. DEFINITIONS, ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION AND PURPOSES

" 'SEC. 1201. DEFINITIONS.—For the purpose of this title:

" 'a. The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Energy.

" 'b. The term "Department" means the Department of Energy of the United States.

" 'c. The term "Administrator" means the chief executive officer of the United States Enrichment Corporation.

" 'd. The term "Corporation" means the United States Enrichment Corporation.

" 'e. The term "Advisory Board" means the appointed members of the official advisory panel appointed by the President pursuant to section 1503 of this title.

" 'f. The term "uranium enrichment" means the separation of uranium of a given isotopic content into two components, one having a higher percentage of a fissile isotope and one having a lower percentage.

" 'SEC. 1202. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE CORPORATION.—

" 'a. There is hereby created a body corporate to be known as the "United States Enrichment Corporation".

" 'b. The Corporation shall—

" '(1) be established as a wholly-owned Government corporation subject to the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended (31 U.S.C. section 9101-9109), except as otherwise provided herein; and

" '(2) be an agency and instrumentality of the United States.

" 'SEC. 1203. PURPOSES.—The Corporation is created for the following purposes:

" '(1) to acquire feed material for uranium enrichment, enriched uranium and the Department's uranium enrichment and related facilities;

" '(2) to operate, and as required by business conditions, to expand or construct facilities for uranium enrichment or both;

" '(3) to market and sell enriched uranium and uranium enrichment and related services to—

" '(A) the Department for governmental purposes; and

" '(B) qualified domestic and foreign persons;

" '(4) to conduct research and development for purposes of identifying, evaluating, improving and testing processes for uranium enrichment;

" '(5) to operate, as a continuing, commercial enterprise, on a profitable and efficient basis;

" '(6) to establish a corporate structure that is self-financing and would obviate the need for appropriations or other sources of Government financing after enactment of this title;

" '(7) to maintain a reliable and economical domestic source of enrichment services;

" '(8) to conduct its activities in a manner consistent with the health and safety of the public;

" '(9) to continue to meet the paramount objectives of ensuring the Nation's common defense and security (including consideration of United States policies concerning nonproliferation of atomic weapons and other nonpeaceful uses of atomic energy); and

" '(10) to take all other lawful action in furtherance of the foregoing purposes.

" 'CHAPTER 23. CORPORATE OFFICES

" 'SEC. 1301. CORPORATE OFFICES.—

" 'The Corporation shall maintain an office for the service and process of papers in the District of Columbia, and shall be deemed, for purposes of venue in civil actions, to be a resident thereof. The Corporation may establish offices in such other place or places as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the conduct of its business.

" 'CHAPTER 24. POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE CORPORATION

" 'SEC. 1401. SPECIFIC CORPORATE POWERS AND DUTIES.—

" 'The Corporation—

" 'a. shall perform uranium enrichment or provide for such enrichment to be performed by others at facilities of the Corporation. The Corporation shall continue in effect contracts in existence as of the date of the enactment of this title between the Department and persons currently under contract to perform uranium enrichment at facilities of the Department;

" 'b. shall conduct, or provide for the conduct of, research and development activities related to the isotopes separation of uranium as the Corporation deems necessary or advisable for purposes of maintaining the Corporation as a continuing, commercial enterprise operating on a profitable and efficient basis;

" 'c. may acquire or distribute enriched uranium, feed material for uranium enrichment or depleted uranium in transactions with—

" '(1) persons licensed under sections 53, 63, 103, or 104 of title I in accordance with the license held by such persons;

" '(2) persons in accordance with, and within the period of, an agreement for cooperation arranged pursuant to section 123 of title I; or

" '(3) as otherwise authorized by law;

" 'd. may—

" '(1) enter into contracts with persons licensed under section 53, 63, 103, or 104 of title I for such periods of time as the Corporation may deem necessary or desirable, to provide uranium or uranium enrichment and related services; and

" '(2) enter into contracts to provide uranium or uranium enrichment and related services in accordance with, and within the period of, an agreement for cooperation arranged pursuant to section 123 of title I or as otherwise authorized by law; Provided, That comparable services are made available pursuant to paragraph (1);

"'e. shall sell to the Department as provided in this title, and without regard to the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 1535, such amounts of uranium or uranium enrichment and related services as the Department may determine from time to time are required: (1) for the Department to carry out Presidential direction and authorizations pursuant to section 91 of title I; and (2) for the conduct of other Department programs;

"'f. may grant licenses, both exclusive and nonexclusive, for the use of patent and patent applications owned by the Corporation, and establish and collect charges, in the form of royalties or otherwise, for utilization of Corporation-owned facilities, equipment, patents, and technical information of a proprietary nature pertaining to the Corporation's activities.

"'SEC. 1402. GENERAL POWERS OF THE CORPORATION.—In order to accomplish the purposes of this title, the Corporation—

"'a. shall have perpetual succession unless dissolved by Act of Congress;

"'b. may adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

"'c. may sue and be sued in its corporate name and be represented by its own attorneys in all judicial and administrative proceedings;

"'d. may indemnify the Administrator, officers, attorneys, agents and employees of the Corporation for liabilities and expenses incurred in connection with their corporate activities;

"'e. may adopt, amend, and repeal bylaws, rules and regulations governing the manner in which its business may be conducted and the power granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed;

"'f. (1) may acquire, purchase, lease, and hold real and personal property including patents and proprietary data, as it deems necessary in the transaction of its business, and sell, lease, grant, and dispose of such real and personal property, as it deems necessary to effectuate the purposes of this title and without regard to the Federal Property and the Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended;

"'(2) Purchases, contracts for the construction, maintenance, or management and operation of facilities and contracts for supplies or services, except personal services, made by the Corporation shall be made after advertising, in such manner and at such times sufficiently in advance of opening bids, as the Corporation shall determine to be adequate to insure notice and an opportunity for competition; Provided, That advertising shall not be required when the Corporation determines that the making of any such purchase or contract without advertising is necessary in the interest of furthering the purposes of this title, or that advertising is not reasonably practicable;

"'g. with the consent of the agency or government concerned, may utilize or employ the services or personnel of any Federal Government agency, or any State or local government, or voluntary or uncompensated personnel to perform such functions on its behalf as may appear desirable;

"'h. may enter into and perform such contracts, leases, cooperative agreements, or other transactions as may be necessary in the conduct of its business and on such terms as it may deem appropriate, with any agency or instrumentality of the United States, or with any State, territory or possession, or with any political subdivision thereof, or with any person, firm, association, or corporation;

"'i. may determine the character of and the necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, subject to the provisions of this title and other provisions of law specifically applicable to wholly-owned Government corporations;

"'j. notwithstanding any other provision of law, and without need for further appropriation, may use monies, unexpended appropriations, revenues and receipts from operations, amounts received from obligations issued and other assets of the Corporation in accordance with section 1505, without fiscal year limitation, for the payment of expenses and other obligations incurred by the Corporation in carrying out its functions under, and within the requirements of, this title; and shall not be subject to apportionment under the provisions of subchapter II of chapter 15 of title 31, United States Code.

"'k. may settle and adjust claims held by the Corporation against other persons or parties and claims by other persons or parties against the Corporation;

"'l. may exercise, in the name of the United States, the power of eminent domain for the furtherance of the official purposes of the Corporation;

"'m. shall have the priority of the United States with respect to the payment of debts out of bankrupt, insolvent, and decedents' estates;

"'n. may define appropriate information as "Government Commercial Information" and exempt such information from mandatory release pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 552(b)(3) when it is determined by the Administrator that such information if publicly released would harm the Corporation's legitimate commercial interests;

"'o. may request, and the Administrator of General Services, when requested, shall furnish the Corporation such services as he is authorized to provide agencies of the United States;

"'p. may accept gifts or donations of services, or of property, real, personal, mixed, tangible or intangible, in aid of any purposes herein authorized; and

"'q. may execute, in accordance with its bylaws, rules and regulations, all instruments necessary and appropriate in the exercise of any of its powers.

"'SEC. 1403. CONTINUATION OF CONTRACTS, ORDERS, PROCEEDINGS AND REGULATIONS.—

"'a. Except as provided elsewhere in this title, all contracts, agreements, and leases with the Department, and licenses, and privileges that have been afforded to the Department prior to the date of the enactment of this title and that relate to uranium enrichment, including all enrichment services contracts and power purchase contracts, shall continue in effect as if the Corporation had executed such contracts, agreements, or leases or had been afforded such licenses and privileges.

"'b. As related to the functions vested in the Corporation by this title, all orders, determinations, rules, regulations and privileges of the Department shall continue in effect and remain applicable to the Corporation until modified terminated, superseded, set aside or revoked by the Corporation, by any court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law unless otherwise specifically provided in this title.

"'c. Except as provided elsewhere in this title, the transfer of functions related to and vested in the Corporation by this title shall not affect proceedings judicial or otherwise, relating to such functions which are pending at the time this title takes affect, and such proceedings shall be continued with the Corporation, as appropriate.

"'SEC. 1404. CERTAIN PENDING LITIGATION.—

"'The Corporation may enter into or continue any contract in accordance with the provisions of this title without regard to any judgment in the proceeding pending before the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in Docket No. 85-2428, concerning the procedure followed by the Department in setting the terms of certain enrichment services contracts.

"'SEC. 1405. Liabilities.—

"'Except as provided elsewhere in this title, all liabilities attributable to operation of the uranium enrichment enterprise prior to the date of the enactment of this title shall remain direct liabilities of the Government of the United States.

"'CHAPTER 25. ORGANIZATION, FINANCE AND MANAGEMENT

"'SEC. 1501. ADMINISTRATOR.—

"'a. The management of the Corporation shall be vested in an Administrator who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, without regard to political affiliation. The Administrator shall be a person who, by reason of professional background and experience is specially qualified to manage the Corporation; Provided, however, That upon enactment of this title, the President shall appoint an existing officer or employee of the United States to act as Administrator until the office is filled.

"'b. The Administrator—

"'(1) shall be the chief executive officer of the Corporation and shall be responsible for the management and direction of the Corporation. The Administrator shall establish the offices, appoint the officers and employees of the Corporation (including attorneys), and define their responsibilities and duties. The Administrator shall appoint other officers and employees as may be required to conduct the Corporation's business.

"'(2) shall serve a term of six years but may be reappointed;

"'(3) shall, before taking office, take an oath to faithfully discharge the duties thereof;

"'(4) shall have compensation determined by the President except that compensation shall not exceed Executive Level I, as prescribed in 5 U.S.C. 5312;

"'(5) shall be a citizen of the United States;

"'(6) shall designate an officer of the Corporation who shall be vested with the authority to act in the capacity of the Administrator in the event of absence or incapacity; and

"'(7) may be removed from office only by the President and only for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. The President shall communicate the reasons for any such removal to both Houses of Congress at least 30 days prior to the effective date of such removal.

"'c. The Administrator shall be solely responsible for the exercise of all powers and responsibilities that are committed to the Administrator under this title and, notwithstanding the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 9104(a)(4), including the setting of the appropriate amount of, and paying, any dividend under section 1506(c) and all other fiscal matters.

"'SEC. 1502. DELEGATION.—

"'The Administrator may delegate to other officers or employees powers and duties assigned to the Corporation in order to achieve the purpose of this title.

"'SEC. 1503. ADVISORY BOARD.—

" 'There is hereby established an Advisory Board appointed by the President which shall consist of five members, one of whom shall be designated as chairman. Members of the Advisory Board shall be individuals possessing high integrity, demonstrated accomplishment and broad experience in management and shall have strong backgrounds in science, engineering, business or finance. At least one member of the Advisory Board shall be, or previously have been, employed on a full-time basis in managing an electric utility:

" 'a. The specific responsibilities of the Advisory Board shall be to:

" '(1) review the Corporation's policies and performance and advise the Administrator on these matters; and

" '(2) advise the Administrator on any other such matters concerning the Corporation as may be referred to the Advisory Board.

" 'b. Except for initial appointments, members of the Advisory Board shall serve five-year terms. Each member of the Advisory Board shall be a citizen of the United States. No more than three members of the Board shall be members of any one political party. Of those first appointed, the chairman shall serve for the full five-year term; one member shall serve for a term of four years; one shall serve for a term of three years; one shall serve for a term of two years; and one shall serve for a term of one year.

" 'c. Upon expiration of the initial term, each Advisory Board member appointed thereafter shall serve a term of five years. Upon the occurrence of a vacancy on the Board, the President shall appoint an individual to fill such vacancy for the remainder of the applicable term. Upon expiration of a term, a Board member may continue to serve up to a maximum of one year or until a successor shall have been appointed and assumed office, whichever occurs first.

" 'd. The members of the Advisory Board in executing their duties shall be governed by the laws and regulations regarding conflicts of interest, but exempted from other provisions and authority prescribed by the Federal Advisory Committee Act, as amended (5 U.S.C. Appendix 2).

" 'e. The Advisory Board shall meet at any time pursuant to the call of the Chairman and as provided by the bylaws of the Corporation, but not less than quarterly.

" 'f. The Corporation shall compensate members of the Advisory Board at a per diem rate equivalent to Executive Level III, as defined in 5 U.S.C. 5314, in addition to reimbursement of reasonable expenses incurred when engaged in the performance of duties vested in the Advisory Board. Any advisory Board member who is otherwise a Federal employee shall not be eligible for compensation above reimbursement for reasonable expenses incurred while attending official meetings of the Corporation.

" 'g. (1) The Advisory Board shall report at least annually to the Administrator on the performance of the corporation and the issues that, in the opinion of the board, require the attention of the Administrator. Any such report shall include such recommendations as the Board finds appropriate. A copy of any report under this subsection shall be transmitted promptly to the President, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

" '(2) Within 90 days after the receipt of any report under this subsection the Administrator shall respond in writing of such report and provide an analysis of such recommendations of the board contained in the report. Such response shall include plans for implementation of each recommendation or a statement of the reasons why that recommendation will not be implemented.

" 'SEC. 1504. EMPLOYEES OF THE CORPORATION.—

" 'Officers and employees of the Corporation shall be officers and employees of the United States:

" 'a. The Administrator shall appoint all officers, employees and agents of the Corporation as are deemed necessary to effect the provisions of this title without regard to any administratively imposed limits on personnel, and any such officer, employee or agent shall only be subject to the supervision of the Administrator. The Administrator shall fix all compensation in accordance with the comparable pay provisions of 5 U.S.C. 5301, with compensation levels not to exceed Executive Level II, as defined in 5 U.S.C. 5315. The Administrator shall define the duties of all officers and employees and provide a system of organization inclusive of a personnel management system to fix responsibilities and promote efficiency. The Corporation shall assure that the personnel function and organization is consistent with the principles of 5 U.S.C. 2301(b) relating to merit system principles. Officers and employees of the Corporation shall be appointed, promoted and assigned on the basis of merit and fitness, and other personnel actions shall be consistent with the principals of fairness and due process but without regard to those provisions of title 5 of the United States Code governing appointments and other personnel act is in the competitive service.

" 'b. Any Federal employee hired before January 1, 1984, who transfers to the Corporation and who on the day before the date of transfer is subject to the Federal Civil Service Retirement System (subchapter III of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code) shall remain within the coverage of such system unless he or she elects to be subject to the Federal Employees' Retirement System. For those employees remaining in the Federal Civil Service Retirement System, the Corporation shall withhold pay and shall pay into the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund the amounts specified in chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code. Employment by the Corporation without a break in continuity of service shall be considered to be employment by the United States Government for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code. Any employee of the Corporation who is not within the coverage of the Federal Civil Service Retirement System shall be subject to the Federal Employees' Retirement System (chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code). The Corporation shall withhold pay and make such payments as are required under that retirement system. Further:

" '(1) Any employee who transfers to the Corporation under this section shall not be entitled to lump sum payments for unused annual leave under 5 U.S.C. 5551, but shall be credited by the Corporation with the unused annual leave at the time of transfer.

" '(2) An employee who does not transfer to the Corporation and who does not otherwise remain a Federal employee shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits available under Federal law for separated employees, except that severance pay shall not be payable to an employee who does not accept an offer of employment from the Corporation of work substantially similar to that performed by the employee for the Department.

" 'c. This section does not affect a right or remedy of an officer, employee, or applicant for employment under a law prohibiting discrimination in employment in the Government on the basis of race, color, religion, age, sex, national origin, political affiliation, marital status, or handicap conditions.

" 'd. Officers and employees of the Corporation shall be covered by chapter 73 of title 5 United States Code, relating to suitability, security and conduct.

" 'e. Compensation, benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment in effect immediately prior to the effective date of this section, whether provided by statute or by rules and regulations of the Department or the executive branch of the Government of the United States shall continue to apply to officers and employees who transfer to the Corporation from other Federal employment until changed by the Corporation or Congress in accordance with the provisions of this title.

" 'f. The provisions of section 3323(a) and 8344 of title 5, United States Code, or any other law prohibiting or limiting the reemployment of retired officers or employees or the simultaneous receipt of compensation and retired pay or annuities, shall not apply to officers and employees of the Corporation who have retired from or ceased previous government service prior to April 28, 1987.

" 'SEC. 1505. TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO THE CORPORATION.—

" 'In order to enable the Corporation to exercise the powers and duties vested in it by this title:

" 'a. The Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator, is authorized and directed to transfer without charge to the Corporation all of the Department's right, title, or interest in and to, real or personal properties owned by the Department, or by the United States but under control or custody of the Department, which are related to and materially useful in the performance of the functions transferred by this title, including but not limited to the following:

" '(1) production facilities for uranium enrichment inclusive of real estate, buildings and other improvements at production sites and their related and supporting equipment; Provided, That facilities, real estate, improvements and equipment related to the Oak Ridge K-25 plant in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, and to the gas centrifuge enrichment program located shall not transfer under this subsection. This paragraph shall not prejudice consideration of any site as a candidate site for future expansion or replacement of uranium enrichment capacity.

" '(2) facilities, equipment, and materials for research and development activities related to the isotopic separation of uranium by the gaseous diffusion technology.

" '(3) The Department's stocks of preproduced enriched uranium.

" '(4) the portion of the Department's stocks of feed materials needed for a minimum working inventory of 18,000 metric tons of uranium (MTU).

" '(A) The Department's stockpile of enrichment tails, as of the date of enactment, shall remain with the Department.

" '(B) Stocks of feed materials which remain the property of the Department under paragraph (4) shall remain in place at the enrichment plant sites. The Corporation shall have access to and use of these feed materials provided such quantities as are used are replaced, or credit given, if use by the Department is subsequently needed.

"'(5) all other facilities, equipment, materials, processes, patents, technical information of any kind, contracts, agreements, and leases to the extent these items concern the Corporation's functions and activities, except those iterms required for programs and activities of the Department and those items specifically excluded by this subsection.

"'b. The Secretary is authorized and directed to grant to the Corporation without charge the Department's rights and access to the Atomic Vapor Laser Isotope Separation, hereinafter referred to as 'AVLIS', technology and to provide on a reimbursable basis and at the request of the Corporation, the necessary cooperation and support of the Department to assure the commercial development and deployment of AVLIS or other technologies in a manner consistent with the intent of this title.

"'c. The Secetary is authorized and directed to grant the Corporation without charge, to the extent necessary or appropriate for the conduct of the Corporation's activities, licenses to practice or have practiced any inventions or discoveries (whether patented or unpatented) together with the right to use or have used any processes and technical information owned or controlled by the Department.

"'d. The Secretary is directed, without need of further appropriation, to transfer to the Corporation the unexpended balance of appropriations and other monies available to the Department (inclusive of funds set aside for accounts payable), and accounts receivable which are related to functions and activities acquired by the Corporation from the Department pursuant to this title, including all advance payments.

"'e. The President is authorized to provide for the transfer to the Corporation of the use, possession, and control of such other real and personal property of the United States which is reasonably related to the functions performed by the Corporation. Such transfers may be made by the President without charge as he may from time to time deem necessary and proper for achieving the purposes of this title.

"'SEC. 1506. CAPITAL STRUCTURE OF THE CORPORATION.—

"'a. Upon commencement of operations of the Corporation, all liabilities then chargeable to unexpended balances of appropriations transferred under section 1505 shall become liabilities of the Corporation.

"'b. (1) The Corporation shall issue capital stock representing an equity investment equal to the book value of assets transferred to the Corporation, as reported in the Uranium Enrichment Annual Report for fiscal year 1987, modified to reflect continued depreciation and other usual changes that occur up to the date of transfer. The Secretary of the Treasury shall hold such stock for the United States; Provided, That all rights and duties pertaining to management of the Corporation shall remain vested in the Administrator as specified in section 1501.

"'(2) The capital stock of the Corporation shall not be sold, transferred, or conveyed by the United States unless such disposition is specifically authorized by Federal law enacted after enactment of this title.

"'c. The Corporation shall pay into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury of the United States or such other fund as provided by law, dividends on the capital stock, out of earnings of the Corporation, as a return on the investment represented by such stock. The Corporation shall pay such dividends out of earnings, unless there is an overriding need to retain these funds in furtherance of other corporate functions including but not limited to research and development, capital investments and establishment of cash reserves.

"'d. The Corporation shall repay within a 20-year period the amount of $364,000,000 into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury of the United States, or such other fund as provided by law with interest on the unpaid balance from the date of enactment of this title at a rate equal to the average yield on 20-year Government obligations as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury on the date of enactment of this title. The money required to be repaid under this subsection is hereinafter referred to as the 'Initial Debt'.

"'e. Receipt by the United States of the stock issued by the Corporation (including all rights appurtenant thereto) together with repayment of the Initial Debt shall constitute the sole recovery by the United States of previously unrecovered costs that have been incurred by the United States for uranium enrichment activities prior to enactment of this title.

"'SEC. 1507. BORROWING.—

"'a. (1) The Corporation is authorized to issue and sell bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness (hereinafter collectively referred to as 'bonds') in an amount not exceeding $2,500,000,000 outstanding at any one time to assist in financing its activities and to refund such bonds. The principal of and interest on said bonds shall be payable from revenues of the Corporation.

"'(2) Nothwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation may pledge and use its revenues for payment of the principal of the interest on said bonds, for purchase or redemption thereof, and for other purposes incidental thereto, including creation of reserve funds and other funds which may be similarly pledged and used, to such extent and in such manner as it may deem necessary or desirable.

"'(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation is authorized to enter into binding covenants with the holders of said bonds—and with the trustee, if any—under any indenture, resolution, or other agreement entered into in connection with the issuance thereof with respect to the establishment of reserve funds and other funds, stipulations concerning the subsequent issuance of bonds, and such other matters, not inconsistent with this title, as the Corporation may deem necessary or desirable to enhance the marketability of said bonds.

"'(4) Bonds issued by the Corporation hereunder shall not be obligations of, nor shall payments of the principal thereof or interest thereon be guaranteed by, the United States.

"'b. Bonds issued by the Corporation under this section shall be negotiable instruments unless otherwise specified therein, shall be in such forms and denominations, shall be sold at such times and in such amounts, shall mature at such time or times not more than thirty years from their respective dates, shall be sold at such prices, shall be such rates of interest, may be redeemable before maturity at the option of the Corporation in such manner and at such times and redemption premiums, may be entitled to such priorities of claim on the Corporation's revenues with respect to principal and interest payments, and shall be subject to such other terms and conditions, as the Corporation may determine; Provided, that at least fifteen days before selling each issue of bonds hereunder (exclusive of any commitment shorter than one year) the Corporation shall advise the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount, proposed date of sale, maturities, terms and conditions and expected rates of interest of the proposed issue in the fullest detail possible. The Corporation shall not be subject to the provisions of section 9108 of title 31, United States Code. The Corporation shall be deemed part of an executive department or an independent establishment of the United States for purposes of the provisions of 15 U.S.C. 78c(c).

"'c. Bonds issued by the Corporation hereunder shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of any officer or agency of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer or agency having authority over or control of any such fiduciary, trust, or public funds, may at any time sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by them under this section; Provided, that the Corporation shall not issue or sell any bonds to the Federal Financing Bank.

"'SEC. 1508. PRICING.—

"'a. To the extent permitted by prevailing business conditions, the Corporation shall establish prices and charges for its products, materials and services that in the opinion of the Corporation will over the long term: (1) recover the costs of performing and maintaining corporate functions, including but not limited to research and development, depreciation of assets, decontamination and decommissioning, and repayment of the Initial Debt and other obligations of the Corporation; and (2) generate profits consistent with the maintenance of the Corporation as a continuing, commercial enterprise and other purposes of this title; Provided, That the Corporation in setting prices and charges for products, materials and services provided to the Department shall recover on a yearly basis its costs of providing such products, materials or services, without regard to prevailing business conditions and without generation of profit. Prices and other contractual terms for the provision of products, materials, or services by the Corporation shall be established without regard to the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act, as amended.

"'b. (1) In accordance with the cost responsibilities defined in paragraphs (3) and (4), the Corporation shall recover from its current customers in the prices and charges established in accordance with subsection (a), amounts that will be sufficient to pay for the costs of decommissioning and decontamination of the various property of the Corporation, including property transferred under section 1505(a). Such costs shall be based on the point in time that such decommissioning and decontamination is to be undertaken and accomplished.

"'(2) In order to meet the objective defined in paragraph (1), the Corporation shall periodically estimate the anticipated or actual costs of decommissioning and decontamination. Such estimates shall reflect any changes in assumptions or expectations relevant to meeting such objective, including, but not limited to, any changes in applicable environmental requirements. Such estimates shall be reviewed at least every two years.

"'(3) With respect to property that has been used in the production of low-assay separative work,

"'(A) The cost of decommissioning and decontamination that shall be recoverable from commercial customers in prices and charges shall be in the same ratio to the total costs of decommissioning and decontaminating the property in question as the production of separative work over the life of such property for commercial customers bears to the total production of separative work over the life of such property.

"'(B) All other costs of decommissioning and decontaminating such property shall be recovered in prices and charges to the Department.

"'(4) With respect to property that has been used solely in the production of high-assay separative work, all costs of decommissioning and decontaminating of such property shall be recovered in prices and charges to the Department.

"'SEC. 1509. AUDITS.—In fiscal years during which an audit is not performed by the Comptroller General in accordance with the provisions of 31 U.S.C. 9105, the financial transactions of the Corporation shall be audited by an independent firm or firms of nationally recognized certified public accountants who shall prepare such audits using standards appropriate for commercial corporate transactions. The fiscal year of the Corporation shall conform to the fiscal year of the United States. The General Accounting Office shall review such audits annually, and to the extent necessary, cause there to be a further examination of the Corporation using standards for commercial corporate transactions. Such audits shall be conducted at the place or places where the accounts of the Corporation are established and maintained. All books, financial records, reports, files, papers, memoranda, and other property of, or in use by, the Corporation shall be made available to the person or persons authorized to conduct audits in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"'SEC. 1510. REPORTS.—

"'a. The Corporation shall prepare an annual report of its activities. This report shall contain:

"'(1) A general description of the Corporation's operations;

"'(2) A summary of the Corporation's operating and financial performance, including an explanation of the decision to pay or not pay dividends; and

"'(3) Copies of audit reports prepared in conformance with section 1509 of this title and the provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended.

"'(b) A copy of the annual report shall be provided to the President, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, and the appropriate committees of the House of Representatives. Such reports shall be completed not later than 90 days following the close of each fiscal year and shall accurately reflect the financial position of the Corporation at fiscal year end, inclusive of any impairment of capital or ability of the Corporation to comply with the provisions of this title.

"'SEC. 1511. CONTROL OF INFORMATION.—

"'a. The term "Commission" shall be deemed to include the Corporation wherever such term appears in section 141 and subsections a. and b. of section 142 of title I.

"'b. No contracts or arrangements shall be made, nor any contract continued in effect, under Section 1401, 1402, 1403, or 1404, unless the person with whom such contract or arrangement is made, or the contractor or prospective contractor, agrees in writing not to permit any individual to have access to Restricted Data, as defined in section 11 y. of title I, until the Office of Personnel Management shall have made an investigation and report to the Corporation on the character, associations, and loyalty of such individual, and the Corporation shall have determined that permitting such person to have access to Restricted Data will not endanger the common defense and security.

"'c. The restrictions detailed in subsections b., c., d., e., f., g., and h., of section 145 of title I shall be deemed to apply to the Corporation where they refer to the Commission or a majority of the members of the Commission, and to the Administrator where they refer to the General Manager.

"'d. The Administrator shall keep the appropriate congressional committees fully and currently informed with respect to all of the Corporation's activities. To the extent consistent with the other provisions of this section, the Corporation shall make available to any of such committees all books, financial records, reports, files, papers, memoranda, or other information possessed by the Corporation upon receiving a request for such information from the chairman of such committee.

"'e. Whenever the Corporation submits to the President, or the Office of Management and Budget, any budget, legislative recommendation, testimony, or comments on legislation, prepared for submission to the Congress, the Corporation shall concurrently transmit a copy thereof to the appropriate committees of Congress.

"'f. The Corporation shall have no power to control or restrict the dissemination of information other than as granted by this or any other law.

"'SEC. 1512. PATENTS AND INVENTIONS.—

"'a. The term "Commission" shall be deemed to include the Corporation wherever such term appears in section 152, 153 b. (1), and 158 of title I. The Corporation shall pay such royalty fees for patents licensed to it under section 153 b. (1) of title I as are paid by the Department under that provision. Nothing in title I or this title shall affect the right of the Corporation to require that patents granted on inventions, that have been conceived or first reduced to practice during the ccurse of research or operations of, or financed by the Corporation, be assigned to the Corporation.

"'b. The Department shall notify the Corporation of all reports heretofore or hereafter filed with it under subsection 151 c. of title I and all applications for patents heretofore or hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Patents of which the Department has notice under subsection 151 d. of title I or otherwise, whenever such reports or applications involve matters pertaining to the functions or responsibilities of the Corporation in accordance with this title. The Department shall make all such reports available to the Corporation, and the Commissioner of Patents shall provide the Corporation access to all such applications. All reports and applications to which access is so provided shall be kept in confidence by the Corporation, and no information concerning the same given without authority of the inventor or owner unless necessary to carry out the provisions of any Act of Congress.

"'c. The Corporation, without regard for any of the conditions specified in paragraph 153 c. (1), (2), (3), or (4) of title I, may at any time make application to the Department for a patent license for the use of an invention or discovery useful in the production or utilization of special nuclear material or atomic energy covered by a patent when such patent has not been declared to be affected with the public interest under subsection 153b. (1) of title I and when use of such patent is within the Corporation's authority. Any such application shall constitute an application under subsection 153 c. of title I subject, except as specified above, to all the provisions of subsections 153 c., d., e., f., g., and h., of title I.

"'d. With respect to the Corporation's functions under this title, section 158 of title I shall be deemed to include the Corporation within the phrase, "any other licensee" in the first sentence thereof and within the phrase "such licensee" in the second sentence thereof.

"'e. The Corporation shall not be liable directly or indirectly for any damages or financial responsibility with respect to secrecy orders imposed under 35 U.S.C. 181 through 187.

"'f. The Corporation shall not be liable or responsible for any payments or awards under subsection 157 b. (3) of title I, or any settlements or judgments involving claims for alleged patent infringement except to the extent that any such awards, settlements or judgments are attributable to activities of the Corporation after the effective date of this title.

"'g. The Corporation shall keep currently informed as to matters affecting its rights and responsibilities under chapter 13 of title I as modified by this section and shall take all appropriate action to avail itself of such rights and satisfy such responsibilities. The Department in discharging its responsibilities under chapter 13 of title I shall exercise diligence in informing the Corporation of matters affecting the responsibilities and jurisdiction of the Corporation and seeking and following as appropriate the advice and recommendation of the Corporation in such matters.

"'CHAPTER 26. LICENSING, TAXATION, AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"'SEC. 1601. LICENSING.—

"'a. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, with respect solely to facilities, equipment and materials for activities related to the isotopic separation of uranium by the gaseous diffusion technology at facilities in existence as of the date of enactment of this title, the Corporation and its contractors are hereby exempted from the licensing requirements and prohibitions of section 57, 62, 81 and other provisions of title I, to the same extent as the Department and its contractors are exempt in regard to the Department's own functions and activities. Such exemption shall remain in effect unless and until the Corporation and its contractors receive all necessary licenses for such facilities, equipment and materials as are required under title I.

"'b. Within four years of the enactment of this title, the Commission shall promulgate regulations under title I for the licensing of facilities described in subsection (a) that employ the gaseous diffusion technology. The Commission shall not consider the need for such facilities, alternatives to such facilities, or the costs compared to the benefits of such facilities.

"'c. As soon as practicable after the promulgation of regulations under subsection (b), the Corporation and its contractors shall make necessary applications for and otherwise seek to obtain such licenses as will remove the exemption provided under subsection (a).

"'d. The Corporation shall not transfer or deliver any source, special nuclear or by-product materials or production or utilization facilities, as defined in Title I, to any person who is not properly qualified or licensed under the provisions of Title I.

"'e. The Corporation shall be subject to the regulatory jurisdiction of the Committee and the Department of Transportation with respect to the packaging and transportation of source, special nuclear and by-product materials.

"'SEC. 1602. EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION AND PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES.—

"'a. In order to render financial assistance to those states and localities in which the facilities of the Corporation are located, the Corporation is authorized and directed to make payments to state and local governments as provided in this section. Such payments shall be in lieu of any and all state and local taxes on the real and personal property, activities and income of the Corporation. All property of the Corporation, its activities, and income are expressly exempted from taxation in any manner or form by any state, county, or other local government entity. The activities of the Corporation for this purpose shall include the activities of organizations pursuant to cost-type contracts with the corporation to manage, operate and maintain its facilities. The income of the Corporation shall include income received by such organizations for the account of the Corporation. The income of the Corporation shall not include income received by such organizations for their own acounts, and such income shall not be exempt from taxation.

"'b. The Corporation shall make annual payments, in amounts determined by the Corporation to be fair and reasonable, to the state and local governmental agencies having tax jurisdiction in any area where facilities of the Corporation are located. In making such determinations, the Corporation shall be guided by the following criteria.

"'(1) Amounts paid shall not exceed the tax payments that would be made by a private industrial corporation owning similar facilities and engaged in similar activities at the same location; Provided, however, That there shall be excluded any amount that would be payable as a tax on net income.

"'(2) the Corporation shall take into account the customs and practices prevailing in the area with respect to appraisal, assessment, and classification of industrial property and any special considerations extended to large-scale industrial operations.

"'(3) No amount shall be included to the extent that any tax unfairly discriminates against the class of taxpayers of which the Corporation would be a member if it were a private industrial corporation, compared with other taxpayers or classes of taxpayers.

"'(4) In no event shall the payment made to any taxing authority for any period be less than the payments which would have been made to such taxing authority for the same period by the Department and its cost-type contractors on behalf of the Department with respect to property that has been transferred to the Corporation under section 1505 and which would have been attributable to the ownership, management operation, and maintenance of the Department's uranium enrichment facilities, applying the laws and policies prevailing immediately to the enactment of this title.

"'c. Payments shall be made by the Corporation at the time when payments of taxes by taxpayers to each taxing authority are due and payable; Provided, That no payment shall be made to the extent that the tax would apply to a period prior to the enactment of this title.

"'d. The determination by the Corporation of the amounts due hereunder shall be final and conclusive.

"'SEC. 1603. MISCELLANEOUS APPLICABILITY OF TITLE I.—

"'a. Any references to the term "Commission" or to the Department in sections 105b., 110a., 161c., 161k., 161q., 165a., 221a., 229, 230 and 232 of title I shall be deemed to include the Corporation.

"'b. Section 188 of title I shall apply to licensed facilities of the Corporation. For purposes of applying such section to facilities of the Corporation:

"'(1) The term "Commission" shall be deemed to refer to the Secretary;

"'(2) There shall be no requirement for payment of just compensation to the Corporation, and receipts from operation of the facility in question shall continue to accure to the benefit of the Corporation; and

"'(3) The Secretary shall have the discretion to determine how and by whom the facility in question will be operated.

"'SEC. 1604. COOPERATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES.—

"'The Corporation is empowered to use with their consent the available services, equipment, personnel, and facilities of other civilian or military agencies and instrumentalities of the Federal Government, on a reimbursable basis and on a similar basis to cooperate with such other agencies and instrumentalities in the establishment and use of services, equipment, and facilities of the Corporation. Further, the Corporation may confer with and avail itself of the cooperation, services, records, and facilities of state, territorial, municipal or other local agencies.

"'SEC. 1605. APPLICABILITY OF ANTITRUST LAWS.—

"'a. The Corporation shall conduct its activities in a manner consistent with the policies expressed in the antitrust laws, except as required by the public interest.

"'b. As used in this subsection, the term "antitrust laws" means:

"'(1) The Act entitled: "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890 (15 U.S.C. 1-7), as amended;

"'(2) The Act entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (15 U.S.C. 12-27), as amended;

"'(3) Sections 72 and 74 of the Act entitled, "An Act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894 (15 U.S.C. 8 and 9), as amended; and

"'(4) The Act of June 19, 1936, chapter 592 (15 U.S.C. 13, 13a, 13b, and 21a).

"'SEC. 1606. NUCLEAR HAZARD INDEMNIFICATION.—

"'The Administrator shall have the same authority to indemnify the contractors of the Corporation as the Secretary has to indemnify contractors under section 170 d. of title I.

"'SEC. 1607. INTENT.—

"'It is hereby declared to be the intent of this title to aid the Corporation in discharging its responsibilities under this title by providing it with adequate authority and administrative flexibility to obtain necessary funds with which to assure the maximum achievement of the purposes hereof as provided herein, and this title shall be construed liberally to effectuate such intent.

"'SEC. 1608. REPORT.—

"'a. Five years after enactment of this title, the Administrator shall submit to the President and to Congress a report setting forth the views and recommendations of the Administrator regarding transfer of the functions, powers, duties, and assets of the Corporation to private ownership. If the Administrator recommends such transfers, the report shall include a plan for implementation of the transfers.

"'b. Within 180 days after receipt of the report under subsection (a), the President shall transmit to Congress his recommendations regarding the report, including a plan for implementation of any transfer recommended by the President and any recommendations for legislation necessary to effectuate such transfers.

"'CHAPTER 27. DECONTAMINATION AND DECOMMISSIONING

"'a. ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND.—

"'(1) There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States an account of the Corporation to be known as the Uranium Enrichment Decontamination and Decommissioning Fund (hereinafter referred to in this chapter as the "Fund"). In accordance with section 1402(j), such account and any funds deposited therein, shall be available to the Corporation for the exclusive purpose of carrying out the purposes of this chapter.

"'(2) The Fund shall consist of:

"'(A) Amounts paid into it by the Corporation in accordance with section 1702; and

"'(B) Any interest earned under subsection (b)(2).

"'b. ADMINISTRATION OF FUND.—

"'(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall hold the Fund and, after consultation with the Corporation, annually report to the Congress on the financial condition and operations of the Fund during the preceding fiscal year.

"'(2) At the direction of the Corporation, the Secretary of the Treasury shall invest amounts contained within such Fund in obligations of the United States:

"'(A) Having maturities determined by the Secretary of the Treasury to be appropriate to the needs of the Fund, as determined by the Corporation; and

"'(B) Bearing interest at rates determined to be appropriate by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to such obligations.

"'(3) At the request of the Corporation, the Secretary of the Treasury shall sell such obligations and credit the proceeds to the Fund.

"'SEC. 1702. DEPOSITS.—Within 60 days of the end of each fiscal year, the Corporation shall make a payment into the Fund in an amount equal to the costs of decontamination and decommissioning that have been recovered during such fiscal year by the Corporation in its prices and charges established in accordance with section 1508 for products, materials, and services.

"'SEC. 1703. PERFORMANCE AND DISBURSEMENTS.—

"'a. When the Corporation determines that particular property should be decommissioned or decontaminated, or both, it shall enter into a contract for the performance of such decommissioning and decontamination.

"'b. The Corporation shall pay for the costs of such decommissioning and decontamination out of amounts contained within the Fund.'.

"SEC. 113. TREATMENT OF THE CORPORATION AS BEING PRIVATELY-OWNED FOR PURPOSES OF THE APPLICABILITY OF ENVIRONMENTAL AND OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY LAWS.—The United States Enrichment Corporation shall be subject to Federal environmental laws and the Occupational Safety and Health Act (29 U.S.C. 651-678) to the same extent as is the Department of Energy as of the date of enactment. After four years from the date of enactment of this title, the United States Enrichment Corporation shall become subject to such laws to the same extent as a privately-owned corporation, unless the President determines that additional time is necessary to achieve the purposes of title II of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended.

"SEC. 114. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.—(a) Section 9101(3) of title 31, United States Code (relating to the definition of 'wholly-owned Government corporation') is amended by adding at the end of the following: '(N) United States Enrichment Corporation.'.

"(b) In subsection 41 a. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, the word 'or' appearing before the numeral '(2)' is deleted, a semicolon is substituted for a period at the end of the subsection and the following new paragraph is added: 'or (3) are owned by the United States Enrichment Corporation.'.

"(c) In subsection 53 c. (1) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, the word 'or' is inserted before the word 'grant' and the phrase 'or through the provision of production or enrichment services' is deleted in both places where it appears in such subsection.

"(d) The Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, is further amended:

"(1) By adding before the period at the end of the definition of the term 'production facility' in section 11 v. a colon and the following: 'Provided, however, that as the term is used in Chapters 10 and 16 of this Act, other than with respect to export of a uranium enrichment production facility, it shall not include any equipment or device, or important component part especially designed therefor, capable of separating the isotopes of uranium or enriching uranium in the isotope 235';

"(2) By striking the period at the end of section 161 b. and adding the following: '; in addition, the Commission shall prescribe such regulations or orders as may be necessary or desirable to promote the Nation's common defense and security with regard to control, ownership or possession of any equipment or device, or important component part especially designed therefor, capable of separating the isotopes of uranium or enriching uranium in the isotope 235;';

"(3) By striking the phrase 'section 103 or 104' in section 41 a. (2) and inserting in lieu thereof 'this title'; and

"(4) In section 236 by striking the word 'or' following paragraph (2) and adding after paragraph (3) 'or (4) any uranium enrichment facility licensed by the Commission;'.

"(e) Subsection 905(g)(1) of Title II, United States Code, is amended to include 'United States Enrichment Corporation' at the end thereof.

"(f) Section 306 of title III of the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act, 1988, P.L. 100-202, is repealed.

"SEC. 115. LIMITATION ON EXPENDITURES.—For fiscal year 1990, total expenditures of the United States Enrichment Corporation shall not exceed total receipts.

"SEC. 116. SEVERABILITY.—If any provision of this act, or the application of any provision to any entity, person or circumstance, shall for any reason be adjudged by a court of component jurisdiction to be invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of the same shall not be thereby affected.

"SEC. 117. EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as otherwise provided, all provisions of this act shall take effect on the day following the end of the first full fiscal year quarter following the enactment of this act; Provided, however, That the Administrator or Acting Administrator of the United States Enrichment Corporation may immediately exercise the management responsibilities and powers of subsection 1501(a) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended by this Act and previous Acts.".

● Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am submitting an amendment to S. 83, legislation I introduced in January to establish the level of unrecovered costs of the Uranium Enrichment Program. This amendment is not a new piece of legislation: It is similar to a bill that was passed by the Senate twice during the last Congress, which was supported by the administration, and by the electric utility industry.

The Department of Energy [DOE] uranium enrichment enterprise is in need of immediate attention by this Congress. The enrichment enterprise faces stiff competition from foreign, Government-backed consortia. Some of our competitors have equity partners—captive customers—who pay for the facilities and allow them to sell their excess capacity in the open market at very low prices. Others have a technology which takes 2 years to build, but they contract for their sales 10 years in advance. Through this system, they do not need the excess capacity today in order to be able to steal our business tomorrow. In addition, the Soviet Union is selling both uranium and uranium-enrichment services directly and indirectly into the United States.

Today's competition is fierce, and DOE's efforts to meet this competition are hampered by an unwieldy and inflexible bureaucratic agency structure. DOE is also constrained by a statutory pricing provision that requires them to price enrichment services 30 to 40 percent above the world market price. It is not surprising that DOE's share of the world enrichment market has fallen from 100 percent to approximately 50 percent.

DOE's customers clearly have someplace else to go. We must provide the enrichment enterprise with the tools necessary to compete in the world market: a mission to act like a competitive business, and the structure and flexibility to accomplish this mission. Unless we act, and act soon, more customers are likely to choose other suppliers, including the Soviet Union, over DOE. Restructuring the enterprise and providing it with a clear mandate to compete are imperative.

The amendment I introduce today establishes the United States Enrichment Corporation [USEC] as a Government corporation under the Government Corporation Control Act, and directs the uranium-enrichment enterprise to operate as a "continuing, commercial enterprise on a profitable and efficient basis." The Corporation would be responsible for all aspects of the policy making and the operation of the enterprise, including research and development. The USEC is directed to establish a fund to cover the commercial share of liabilities related to the eventual decontamination and decommissioning of the enrichment plants. In addition, this bill requires the USEC to pay the U.S. Treasury $364 million as the sole recovery from customers of any previously unrecovered costs of the Enrichment Program.

Some have referred to this $364 million payment to the Treasury as a bailout. This is hardly the case. The $364 million is not an arbitrary declaration of program debt; it represents the total cash cost of outlays from the U.S. Treasury to the Enrichment Program since the establishment of the program in 1969 through fiscal year 1986.

The idea that this so-called debt may be $3 billion, or as high as $9 or $13 billion is nonsense. The "unrecovered costs" merely constitute the present basis for the pricing of enrichment services. They do not constitute an actual debt to be recovered from enrichment customers under present law. The Enrichment Program has never taken a loan which needs to be repaid. Neither the accounts of the Federal budget, nor those of the U.S. Treasury carry any "debt" for the Uranium Enrichment Program.

In addition, the amount of unrecovered Government investment in the Enrichment Program, represented by the book value of existing productive assets, is not being lost. Rather this value for unrecovered investment will be carried forward on the books of the new Corporation. As the book value is depreciated, there will be a return of the investment. Also, to the extent that the Corporation is able to return dividends to the Treasury, as directed in the legislation, the Treasury will receive a return on these assets.

Clearly, a corporation that provides profit to the taxpayers of this country is far from a bailout.

Any higher estimate of debt than $364 million, jeopardizes DOE's ability to compete in the world market. If the enterprise is not competitive, our customers will leave us. If our customers, who represent the future earning power of the enterprise, leave, the value of the enterprise to its owners—the taxpayers—is severely diminished. The Congress cannot support any legislation which sets the debt of the Enrichment Program at any level greater than the $364 million, and thereby reduces the value of the taxpayer investment in these assets.

Congress has consistently recognized energy and national security as strong reasons to maintain an efficient and competitive enrichment capability in the United States. These reasons are more valid today than ever. Congressional action is required to insure that the United States will remain a competitive and an efficient supplier of enrichment services. We must maximize taxpayer investment in the productive enrichment assets, and prevent the loss of a valuable national asset. We must provide the enrichment program with a business-like mission and structure to ensure that there will be any domestic enrichment capability in the future.

The Congress must act, and act soon. I ask for your support as we tackle this very important issue.●

NOTICES OF HEARING

SUBCOMMITTEE ON FEDERAL SERVICES, POST OFFICE, AND CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Subcommittee on Federal Service, Post Office, and Civil Service, of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, will hold a hearing on Tuesday, February 28, 1989. The focus of the hearing will be on S. 273, Deceptive Mailing Prevention Act of 1989, and consumer mail issues. The subcommittee will hear witnesses from the Postal Service and various profit and nonprofit mailing organizations.

The hearing is scheduled for 9:30 a.m., in room 342 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building. For further information, please call Ed Gleiman, Subcommittee Staff Director, on 224-2254.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be allowed to meet during the session of the Senate Thursday, February 23, 1989, at 10 a.m. to continue its oversight hearings on the problems of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON AFRICAN AFFAIRS

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on African Affairs of the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, February 23, 1989, at 2 p.m. to hold a hearing on war and famine in Sudan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Special Committee on Investigations of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, February 23, 1989, at 10 a.m. to hold hearings pursuant to Senate Resolution 381, section 21, agreed February 26, 1988.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet on Thursday, February 23, 1989, at 2 p.m. in executive session to discuss the Tower nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

MAUDE HOLT BEDSWORTH

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, on Sunday, February 19, 1989, Maude Holt Bedsworth celebrated her 100th birthday at Stephens College in Columbia, MO. Having graduated in 1906 with a bachelor of arts degree, Mrs. Bedsworth is the most senior alumna of Stephens College.

It is befitting that the oldest women's college west of the Mississipi and the second oldest in the United States has honored Mrs. Bedsworth with a celebration.

Now residing in Fulton, MO, Mrs. Bedsworth was born and raised just east of Columbia in Millersburg. Mrs. Bedsworth and her husband, Will, were farmers in Callaway County where they raised their two sons who carried on the family trade.

As a centenarian, Mrs. Bedsworth has seen two world wars and lived through depressions, recessions, expansion, and slumps. She has seen some 18 Presidents come and go, from Grover Cleveland to Ronald Reagan. She has seen man walk on the Moon and she has seen the civil rights of women and minorities finally being given the attention they truly deserved. But most important to Mrs. Bedsworth, she has seen the growth of her two sons, three grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. She has seen the best and the worst of the world in which we live. Through it all, Mrs. Bedsworth has endured. She now stands as an inspiration to her friends, her family, and her alma mater.

We salute Mrs. Maude Holt Bedsworth and wish her many more years of happiness and prosperity in the great State of Missouri.●

EXPRESSING OPPOSITION TO OIL IMPORT FEES—SENATE RESOLUTION 64

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague Senator PELL and others in support of this resolution to oppose the imposition of fees on oil imports. An oil import fee proposal would not only be bad policy for Rhode Island and all of New England, it would just be bad policy.

I don't think any of my colleagues in the Senate would advocate making the Federal personal income tax higher in one area of the country than any other area. Yet that is the effect an oil import fee would have on New England. Whether it is structured as a flat dollar fee on each imported barrel of oil, or a floating fee designed to keep a floor under the price of oil, it would penalize States that depend on oil for their energy needs. I am proud of Rhode Island's energy conservation efforts. But we still need oil, and that should not mean we have to bear the brunt of higher costs from these fees.

Today, an average homeowner in Rhode Island pays about $1,000 a year to heat a home with oil. A tax on such a basic commodity as oil would increase the annual bill by up to 25 percent. This prospect is especially frightening to low-income families, who must spend a high percentage of their income on energy costs. That is just not fair.

Our businesses would also suffer. Artificially high domestic energy costs from an oil import fee would erase competitive advantages gained by our companies. With foreign competition as tough as it is, do we really want to compound our trade problems with oil import fees?

Lower energy costs often mean lower inflation, an increase in per capita income, and more jobs for all Americans. I believe consumers should be able to enjoy these benefits. I strongly support this resolution and urge my colleagues in the Senate to join us in opposing the imposition of an oil import fee.●

INDIAN AFFAIRS SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, 1 year ago, the Senate authorized the formation of the Special Committee on Investigations to look into the entire scope of the relationship between the Federal Government and American Indians. Under the chairmanship of my colleague, Senator DENNIS DECONCINI, we have conducted an investigation that recently began revealing its findings in public hearings. We have heard shocking, incredible, and sometimes desperate testimony about the way the Government's business is being done on Indian reservations.

This testimony, as unpleasant as it has been, will provide the essential base of information necessary to move forward with the reforms we expect to present at the close of our hearings. The primary purpose of our hearings, and any initiatives we propose, is to assist tribal government efforts to more effectively meet the needs of the Indian people they have been elected to serve.

Senator DANIEL INOUYE, chairman of the Select Committee on Indian Affairs, best stated what the investigation seeks to accomplish when he said:

I think that we would all agree that those who are charged with the responsibility of administering Indian programs and services, be they federal instrumentalities, state agencies, or tribal governments, must be accountable—first, to those for whom a trust responsibility has been established—the Indian people—as well as accountable to the Congress and the American people. This accountability must be achieved, and I believe, can best be realized, by Indian people working with the Congress and with federal agencies to identify the need for change, and to initiate reform where it may be necessary.

The first round of hearings, set to conclude on February 27, has explored problems in the Government's trust responsibility to Indians, minority preference contracts and set-asides for Indian contractors, corruption among elected tribal officials, infiltration of Indian gaming by organized crime, and child abuse on reservations. Further hearings will be held in the spring, when we will look into problems concerning natural resources on Indian lands, health programs, housing, and education. At that time, we will add to the growing record on these issues.

In the meantime, the investigation will continue with an emphasis on understanding the institutional problems that can, and must, be addressed to solve the century-old pattern of despair and misery on the reservation. In the first hearing of the special committee, I recounted the many shifting and failed Government attempts to address the problems faced by Indians, dating back to the First Congress in 1789. With the broad mandate given to the Special Committee by the Senate, however, we intend to provide recommendations that succeed in bringing about the change necessary to give Indians the kind of assistance that will allow them to shape and improve their own future.

Natural resource issues have received the greatest portion of the committee's staff time and effort. The complexity of this particular area, however, has required more time to investigate than have some of the issues already considered in public hearings.

In each area of the investigation, our purpose is the same: To find the obstacles that are depriving Indian people of the services they need. We must know the obstacles before laws, regulations, and programs can be changed to stop the waste, fraud and abuse that have deprived the Indian people, and the taxpayer, of the services they expect and deserve.

Although corruption among elected tribal officials was included in the original scope of our investigation, and our first round of hearings have covered that topic, tribal officials are not the primary focus of our investigation. Indeed it is clear that most tribal leaders are honest, and working hard to both serve and lead their people. However, in the course of our investigation of fraud in minority contracting, we repeatedly heard allegations of corruption by tribal governmental officials. Because these allegations concern duly elected public officials, we investigated them thoroughly.

Our hearings are designed to hasten progress toward the hard won status of Indian self-determination, and to strengthen tribal governments' own ability to manage their affairs. Our simple and straightforward purpose—to uncover and remove any obstacle to Indian opportunity in our society—is not a threat to Indian sovereignty. We are seeking to advance the interests of self-determination by removing those barriers that have hindered the delivery of services and support to Indians.

In fact, it might be that the best solution to some of these problems would be removing at least portions of the Federal Government bureaucracy and turning more authority over to the tribes. Such an alternative would, however, require broad congressional support. To gain such support, it may be necessary to expand statutes covering the use of Federal funds, in a manner similar to the oversight assistance now provided to State and local governments using Federal funds. We most especially do not seek, in the course of our investigation, to involve ourselves in local disputes. Such interference has been a part of the Government's relationship with Indian tribes for too long, and recent gains in self-determination must not be beaten back under the smokescreen of reform.

What has been evident, thus far in our hearings, is a general lack of understanding about the nature of tribal governments. Tribal officials are not the traditional tribal elders of the past, but preside over tribal governments which are sovereign bodies. These leaders are duly elected public officials; their budgets are supported not only by their own revenues, but also by Federal revenues. They must be accountable for their conduct in the use and management of these funds.

A lack of appreciation, among the general public and with some leaders in Washington, for the role of Indian leaders as duly elected public officials has contributed to many of the problems we have explored to date. This lack of understanding has been a two-edged sword for Indian leaders, with both edges cutting away at the effectiveness and the expectations of tribal governments.

Basically, there has been limited appreciation for the responsibility tribal officials assume as elected representatives of their people. Our hearings have vividly shown that tribal officials have not been guided by the legal standards applied to other elected officials at the Federal, State, and local level. However, the tribal officials often have the same involvement as other elected officials, in the distribution of Federal funds and participation in Federal programs. Whereas, State and local officials benefit from a clear and consistent set of standards that help them carry out the aims of Federal programs; Indian leaders have been forced to function under a hodgepodge of rules and regulations, under the direction of a variety of agencies. Rules and regulations which, frankly, are often changed on a whim by Washington officials. In addition, the officials making these changes often have not been sensitive, or have not sought to sensitize themselves, to the extraordinary circumstances that exist on reservations.

One example of this insensitivity can be found in the Department of Housing and Urban Development's [HUD] Indian Housing Program. Until last year, there never was an explicit statutory basis for this program. HUD administratively established the program years ago, as part of its nationwide public housing effort. For years the tribes complained that there were no statutes or public regulations to guide their efforts to implement the Indian Housing Program. Year after year, the tribes told HUD and the Congress that a public housing program designed for our Nation's cities could not be made to work effectively on the reservation. The Federal and tribal governments have now expended millions of dollars on poorly built reservation houses, many of which lack such basic amenities as water, sewer, and electrical services. This situation could have been avoided if the Congress and HUD had been more receptive to the concerns of the tribes. Housing will be among the issues we examine in our spring hearings to determine how situations such as this can best be avoided in the future.

In addition to the lack of standards helping to guide Indian elected officials, these representatives have been denied the respect and authority that go with their position because of the same lack of understanding. Instead of being consulted and included in the rulemaking and regulation process, as are other elected officials, Indian elected representatives often have been denied a voice in the policies affecting their lives by officials that are, in some cases, ignorant of or unwilling to acknowledge the Indian leader's status as elected representatives of their constituents.

In short, Indian leaders need the guidance and direction provided to other elected leaders, and they also need to be included in the policymaking process for those programs that directly affect their lives and the lives of Indian people.

It is plainly evident that much of the current Federal Government approach to providing essential services and assistance to Indians has failed. Each year, the Federal Government spends nearly $3 billion on Indian programs including education, housing, health, law enforcement, and more. Anyone familiar with reservations in this country, knows that often these funds are not being used effectively to meet the vital needs in Indian country. In addition, various Government agencies set aside millions of dollars in contracts for Indian preference bidding each year, significant portions of which we have found do not reach the areas and businesses for which they are intended. These deficiencies must be corrected. The Federal Government, in partnership with tribal governments, must ensure that funds intended for the benefit of Indian people do in fact reach the Indian people.

Our first week of hearings was dedicated largely to the problems in minority contracting—the contracts the Government sets aside specifically for bid by Indian contractors. In one of those hearings we heard a disturbing report about a Navajo carpenter entering into an illegitimate contract arrangement with a non-Indian contractor. That situation resulted in the non-Indian contractor performing most of the work on a number of Indian preference contracts, and then pocketing the profits from the work. The Indian received a salary for his work, but was denied the opportunity to perform the bulk of the contract, to employ people of his choosing, and to profit from the contracts received for the purpose of advancing Indian opportunity. In the end the funds made available by the Government and the taxpayer, to expand economic opportunity on the reservation through the use of Indian contractors to perform these projects, were misused and, once again, resulted in Indians not receiving the benefit of funds designated for their needs.

Individuals, organizations, corporations, and Government agencies must all be part of the effort to end the disappointment and despair that has been too great a part of Indian life for too long. The unending tragic cycle of poverty, disease, unemployment, and misfortune must be broken. Those who seek illicit gain from funds and programs intended for the benefit of Indian people should be subject to harsh penalties, whether they be a Federal Government employee, a private company official, or a tribal leader.

When the investigation began, we were directed to pursue corruption wherever it was found. We felt that to expose corruption and abuse in the Federal Government, while neglecting corruption in tribal governments, would be a betrayal of the trust placed in us by the U.S. Senate, the American people, and most of all, American Indians.

The Special Committee has been presented an historic opportunity to examine the entire scope of Indian programs and policies. When all the evidence is in, and the hearings are completed, the record will show neglect and mismanagement at every level of the relationship between the Government and the Indian people. At that time, we expect to draw up a comprehensive legislative package to address the many facets of the problem, both in and out of the Government. As we proceed with our work, we welcome the participation of all interested parties.●

IN HONOR OF SIMON WIESENTHAL'S 80TH BIRTHDAY

● Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I would like to join those throughout this Nation and the world who celebrate the 80th birthday of one of the great humanitarians of our time, Simon Wiesenthal. His is truly a story of the triumph of personal courage and faith over evil.

It is almost impossible to comprehend how a man could survive 4 years in Nazi concentration camps and the loss of 89 members of his and his wife's family. To not only survive but to turn this personal tragedy into a force against evil in today's world is truly a testament to the potential for human courage.

Today the Wiesenthal Center has gone beyond the study of the Holocaust to the active pursuit of Nazi war criminals, documentation of antisemitism, terrorism, oppression of Soviet Jewry, and genocide around the world. Now, with the new Beit Hashoah/Museum of Tolerance, the Simon Wiesenthal Center will be able to expand its education efforts.

Thirty years after Simon Wiesenthal pledged to become a "voice of the victims," the Beit Hashoah/Museum of Tolerance will break new ground in the continuing effort to learn and teach the lessons of the Holocaust. One of those lessons is that even the most civilized and educated people are capable of tremendous evil. Another is that we must continue to be vigilant against all forms of totalitarianism, whether the brushfires of resurgent Nazism on the right, or the still entrenched gulags of communism on the left.

Again, I extend my best wishes to Simon Wiesenthal on his 80th birthday, and wish him happiness and success in his future endeavors for many years to come.●

THE RETIREMENT OF WILLIAM H. FITZGERALD, JR.

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to honor an outstanding public servant, William H. Fitzgerald, Jr. "Fitz," as he is known to his friends, is the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Budget and Programs for the Department of Transportation. He will be leaving the Federal Government on February 24 after 40 years of dedicated and exemplary service.

Those of us who have had the good fortune to work with Fitz found him always ready to serve when called upon. We have all benefited by his insights, advice, and knowledge. He has performed ably in the various positions he has held in those 40 years and he has been an outstanding teacher to all those who have worked with him—a teacher not only by word, but also by deed.

Fitz began his career with the Federal Government in 1948 after receiving his bachelor of science from the U.S. Coast Guard Academy. He had a distinguished Coast Guard career for 23 years. In that time he served in various capacities as a commissioned officer including 11 years in supply or comptroller assignments and 6 years as a line officer on sea duty. From 1966 to 1971, he was chief of the Headquarters Budget Division.

After his Coast Guard service, Fitz was a a senior budget analyst in the Office of the Secretary for 3 years, overseeing Federal Aviation Administration programs. Following that, he was the Director of Planning and Budget for the Federal Railroad Administration. Subsequently, he became Director of the Office of the Secretary of Transportation in 1981. From there he rose to his present position as the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Budget and Programs, one of the highest positions a member of the Senior Executive Service can hold in the department.

Fitz embodies the best of the civil service. We will surely miss him. His knowledge, good cheer, and nonpartisan approach to solving the problems at hand has been invaluable. He has helped all of us keep the goal in mind and the budget process moving smoothly. I thank him and offer him my best wishes for a well-deserved, happy, and healthy retirement.●

NATIONAL ARBOR DAY

● Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, in 1970, 1972, and again last year, Congress legislated and the President proclaimed the last Friday in April as "National Arbor Day." I am pleased that the Senate Judiciary Committee voted today to pass legislation I introduced to proclaim the last Friday in April 1989, as "National Arbor Day." This year, 57 of my colleagues joined me in recognizing the important contribution trees make to our lives.

Trees are one of our Nation's most important natural resources. They provide the raw materials for our basic industries, stabilize our environment, and add natural grace to our surroundings. The establishment of a National Arbor Day reminds all our citizens of the vital presence of trees, whether in urban areas or in distant wilderness.

Man's impact on the environment and on the future of our planet is increasingly evident. The importance of trees as a natural resource should compel us to act promptly on the problem of forest decline. Scientists have observed declines, serious damage, and death of a number of species of trees in large areas of Europe and the United States. Damage to forests has ranged from decline in growth of several species of pine in southern New Jersey to widespread damage to the ponderosa pine in southern California.

Because we are concerned about damage to our forests and our trees and because we need to acknowledge the contribution that trees make to our health and well-being, I urge the Congress to designate April 28, 1989, as "National Arbor Day."●

EZRA E. RUSS

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I would like to bring to your attention an outstanding individual who is being honored during Black History Month for his extreme bravery in helping save the lives of four neighbors.

On December 10, 1977, a fire started in a boarding house which killed two people trapped inside. Thanks to the courage of Ezra Russ, four others were able to escape safely. As the ceiling began to crumble, Reverend Russ rescued one woman who was in a wheelchair and another who was on a walker. For his efforts, Ezra Russ was honored by the mayor of Indianapolis and the Red Cross of Indianapolis.

Reverend Russ has taught math in the Indianapolis public school system; was director of the Westside Economic and Social Service Center; has been an Atterbury Job Corps instructor and a mental health caseworker with the Center Township Trustee. He is now pastor of the Greater St. James Baptist Church of Indianapolis.

I ask you and my colleagues to join in paying tribute to an outstanding Hoosier hero.●

THE CHICAGO BUSINESS COMMUNITY AND ITS CONTRIBUTION TO THE EDUCATION SYSTEM

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to share with my colleagues a February 15, 1989, editorial in the Chicago Tribune which I find to be noteworthy. The editorial highlights some efforts made by the business community in the city of Chicago to improve the school system.

Because of these efforts, "news about city schools is much brighter" in Chicago. This is a good report and I applaud the business community and the school system.

Mr. President, I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Feb. 15, 1989]

LEADING BY EXAMPLE IN THE CLASSROOM

The trouble at the top of floundering Chicago school system may drag on for some time, as noted in the above editorial. On another front, though, the news about city schools is much brighter. The Chicago business community, which for years was content merely to complain about the poor job the schools do in educating tomorrow's employees, now is working to make the system better.

Business leaders lobbied hard for school reform in the last session of the state legislature; they may not have gotten all that they wanted, but without their pressure the reform bill surely would have been much weaker. Several major companies are financing the new Corporate/Community School in North Lawndale, hoping to create a model for top-quality education in impoverished urban areas. A number of executives are joining Leadership for Quality Education, a nonprofit group funded by Chicago United and the Commercial Club's Civic Committee to muster the resources and the know-how to improve city schools.

Stephen Wolf, the 47-year-old chairman of UAL Corp., the parent of United Airlines, quietly has taken his commitment to better schools directly into city classrooms. He regularly leaves his suburban Elk Grove office to visit elementary schools in poorer city neighborhoods, delivering a forceful and straightforward message: Hard work and education are the ticket to a good job and success.

Wolf hands each youngster a list of United's basic employee requirements, including two essentials: Graduate from high school and don't use drugs. He always takes with him a few United employees—typically, a black pilot and flight attendant—who give the kids firsthand information about their work.

If students don't see the link between the classroom and a good job, no school reform effort, no matter how well planned and executed, can succeed. With his simple message, United's Wolf is providing that link. Here's hoping he's also providing a model that other executives will replicate all over the city.●

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I hereby submit for the record, the rules of the Committee on the Judiciary as approved by the committee on February 23, 1989.

The material follows:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

I. MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. Meetings may be called by the Chairman as he may deem necessary on three days notice or in the alternative with the consent of the Ranking Minority Member or pursuant to the provision of the Standing Rules of the Senate, as amended.

2. Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or any Subcommittee shall file with the Committee, at least 48 hours in advance of the hearing, a written statement of his testimony in as many copies as the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee prescribes.

3. On the request of any member, a nomination or bill on the agenda of the Committee will be held over until the next meeting of the Committee or for one week, whichever occurs later.

II. QUORUMS

1. Eight members shall consitute a quorum of the Committee when reporting a bill or nomination; provided that proxies shall not be counted in making a quorum.

2. For the purpose of taking sworn testimony, a quorum of the Committee and each Subcommittee thereof, now or hereafter appointed, shall consist of one Senator.

III. PROXIES

When a record vote is taken in the Committee on any bill, resolution, amendment, or any other question, a quorum being present, a member who is unable to attend the meeting may submit his vote by proxy, in writing or by telephone, or through personal instructions. A proxy must be specific with respect to the matters it addresses.

IV. BRINGING A MATTER TO A VOTE

The Chairman shall entertain a non-debatable motion to bring a matter before the Committee to a vote. If there is objection to bring the matter to a vote without further debate, a rollcall vote of the Committee shall be taken, and debate shall be terminated if the motion to bring the matter to a vote without further debate passes with eight votes in the affirmative, one of which must be cast by the Minority.

V. SUBCOMMITTEES

1. Any member of the Committee may sit with any Subcommittee during its hearings or any other meeting, but shall not have the authority to vote on any matter before the Subcommittee unless he is a member of such Subcommittee.

2. Subcommittees shall be considered de novo whenever there is a change in the Subcommittee chairmanship, and seniority on the particular Subcommittee shall not necessarily apply.

3. Except for matters retained at the full Committee, matters shall be referred to the appropriate Subcommittee or Subcommittees by the Chairman, except as agreed by a majority vote of the Committee or by the agreement of the Chairman and the Ranking Minority Member.

VI. ATTENDANCE RULES

1. Official attendance at all Committee markups and executive sessions of the Committee shall be kept by the Committee Clerk. Official attendance at all Subcommittee markups and executive sessions shall be kept by the Subcommittee Clerk.

2. Official attendance at all hearings shall be kept, provided that Senators are notified by the Committee Chairman and Ranking Member, in the case of Committee hearings, and by the Subcommittee Chairman and Ranking Member, in the case of Subcommittee hearings, 48 hours in advance of the hearing that attendance will be taken; otherwise, no attendance will be taken. Attendance at all hearings is encouraged.●

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, every February our Nation celebrates Black History Month. With this national recognition, we reaffirm our awareness and appreciation of the many contributions made by black Americans to our national heritage.

In Michigan, we have a long tradition of distinguished black leadership. Our history includes the courageous Sojourner Truth, who helped lead our country out of the dark days of slavery; Elijah McCoy, a noted inventor of steam engines; Ralphe Bunche, a diplomat and Nobel laureate who strived to bring peace to the Middle East; Rosa Parks, whose dignified leadership sparked the Montgomery Bus Boycott and the start of the civil rights movement by her refusal to give up her seat on a segregated bus; and Joe Louis, the magnificent "Brown Bomber," one of the greatest boxers of all time. This month, we commemorate these and other black Americans who have enriched our lives and culture.

Black History Month, however, should be more than just a memorial to famous black Americans we read about in our history books. It is a time to pay tribute to the contributions of black Americans in our society and to acknowledge the black heroes of today who are found in communities throughout the United States.

It is a time for us as a society to assess the strides that have been made in the civil rights movement and to set new goals for the future.

Black History Month serves us as an opportunity for national reflection. It is a time to recall the injustices of the past and a chance to focus our attention on the inequities that still exist today and reaffirm our commitment to change. In observance of this special month, events are being conducted in my home State of Michigan.

This is the second year that we have acknowledged Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday as a national holiday. Dr. King's personal commitment to nonviolence and fearless leadership in the fight for freedom and equality for all is something that we all should strive for. Although Dr. King did not live to see his dream realized, we must continue to keep his dream and commitment to equal opportunity alive. Black History Month is an important part of this legacy.●

NATIONAL ORGAN AND TISSUE DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I support legislation calling upon the President to proclaim the week of April 23 through April 19, 1989, as "National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week." I commend my distinguished colleague, Senator GARN, for his very personal commitment to this life-giving legislation.

Every year, more than 100,000 Americans whose kidneys, eyes, hearts, lungs, bone, skin, or other tissues or organs are unable to sustain them could be helped or cured through organ transplants. For many, receiving a transplant can represent a new lease on life. Unfortunately, a substantial number of those who could benefit from an organ transplant face an uncertain, often lengthy, and potentially tragic waiting period for needed organs due to a shortage of available donors. This causes pain and frustration for families as they seek suitable organs for transplantation.

To alleviate this difficult situation, it is imperative to increase public awareness of the urgent need for organ donors. The designation of a week in April as "National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week" can be a significant means of achieving this goal. As Americans recognize the opportunity they have to help others in need, I am confident that many will step forward and pledge to make an anatomical gift.

Again, I commend Senator GARN for taking the lead on legislation which can help to give life and hope to the many Americans in need of organ transplants. I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in support of "National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week."●

NATIONAL CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION MONTH

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor Senate Joint Resolution 54, a joint resolution designating the April months of 1989 and 1990 as "National Child Abuse Prevention Month."

There is nothing more important than our children—our future. Unfortunately, while our children will someday be the leaders of our country, until then, unfortunately, they are especially vulnerable to abuse. Tragically, they are often unable to speak out for themselves, and even report their abuse—studies show that three out of every four instances of abuse go unreported. Each year, an estimated 6,000,000 American children actually fall victim to abuse, resulting in about 4,000–5,000 deaths.

National Child Abuse Prevention Month presents an excellent opportunity to increase public awareness of this tragic problem. I am proud to cosponsor this joint resolution, and urge my colleagues to do the same.●

NATIONAL OLDER AMERICANS ABUSE PREVENTION WEEK

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor Senate Joint Resolution 24, a joint resolution designating the week of May 1 through May 7, 1989, as "National Older Americans Abuse Prevention Week."

All of us are aware of child abuse, but few realize the severity of a similar problem affecting 550,000 to 2.5 million older Americans each year. For reasons similar to those causes of child abuse, older Americans fall victim to physical and emotional abuse, neglect, and denial of fundamental civil rights.

We owe too much to this part of our society to let them suffer this needless abuse. Our parents and grandparents took care of us when we were helpless infants, now it is time that we repaid them with similar love, care, and attention. National Older Americans Abuse Prevention Week presents an excellent opportunity to focus attention on this tragic problem. I commend the Senator from the State of Arizona, Mr. DECONCINI, for taking the lead in this issue, and urge our colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this joint resolution.●

CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to cosponsor a joint resolution introduced by Senator WILSON designating April 1989 as "Cancer Awareness Month." I commend my distinguished colleague from California for introducing this legislation which will call to the attention of the American public the importance of fighting cancer and promoting good health.

Cancer, which causes one of every five deaths in the United States, is one of our most critical medical problems today. Its effects are far-reaching—it is expected that about 75 million living Americans will eventually develop cancer, with three out of every four families being impacted by this disease. It does not discriminate by age—more children die from cancer than any other disease, and the disease attacks more frequently as people grow older. Last year, cancer killed an estimated 494,000 Americans of all ages.

Fortunately, fatality is not always the case—with early detection and treatment, approximately 174,000 American lives can be saved this year. Today, there are about 3 million Americans alive who are considered cured. Our research efforts have made remarkable strides in the last century, offering hope that we will someday wipe out cancer completely.

Cancer Awareness Month offers an excellent opportunity to educate America about cancer research, treatment, and prevention. I again commend Senator WILSON for taking the lead and introducing this legislation, and I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring Cancer Awareness Month.●

NATIONAL OSTEOPOROSIS WEEK

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I support legislation designating the week of May 14 through 20, 1989, as "National Osteoporosis Prevention Week." I commend my colleague, Mr. GRASSLEY, for promoting increased awareness of this widespread disease.

Osteoporosis is a degenerative bone condition which afflicts an estimated 24 million Americans. The risk of developing osteoporosis is greater for women than for men, and this risk increases with age. Up to 90 percent of all women in the United States over the age of 75 suffer from some form of osteoporosis.

Individuals afflicted by this condition are highly susceptible to bone fractures. Every year, more than 1.3 million bone fractures are caused by osteoporosis. For the elderly, fractures—especially fractures of the hip—can be debilitating, and, in many cases, life threatening. Approximately 50,000 elderly women die annually due to complications resulting from hip fractures.

Fortunately, osteoporosis can be successfully prevented. Among the primary measures used to combat osteoporosis are estrogen replacement and calcium supplementation, with exercise and nutrition as important adjuncts. Through research efforts, I hope that someday we can eliminate osteoporosis altogether. I am proud that New York State is the home of one of three specialized centers of research studying this disease.

The fact that osteoporosis can be prevented is a compelling reason to support this joint resolution. By designating a National Osteoporosis Awareness Week, we will help foster the kind of recognition and understanding that can lead to reduced incidence of this widespread condition. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.●

NATIONAL MINORITY CANCER AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 34, a joint resolution designating the third week in April as "National Minority Cancer Awareness Week."

While all of us are aware of the causes, preventions, and even treatments of cancer, few are aware that a disproportionate number of blacks, Hispanics, and economically disadvantaged populations are especially susceptible to this tragic disease. Various studies and statistics indicate a significantly higher occurrence of cancer among blacks and Hispanics than in the general population. The incidence of cervical cancer in Hispanic women is double that of white women. Furthermore, the cancer survival rate for blacks and Hispanics is dropping, while it is improving for the United States as a whole.

We need to focus on these minority and economically disadvantaged groups to determine what factor or characteristic is causing this phenomena. "National Minority Cancer Awareness Week" provides an excellent opportunity to increase awareness of this problem, and to further educate the targeted groups on the dangers of cancer.

I am proud to offer my support for this joint resolution, and urge my colleagues to do the same.●

BILL BROWNING HONORED

● Mr. LEVIN. On February 3, Bill Browning of Sterling Heights, MI, was honored by the Sterling Heights Area Chamber of Commerce as its "Citizen of the Year." Bill and I go back a long time, back to the days when I served on the Detroit City Council and he was—then as now—a leading southeast Michigan businessman and civic activist.

For 40 years, until 1979, Bill was general manager and vice-president of the Bob-Lo Co. In 1974, Bill was appointed to the Utica Community Schools Board of Education and for the last 8 years has served as its president. In that capacity, Bill has been a strong advocate of vocational education and of an additional emphasis on writing.

Bill has always been a major booster of our community and State. He has served as chairman of the Detroit Convention and Visitors Bureau and was co-chairperson of the first Freedom Festival of Detroit and Windsor. He also was a key figure in bringing the 1980 Republican National Convention to Detroit and in the extraordinary effort made by our community in hosting that event.

In short, Bill is a vital asset to our community. He succeeded in building a business, serving on the board of some of the most important charities in our area, been active in his church and—with his wife, Helen—has raised four children. He has been an inspiration to us all. I salute him and Helen on his selection as Citizen of the Year.●

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, in accordance with paragraph 2 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I submit the Rules of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, to be printed in the RECORD.

These committee rules were adopted at the committee's first executive session of this Congress, held on January 31, 1989.

The rules follow:

RULES OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

I. MEETINGS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The regular meeting dates of the Committee shall be the first and third Tuesdays of each month. Additional meetings may be called by the Chairman as he may deem necessary or pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 3 of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

2. Meetings of the Committee, or any subcommittee, including meetings to conduct hearings, shall be open to the public, except that a meeting or series of meetings by the Committee, or any subcommittee, on the same subject for a period of no more than 14 calendar days may be closed to the public on a motion made and seconded to go into closed session to discuss only whether the matters enumerated in subparagraphs (A) through (F) would require the meeting to be closed followed immediately by a record vote in open session by a majority of the members of the Committee, or any subcommittee, when it is determined that the matters to be discussed or the testimony to be taken at such meeting or meetings—

(A) will disclose matters necessary to be kept secret in the interests of national defense or the confidential conduct of the foreign relations of the United States;

(B) will relate solely to matters of Committee staff personnel or internal staff management or procedure;

(C) will tend to charge an individual with crime or misconduct, to disgrace or injure the professional standing of an individual or otherwise to expose an individual to public contempt or obloquy, or will represent a clearly unwarranted invasion of the privacy of an individual;

(D) will disclose the identity of any informer or law enforcement agent or will disclose any information relating to the investigation or prosecution of a criminal offense that is required to be kept secret in the interests of effective law enforcement;

(E) will disclose information relating to the trade secrets of financial or commercial information pertaining specifically to a given person if—

(1) an Act of Congress requires the information to be kept confidential by Government officers and employees; or

(2) the information has been obtained by the Government on a confidential basis, other than through an application by such person for a specific Government financial or other benefit and is required to be kept secret in order to prevent undue injury to the competitive position of such person; or

(F) may divulge matters required to be kept confidential under other provisions of law or Government regulations.

3. Each witness who is to appear before the Committee or any subcommittee shall file with the Committee, at least 24 hours in advance of the hearing, a written statement of his testimony in as many copies as the Chairman of the Committee or Subcommittee prescribes.

4. Field hearings of the full Committee, and any subcommittee thereof, shall be scheduled only when authorized by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the full Committee.

II. QUORUMS

1. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum for official action of the Committee when reporting a bill or nomination; provided that proxies shall not be counted in making a quorum.

2. Seven members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of all business as may be considered by the Committee, except for the reporting of a bill or nomination; provided that proxies shall not be counted in making a quorum.

3. For the purpose of taking sworn testimony, a quorum of the Committee and each subcommittee thereof, now or hereafter appointed, shall consist of one Senator.

III. PROXIES

When a record vote is taken in the Committee on any bill, resolution, amendment, or any other question, a majority of the members being present, a member who is unable to attend the meeting may submit his vote by proxy, in writing or by telephone, or through personal instructions.

IV. BROADCASTING OF HEARINGS

Public hearings of the full Committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall be televised or broadcast only when authorized by the Chairman and the ranking minority member of the full Committee.

V. SUBCOMMITTEES

1. Any member of the Committee may sit with any subcommittee during the hearings or any other meeting but shall not have the authority to vote on any matter before the subcommittee unless he is a Member of such subcommittee.

2. Subcommittees shall be considered de novo whenever there is a change in the chairmanship, and seniority on the particular subcommittee shall not neccessarily apply.●

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, I want to recap the Senate's schedule for next week. The Senate will conduct a pro forma session only on Monday at 12 noon and no business will be conducted.

The Senate will meet on Tuesday, February 28, at 2:15 p.m. Following the time for the two leaders, there will be morning business to extend not beyond 4 p.m. At 4 p.m. I intend to go into executive session to consider the nomination of Dr. Louis W. Sullivan to be Secretary of Health and Human Services. I hope to receive and enter a 1-hour time limitation on this nomination, as a result of which a rollcall vote will occur on the nomination at or about 5 p.m. on Tuesday.

After the Senate has disposed of the Sullivan nomination, I expect that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 66, the resolution reported from the Rules Committee this morning providing for funding of the Senate committees for the next fiscal year. We hope to obtain and enter a time agreement providing for 1 hour of debate on the resolution and 30 minutes on an amendment to be offered by the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina, Senator HELMS. There may be one or more votes on this resolution. Accordingly, Senators should expect two or three rollcall votes during Tuesday's session between the hours of approximately 4:30 p.m. and 7 p.m.

NOMINATION OF JOHN TOWER, TO BE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I spoke earlier today on the nomination of John Tower, and I do not intend to speak at length on that again. I indicated at that time that I had the sense that it was becoming quite partisan. I think that has been underscored or will be at 6:30 p.m. when the Senate Armed Services Committee votes. But I am still hopeful and still optimistic that, when the nomination reaches the floor, there will be enough independent judgment exercised in this body that we will confirm that nomination.

As I pointed out earlier today, one thing that makes it very difficult is you get all this avalanche of news every night based on rumor, leaks, information that cannot be verified but it is good enough for the networks. I know today at 3:41 p.m. the Associated Press reported:

> One Democratic Senator, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said, "The FBI report contains material concerning an airplane flight from London to Dallas in which at least one witness reported seeing Tower drunk, but FBI investigators were told by an unidentified flight attendant aboard that Tower was not drunk at the time."

Now, that is a release of FBI information. That is just as much of a release as handing out that page and saying. "Here it is." Of course, it is anonymous. And if you want to kill somebody around this place, you just continue to pile up a little garbage today, a little garbage tomorrow, a little garbage the next day, and pretty soon everybody says, "Well, that begins to smell. I don't want anything to do with it."

And that is what has happened in this case—every day, just a little bit more, a little bit here, another rumor.

But I would remind my colleagues in the Senate that there is a rule, rule XXIX, which says that:

> Any Senator or officer of the Senate who shall disclose the secret or confidential business or proceedings of the Senate shall be liable, if a Senator, to suffer expulsion from the body; and if an officer, to dismissal from the service of the Senate, and to punishment for contempt.

That is section 5. Section 3 talks about confidential communications made by the President to the Senate. That is what the FBI report is. It is brought up here by the White House.

So it just seems to me that we are treading on pretty dangerous ground. People hide behind the report on one hand, say: "I cannot tell you what is in it, but it is sure bad. I will tell you it is terrible. If anybody knew all that, they would not vote for Tower."

So you can hide behind the report, or you can run around leaking little bits of it. We have ways you can avoid facing up to your responsibility as a Senator. It may be in the best interests of the nominee sooner or later to try to lift that injunction of secrecy and release the whole report. Maybe. It would take a resolution of the Senate.

I might also add that there has been some discussion about how many Senators should see the FBI report in the first place. I recited the example, in the 1950's, when they were looking at someone and wanted to check his FBI report, Senator Taft and Senator Robert Sparkman went down to the FBI and they took a look in the FBI office. They came back to the Senate and the RECORD will show that Senator Taft, the majority leader, got up and said, "We have checked the FBI report," in essence, "and there is nothing to it." That was the end of it.

Everybody wants to rummage through FBI reports. When that starts, you get some anonymous leak that tells you what is in the report but does not tell you anybody's name. In other words, go out and try to do in John Tower but do not mention me. I just want to give you a little tidbit here, and of course the press appreciates those little things, little favors.

I hope this does not become a partisan issue. I recall the President, standing out here less than a little over 30 days ago, saying: I want to reach out my hand to the leadership in the House and the Senate. And he has done that.

Now he is, unavoidably, out of the country and I would hope that many of my colleagues are going to reserve judgment until they have had a chance to discuss this, some with the President, some after they have read the FBI report.

So it seems to me that we have a responsibility that we have to address. I know the Armed Services Committee is going to meet at 6:30 p.m. and vote sometime after that. I hope, again, as I said earlier today, it is not a party line vote.

I have checked since I spoke earlier. There are 71 Senators who are here today who served with John Tower. And I do not think any 1 of the 71 could stand here and say truthfully they ever saw John Tower on the floor or in his office or anywhere around here when he was not conducting himself properly and in proper condition. But we are not going to rely on what we know. We are going to rely on some rumor or what somebody said in some report that could not be verified and did not even give their name. That is what we want to rely on? We are men and women of judgment and wisdom and we want to face up to our responsibilities.

If we do that he is going to be confirmed by a wide margin. But if we reach the point in this body where we are going to rely on hearsay and rumor and innuendo and political enemies or some unknown person out there, unnamed person, unnamed source, then we have gone quite a way in the U.S. Senate.

If this were some stranger that we did not know, maybe that might be appropriate. So I would just say, as I said earlier, I feel strongly about this. John Tower is a friend of mine. He did not support me when I ran for President. He supported George Bush. That is beside the point. In addition to being the nominee, he is a man of character and integrity and he has really had a job done on him. If you take anybody in this Chamber and spend as much time looking us over as they have looked at John Tower, and as many agents and as many things coming under the door and over the transom, you would not have a quorum in this place. You would not have a quorum.

So, again, I just make the plea. I do not do it with any anger. I do it in the hope that we do not sully someone's name and that we do not give the President a good kick in the teeth when he is respresenting our country overseas, with a party line vote on a very important nomination.

I do not believe John Tower is on trial. It is supposed to be a confirmation. As I said earlier, George Bush picked him out of a crowd. He knew his experience, knew his expertise. The former majority leader alluded to it earlier. John Tower knows the defense business. Very few people in this country know it as well as John Tower, Senator BYRD said just a few moments ago.

The President carefully reviewed all this and looked it over. He has also known the nominee for some time personally. He made the judgment that he was the best person for the job and sent that nomination to us after careful review. I think we owe the President more than a partisan reaction.

So I am an optimist. John Tower will be confirmed, hopefully with a strong, bipartisan vote, notwithstanding what the vote may be in the Senate Armed Services Committee today.

We had a nomination this morning in the Finance Committee. We did not all rummage through the FBI file. The chairman announced: I read the FBI file and I see no indication that he is unfit to serve, and that was the end of it. That was the end of it.

That has not been the case, I might say, with reference to our former colleague who, I think, has been victim of a double standard. He has to be perfect.

He never said he was a saint. But I think he is a man of honor and integrity and I hope we do the right thing and approve his nomination when it comes to the floor next week, as the majority leader has indicated it will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Senator from Idaho.

NOMINATION OF JOHN TOWER TO BE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I want to compliment the Republican leader for the comments he has made. I too, join with him in saying to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle that I hope we have a strong bipartisan support for our former colleague, John Tower, to be the next Secretary of Defense. It is important that we think through what we are being asked to do as Members of the Senate, Mr. President. John Tower is the choice of President Bush to be Secretary of Defense. John Tower is not the President's choice to be a lifetime Judge of the Supreme Court. He is not his choice to be the Pope. He is his choice to be Secretary of Defense. And I think that the President has the right in many ways to have the Senate confirm a man who we know is capable of holding this Cabinet position. Those of us that know him know that he is intelligent. We know he is disciplined. We know he is tough. We know he is knowledgeable. We know he is competent. Those are all characteristics of John Tower.

I have seen Senator Tower in social environments. As a matter of fact, a year ago this January over New Year's eve, I happened to be at the same place where John Tower was. New Year's eve is known to be a time of year where there are a lot of festivities.

I can tell my colleagues, John Tower conducted himself in an exemplary manner. There was never a time that he had any kind of alcohol in any excess at all. This was in a social setting. Not around the Senate Chamber, but in Mexico.

I believe we are giving a very good and very capable man a raw deal. I agree with what the former majority leader, now Republican leader, Senator DOLE just said the confirmation process has been filled with innuendos, rumors, and disinformation. The FBI reports show no reason to think he would not be capable to be Secretary of Defense.

We hear all this talk about the chain of command. In my view, if the President ever gets a position where he has to give an order to have carried out, the chain of command is he gives it to the Chairman of the JCS on consultation with his Cabinet, of course. However, our job is to confirm President Bush's choice. I do not impugn the motives of any man or woman in this Senate. I do not impugn their motives at all, but I do think that for us to believe it is our duty in this Senate to have such a messianic complex that we have to be sure that we are going to have every "I" dotted and "T" crossed, and be able to control every single thing, that is not our problem.

Our problem is, do we want President Bush to have the choice of the man that he thinks is capable to give him the advice he is going to need to run the Defense Department on a restricted budget? Those of us who are the Budget Committee and others who have been watching these budget numbers know that there are not going to be any big increases in the Defense budget. If anything, it is going to be a no-growth defense budget for the next few years. It is going to take someone with considerable expertise and experience to do that job for the American people so we can preserve peace and freedom and have the credible deterrent we need and have peace through strength. Because we know peace through strength works.

It grieves me, Mr. President, to see this hatchet job on this good patriot, our former colleague. It grieves me to think that the committee that I was on, the Armed Services Committee, will end up in some kind of a partisan vote where all the Democrats vote against Senator Tower and all the Republicans vote for him. I think it is a day of absolute sadness in this Chamber if that is going to happen.

I should probably share a personal experience that happened to me last week when I was in Idaho during the Presidents Day week. I happened to be in Lewiston, ID, when the question had come up about Senator Tower. I had made some observations that I thought he was very capable to do the job. I said it is true there probably are other people in this country who would be capable to be Secretary of Defense. However, it just so happens that the President of the United States, who was elected by the people of the United States, has known John Tower for a long time. All we have to do, if we think the man is capable, intelligent, honest, a patriot, et cetera, et cetera, is vote to confirm him, and I intend to vote to confirm him.

Then I went on to tell them in the 8 years I had known John Tower and seen him frequently when I was a Member of the Senate, and the 8 years previous to that as a Member of the House, I had never seen him in any way that would appear to be undisciplined, not erudite, not intelligent. He always was in that kind of condition and always disciplined in his decorum, in his actions, and the use of the judicious way that he carried out his duties as U.S. Senator.

So after the meeting, a sweet, little lady came up to me who was many years my senior, pulled me off to the side and said, "Steve, one thing I want to tell you, I didn't want to say it in front of this audience, but," she said, "I know a lot more about this than people in this room may think." She said, "One thing those Senators back there should learn is that Senator Tower is either an alcoholic or a womanizer, but he is not both."

I think that just goes to show you how things have gotten so carried away in this whole exercise, exposé, or inquisition that is taking place. I do not think that it looks very good for the U.S. Senate.

Another person stood up at the same meeting and said, "Why does the U.S. Senate have to have the FBI to run all these checks on Senator Tower if they have been serving with Senator Tower for the last 20-some years that he has been in the Senate?" I thought that was another obvious question.

Mr. President, the only conclusion the American people are going to come to on this issue is that this is becoming a partisan issue. I think that is most unfortunate at the beginning of a new administration to have a former Member of this body voted down by the same committee he was chairman of only 2½ years ago. He did a very able job as chairman of the Armed Services Committee.

When I think that this Senate may allow itself to be dragged into a partisan fight over the confirmation of this good and capable and patriotic, intelligent man, John Tower, it grieves me to think of what are we up to here.

I wonder what the Richard Russells and Henry Jacksons would have done had they been in here. I somehow think that in another era they would have said if this is who the President wants to be the Secretary of Defense, this is who the President is going to have to be Secretary of Defense. Because we all know that John Tower has the capability of being a good Secretary of Defense.

Mr. President, if this becomes a partisan struggle, I think this will do no one any good. It certainly, I do not think, will be good for the majority party in the Senate to refuse the confirmation of John Tower. I hope it does not come to a partisan vote.

I have heard the vote in committee will be partisan. I hope that is not true. I would hope that some of those Senators, who I have had the privilege to work with on that committee for the past 2 years, will see their way clear to vote for the confirmation of John Tower. I hope that the Senator from Illinois, Senator DIXON, who is on the floor waiting, is waiting to speak in favor of Senator Tower. Because I know he is a fair man and that he wants to be fair about this issue.

I hope there will be others who will join in that effort so it will not be a partisan vote. If it is a partisan vote then it makes one ask the rhetorical question: Is it because the Democrats in the Congress want to run the Defense Department, and they do not want George Bush to run the Defense Department? Is that what the question boils down to? Is it some other agenda? Those are questions that I think the American people will be asking.

I would just plead of my colleagues to not allow this inquisition to go on any further and to not allow a good, patriotic, capable, and intelligent man to have his reputation tarnished by a negative vote from the U.S. Senate and by a negative vote from the Committee on Armed Services of this body.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DIXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I understand that the Chair has an announcement before we go out. May I yield to the Chair for the purpose of making that announcement, and then I will make my brief remarks and make the closing statement for the leadership.

PRINTING OF MOTIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair submits to the Senate for printing in the Senate Journal and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD motions to dismiss several of the articles of impeachment against Judge Alcee L. Hastings, and a corrected memorandum in support of those motions, filed by his counsel, pursuant to section 2 of Senate Resolution 39, 101st Congress, 1st session, which were received by the Secretary of the Senate on February 13 and 14, 1989, respectively.

The response to the above-mentioned motions which are to be filed by the managers of the House of Representatives on or before February 24, 1989, as well as any reply counsel to Judge Hastings may wish to file on or before March 3, 1989, in accordance with section 2 of Senate Resolution 39, 101st Congress, 1st session, will be printed in the Senate Journal and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon receipt by the Secretary of the Senate.

The Chair further submits to the Senate for printing in the Senate Journal and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the joint statement of counsel to the parties to the impeachment regarding evidentiary matters which are not in dispute, and a separate statement submitted by the managers of the House of Representatives, pursuant to section 4 of Senate Resolution 480, 100th Congress, 2d session, which were received by the Secretary of the Senate on February 21, 1989.

The material follows:

Hon. WALTER STEWART,
Secretary of the Senate of the United States, The Capitol, S-208, Washington, DC

DEAR SIR: I am filing the following documents on behalf of United States District Judge Alcee L. Hastings by mail:

1. A motion to dismiss article I though XV without trial based upon 1983 jury verdict and lapse of time;

2. A memorandum in support of motion to dismiss article I though XV without trial based upon 1983 jury verdict and lapse of time; and

3. A motion to dismiss article XVIII.

The Motion to Dismiss Article XVIII includes a brief supporting memorandum and incorporates arguments from the extensive memorandum filed in support of the main motion.

I am dispatching overnight copies to the Managers' impeachment trial staff and have sent a copy to Senate Legal Counsel. Please call if you have any questions. I shall call on Monday to confirm safe receipt.

Sincerely,

TERENCE J. ANDERSON.

MOTION TO DISMISS ARTICLES I THROUGH XV WITHOUT TRIAL BASED UPON 1983 JURY VERDICT AND LAPSE OF TIME

Respondent United States District Judge Alcee L. Hastings moves that the Senate of the United States enter an order dismissing the first fifteen articles set forth in the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the plaintiff House of Representatives of the United States with prejudice and without trial or further proceedings. The principled grounds that justify and require this relief are developed in the Memorandum in Support of Motion to Dismiss Articles I Through XV Without Trial Based Upon 1983 Jury Verdict and Lapse of Time that accompanies this motion.

Hon. WALTER STEWART,
Secretary of the Senate of the United States, The Capitol, S-208, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. STEWART: I enclose a corrected original and one copy of the Memorandum in Support of Motions to Dismiss Articles I Through XV Without Trial Based Upon 1983 Verdict and Lapse of Time. In the corrected copy, the citation that was omitted from footnote 57 has been supplied and miscellaneous typographical and stylistic errors have been corrected. There have been no changes in substance. I would appreciate your substituting the corrected memorandum for the one we submitted last Friday. I apologize for any inconvenience.

I have dispatched copies of this letter and the corrected memorandum to Senate Legal Counsel and the House Managers and the impeachment trial staff by Federal Express. Please call if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO DISMISS ARTICLES I THROUGH XV WITHOUT TRIAL BASED UPON 1983 JURY VERDICT AND LAPSE OF TIME

I. INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

The House of Representatives should not be permitted to impose the burdens of a trial on the first fifteen Articles of Impeachment upon either Judge Hastings or the Senate. The central allegations made in those articles—that Judge Hastings participated in a corrupt conspiracy in 1981 (Article I) and that he presented false testimony and fabricated evidence at his trial in 1983 (Articles II through XV)—were submitted to and rejected by the jury at that trial.

Cases of impeachment were criminal cases in England, and the framers intended that they be so viewed under our Constitution. The framers considered the application of double jeopardy principles in cases of impeachment and concluded that only a limited exception was warranted—an exception for a "party convicted." They made no exception for a party acquitted. The members of the First Congress again considered the applicability of those principles when they debated proposals for a bill of rights. Madison proposed and the House recommended that "Cases of Impeachment" be excepted generally from the protections afforded by double jeopardy principles. The Senate rejected the House's recommendation. The House receded, and the exception was deleted from the Bill of Rights that became part of the Constitution. Under any fair reading of the Constitution, its history, and the principled jurisprudence of its implementation, the jury's verdict alone bars a retrial before the Senate on the allegations made in the first fifteen articles.[1]

That verdict does not stand alone, however. The 1981 allegation that the judge was a participant in a corrupt conspiracy and the 1983 allegations that the judge had perjured himself at trial accused him of conduct that constituted high crimes under the impeachment standard as well as statutory standards. The allegations and the record necessary to assess the need for further inquiry were complete and available to all by February 1983, at the latest.

More than five years elapsed between the end of that trial in February 1983 and the House's decision to resubmit those allegations to the Senate in August 1988. In the interim, records had been destroyed, witnesses had died, and recollections had dimmed or, worse, been manipulated beyond repair or fair assessment. The lapse of time and the event that have intervened invoke additional constitutional principles that confirm that a trial before the Senate in 1989 would conflict with the requirements of fundamental fairness mandated by the Constitution.[2]

The concerns go beyond fairness to the accused official as an individual. The Constitution sought to protect judicial independence by guaranteeing to every federal judge secure tenure and compensation that could not be diminished in office and by assigning the sole powers by which that security could be challenged and terminated to the House and the Senate, respectively. The policies that led the framers to insist upon those guarantees and to specify that allocation of powers had objectives similar to those that underlie the constitutional prohibitions against double jeopardy and improper delay. They were intended to restrict the means by which a judge's security in office could be undermined, without regard to the legitimacy of the end sought. They were adopted to assure the people that every judge would enjoy extra protection from the exercise of discretionary powers by government officials in order that each might act with the necessary independence. Those policies and the conditions necessary to maintain them confirm that, when the accused in a case of impeachment is a judge, the Constitution requires that the protections accorded the accused judge be measured against a higher, not a lower, standard than that mandated by the Due Process Clause for all accused citizens.

Officials in all three branches of government have now spent more than seven years investigating and reinvestigating the allegations against Judge Hastings, without regard for the extraordinary economic and psychological burdens that their actions have imposed upon the judge and his office. The government has expended more than two million dollars on the postacquittal investigations, just on costs and special staff alone. Those six years of post-trial investigations have produced no material evidence against the judge that was not available to the prosecutors before 1983 trial, and the case against the judge remains now as it was then—circumstantial.

These facts make it clear that something is wrong. Seven years is too long; two million dollars is too much; and one trial was enough. One need not here question the legitimacy of the end, or the motives of those who claim to seek it in this case, to conclude that the means employed have far exceeded the bounds established by the Constitution. If what has been done to Judge Hastings were proper, then every judge must preside knowing that the same powers and procedures may be exercised against him or her also. There may be those who see nothing wrong in this and who see the end they seek in this case as adequate justification for the means that have been employed for the past seven years. The framers, however, viewed the matter differently, and the people adopted their view when they adopted the Constitution.

The Senate cannot, in this proceeding, redress the wrongs that have been done to Judge Hastings; it can, however, by its decision on this motion, send officials in all branches of government a clear message: Never again. That message is necessary to reassure other federal judges and to remind other federal officials that the Constitution struck a balance between the ends of judicial independence and accountability; a balance that limits the means that may be used in order that judges may "be protected against those who would make them afraid";[3] and a balance that must be respected by all concerned. A decent respect for the Constitution and the system of government it established demands that that message be sent.[4]

We develop these points and demonstrate their proper application in this case below. The House has, however, framed the allegations in these articles and published reports that have led some commentators to conclude the allegations are significantly different from those presented at the 1983 trial and that significant evidence, which had not been available to the prosecutors at that time, has since been discovered. Were that true, the issues that the Senate would confront would be somewhat different.[5] It is not.

The basic facts may be simply stated. By 1981, Judge Hastings had established himself as an able, young trial judge in the busiest district court in the nation. He had an established reputation for honesty and integrity of the highest order and was known as a man whose judicial salary was more than adequate to satisfy the modest fiscal needs required to maintain his established lifestyle. His commitment to liberal values informed his work as a judge, and he continued to be an outspoken advocate off the bench on issues that he deemed important. He had remained active in the affairs of his profession, at the local, state, and national levels, and in civic and community organizations. Within the South Florida community, he was viewed as a charismatic black leader whose rise to prominence and high office symbolized the possibility of progress towards racial equality.

Until his arrest in October 1981, the career of William Borders evidenced similar success. He had been elected president of the National Bar Association. He had risen to prominence in the Democratic Party and had served as an advisor on minority issues to high ranking officials in the Carter administration, particularly in their quest to appoint qualified minorities to the federal bench. Among his professional and political associates, he had apparently enjoyed a universal reputation as a man of ability and unquestioned integrity.

As the trial judge noted, after Borders' conviction, there was another William Borders, one that he had successfully concealed from his friends and political and professional associates. That was the secretive and manipulative Borders who had held himself out among criminal associates as having the power to fix cases before selected federal judges by soliciting bribes. It was that Borders who made the representation to an undercover agent posing as one of the Romano brothers, who were the defendants in a criminal case pending before Judge Hastings. It was that Borders who set out to manipulate events to persuade that "defendant" that his power over the judge was real in order to extract $150,000 as a "bribe." The evidence of Borders' enthusiastic participation in the corrupt scheme was clear.

From the day of Borders' arrest, Judge Hastings maintained that he, like everyone else, had been deceived by Borders. He maintained that he was the victim of a corrupt scheme embarked upon by the "other" Borders, the Borders who would trade upon his friends and sell his own integrity if the price was right. The central issues were thus apparent from the outset. Were the events and contacts between the two men that the government proffered as evidence of the judge's participation products of Borders' corrupt manipulation and coincidence, or did they show that there was also an Alcee L. Hastings other than the one who had established an unblemished record for honesty and integrity over more than fifteen years of dedicated service to his community and his profession? Did the innocent explanations that the judge provided for the events and contacts establish his claim of innocence, or was his testimony false, as the prosecutors argued, and thus further evidence corroborating his guilt?

At trial, the prosecutors chose to rely primarily upon the events and contacts that had occurred between September 10 and October 9, 1981, during the period of their undercover operation, to establish the judge's guilt. It was clear that those events and contacts were also consistent with the pattern of innocence provided by the judge's testimony, the view the jury accepted when it rejected the government's claims and returned its verdict.

In the post-acquittal investigations, the judge's accusers have reexamined those events and other events and contacts that occurred in 1981. In all, more than 150 witnesses have testified, and thousands of pages of long-distance telephone bills, message pads, diaries, court records, and other documents have been examined. The most telling result of that inquiry is that, after seven years of investigation with seemingly unlimited resources, the judge's accusers still have no direct evidence of the judge's involvement in any activity that is not fully consistent with his established reputation as a man of principle and integrity.

Nonetheless, these accusers now claim that the tea leaves of circumstances, as they have repackaged them, support anew their claims that the judge was involved in Borders' corrupt 1981 scheme and that the explanations provided by the judge's testimony at the 1983 trial were false. It is also clear from the expanded record, however, that the events and contacts can be viewed as establishing, even more firmly, a pattern that supports the judge's claim that he was the innocent victim of Borders' corrupt scheme, a pattern that is fully consistent with the testimony he gave at trial.

Circumstantial cases such as this are, in their nature, cases that can never be resolved with certainty, only with finality. Against that background, the question posed by these motions is whether it is consistent with established constitutional principle or sound constitutional policy for the Senate to conduct and impose upon Judge Hastings and itself the burdens of a protracted second trial to determine whether its members can see now in the tea leaves of circumstance a pattern so clear as to justify now repudiating the verdict the jury reached six years ago. We submit that it is not.

In order to establish the foundation for that conclusion, we have summarized the protracted proceedings that have taken place and the voluminous records that have compiled over the past seven years with some specificity. That summary provides the background that may be necessary for those whose assessment of the principles and their proper applications requires that they understand the factual contentions in some detail.[6] For others, the principled grounds that require dismissal are developed in part III below (at 52-91), and they will be enough.

II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Events that preceded the indictment

1. Background

The 1983 trial and the investigations that preceded and followed that trial focused upon events in 1981 that involved four men—Judge Hastings, William Borders, Hemphill Pride, II, and, to a lesser extent, Jessie McCrary, Jr. They also focused upon the relationships among these men. The record to date does not reveal any significant dispute over the background necessary to understand the 1981 events as they bear upon the pending motions.

a. Alcee L. Hastings. Judge Hastings attended Florida's then-segregated law school at Florida A & M University. Hemphill Pride, II, was one of his five classmates, and the two men became roommates. Jessie McCrary, Jr., was a first year student during Pride's and the judge's last year in law school and met both men at that time. Judge Hastings graduated in 1963 and established his office in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida.

During the thirteen years following his graduation, Judge Hastings engaged in an active trial practice in civil, criminal, and civil rights matters. He became a political activist within the state Democratic Party and within his local community. He was also an active participant in the affairs of his profession, in the American and National Bar Associations, as well as the Florida Bar. His relationship with Borders developed through their shared activities in the NBA and in Democratic politics.

By 1977, Judge Hastings had established himself as a charismatic political figure, a civic activist, and an able trial lawyer. His political and civic activities and the nature of the clients he chose to serve limited his income, but all concede that his needs appeared modest and his means adequate. After then-Governor Askew appointed him to be a judge of the state trial court in 1977, Judge Hastings promptly established himself as an able trial judge, but one who would remain an outspoken advocate off the bench on issues he deemed important.

In 1979, President Carter nominated Judge Hastings to become the first black to serve on the federal court in the Southern District of Florida. The rigorous FBI examination that followed confirmed the judge's essential characteristics as a man of integrity, competence, and ideals and as an outspoken public advocate. Following confirmation by the Senate, President Carter made the appointment. The judge took office on October 22, 1979.

Judge Hastings assumed the imposing duties of a judge on that court and executed them fully. Among the lawyers who tried cases before him, whether on behalf of the government, plaintiffs, or defendants, he established himself as a scrupulously fair and effective judge, who retained his sense of humor and his respect for practicing attorneys, while maintaining appropriate control over the courtroom. At the same time, he retained the vision and understanding of the Constitution and laws of the United States that he had developed over the years and exercised the judicial power accordingly, irrespective of the parties or the stakes. His views were less popular among higher ranking politically appointed and career attorneys for the federal government.

Judge Hastings also continued to engage in extensive non-judicial activities, as he had while he was a state court judge. He continued to speak publicly on issues of concern on which he thought he had something to say. He regularly lectured from the pulpit to church groups; in secondary schools, colleges, and law schools to students; and at meetings and conferences of lawyers and others around the country. He remained active in bar groups. He served on the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Professional Discipline and became a committee chair in the Judicial Council of the National Bar Association. He continued to serve on the boards of foundations, colleges, and other civic and educational organizations. Among his established and natural constituencies, he expanded his reputation as a charismatic speaker and dynamic symbol. It seems clear that some of his more staid counterparts were bothered by the outspokenness of the liberal judge who had joined their ranks.

b. William A. Borders. William Borders graduated from Howard Law School and entered practice as a criminal defense lawyer in Washington. He became active in the Democratic Party and in the National Bar Association. By the late 1970's, he had gained national prominence. He had played a prominent role in the campaign to elect President Carter and had become a member of the Democratic Party National Committee and of its finance committee. He had also become one of the principal advisors to Attorney General Bell and President Carter in the quest to find minority lawyers qualified to serve on the federal bench. He had become a partner in a small, prestigious, black law firm in Washington. In 1980, President Carter appointed him to serve on the Judicial Nominations Commission for the District of Columbia.

The record does not reflect what role Borders may have played in President Carter's decision to nominate and appoint Judge Hastings to the federal bench. By 1979, both men had become prominent in the NBA and in Democratic Party politics and knew each other well. Those who testified at Borders' trial did confirm the extent of his influence among senior officials in the Carter administration and campaigns, and Borders is reported to have bragged to some associates and clients about the number of judges he had "made".

By all accounts, there was another side of William Borders. According to all who knew him, Borders had an extraordinary penchant for secretiveness. With clients and friends alike, he would insist that they converse in the alley behind his office rather than in the office itself. He was cryptic in his conversations: Talking to Borders was "not like talking to a normal human being," in the words of the government's principal informant. In transacting ordinary business, even with other attorneys and prominent politicians, he used and asked others to call him at or from public pay phones rather than using the telephones in his office. He apparently delighted in appearing clandestine and mysterious, appearing when he was not expected, not appearing when he was. At the same time, Borders routinely insisted upon personally meeting important out-of-town friends at the airport, chauffeuring them about, and serving as a host when they were in Washington. His clients, business associates, and political acquaintances noted these characteristics, but everyone appears to have seen them as tolerable eccentricities and not as causes for suspicion.

c. Hemphill Pride, II. After graduation from law school, Hemphill Pride returned to his home in Columbia, South Carolina, and established a practice as a criminal defense lawyer. By all accounts, he was rather successful. Pride also became involved in real estate. He became the owner of a fifty-five unit, six-story housing project in Columbia. In connection with that undertaking, he received a federally subsidized loan for $810,000. There are strong suggestions in the record that Pride encountered serious financial difficulties in the early 1970's.

In any event, by 1976 his circumstances were such that he began misappropriating funds from his federally financed housing project. On October 11, 1977, the United States filed an indictment that charged Pride with willfully misusing rents and other funds from the project in violation of federal statute and regulation. On December 16, 1977, he was convicted of ten counts of criminal misuse of funds. Pride was thereafter sentenced to a three-year term of imprisonment, and he appealed.

At the time of his indictment, Pride turned to Borders for assistance. Pride had apparently met Borders through the NBA and become impressed with his political savvy and experience. It was through Borders that Pride retained John Shorter, the lawyer who ultimately represented him at trial. Pride also turned to Borders for assistance after his conviction. While Pride's appeal was pending, Borders supplied him with a rent-free apartment and found him a job in Washington, D.C. According to Pride, Borders was his principal confidant and advisor during this period.

Pride's financial straits became apparent and increased during this period. He was suspended from practice pending disposition of his appeal and divorced from his first wife. Judgments evidencing unpaid liabilities approaching $150,000 were entered against him. Given the circumstances and Pride's description of their relationship, it seems certain that Borders must have known with some precision the full extent of Pride's financial and legal problems and of Pride's consuming desire eventually to return to the practice of law.

Judge Hastings and Pride had remained close friends since law school days. Both confirmed that the judge had long referred to him by the nicknames "Hemp" or "Hempie." Judge Hastings and Pride each acted as godfather to the other's son. Wisely or not, Judge Hastings's maintained the friendship after he assumed the federal bench, notwithstanding Pride's then troubles. Given that friendship, Judge Hastings must have known the general extent of Pride's legal and financial problems and of his consuming desire to regain his license. These are conclusions that Pride largely admitted. In any event, Pride's appeals failed, and he entered prison in March 1980.

d. Jessie McCrary, Jr. Jessie McCrary played peripheral roles in the events that gave rise to the proceedings against Judge Hastings. Nevertheless, those events and McCrary's credibility became significant at the trial and during the subsequent proceedings, and thus some description of the man and his prior relationships with Judge Hastings, with Pride, and with Borders will aid in understanding the events as they unfolded.

After he graduated, McCrary clerked in Judge Hastings's law office until he was admitted to the bar. Thereafter, he, like Judge Hastings, established his own general practice, primarily in civil litigation. McCrary also became active in civil and political affairs. His reputation and stature as a public citizen and a lawyer were marked by two gubernatorial appointments, the first to serve as a judge of Florida's Industrial Relations Commission and the second to fill a vacancy in the cabinet as Florida's Secretary of State.

Throughout, Judge Hastings and McCrary maintained a close social relationship as well as the political and professional relationships dictated by their common interests and activities. Through the National Bar Association, McCrary also maintained his relationship with Pride and developed a relationship with Borders.

2. The Romano Case

On December 23, 1980, a jury found Thomas and Frank Romano guilty on all counts of a twenty-one count indictment. The indictment had charged the Romanos with violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act. The government claimed that cash proceeds amounting to $846,000 and that property interests in a motel and certain real property valued at $316,000 were subject to forfeiture under the RICO Act. By agreement of the parties, the forfeiture issues were tried before Judge Hastings, sitting without a jury. On May 4, 1981, Judge Hastings adopted the government's position and entered judgment declaring both the cash proceeds and the property interests forfeit.

The Ramanos filed post-trial motions seeking a new trial or judgments of acquittal notwithstanding the verdict. They later filed a motion asking the court to reconsider its forfeiture judgment. On June 19, 1981, while those motions were pending, the circuit court of appeals issued its opinion in United States v. Martino.[7] That court adopted precedents from other circuits and ruled that income and receipts from racketeering were not subject to forfeiture under the RICO Act. The prosecutor brought the Martino decison to the court's attention and tacitly conceded that its application would require that the cash proceeds portion of the forfeiture judgment be set aside. He argued, however, that Martino was wrongly decided and should not be applied, even though it constituted the law of the circuit and precedent binding on Judge Hastings' court.

On July 8, 1981, Judge Hastings heard arguments on the Romanos' post-trial motions, their motion to reconsider the forfeiture judgment, and the question of the sentences to be imposed. He denied the post-trial motions and sentenced each of the Romanos to a three-year term of imprisonment. He announced his intention to adhere to the forfeiture judgment, notwithstanding Martino, but added that he would issue an order explaining the basis for his decision.

After the hearing, Judge Hastings assigned the task of preparing the order to Jeffrey Miller. Judge Hastings had hired Miller to serve as one of his law clerks for a one-year period beginning October 1, 1980. Miller had assumed responsibility for the Romano file at that time and had briefed the judge on the Martino opinion and the parties' positions shortly before the July 8 hearing. Miller testified that, after that hearing, he understood that the judge wanted to stand by the original forfeiture judgment, but only if that decision could be justified under the law. According to Miller, he was unable to distinguish Martino effectively, but he did prepare an extensive draft order that identified a possible distinction and that called for further briefs. Miller did not submit that draft to Judge Hastings, however, because emergency matters arose in other cases on which Judge Hastings required his assistance in August.

On August 27, 1981, the circuit court of appeals decided United States v. Peacock.[8] In Peacock, the court of appeals summarily reversed a district court order that had included profits in a judgment of forfeiture under the RICO Act. The Peacock decision relied solely upon Martino as adequate authority for its summary reversal.

Miller reported that he promptly brought Peacock to Judge Hastings' attention and told him, "The court of appeals has followed Martino. Better give them [the Romanos] their money back." According to Miller, Judge Hastings promptly responded, "Give them the money," but instructed him that the order should make clear that Judge Hastings disagreed with the law of the circuit that he was applying. By all accounts, this conversation occurred prior to September 10, 1981.

According to Miller, he began work on the opinion, but did not again discuss the case with the judge until early October. Earlier in the year, Miller had accepted a new one-year position as a clerk to the Honorable James C. Paine, another judge on the same court. He had agreed to start on October 1, 1981, but Judge Hastings had intervened, and Judge Paine had agreed that Miller could continue working for Judge Hastings until the end of October so that Miller could complete his work on matters that had been assigned to him. By the end of September, it was also clear that Judge Hastings' travel commitments would keep him away from the court for most of the last three weeks of October. Miller testified that the judge had first inquired about the status of the order for the Romano forfeiture on the morning of October 5 and that, when Miller told him it was not complete, the judge said he wanted it that day.

The following day, on October 6, 1981, Miller submitted and Judge Hastings signed an extensive opinion and order (the "Romano order") that conformed to his earlier instructions.[9] The other applied Martino and Peacock and vacated that portion of the original forfeiture order that extended to the $846,000 in cash proceeds. The order also expressed Judge Hastings' disapproval of the precedents he was applying. That decision was a proper and predictable application of the law of the circuit as it then stood, and no one has ever suggested otherwise.

On October 9, 1981, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation arrested William Borders. The Justice Department alleged that Borders had agreed with an undercover agent posing as Frank Romano that, in exchange for $150,000 paid to Borders, Judge Hastings would restore a substantial portion of the property originally adjudged forfeit and would thereafter grant a motion eliminating the prison terms and placing the Romanos on probation. Within days, the media were reporting details of the Justice Department's investigation and allegations.

Judge Hastings promptly proclaimed his innocence and disclaimed any knowledge of Borders's corrupt scheme. He voluntarily spoke with FBI agents for two hours on the evening of October 9 and responded freely to their questions. As the details of Borders's activities were reported in the press, Judge Hastings asserted that he appeared to have been the victim of what he styled a common "rainmaking" scam by Borders, a scam in which a lawyer extracts a large sum from a criminal defendant by asserting, without basis in fact, that he can influence a particular judge by paying a bribe.

As the leaks to the press continued, Judge Hastings complained to the Justice Department about the apparent violations of professional standards by its employees. He also reported that the "leaks" were enhancing concerns in some quarters that the Justice Department's decision to target him for investigation and its conduct during the investigation and after Borders's arrest may have been influenced by political or other improper factors. The major points of that investigation and the evidence it revealed, as they bear upon the present motions, can now be reconstructed from the records gathered during the post-acquittal investigations.

3. "Operation Apple Eye": The Undercover Investigation

The investigation apparently was authorized based upon information supplied by a man named William Dredge. According to all reports, Dredge was a fence, a burglar, and a drug dealer operating out of Miami. In July 1981, Dredge was the principal defendant in a major drug case pending in federal court in Maryland. On July 20, 1981, he advised Justice Department attorneys in Miami that, in exchange for a deal in his drug case in Baltimore, he could supply information showing that Washington attorney William Borders was soliciting bribes to fix cases pending before Judge Hastings, including the Romano case.

The FBI had little trouble finding grounds to launch an investigation into Border's activities. According to the FBI, they were investigating similar allegations against Borders in Washington, and Dredge confirmed that Borders had claimed that he had the power to fix cases before federal judges other than Judge Hastings. In addition, according to records supplied by the FBI, Dredge's initial information concerning Border's movements and activities proved accurate.

The FBI has since acknowledged that all available information indicated that Judge Hastings was a highly improbable candidate for such a scheme. Their extensive file showed him to be a man of conviction and integrity who had largely dedicated his life to public service and political affairs without regard for financial success and who had lived and was living comfortably within his means. Nonetheless, the decision was promptly made to initiate investigations directed not only at Borders, but also at the judge.

"Operation Apply Eye", as the FBI named it, formally began on September 10, 1981, the day on which the Justice Department finally gave Dredge a deal in the drug case that satisfied him. According to the FBI, Dredge called Borders that afternoon and told him that the Romanos were ready to deal. Borders flew to Miami late on Friday, September 11. The following morning, at the airport, Dredge introduced Borders to H. Paul Rico, a retired FBI agent posing as Frank Romano.

The meeting was taped, and the basic elements of a deal were worked out—Borders would instruct Judge Hastings to have dinner at the Fontainebleau Hotel on September 16 as the sign of the judge's involvement in the scheme; Rico/Romano would give Borders an unspecified amount as a downpayment on the following Saturday, September 19; the judge would sign an order within ten days returning a substantial, but unspecified, portion of the forfeited property; Rico/Romano would pay Borders the balance of a $150,000 bribe; and thereafter, the Romanos would dismiss their appeals, and Judge Hastings would grant a motion in mitigation, placing them on probation. Rico/Romano did not suggest that the judge take any action on the 16th that might corroborate his involvement—such as wearing a boutonniere or a specific tie or carrying a specific book.

The first two stages of Operation Apple Eye went as planned. Judge Hastings did dine at the Fontainebleau, with a friend, Essie Thompson, on September 16. Rico/Romano did meet Borders at the airport on September 19 and gave him $25,000 in cash as a downpayment. At that meeting, Borders promised Rico/Romano that the order returning a substantial portion of their property would be out within ten days of that date, by September 29, and the two men agreed to meet at the Miami airport on Saturday, October 3, for the final payoff.

At that point, the plan fell apart. The order was not issued by September 29, and by October 2, the Justice Department had finally become sufficiently concerned to seek a wiretap on Borders' telephones. Several calls between Rico/Romano and Borders were monitored, with Borders giving assurances that he would take care of the problem. The FBI could find no indication, however, of communications between Borders and the judge during the crucial period, and none has since been discovered. Nonetheless, in a telephone call at 4:22 p.m., on October 5, 1981, the FBI intercepted a call in which Borders assured Rico/Romano that the order would go out that afternoon or the following morning and that "your [Rico/Romano's] friend should tell you something." The Romano order was, in fact, signed late the following day. There was no evidence, however, of any communication between Borders and Judge Hastings between September 19 and October 5, until forty minutes after Borders had assured Rico/Romano that the order would go out.

Judge Hastings did call Borders at 5:12 p.m. on October 5. The government transcription of that call merits reproduction here because the call became the centerpiece of the government's case at trial, and it apparently remains the centerpiece of the House's case seven years later. As presented to the House, it reads:

Mr. BORDERS. Yes, my brother.

Judge HASTINGS. Yeah, my man.

Mr. BORDERS. Um hum.

Judge HASTINGS. I've drafted all those, ah, ah, letters, ah, for Hemp . . .

Mr. BORDERS. Um hum.

Judge HASTINGS. . . . and everything's okay. The only thing, I was concerned with was, did you hear if, ah, you hear from him after we talked?

Mr. BORDERS. Yea.

Judge HASTINGS. Oh. Okay.

Mr. BORDERS. Uh huh.

Judge HASTINGS. Alright, then.

Mr. BORDERS. See, I had, I talked to him and he, he wrote some things down for me.

Judge HASTINGS. I understand.

Mr. BORDERS. And then I was supposed to go back and get some more things.

Judge HASTINGS. Alright. I understand. Well then, there's no great big problem at all. I'll, I'll see to it that, ah, I communicate with him. I'll send the stuff off to Columbia in the morning.

Mr. BORDERS. Okay.

Judge HASTINGS. Okay.

Mr. BORDERS. Right.

Judge HASTINGS. Bye bye.

Mr. BORDERS. Bye.

After the Romano order was received and several telephone calls later, Rico/Romano offered to come to Washington later in the week to pay the balance of the bribe, and Borders agreed. At that point, the government's "evidence" of Judge Hastings's involvement in Borders's scheme consisted of only three facts—the dinner at the Fontainebleau, the "letters for Hemp" conversation, and the fact that the predicted (and predictable) Romano order had finally been issued, albeit a full week after it had been promised. The extraordinary decisions that the Justice Department and FBI made, on the basis of that record, assured that the case would forever remain circumstantial as to Judge Hastings.

Friday, October 9, 1981, had been planned and advertised as a big day for William Borders. He was to be honored for his service as president of the National Bar Association at a dinner-cruise that evening. Lawyers, judges, and other friends from around the country were scheduled to attend. The L'Enfant Plaza Hotel was to be the headquarters. Judge Hastings had agreed months before to act as one of the sponsors and to be one of the speakers at the dinner itself. Early on October 8, the FBI intercepted a call from the judge. The judge told Borders that he had been unable to get a room at the L'Enfant Plaza. Borders said he would take care of that and made arrangements to pick the judge up at the airport the following morning.

With that knowledge in hand, the Justice Department and FBI made plans for the final payoff. Teams of agents were assigned to follow Borders and the judge on the day of October 9. A room was booked for Rico/Romano and wired for video and sound at the Twin Bridges Marriott in Virginia. Rico/Romano flew to D.C. The $125,000 balance was placed in a carrying bag.

The FBI surveillance teams observed the judge's arrival at the airport. They followed him and Borders to the L'Enfant Plaza and observed them checking in. They followed them to the offices of Borders's law firm. Incredibly, the FBI later reported that its agents did not observe Judge Hastings when he left Borders's offices and walked down the street to a shopping area and, thus, did not even know that he had returned to the L'Enfant Plaza for lunch.

When Borders arrived at his office, he found a message that Rico/Romano had called and left a number. Shortly before noon, Borders returned the call and agreed that he would come to the Twin Bridges Marriott for the payoff. He went. The FBI arrested him at the scene. The FBI did not acknowledge, however, until long after the trial, that the government had planned in advance to arrest Borders at the scene of the payoff and had never intended to "let the money run" to see if any part of it would be paid to the judge.

The events that followed the arrest later became important. Borders retained John Shorter as his attorney. Shorter knew that Hemphill Pride was a close friend of both Borders and Judge Hastings and had come to Washington for the dinner-cruise. Shorter called Pride at the L'Enfant Plaza and asked him to tell the judge that Borders had been arrested, that the allegations against Borders concerned bribery in the judge's courtroom, and that the FBI wanted to interview him. Pride reported this conversation to the judge in the hotel corridor outside Pride's room.

According to Pride, the judge was shocked. Nonetheless, Pride advised the judge that, in Pride's view, the judge would be better off on his "home turf" in Miami. The judge concurred. He packed, left the hotel, and took a flight from Baltimore-Washington airport back to Florida. Later that evening, he was interviewed by two FBI agents at the Ft. Lauderdale home of his friend and lawyer, Patricia Williams. According to the agents, the judge denied any knowledge of or involvement in Borders's scheme and responded freely and fully to all the questions that they asked during a two-hour interview.

The Justice Department deployed the resources of the FBI and the subpoena powers of a federal grand jury over the succeeding two-and-one-half months to gather additional evidence to support its views. It was during this period that they gathered the long-distance telephone records for Borders, Ms. Williams, and the judge and other detail that continues to be the subject of study by those who believe the jury got it wrong. They completed that phase of the investigation before the end of the year.

B. The indictment and trials

On December 29, 1981, attorneys from the Public Integrity Section of the Justice Department's Criminal Division filed an indictment in the Southern District of Florida that charged both Judge Hastings and Borders with conspiring to solicit and accept a bribe from the Romanos. Because it is central to this motion, the text of the first two counts of that indictment is reproduced as an addendum to this memorandum.

Judge Hastings moved to dismiss the indictment on a claim that impeachment by the House and conviction and removal by the Senate must precede exercise of prosecutorial discretion by the executive against a sitting judge and any exercise of the judicial power by the courts to adjudicate whether he had committed a high crime in office. The judge designated to try the case recognized the significance of the constitutional claims, but denied that motion. He did, however, sever the cases to assure Borders' right to a fair and speedy trial and afford Judge Hastings a proper opportunity to exercise his right to pursue the constitutional claim on appeal.

1. The Borders Trial and Conviction

Borders was tried in March 1982. There was never any real doubt that he was involved in a corrupt scheme to extract money from someone posing as one of the Romanos. His meetings and conversations with Rico/Romano had been observed and recorded. He had taken the $25,000 downpayment. His October telephone conversations with Rico/Romano had been intercepted and recorded. He had shown up for the payoff.

Borders did not take the stand and, except for challenges in detail by his counsel on cross-examination, made no attempt to rebut this evidence. Instead, Borders relied upon the testimony of prominent former members of the Carter administration and campaigns. They all testified that, based upon their own observations, they had believed that Borders was a man of the highest principle and integrity. They all testified that Borders had established a similar reputation among the highest officials in the Democratic Party and the Carter administration. The government made no effort to challenge these conclusions.

The issue, even then, was whether the government could persuade the jury that there was a conspiracy involving the judge. Had the jury not accepted the government's theory on that point, it would have had to acquit Borders, notwithstanding the unrebutted evidence of his corrupt conduct. The prosecution succeeded at that trial. The judge was not present, and the circumstantial evidence the prosecutors marshalled stood largely unrebutted.

The extent to which Borders had managed to conceal his "dark side" from persons in high office impressed even the judge who presided at this trial. At the sentencing, the judge noted that the evidence established that there were two William Borders. One was the William Borders "who ha[d] achieved prominence in his profession and in the political life of his country" and gained an "unquestioned reputation among his professional associates, political acquaintances, friends, and family prior to the disclosure of the instant case." The other was the "William Borders who was revealed by the evidence in this [the Borders] case." The question at the second trial was, in reality, whether Judge Hastings had shared and accepted the universal view of William Borders prior to October 9, 1981, or had known earlier about the darker side that Borders had so successfully concealed from all his other professional associates and political acquaintances.

2. The Hastings Trial and Acquittal

The judge maintained at his trial, as he has throughout, that he was innocent and was, indeed, the principal victim of the corrupt scheme that the "other Borders" developed with Rico/Romano. It was clear that the "other Borders" would, in any event, have had to manipulate an unknowing Judge Hastings in order to persuade Rico/Romano that the judge was a participant, thereby establishing circumstances suggesting guilt. The issue at that trial was whether the events that occurred were the products of coincidence and manipulation, as the judge's testimony indicated, or whether, as the government repeatedly argued, the judge was presenting false testimony to conceal the guilt suggested by those events.

It took the parties more than three weeks of trial time to present so much of the available evidence and arguments as they thought bore upon the underlying issues. For purposes of the present motions, however, only the evidence and arguments submitted to the jury with respect to the allegations that reappear in the first fifteen articles are significant.

a. The Alleged Conspiracy and Its Denial (Articles I–IV). The first four articles realege the conspiracy and claim that Judge Hastings testified falsely when he denied his involvement in an agreement that had the elements specified in the indictment. The jury chose to credit the judge's testimony and reject the government's claim that its evidence showed that the judge was guilty and had testified falsely. These articles simply demand that the Senate permit the House to impeach the jury's verdict so the central allegations may be retried.

b. September 12: Dinner at the Sheraton (Article VI). Judge Hastings and Jessie McCrary were staying at the Sheraton Hotel in Washington on September 12. Borders had known of their plans in advance, but had planned to attend a family reunion in West Palm Beach, Florida, that weekend. At trial, the government proved that Borders changed his plans and took considerable pains to return to Washington that evening, after only a short time at the reunion. As Judge Hastings had informed them, Borders arrived at the Sheraton at about 9:00 p.m. that evening, found the judge and McCrary having drinks in their suite with two acquaintances, and joined the group for dinner.

It was the government's theory that Borders had told the judge that he would rush back from Florida to report on his meeting with Rico/Romano. Judge Hastings denied this and testified that he had been surprised when Borders arrived at their rooms. The prosecutors argued to the jury that the judge's testimony on this point was false. The jury considered and rejected the allegation. Article VI restates the allegation here.

c. September 16: Dinner at the Fontainebleau (Article V). The indictment had also specifically alleged that the judge's dinner at the Fontainebleau was both a part and an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. Judge Hastings testified that it was not. He said that on September 12 or 13, when he was in Washington, Borders had told him he would be in Miami on the following Wednesday and had invited the judge to join him for dinner at the Fontainebleau that evening. There was considerable evidence at both trials establishing that Borders took apparent delight in being mysterious and in showing up when he was not expected and in not showing up when he was. The judge testified he had taken Ms. Thompson to dinner at the Fontainebleau, conscious of the possibility Borders might not be there. After they were seated, however, the judge excused himself, went to another lounge/restaurant in the hotel, and spoke with the maitre d'. On this all agreed. The judge testified he had been looking for Borders. Ms. Thompson recalled that upon his return the judge had told her that he had been "looking for some friends from D.C."

The government proved that Borders was, in fact, in Las Vegas attending the Leonard-Hearns fight. Ms. Thompson reported that the judge had not discussed meeting Borders before they arrived for dinner and were seated and had not objected when the other place settings were removed from their table. The prosecutors argued to the jury that the judge's testimony on this point was false. The jury considered and rejected the claim. Article V restates the allegation here.

d. October 5: The Instructions to the Law Clerk (Article VII). The evidence provided by Jeffrey Miller has remained consistent throughout and has never been seriously challenged. Miller testified that the judge had originally asked him to prepare an order after the hearing on July 8, and he explained the reasons for the initial delay. He testified that his next conversation with the judge concerning the case came early in September, when he told the judge about Peacock and the judge told him to draft an order giving the money back. He also testified that he did not discuss the case with the judge again until the morning of October 5, when the judge inquired and then said he wanted the order that day. Mr. Miller testified that such a preemptory instruction from Judge Hastings was unusual. The government claimed that the timing and nature of the instruction were evidence that the judge was responding to Borders, notwithstanding the absence of any evidence of communication between the two men.

Judge Hastings testified that he had given the preemptory instruction to the law clerk because the order was long overdue, because the clerk's replacement had already started, and because his travel schedule would keep him out of Miami for most of the remainder of October, at which point Mr. Miller would be gone. There was no dispute over the underlying facts; the argument concerned whether those facts or a corrupt motive had provided the impetus for the judge's instruction. The prosecutors argued that the judge's testimony on this point was false. The jury considered and rejected that claim. Article VII restates the allegation here.

e. October 5: The Telephone Call to Borders and the Letters for Hemp (Articles VIII and IX). The prosecutors introduced the intercepted October call from Judge Hastings to Borders concerning "letters for Hemp" and argued that it was a coded conversation that in fact referred to the Romano order. According to Judge Hastings, the subject of the conversation was "letters for Hemp." It was undisputed that "Hemp" was a nickname for Hemphill Pride, and one that the judge had long used.

According to the judge, Pride had made it clear that he desperately wanted to regain admission to practice one day, even before he went to prison. The judge reported that, beginning at an NBA meeting in July 1981, Borders had told him that Pride was in bad financial shape and would need their assistance to raise funds and build a record that would support his readmission. The judge reported that he expressed reservations over the propriety of his actively soliciting assistance, given his position as a federal judge. The judge testified that Borders argued that concern for a friend in trouble should override the ethical concerns and thereafter pestered the judge to write letters soliciting assistance for Hemp.

At trial, the judge testified that he had in fact prepared handwitten drafts of such letters while he was on the bench on October 5, 1981. These he claimed were the subject to his and Borders's discussion on the telephone that evening. He produced the handwritten drafts. He explained that they had not been typed because he had decided that, as a judge, he could not appropriately distribute such letters, a point he intended to discuss with Borders and Pride when they were together in Washington for the dinner-cruise the following weekend.

Pride acknowledged that he and the judge had spoken regularly by telephone over the summer and had discussed his prospects for regaining his license. He testified that he was not, however, aware of any efforts on his behalf by Borders and that he would not have approved of such efforts. The prosecutors argued to the jury that the judge's explanation of the telephone call was false and the letters fabricated. Those were allegations the jury considered and rejected. Articles VIII and IX restate those allegations here.

f. October 9: The Return to Florida (Articles XIV-XV).—Judge Hastings testified that he was shocked by Pride's report of Borders's arrest and the suggestion that the allegations concerned him. The judge testified that he returned to his room alone and placed telephone calls to his invalid mother and Patricia Williams. According to the judge, Pride later rejoined him and stayed while the judge packed. The judge testified that he took a taxi to Baltimore-Washington International Airport because he believed there was a convenient flight to Florida from the airport and he was not aware of a more convenient flight from nearby National Airport. The government confronted him fully on both points.

The corroborating evidence from both sides was in conflict. Pride testified that he accompanied the judge to his room and did not see the judge make any telephone calls. Shirley Pride, Pride's then wife, testified, however, that after meeting with the judge in the hall, Pride had returned to their room for about fifteen minutes before leaving again to go to the judge's room. The government produced the hotel's "hobic system" computer-generated records that were supposed to record all long-distance telephone calls from the hotel. It showed no calls from the judge's room, not even a third call the judge said he had made to one of his law clerks earlier in the day. The record contained, however, no records of any long-distance calls from any of the hotel's 472 rooms during the crucial period, and both the judge's law clerk as well as his mother testified that each had received a call from the judge. The prosecution also showed the relative distance of the two airports and established that there had been a flight to Florida leaving from National Airport late that afternoon.

The evidence was fully developed and tested on examination and cross-examination. The prosecutors argued that the judge's testimony on these points was false and that that was further evidence of his guilt. Those were allegations the jury considered and rejected. Articles XIV and XV restate those allegations here.

g. Misidentification of Telephone Records (Articles X-XIII. At trial, Pride's and the judge's testimony were consistent on one point. Both men testified that they had spoken to each other regularly, by telephone, over the summer of 1981. That is a fact that was not then (and is not now) in dispute.

The government has gathered relevant long-distance billing records during the grand jury investigation in 1981. These were produced at trial. The records for the telephones of the judge and Patricia Williams's, the judge's friend and co-counsel at trial, were marked and introduced in evidence. During his two days on the stand, the judge identified charges for calls to four telephone numbers in Columbia, South Carolina, as being calls he made to Hemphill Pride. It was apparent to all that this evidence was detail offered to corroborate a fact not in dispute. The prosecutor agreed that calls to Pride had been made, and they did not challenge the judge's identification of telephone numbers on cross-examination or in rebuttal.

The post-acquittal record establishes that the judge was wrong in identifying these as telephone numbers where Pride could be reached. None of the numbers was one of Pride's numbers, and each was for a phone at a place where Pride was not likely to have been present. The judge's testimony was wrong, and he or Ms. Williams should have discovered the error. They did not. The question posed is whether these were trivial errors made by the judge and his then relatively inexperienced trial counsel during more than two grueling days on the stand, or whether the judge perjured himself to corroborate a fact not in dispute. Articles X-XIII ask the Senate to conduct a trial to resolve that issue.

The Justice Department has never suggested that it did not have a full and fair opportunity to develop the case against Judge Hastings. The Department's lawyers worked with the FBI, from the outset, in the design and implementation of Operation Apple Eye. When that operation ended with Borders' arrest on October 9, the prosecution and the FBI used the rest of the year and the powers of the grand jury to perfect their evidence. As a result of the severance, they were able to test-market one part of their case and have a full year to complete preparations for Judge Hastings's trial. It was the judge who complained that the proceedings were unfair, and the post-acquittal record provided ample support for that claim.

C. The post-acquittal investigations

Most observers confidently predicted that the jury's verdict would end the matter—some on principle; others thought the government's decision to arrest Borders at the scene of the payoff embarrassed its credibility as well as its case so severely as to preclude further action; still others took the view that political considerations alone would preclude the House from undertaking an inquiry to look behind a jury's verdict of acquittal. The record now reflects, however, that senior members of the Eleventh Circuit judiciary had decided to seek Judge Hastings's removal almost immediately after he had been acquitted and resumed his judicial duties.

1. The Judicial Investigation

At a meeting of the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit in March 1983, then Chief Judge John Godbold expressed dissatisfaction that he had not yet received a complaint that would permit him to initiate proceedings against Judge Hastings under the Judicial Councils Reform and Judicial Conduct and Disability Act of 1980 (the "1980 Act").[10] Two of the then district-judge members of the Council promptly obliged. On March 17, they filed a complaint that alleged that Judge Hastings was guilty of the alleged conspiracy, notwithstanding his acquittal. They appended, as the principal source upon which they relied, a copy of the 1982 opinion, authored by Circuit Judge Frank Johnson, in which the court of appeals had affirmed Borders's conviction, an opinion that had been issued before Judge Hastings had even been tried.[11] In that opinion, Judge Johnson detailed the evidence adduced at Borders's trial which the court of appeals thought sufficient to support a finding that Judge

Hastings had been involved in Borders's corrupt scheme.

The intended outcome of the judicial investigation was signalled less than a month later. Chief Judge Godbold appointed himself and Judge Johnson, the author of the Borders opinion, along with three other judges, to constitute the Investigating Committee that would investigate the complaint. The Investigating Committee ignored the some 50,000 lawyers who had offices in the Eleventh Circuit. Instead, it retained John Doar of New York, the lawyer who had served as special counsel to the majority for the Watergate impeachment inquiry conducted by the House Judiciary Committee. Lest the point be lost, on April 15, 1983, Chief Judge Godbold issued a news release reporting these events, notwithstanding the much vaunted confidentiality provisions of the 1980 Act.[12] The point was not lost, at least in the judge's community.

For the next three-and-a half years, Mr. Doar conducted an extensive investigation in an effort to unearth additional material evidence. As he later conceded, he failed. The best he could do was develop evidence which had been available to the prosecutors in 1983, but which had not been presented at trial.[13]

The failure was not, however, attributable to any lack of effort on Mr. Doar's part. One hundred and ten witnesses testified before the Investigating Committee. These included all the witnesses that the prosecutors had called at either Judge Hastings's or Borders's trials. They included only eight of the more than forty witnesses Judge Hastings had called in his defense. The Investigating Committee heard all but one of the FBI agents who have been identified as having participated in Operation Apple Eye and all the other known witnesses whom the prosecutors had decided not to call at either trial.

The Investigating Committee did compel testimony from one witness, William Dredge, that confirmed that the prosecutors had improperly withheld material information from Judge Hastings in order to prevent him from presenting evidence in support of his principal defense. In 1981, the Justice Department had induced Dredge to aid them in implementing Operation Apple Eye by promising, as part of the written plea agreement, that he would never be called to testify concerning his involvement in any proceeding. Judge Hastings had diligently sought to compel Dredge to appear and testify at his 1983 trial and ultimately filed a motion asking the court to order the government to produce him as a material witness. The prosecutors vigorously and successfully opposed that motion, representing to the court that Dredge had no material information.

At trial, Judge Hastings had also sought to introduce evidence to demonstrate that all judges were vulnerable to unfounded claims made by a few unscrupulous lawyers that they had the power to fix cases before particular judges. The government objected, and the trial judge ruled that Judge Hastings could not present such evidence to the jury, unless he first produced evidence showing that Borders had claimed the power to fix cases before judges other than Judge Hastings.

Upon the Investigating Committee's request, the FBI did produce Dredge, and the committee compelled him to testify, notwithstanding his plea agreement. Dredge testified there that Borders had claimed, in Dredge's presence, that he had power to fix cases before several judges, including federal judges other than Judge Hastings. Thus, the prosecutor's representation at Judge Hastings's 1983 trial was not only false; it also enabled the prosecutors to bar the judge from presenting evidence in support of a major defense.[14]

Evidence such as that was not disclosed by the Investigating Committee in the 381-page report it filed with the Council in early August 1986. Instead, the Investigating Committee remarshalled circumstantial evidence that supported the conclusion that the judge was a participant in Borders's corrupt 1981 scheme and that the judge's testimony contradicting that conclusion had been false. The Council refused to provide Judge Hastings or his counsel with a copy of that report or the record that the Investigating Committee had compiled. Less than a month later, on September 2, 1986, the Council adopted the Investigating Committee's findings and certified the matter to the Judicial Conference.

The Conference also declined to give a copy of the Investigating Committee's report or record to Judge Hastings; it did, however, grant his counsel access to the material for a 120-day period. As a result, on January 17, 1987, Judge Hastings filed a petition asking both houses of Congress to intervene and bring the proceedings to an end.[15] That petition was accompanied by a 189-page preliminary report prepared by his counsel analyzing the record compiled by the Investigating Committee and articulating reasons why the matter should be ended then.[16] A copy of that report was also submitted to the Conference. In Congress, the petition and report were promptly referred to the Committees on the Judiciary in both Houses.[17] Thereafter, at its regular semi-annual meeting on March 17, 1987, the Conference concurred in the Council's determination and certified the report and record to the House for consideration of impeachment.

2. The House Inquiry

The Conference certification and an implementing resolution were also referred to the House Committee on the Judiciary, promptly after the Conference issued its certificate in March 1987. Shortly after the committee had retained special counsel and referred the inquiry to this Criminal Justice Subcommittee, Judge Hastings expressed his desire to have his counsel participate in the investigative phase of the inquiry in order to assure that the inquiry was balanced and that it explored areas that the three-and-a-half-year judicial investigation had failed to address. Those letters identified House precedents for the conduct of impeachment inquiries into accusations against a judge supporting these requests.

The Chairmen of the House Committee and Subcommittee rejected those requests, assuring the judge, however, that his rights would "be fully protected." They advised that the Subcommittee had not "adopted rules governing formal proceedings for the conduct of this inquiry" and concluded that the judge's concerns over "matters relating to procedures" could "be more appropriately considered when such rules are formulated."

As it developed, the Subcommittee never adopted rules for the inquiry. The Subcommittee scheduled its hearings to begin on May 18, 1988. As of May 2, its special counsel advised counsel for the judge that the Subcommittee had not adopted or decided upon procedures for the hearings. Thereafter, special counsel sporadically advised counsel for the judge by telephone of the procedures the Subcommittee would apply, the final call coming at 5:30 p.m. on May 17, 1988, the evening before the hearings began.

The procedures used at those hearings were unprecedented. The rules of evidence were not applied, and counsel for Judge Hastings were prohibited from making objections. As a result, the testimony presented by the principal witness before the Subcommittee represented the most dramatic violation of hearsay principles since the impeachment trial of Sir Walter Raleigh in 1603. John Doar, chief counsel to the Investigating Committee, testified for two-and-a-half days, summarizing the testimony that the committee had heard and had seen which supported the conclusions contained in its report. Judge Hastings submitted a list of seventy persons and asked that they be called as witnesses so that avenues identified, but not pursued, by the Investigating Committee or in the pre-hearing phase of the inquiry might finally be explored and that other matters in his defense might be developed. The Subcommittee called only two, and those were persons whose information was relevant only to the "improper disclosure" accusations made in Article XVI.

III. THE CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES AND THEIR APPLICATION

It is against this backdrop that the Senate must consider whether the accusations made in the first fifteen articles should be retried now before the Senate. We submit that any fair view of the Constitution, its history, and the contemporary need to restore the separation of powers necessary for the proper functioning of all three branches dictates that they should not. We identify and develop the constitutional principles and policies that compel this conclusion below.

A. Fundamental fairness to the accused requires that the articles be dismissed

1. The Constitution, its History, the Framers' Intent, and Established Jurisprudence are Clear: Double Jeopardy Applies and Bars a Second Trial of An Acquitted Judge on Accusations that a Jury Rejected.

The Constitution explicitly addresses the application of the prohibitions against double jeopardy in cases of impeachment. It creates an express exception for a "party convicted" of an impeachable offense. It creates no exception for a party acquitted. Moreover, the House initially proposed that a general exception for "Cases of Impeachment" be made in the double jeopardy clause to be included in the Bill of Rights. The Senate rejected that proposal, and the House receded. The exception was deleted, and the double jeopardy clause in the Bill of Rights, as adopted, contains no provision that would justify engrafting an exception for a party acquitted.

Unlike former Judge Claiborne, Judge Hastings is a party acquitted. The reports that the judiciary and the House have issued to justify the impeachment of Judge Hastings suggest that this distinction should make no difference and do not address the relevent constitutional provisions or the history that led to their adoption. For that reason they are developed in some detail here.

a. Relevant Constititional Provisions and History. The Constitution expressly classifies cases of impeachment as criminal in nature. The standard for impeachment is the English criminal standard: "The President, Vice President and all Civil Officers of the United States, shall be removed from Office on Impeachment for, and Conviction of, Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors." U.S. Const. Art. II, § 4.[18] The need to create exceptions in cases of impeachment to rights accorded the accused in ordinary criminal cases was recognized and made explicit: "The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by jury." Art, III, § 2, cl. 3. "The President . . . shall have the Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for all Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment." Art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

The general applicability of the double jeopardy prohibition was also recognized, and one and only one exception was made. That was the exception for parties convicted:

"Judgments in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust, or Profit under the United States: but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law."

Art. I, § 3, cl. 7. The Constitution did not and does not include any exception to the general principle for a party acquitted. The intent evidenced by the language of the Constitution is confirmed by the history that led to the adoption of these provisions.

Three historical facts are not in dispute. Cases of impeachment originated as and remained criminal cases in England. The framers were aware of the nature and essential characteristics of cases of impeachment in England and in the thirteen states when they drafted our Constitution. They intended the nature and characteristics of cases of impeachment be the same under our Constitution, with specific changes adopted to limit the jurisdiction and powers of the House and Senate in order to eliminate abuses that had occurred in English impeachment cases.[19]

Three aspects of that history bear on the issues now before the Senate. First, the framers considered and rejected proposals that the power of impeachment extend to non-criminal charges, such as those alleging "malpractice or neglect of duty." They also rejected the suggestion that "maladministrations" be added to the standard for impeachment. Instead, the standard adopted was the criminal standard, exactly as it had been established in England: "Treason, Bribery, and other high Crimes and Misdemeanors."[20]

Second, the framers understood, however, that the English impeachment standard embraced political offenses against the state, offenses that were not recognized as crimes at common law. They understood that the House and Senate might also confront abuses by officeholders that should be recognized as offenses against the State in cases of impeachment, even though the challenged conduct might not also constitute statutory crimes which could be prosecuted in the courts.[21]

Third, although the framers recognized the need to preserve the flexibility established by English practice, they also sought to eliminate two abuses that had marked English practice in impeachement cases. Persons other than officeholders could be and had been impeached by the House of Commons and tried and convicted by the House of Lords. More important, the House of Lords had exercised the power to impose the full range of penal sanctions, including the death penalty, upon persons convicted of "offenses against the state" in impeachement trials for conduct that would not have constituted crimes under established common law principles.[22]

The framers sought to minimize the potential for abuse in three ways. They limited the class of persons subject to impeachment to officers of the United States—"The President, Vice President, and all Civil Officers. . . ." They also sought to protect the accused from political passion and bias by raising the standard that was required for conviction: From the simple majority required in the House of Lords to a requirement that ". . . no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present." U.S. Const., art. I, § 3, cl. 6. More important, they limited the punishment the Senate might impose to ". . . removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States. . ."

The apparent meaning established by the language and history of these provisions is confirmed by the explanations Hamilton provided in The Federalist. Hamilton confirmed the framers' understanding that cases of impeachement were cases in which the holder of an office of honor and trust was accused of a serious offense and made liable to severe punishment. Hamilton also made it clear that the framers drafted specific provisions to provide adequate protection for the innocent accused; to limit the severity of the punishment that could be imposed upon those convicted of an offense against the state which did not also constitute an offense under the criminal statutes; and, finally, to assure that those convicted of offenses that were crimes under both constitutional and statutory standards could be held accountable in full measure. Hamilton's views have not been recalled thus far by those who have urged that the present case is proper; they should be recalled for those who must decide the present motion.

Hamilton devoted the Federalist No. 65 to explaining and defending the framers' decision that "the sole power to try all Impeachments" should be assigned to the Senate. He was confronting arguments that placing the judicial power to sit as a court of impeachment in the legislative branch was inconsistent with the separation of powers model and that the power should have been allocated to the Supreme Court. He argued in the first instance that the political nature of the offense, the passions that would be aroused, and the potential consequences to the accused were such that a body more numerous than the Supreme Court and whose members had the security to do impartial justice in the face of public clamor and political pressure was necessary:

"Where else, than in the Senate could have been found a tribunal sufficiently dignified, or sufficiently independent? What other body would be likely to feel confidence enough in its own situation, to preserve unawed and uninfluenced the necessary impartiality between an individual accused, and the representatives of the people, his accusers?

* * * * *

"The necessity of a numerous court for the trial of impeachments is equally dictated by the nature of the proceeding. This can never be tied down by such strict rules, either in the delineation of the offense by the prosecutors, or in the construction of it by the Judges, as in common cases serve to limit the discretion of courts in favor of personal security. There will be no jury to stand between the Judges, who are to pronounce the sentence of the law and the party who is to receive or suffer it. The awful discretion, which a court of impeachments must necessarily have, to doom to honor or to infamy the most confidential and the most distinguished characters of the community, forbids the commitment of the trust to a small number of persons."[23]

Hamilton's second argument drew directly upon the express exception to the protecton against double jeopardy that the framers had created for a "party convicted". Because a party convicted and punished in one forum might be subject to a second trial and further punishment, the proceedings had to be conducted in separate branches.

"These considerations seem alone sufficient to authorise a conclusion, that the Supreme Court would have been an improper substitute for the Senate, as a court of impeachments. There remains a further consideration which will not a little strengthen this conclusion. It is this. The punishment, which may be the consequence of conviction upon impeachment, is not to terminate the chastisement of the offender. After having been sentenced to a perpetual ostracism from the esteem and confidence, and honors and emoluments of his country; he will still be liable to prosecution and punishment in the ordinary course of law. Would it be proper that the persons, who had disposed of his fame and his most valuable rights as a citizen in one trial, should in another trial, for the same offence, be also the disposers of his life and his fortune? . . . Those, who know any thing of human nature, . . . will be at no loss to perceive, that by making the same persons Judges in both cases, those who might happen to be the objects of prosecution would in a great measure be deprived of the double security, intended them by a double trial. The loss of life and estate would often be virtually included in a sentence, which, in its terms, imported nothing more than dismission from a present, and disqualification for a future office. . . ."[24]

Hamilton again refers to the limitations on the Senate's power in cases of impeachment in his defense of the proposed Constitution against those who decried the absence of a bill of rights.[25] In context, his reference makes it clear that the limitation on the extent of the punishment the Senate might impose was necessary to prevent those charged with non-statutory political offenses from suffering excessive punishments based upon ex post facto definitions creating offenses against the state. That reference provides further evidence that it was this limitation that provided the sole justification for a limited exception to the bar of double jeopardy—an exception for a party convicted by the Senate for an offense that was also punishable as a crime under established criminal statutes. The limitation on the Senate's power to impose penal sanctions did not, however, create any need or justification for a comparable exception for a party acquitted, and none was made in the Constitution as the framers proposed it and as the people adopted it.

This understanding was rather dramatically confirmed in the First Congress. Madison confirmed the framers' understanding that, absent an express exception, the protections against double jeopardy would apply in cases of impeachment as in other criminal cases. He thought a general exception was warranted. Under the language he proposed for a bill of rights, "Cases of Impeachment" would have been excepted entirely from the established protections against double jeopardy. As he framed it, the clause would have read: "No person shall be subject, except in Cases of Impeachment, to more than one punishment or one trial for the same offense."[26] The House adopted Madison's proposed language.[27]

The language adopted by the Senate, however, excluded the general exception,[28] and in conference the Senate stood firm. The House receded and the exception was deleted.[29] The language proposed by the Senate was the language that became part of the Bill of Rights adopted by the people: ". . . [N]or shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb." U.S. Const., amend. V.[30]

The historical evidence, the express language chosen, the contemporary arguments advanced by the framers, and the actions taken in the first Congress are consistent, and, collectively, they establish three propositions. Cases of impeachment were understood and intended to be criminal in nature. Although the precise extent of the rights of an accused in cases of impeachment may be ambiguous in some respects, the framers understood that protection against double jeopardy would apply, absent express exceptions. They twice considered whether and what exceptions should be made, and they agreed upon one and only one exception—an exception for parties convicted. Those propositions alone make it clear that the bar of double jeopardy must be recognized where the House seeks to prosecute a party acquitted on accusations that a jury has previously rejected.[31]

b. Due Process and Double Jeopardy. The Supreme Court has recognized that protection against double jeopardy is one of those guarantees that are so "fundamental to the American scheme of justice" that they are among the core protections embodied in the Due Process Clauses. U.S. Const., amend. V and XIV.[32] The Court has also regularly been called upon to determine whether particular proceedings are criminal in nature in order to determine whether the protection against double jeopardy, or other protections that must be accorded the accused in criminal cases, must be available in those proceedings. The tests established by this jurisprudence, even in the narrowest view, confirms that, for purposes of double jeopardy, cases of impeachment must be viewed as criminal in nature.[33]

The first and ordinarily dispositive test is whether those "establishing the penalizing mechanism . . . indicated either expressly or impliedly a preference for one label [criminal or civil] or the other."[34] The Constitution expressly and impliedly labels cases of impeachment as criminal cases, and the framers' intent could hardly be clearer. Whatever the scope of the conduct embraced, the Constitution requires the accusations be labeled "Treason, Bribery, or Other High Crimes and Misdemeanors." The framers thought it necessary to carve out express exceptions to the principles applicable to the general classes of offenses labeled as crimes for that sub-class of offenses that were to be handled as cases of impeachment: "The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by jury;" "The President . . . shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offenses against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment." The remaining language used confirms, by implication and expression, the intent of the document. If two-thirds of the Senators present concur, a "Person shall be convicted . . .", and a "Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law."

The labels chosen and the framers' intent are clear. Cases of impeachment are criminal in nature, and no implication to the contrary can fairly be inferred from the words chosen, the history considered, or the intent expressed by the framers. Double jeopardy applies in cases of impeachment.[35] It is equally clear that double jeopardy should apply in cases of impeachment. This is confirmed by an analysis of the function of impeachment and the policies underlying the protection against a second trial.

All proceedings in which the government may properly impose a sanction upon the individual must have a remedial purpose. Imprisonment and the death penalty serve the remedial purpose of removing the convicted offender from society and thereby protecting it from further acts of criminal misconduct. Criminal fines restore some or all of the costs society has expended to enforce the law and may serve other remedial purposes. Functional analysis does not depend upon whether the sanction authorized has a remedial purpose; rather it depends upon the nature and severity of the punishment that may be imposed upon the accused.

The sanction authorized in cases of impeachment is not merely remedial, it is also penal and is so classified in the Constitution. The Senate does not remove; it convicts (or acquits). Removal is merely established as the minimum consequence that follows from a conviction. But the Senate has power to punish further: It may sentence the convicted accused to a permanent "disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States." And those are the only punishments that the Constitution denies the President the power to relieve through the powers of reprieve and pardon.

In Hamilton's words, the Constitution confers upon the Senate sitting in cases of impeachment, "The awful discretion . . . to doom to honor or infamy the most confidential and the most distinguished characters of the community. . . ."[36] That sanction is penal, and surely those who have held positions of high honor must recognize that it is and was intended as a punishment most severe.

Under established jurisprudence, the nature and severity of the sanction that may be imposed in cases of impeachment confirm that they are criminal in nature. The sanction of permanent disqualification "involves an affirmative disability or restraint" and "has historically been regarded as a punishment."[37] "[I]t comes into play only on a finding of scienter," and its operation promotes "the traditional aims of punishment—retribution and deterrence."[38] Whatever its full scope, the sanction applies to "behavior . . . [that] is already a crime" and, with respect to disqualification, the sanction has no alternative purpose other than punishment that "may rationally be . . . assignable for it."[39] The functional analysis simply confirms that the framers properly classified cases of impeachment as criminal in nature, and that the House's attempt to reclassify them is improper.

The issue before the Senate is not merely a question of classification and consequence. The core policies underlying the protections afforded by the bar of double jeopardy are clearly applicable here:

"The constitutional prohibition against 'double jeopardy' was designed to protect an individual from being subjected to the hazards of trial and possible conviction more than once for an alleged offense. . . . The underlying idea, one that is deeply ingrained in at least the Anglo-American system of jurisprudence, is that the State with all its resources and power should not be allowed to make repeated attempts to convict an individual for an alleged offense, thereby subjecting him to embarrassment, expense and ordeal and compelling him to live in a continuing state of anxiety and insecurity, as well as enhancing the possibility that even though innocent he may be found guilty.

"In accordance with this philosophy it has long been settled under the Fifth Amendment that a verdict of acquittal is final, ending a defendant's jeopardy, and even when "not followed by any judgment, is a bar to a subsequent prosecution for the same offence." . . . Thus it is one of the elemental principles of our criminal law that the Government cannot secure a new trial by means of an appeal, even though an acquittal may appear to be erroneous. . . ."[40]

All three branches of the federal government have used the resources and powers of the State to lay a foundation for a second attempt to convict Judge Hastings for the offenses now alleged by the House. For seven years, they have subjected him to embarrassment, expense, and ordeal and have compelled him to live in a continuing state of anxiety and insecurity. They have sought to enhance the possibility he might be convicted by utilizing the information he had provided through his defense at trial to develop further evidence against him. They have enhanced the possibility of an erroneous conviction by accumulating evidence that supported their accusations and seeking to present it seven years after the fact, long after the record and recollections of those who might have aided the accused have been lost or dimmed beyond repair.

The ordeal and the anxiety should have ended in 1983. They did not. At the urging of the judiciary, the House seeks to evade the prohibition against appeals by collaterally attacking the jury's verdict in the Senate. That cannot be allowed.

The Constitution by its language, intent, and consequences establishes that cases of impeachment are criminal in nature. Established jurisprudence and underlying policy combine with the express language and intent to make it clear that the bar of double jeopardy does and should preclude the House from imposing the burden of a second trial upon an accused who has already been acquitted by a jury of the offenses it alleges.

The first fifteen articles, in essence, make only two accusations—that Judge Hastings participated in the 1981 conspiracy, as alleged in the original indictment, and that he presented false testimony and fabricated evidence at his 1983 trial, as argued by the prosecutors to the jury in 1983. The first accuses the judge of the same offense as that on which he was tried and acquitted in 1983. The second makes an accusation that the prosecutors made and the jury necessarily decided when it found the judge not guilty. A trial on either would require that the managers present and the Senate consider the same evidence as the prosecutors presented to the jury. Those are simply not accusations that can properly be retried. Established double jeopardy principles require that these articles be dismissed.[41]

The Constitution, its history, and its subsequent interpretations provide ample support for the view that double jeopardy principles are and should be fully applicable in cases of impeachment, with an exception only for those who are convicted of a high crime. The Senate may, however, dispose of the first fifteen articles in this case of impeachment on considerably narrower grounds, leaving questions concerning the full scope of the protection that must be afforded to a future case.

In the first instance, the present motion only asks the Senate to prohibit a second trial where the post-acquittal investigations have revealed no material evidence that was not fairly available to the prosecutors at the time the case was first tried. The House has not claimed that it has received or discovered any such evidence: It relies solely upon the fact that there was a large body of evidence available that the prosecutors did not develop or present to the jury at the first trial.[42]

In the second instance, the case against Judge Hastings remains today as it was in 1983—circumstantial. The prosecutors claimed then and the House only claims now that the evidence establishes a chain of events that can be marshalled to support an argument that the judge was a participant in Borders' corrupt scheme. A circumstantial case of this kind is, in its nature, a case that leaves open troubling questions that can never be resolved with certainty, only with finality.

This is not a case in which a post-acquittal investigation has discovered direct and dispositive evidence of guilt that had been concealed from the prosecutors at the time of the first trial. For that reason, this is not a motion that requires the Senate to determine how a case of impeachment that presented that issue should be resolved. The limited rule that the present motion requires the Senate to adopt may be stated thus:

"The core principles embodied in the concepts of double jeopardy and due process preclude a second trial in a case of impeachment, where the House seeks an opportunity to remarshall circumstantial evidence that was available to the prosecution, but not used, in order to seek a conviction on accusations that a jury has rejected."

That modest rule is surely compelled by considerations of policy as well as principle.

The lapse of time and the events that preceded the House's adoption of the Articles of Impeachment provide further grounds and illustrate the need for the proper application of due process principles in this case. They invoke additional constitutional principles evidencing the nation's commitment to fundamental fairness that also bear upon the proper disposition of this case. They also emphasize the narrowness of the precedent that will result.

2. The Lapse of More than Six Years Has Irretrievably Prejudiced the Judge's Right to a Fair Trial, and the Requirements of Fairness Mandated by the Due Process Clause Confirm that These Accusations Must Be Dismissed

The historical record and the text of the Constitution are admittedly less clear in defining the nature and scope of the other protections that must be accorded the accused in cases of impeachment. We submit that, at a minimum, these other protections must include those rights that have been deemed so basic to the American system of justice and so essential to fundamental fairness that they have been viewed as included within the protections mandated by the Due Process Clause, even in the absence of express specification.[43]

The constitutional text and history discussed above establish that cases of impeachment are criminal in nature and, thus, that the protections mandated are of the highest order. The severity of the sanction that may be imposed, a damnation to infamy and a lifetime banishment from any positions of honor and trust, would suffice to compel the same conclusion, however the form of the action were classified. The fact that the rights at stake are constitutional in source and significant to the accused, lifetime tenure and guaranteed compensation, and that those rights were guaranteed to achieve the fundamental public interest in maintaining the independence of the federal courts should foreclose any debate. In that context, the extraordinary delay in initiating this case of impeachment provides further grounds that require that the first fifteen articles be dismissed.

The government filed the indictment that publicly accused Judge Hastings of having been a participant in Borders' corrupt scheme on December 29, 1981. More than six-and-a-half years elapsed between the filing of the indictment that made the accusation and the exhibition of the articles of impeachment that reallege that accusation in this case. The prosecutors publicly accused Judge Hastings of having presented false testimony and fabricated evidence at the trial that ended in early February 1983. More than five years elapsed between the making of those accusations and the exhibition of the articles that reallege those accusations in this case.

All evidence necessary to determine whether further inquiry or action were appropriate was available to the public and the House shortly after the jury returned its verdict. Borders had been tried and convicted, and his conviction had been affirmed by December 1982. The testimony in that case had been transcribed, and the record was complete. The testimony at Judge Hastings' trial was also transcribed throughout the course of his trial, and the record there was also complete. Those records afforded the House advantages in determining whether and how it should proceed far in excess of those it or any holder of prosecutorial discretion enjoys in most cases.

The long interval has increased the House's advantages and prejudiced the judge's right to fairly confront the accusations beyond repair. The House has received such records as the Justice Department chose to gather and preserve as well as those gathered by the Investigating Committee. Some of the sources from which such records could have been obtained had record-retention policies that resulted in the destruction of relevant records long before the Investigating Committee began its hearings in 1985. For example, the House apparently intends to introduce a significant quantity of telephone records to establish that there was a pattern of telelphone calls between telephones in Judge Hastings' home and office and Borders' home and office in 1981 that is consistent with a pattern of contracts that would have occurred if Judge Hastings were a participant in Borders' Romano scheme.[44] The telephone company serving the District of Columbia area, however, had a two-year record retention policy for billing records and was unable to supply complete data for Borders' or other telephones in the District by the time the Investigating Committee requested them.

More important, crucial witnesses have died or their minds have become impaired, including two who appeared at the Judge's trial in 1983. For example: Alvoyd Merritt was a material witness at the judge's trial. Frank Romano was called so the jurors could see him and compare his appearance with that of Rico/Romano. Andrew Mavrides was one of the judge's principal counsel, until a nervous breakdown shortly before trial. He was directly involved in negotiations in which the production of the draft "letters for Hemp" was "delayed" to apply pressure on the government to produce Dredge, their informant, so that the materiality of his knowledge might be determined. Borders is reported, in the record, to have dealt with two underworld figures during the relevant period, Santos Trafficante in Miami and Joseph Nesline in Washington. Both men had information the House Committee and Judge Hastings viewed as material.[45] Merritt, Frank Romano (and his codefendant brother, Thomas Romano), Mavrides, and Trafficante are among the dead witnesses. Nesline is reported to have Alzheimers disease. All had material information that cannot be recaptured or fairly used.

Most important, the recollection of every witness has necessarily dimmed, and, for many, their testimony has been so often taken that it must be impossible now to determine whether further testimony would evidence recalled knowledge of the underlying events or merely recalled testimony or statements given on prior occasions. The central accusation concerns events that occurred in 1981, more than seven years ago. The House has compiled documents showing the contacts between Judge Hastings and Borders that are consistent with the conspiracy theory it advances. The House and Judge Hastings would have to call witnesses who once had knowledge of those events. The House's witnesses include FBI agents who have memoranda to refresh such recollections as they may have and others who have regularly had their testimony rehearsed before the Investigating Committee and in depositions taken by the House's impeachment staff. How is Judge Hastings to confront their testimony effectively more than seven years after the fact? Of greater import, how is Judge Hastings to reconstruct his own recollections and how is he to find witnesses who still recall the events seven years after the fact?[46]

One requirement of fundamental fairness embodied in the Due Process clause prohibits the government from delaying too long in bringing charges that accuse a citizen of having committed a high crime or misdemeanor. Standing alone, due process may require that the charges be dismissed if the accused can show the delay has caused actual prejudice to his or her ability to defend against the charges, and the government fails to justify the delays, even where prosecution is not barred by the prescribed statute of limitations.[47] The Supreme Court has made it clear, however, that Congress properly establishes an irrebuttable presumption of improper prejudice in adopting the federal statutes of limitations.[48] The delay in the present case exceeds any delay that could be reconciled with the protections mandated by the Due Process Clause or with the purposes those protections were intended to serve, under either view of the standard to be applied.

Congress has established that the irrebuttable presumption of prejudice arises, if offenses of the kind charged in the first fifteen articles are not filed within five years of their occurrence.[49] In one view, cases of impeachment are truly criminal, and the statutory limitation should simply be applied. Under a broader view of the constitutional nature of the proceedings, however, the Senate might view the statutes of limitations as declarations of policy creating a presumption that should be applied to give content to the constitutional requirements mandated by fundamental fairness and due process principles in cases of impeachment, absent compelling justification for the delay.

Dismissal of these articles in this case of impeachment would be required under either standard or view. The delay here implicates the precise concerns that have guided Congress in implementing the requirement of prompt indictment and trial through the prescriptions embodied in statutes of limitation and repose:

"The purpose of a statute of limitation is to limit exposure to criminal prosecution to a certain fixed period of time following the occurrence to punish by criminal sanctions. Such a limitation is designed to protect individuals from having to defend themselves against charges when the basic facts may have become obscured by the passage of time and to minimize the danger of official punishment because of acts in the far-distant past. Such a time limit may also have the salutary effect of encouraging law enforcement officials promptly to investigate suspected criminal activity." [50]

Moreover, the delay here has caused actual, apparent, and substantial prejudice to the accused within the meaning of that standard mandated by the Due Process Clause. The reasons proffered by the House cannot excuse the delay in initiating this case of impeachment if the constitutional requirement is to have any application in any case of impeachment. The only substantive reason proffered is that the delay was attributable in large part to the time consumed by the judiciary in the proceedings it conducted under the 1980 Act. These were not proceedings in which the judiciary was considering new accusations. They were proceedings to see whether additional evidence could be found to support accusations that had been publicly made and rejected by a jury.

The reasons proferred provide no justification for the delay in this case. The accusations that were the subject of the 1983 trial alleged offenses that were criminal by any standard. They were not accusations of the kind of over which Congress assigned primary jurisdiction to the judiciary when it adopted the 1980 Act. Congress cannot properly have intended that the House sit on its hands while the judiciary conducted a four-year investigation to determine whether the circumstantial evidence supporting criminal accusations against an acquitted judge could be expanded and remarshalled to support a claim that the jury was wrong and that the judge's testimony supporting his claims of innocence was false. Congress cannot properly have intended to assign to the judiciary the power to compile and recertify a record that would apply political pressure on the House to re-examine a jury verdict that had stood unchallenged for four years. Congress cannot properly have intended that the exercise of those powers should result in the Senate's being forced to conduct a protracted trial to determine whether additional evidence of guilt could be discerned in the tea leaves of circumstance suggested by evidence that was available, but not presented, at trial—evidence such as that provided in hundreds of pages of long-distance telephone records.

It is here that the House's view of the proper separation of powers precludes acceptance of the arguments it makes. Congress declined to delegate or assign the sole power of impeachment when it adopted the 1980 Act. The House retained the sole power, and with that power it retained also the sole responsibility for its exercise. The fact that the accusations and the evidence supporting them had been made part of the public record in 1983 eliminates any justification for the resulting delay. The House cannot claim it holds the sole power and simultaneously claim that delays occasioned by proceedings in another branch relieved it of responsibility for the timely exercise of that power in this case.

The accusations alleged offenses that constituted high crimes and misdemeanors under both constitutional and legal standards. The 1980 Act could not and did not confer jurisdiction upon the circuit councils and the Conference to impose the only sanctions possible, if such offenses were established. The House deferred to the judiciary to await an advisory opinion on whether it should exercise the sole power of impeachment here. Such a deferral may be politically attractive; it is, however, constitutionally impermissible, at least when it results in a delay of the magnitude present in this case. It is at this point that the requirement of fundamental fairness combines with those necessary to maintain the proper separation of powers to compel the conclusion that these articles must be dismissed.

B. Seven years of investigation and more than two million dollars is too much: reprosecution of accusations a jury rejected more than six years after the fact cannot be reconciled with the guarantees established to maintain the necessary judicial independence

1. The "New" Precautions for Maintaining Judicial Accountability That Have Been Implemented Over the Past Fifty Years Enhance the Senate's Role and Responsibility as the Final Guarantor of Judicial Independence

The framers proposed and the people adopted a Constitution that allocated the judicial power to a separate and distinct branch that was to be independent of the other two branches. At the time, this was a revolutionary idea; in retrospect, many have viewed it as the cornerstone which has enabled the Constitution to endure over the past 200 years.

The framers recognized that the judicial department would be the least dangerous and most vulnerable of the three branches of government.[51] In order to protect the federal courts that would exercise the powers of that branch and enable them to perform their constitutional function, the framers proposed to grant institutional protections to the individual judges who would serve on those courts and exercise their powers. The only express provisions adopted to maintain judicial independence were the guarantees of secure tenure and undiminishable compensation for the individual judge and the assignment of the sole powers to attack that security, the power to impeach and the power to try, convict, and thus remove, to the House and the Senate respectively.[52]

Hamilton expressed the framers' views succinctly:

"This provision for the support of the judges bears every mark of prudence and efficacy; and it may be safely affirmed that, together with the permanent tenure of their offices, it affords a better prospect of their independence than is discoverable in the constitutions of any of the states, in regard to their own judges.

"The precautions for their responsibility are comprised in the article respecting impeachments. They are liable to be impeached for mal-conduct by the house of representatives, and tried by the senate, and if convicted, may be dismissed from office and disqualified for holding any other. This is the only provision on the point, which is consistent with the necessary independence of the judicial character, and is the only one which we find in our own constitution in respect to our own judges." [53]

Those views are reinforced by the views the framers expressed elsewhere concerning the importance of judicial independence and the conditions necessary to maintain it.[54]

The conduct of officers in all three branches evidenced a shared understanding of the Constitution for the first 150 years, an understanding that precluded the presentation of the present issue in a prior case of impeachment. The executive never attempted to prosecute a federal judge before the courts. Apart from the established powers to review and issue such writs as were appropriate, the judiciary never claimed or attempted to exercise any powers to regulate or sanction a federal judge.[55] All complaints against judges were submitted directly to the House.[56]

The shared understanding first broke down in 1937, when the executive decided to initiate criminal proceedings against Circuit Judge Marvin Manton. The issue was avoided for a further forty years because the executive exercised its new found prosecutorial discretion carefully. In all but one of the cases, the government obtained a clean conviction. The one ended in two mistrials. The government declined to prosecute further, and the judge resigned to avoid an impeachment inquiry.[57]

The first of the conditions that have caused the issue to arise now and that make its recurrence likely arose in the post-Watergate era. The Justice Department formed its Public Integrity Section with a mandate to aggressively pursue investigations into the conduct of federal officials, including judges. Three federal judges have been prosecuted since 1980. In every case, the government has lost or dropped the major corruption charge. Two judges were convicted on secondary charges, and both were so embittered by what they saw as executive misconduct that they refused to resign, hoping to obtain a forum for their grievances in the impeachment process. One judge, Judge Hastings, was acquitted on all charges. It is that first acquittal that created the first condition necessary to force the Senate now to consider and decide an issue that had lain dormant for more than 200 years.

There had, however, been further developments that were necessary to establish and that have established conditions sufficient to assure the Senate would be forced to consider the issue. The intervening fifty years has seen the emergence of the "corporate judiciary" in which the Chief Justice and the chief judges became executives who managed the judiciary's affairs through a complex structure of conferences, councils, and committees.

Throughout this period, Congress sporadically considered proposals to expand the bureaucratic powers of these officers and organizations to include formal powers to investigate, sanction, or remove an offending judge, and the judiciary itself made one such attempt.[58] It was the passage of the 1980 Act, in view of the implementation of prosecutorial policies that viewed the risk of acquittal in judicial prosecutions as acceptable, that established the remaining conditions that were necessary to assure that this issue would come before the Senate.[59]

The issue now has come before the Senate in this case. The presence of the conditions that made that possible requires that the Senate re-examine its constitutional role in protecting judicial independence. Such a re-examination confirms that the challenged articles must be dismissed.

2. The Articles Must be Dismissed to Reassure Judges and Remind Officers in All Three Branches that Seven Years is Too Long, that Two Million Dollars is Too Much, and that One Trial is All the Constitution Permits

In the present case, officials in the executive branch used the resources of the Justice Department, the FBI, and the Grand Jury to investigate and develop their accusations against the judge. They rewarded an established criminal for coming forward with information and accusations. Thereafter, they launched an undercover sting operation to test the accusations. In that operation, they employed the techniques of electronic surveillance as well as an undercover agent to pursue evidence in support of those accusations. One does not need to consider the motives in order to conclude that the initial decision to investigate Judge Hastings and the later decision to arrest Borders before any money had passed were judgments that involved substantial risks and that may be justly criticized.

What has been done to Judge Hastings has been and may be done to other judges. For that reason, any federal district judge called upon to preside over hotly contested disputes between the citizen and the executive must preside aware, in some degree, that, "There, but for the grace of the prosecutor, go I." And the citizen may be forgiven if those circumstances create grounds which to his or her mind suggest that the judge's "impartiality might reasonably be questioned."[60] The Senate cannot here correct this problem; it can, however, consider it as it bears upon the proper disposition of this motion.

Similarly, the Senate need not here consider the motives or conduct of those who initiated, conducted, and pursued the post-acquittal investigations that created a record to justify the accusations that have now come before the Senate. It can and should consider whether a system that permits and encourages such extended post-acquittal investigations by the judiciary, conducted in a way that assures long delays, is consistent with the policies underlying the Constitution or, indeed, those that the Senate intended be implemented when it adopted the 1980 Act.

The Senate cannot avoid these issues in deciding the present motion. If it denies the motion, it will ratify and encourage the aggressive investigatory and prosecutorial stance the Justice Department and its Public Integrity Section have taken with respect to federal judges. If it denies this motion, it will also ratify and encourage the judiciary to initiate and pursue protracted post-acquittal investigations and to use the powers assigned by the 1980 Act to create a record that might generate sufficient political pressure to precipitate an impeachment. If it denies this motion, it will also send a clear message to every federal judge who harbors independent views that depart significantly from those held by the current executive and by the judges who exercise the powers of the judicial establishment: "Beware lest you incur their wrath, and moderate your views and conduct to conform to their norms: For theirs is the power. . . ."

The Senate will also send messages, if it grants this motion. It will inform officials in all three branches that the precautions established to maintain a judge's independence, as well as those established as precautions for their accountability, must be respected. It will inform those in the executive branch that the discretion to investigate or prosecute a federal judge must be balanced by a consideration of the likelihood and consequences of a failure.

By that decision, the Senate will also send a message to the judiciary. It will inform those who hold the powers conferred by the 1980 Act that their role is limited and that they are to be cautious before they use those powers to intervene in the impeachment process. It will remind them that the right to a jury trial was established as a check on the powers of judges, as well as those of the prosecutors. It will remind them further that the primary jurisdiction over the investigation and trial of judges accused of high crimes and misdemeanors remains in the Congress and that the Congress does not require their assistance in deciding whether the records compiled at a public trial that resulted in a judge's acquittal merit further study and investigation.

Most important, by that decision, it will send messages to those in the judiciary who are the objects of the powers conferred by the 1980 Act: "Seven years was too long; two million dollars was too much; and one trial was enough." That will at least assure them that the powers held by those in the executive and judicial establishments are not without limit, and not without end. That reassurance may be inadequate, but it is the only reassurance the Senate can now afford. We submit that it should be given now.

IV. CONCLUSION

The case against Judge Hastings was, is, and always will be circumstantial. From the outset, Borders and the FBI had a common objective: It was necessary for both that Borders demonstrate that he could cause Judge Hastings to take actions that would create the appearance that he was a participant in Borders's scheme. The FBI's decision to accept the judge's dinner at the Fontainebleau, without more, and its decision to arrest Borders at the scene of the payoff assured that the case would forever remain circumstantial.

A circumstantial case of this kind is one that in its nature forever leaves open questions that will be troubling. Some will find clear evidence of guilt in the tea leaves of circumstance, and the accused's denials and explanations will forever seem hollow and false. Some will believe the accused and his explanations and will forever question the motives of those who set out to create, and to prosecute on the basis of, the appearance of guilt shown by circumstantial evidence. Many will be troubled simply because there are questions that can never be resolved with certainty.

Society confronts many questions which can never be resolved with certainty, but which must be resolved with finality. The constitutional plan we adopted resolves that dilemma by assigning responsibility for deciding those questions with finality to institutions such as the jury. Many may remain troubled after the decision has been made because the questions have not been resolved with certainty; some will remain persuaded that the balance struck by the institution chosen was wrong. Under our constitutional plan, however, we do not permit those concerns to affect the finality of the decision made; they are concerns that are left to those who might urge change in the system for the future and to historians, commentators, and others engaged in the speculative enterprise. So let it be with Hastings.

The questions raised by the accusations made in the first fifteen articles can never be resolved with certainty. They have been resolved with finality. The prosecutors presented the circumstantial case to a jury and argued that it established guilt. The judge took the stand, proclaimed his innocence, and provided testimony and evidence that provided innocent explanations for the circumstances offered to establish his guilt. He was cross-examined thoroughly and his explanations were challenged fully. In order to convict, the jury would have had to find that the judge's testimony was false and his evidence fabricated, and the prosecutors so argued. The jury did not convict; it acquitted, and in so doing, it rejected the prosecutors' claims.

The framers were aware of the competing ends that had to be accommodated when they assembled in 1787. They knew that men entrusted with power would tend to abuse it. They also knew that the creation of a federal government that might endure would require that men be entrusted with power and afforded protections that would permit them to exercise it effectively. They proposed a constitutional plan that allocated the powers and created protections for those who would exercise them. That plan also included checks and balances to confine the exericise of those powers to their legitimate ends, insofar as they thought feasible, and precautions to assure the responsibility of the officials would exercise those powers, insofar as they thought necessary and proper. They struck a balance that they acknowledged was imperfect, but that they offered as the best their collective wisdom could offer. The people accepted the wisdom and adopted the plan, and for two hundred years it has worked rather well.

The framers explicitly addressed the competing ends that are the subject of this motion. They established a system by which judges might be impeached and tried for high crimes and misdemeanors and, if convicted, removed and appropriately punished for their conduct. In their view, those were the only precautions consistent with the necessary independence of a judicial character.

The framers also considered traditional tension between the end of subjecting the guilty to proper punishment and protecting the accused from the excesses of power in cases of impeachment. They recognized and labeled those cases as criminal in nature and created one and only one exception to the protection against double jeopardy that that classification mandated—that was a limited exception for a party convicted. The jurisprudence through which we have developed and given content to our commitment to fundamental fairness and to the importance of an independent judiciary confirms the wisdom of that decision as it bears upon the issues that this case of impeachment now presents 200 years later.

Judge Hastings was acquitted by a jury in 1983. The Constitution, its history, the framers' intent, the established jurisprudence, and contemporary needs—all speak with a common voice: Further prosecution or trail on the accusations made in the first fifteen articles is improper. The Senate should so declare by granting the motion and entering an order dismissing those articles with prejudice.

Respectfully submitted,

Terence J. Anderson, John W. Karr, William G. McLain, Ann B. Richardson, Robert S. Catz, Patricia Graham Williams, Counsel for U.S. District Judge Alcee L. Hastings.

FOOTNOTES

[1] The principled jurisprudence is to be found in the Supreme Court's decisions establishing that the prohibition against placing an accused twice in jeopardy of a trial for the same offense is so fundamental to the scheme of Anglo-American jurisprudence that its observance is one of the requirements of fundamental fairness mandated by our commitment to due process. The policies that have governed the application of this principle in other contexts confirm its applicability here. These points and the supporting authorities are developed below at 52-72.

[2] These points and the supporting authority are developed below at 72-83.

[3] That was the position taken by the House in an earlier day: "We take the position, first, that justice must be done to the respondent. The respondent must be protected against those who would make him afraid." Proceedings of the United States Senate in the Trial of Impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter, S. Doc. No. 200, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 610 (1936) (closing argument of the Hon. Hatton W. Sumners, Chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, as a Manager for the House).

[4] These points and the supporting authorities are developed below at 83-91.

[5] The Senate would then have to conduct additional hearings before the trial in order to resolve any factual disputes necessary to enable it to determine the extent to which the allegations made in the articles were litigated at trial and whether there is any material new evidence that was not reasonably available to the prosecutors at that time.

[6] The summary also serves two additional purposes that should be noted here. First, the political nature of the impeachment process required that the House Committee on the Judiciary publish a similarly detailed summary of its view of the evidence in order to support the recommendations it submitted to the House. See House Comm. on the Judiciary, Impeachment of Judge Alcee L. Hastings, H.R. Rep. No. 810, 100th Cong., 2d Sess. 13-31, 41-56 (1988) ("House Comm. Rep."). Fairness requires that a similarly detailed view of the evidence, from the standpoint of the accused, be available for Senators and others who care. Second, a Senate decision that, in the event a trial is necessary, evidence should be presented before a Rule XI committee is likely to deprive most Senators of the orientation usually provided by the parties' opening statements. The summary provided here may partly redress that deficiency.

We recognize that the records necessary to verify most of the facts reported here are not before the Senate, and for that reason, we adopt the style used by the House Judiciary Committee in its report. We do proffer that the statement is fully and fairly supported in the records compiled by the House and made available to us. Consistent with the view of acceptable procedure taken by the House, we are confident that its managers will note any objections to the facts presented and identify the basis therefor.

[13] Judge Hastings did not appear and was not represented at the Investigating Committee's hearings. He had filed a suit challenging the constitutionality of the 1980 Act and the proceedings against him more than a year before the Investigating Committee scheduled its first hearing. The Investigating Committee scheduled its hearings to begin after the challenge to the 1980 Act and its authority had been argued and submitted to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. In order to preserve his objections, Judge Hastings failed a Special and Limited Appearance with the Investigating Committee, objecting to its jurisdiction and declining to appear until his constitutional claims had been finally adjudicated. The Investigating Committee conducted its hearings in his absence.

[14] The impropriety of the prosecutors' objection and misrepresentation was confirmed when the FBI's case agent later acknowledged that, in addition to Dredge's report, the FBI also had independent information concerning Borders' claims with respect to other judges.

The central issue in prior impeachments and among historians and constitutional scholars has concerned the extent to which that standard embraces political offenses against the United States that are not also legal offenses under statutory standards. Because the articles that are challenged by this motion allege (or could be amended to allege) offenses that would be crimes under either standard, this motion does not raise that issue. See note 21 below.

[21] The practice of the Senate has placed this issue beyond serious dispute, if ever it was. See, e.g., Impeachment Inquiry Staff, "Constitutional Grounds for Presidential Impeachment," in High Crimes and Misdemeanors: Selected Materials on Impeachment, 1-26 (1973).

[30] The Supreme Court long ago established that the protection extends to all offenses that place an accused "in peril of legal penalties upon the same accusation," under the Constitution as it had at common law, not just to those that expose the accused to loss of life or limb. Ex Parte Lange, 85 U.S. (18 Wall.) 163, 172-73 (1873).

[31] The House expressed the view that cases of impeachment should not be viewed as criminal in nature when it adopted the challenged articles. House Comm. Rep. at 61-62. The historical record, however, demonstrates that the framers rejected that view in the express language chosen and the declared intent provided when they drafted the Constitution that the people adopted. We submit the position taken by the House cannot be reconciled with the text or intent of the Constitution. If we are in error, it is incumbent upon the managers to assume the burden of demonstrating how the Constitution, in text and history, can be reconciled with the House's demand that these accusations be retired. Absent such demonstration, we ask that the Senators honor the language and intent of the Constitution.

[33] After the House Subcommittee's hearings had begun, we were asked to identify one or more constitutional scholars whose views bore upon the application of double jeopardy in cases of impeachment. We promptly located a local scholar, Professor Thomas G. Krattenmaker of the Georgetown University Law Center, who was available and willing to appear. The Subcommittee later decided it did not wish to hear such scholarly views. Nonetheless, we proffered a summary of the views Professor Krattenmaker was prepared to express for the record. (After that proffer, the Subcommittee staff located a professor in Iowa who agreed to express a differing view. Neither was called to testify so that the differences might be examined and explored.) For the convenience of the Senate, we include a copy of the proffer we submitted to the House Subcommittee in the addendum to this memorandum.

[34] United States v. Ward, 448 U.S. 242, 248 (1984) (quoted language and summarizing applicable principles).

[35] The House, to date, has relied upon a revisionist view in which the language and intent of the Constitution may be largely ignored in favor of a functional analysis. Under that view, the House urges that cases of impeachment are purely remedial, apparently the constitutional equivalent of administrative proceedings before the Merit Systems Protection Board. In point of fact, the tests employed in a functional analysis under the Due Process Clause simply confirm that cases of impeachment are punitive, as well as remedial, and would have to be viewed as criminal in nature in any event. See notes 36-38 and accompanying text.

[36] The Federalist No. 65 at 441-42.

[37] Kennedy v. Mendoza-Martinez, 372 U.S. 144, 168 (1963). The issue the Supreme Court confronted in Kennedy and its disposition bear directly upon this case. Congress had prescribed that an American who left or stayed outside the United States during a time of war or national emergency should be divested of American citizenship. The petitioners had both admittedly violated the statute—one during World War II, the other during the Korean Emergency. They had been divested of their citizenship. They challenged the rulings on grounds that the statute prescribed a criminal penalty without requiring that the sentence be conditioned upon a conviction in a criminal trial. The Court agreed.

The Supreme Court was required to balance the legitimate power of Congress to exercise its powers to provide for the national defense and regulate foreign affairs—both admittedly important and legitimate ends, against the loss of a most precious right—American citizenship. The Court ruled that the end could not justify the means chosen because the sanction of loss of citizenship was clearly penal.

The Constitution authorizes the Senate to impose a similarly severe sanction against an accused officer—to strip him or her of the most precious rights of a citizen, the right to seek or "hold and enjoy any Office of Honor, Trust or Profit under the United States." The principles applied in Kennedy would compel the same conclusion here; the proceeding here is criminal in nature.

[39] Id. at 168-69. The Supreme Court reaffirmed the validity of these recommendations in United States v. Ward, 448 U.S. at 249.

[40] Green v. United States, 355 U.S. 184, 187-88 (1957) (citations omitted).

[41] The House has multiplied these two basic accusations into fifteen articles of impeachment. Whatever the other purposes this fragmentation may serve, the House has not suggested that there are distinctions that might properly be drawn among these articles that would save any from dismissal, if the principle of double jeopardy were found applicable to bar the retrial, in a case of impeachment, of an officer who had been acquitted of the central accusations upon the verdict of a jury. In this view, the Senate should resolve the present motion on fundamental principle. If the principle of double jeopardy bars a second prosecution of an acquitted official in cases of impeachment, all of the first fifteen articles should be dismissed. We believe this position is consistent with sound policy, and, for that reason, we have not burdened this memorandum with an extended discussion of distinctions that should make no difference. Should the House revise its position, we shall, of course, amplify the discussion in our reply.

[42] House Comm. Rep. at 65-66.

[43] We do not understand the House to be asserting any claim that the conduct of cases of impeachment need not comport with the essential requirements of due process and fundamental fairness. Nor do we understand the House as disagreeing with the view that the Due Process Clause embodies a commitment that the individual shall be entitled to those guarantees necessary to assure fundamental fairness, whenever the federal government initiates proceedings that may adversely affect his or her rights. Similarly, both parties seemingly agree that the extent of the protections and the kind of procedures mandated depend, in large part, on the nature of the proceedings and the importance of the rights that may be affected. The disagreements stem from their differing views of the nature of cases of impeachment and the importance of the rights at stake.

[44] House Comm. Report at 27-28. The available records also establish that the timing of the contacts isolated for the House is also consistent with the timing of other events that occurred in 1981 that were likely to have required communication between the two men. See Provisional Report, supra note 16, at 54-58. Other records through which further events might be reconstructed or recollections refreshed have been long since discarded.

[45] House Comm. Rep. at 13-18, 65-66, compare Provisional Report at 25-28, 96-118. Some of these witnesses have never been forced to testify; their roles are indicated only by secondary accounts. Their death deprives the judge not only of the right to seek their testimony now, but also of the right ever to confront them.

[46] The concerns are heightened by the House's decision to expand its allegations to include events in 1981 that the prosecutors did not raise at the trial in 1983. For example, the record indicates that several of the dates which the House Committee sees as significant coincide with NBA events in which Judge Hastings and Borders had roles. In 1983, other NBA officials and members might have recalled these events and provide accurate information. They have never been called to testify, and it is unfair to make Judge Hastings's defense dependent upon their present recollection of events they have not been asked to consider for more than seven years.

Lovasco,* 431 U.S. 783, 789-90 (reaffirming principle and indicating the test is whether compelling respondent to stand trial after governmental delay would violate fundamental conceptions of justice which define " 'the community's sense of fair play and decency' ").

[48] United States v. Ewell, 386, U.S. 116, 120-22 (1966) (statutes of limitation establishes primary means implementing constitutional protection against overly stale charges); Toussie v. United States, 397 U.S. 112, 114-15 (1970) (statutes to be construed in favor of repose to implement constitutional purposes); United States v. Marion, 404 U.S. 307, 322 (1977) (statutes establish an "irrebuttable presumption that a defendant's right to a fair trial would be prejudiced").

[49] 18 U.S.C. § 3282 (establishing general bar to prosecution of federal offenses, unless indictment is returned within five years).

[50] Toussi, 397 U.S. at 114-15, quoted with approval in Marion, 404 U.S. at 323. The application of the statutory bar that gave rise to that statement illustrates the importance of the policies declared and the need for their application here. There the Court had before it a citizen whom a jury had found guilty of having willfully failed to register for the draft and who had thereby avoided the possibility of being called to service. The Court recognized that there was merit in the claim that the application of the bar in such a case "is an injustice in a society based upon full and equal application of the laws." Nonetheless, the Court reversed the conviction and ordered that the indictment be dismissed in order to effectuate the overriding purposes established by the statutory definition of policy. Here, the Senate has before it a judge whom a jury acquitted of the accusations the House wishes to reprosecute. The intervening delay confirms that justice to society, as well as the accused, weighs heavily in favor of respecting that verdict.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, PLAINTIFF, v. WILLIAM A. BORDERS, JR., AND ALCEE L. HASTINGS, DEFENDANTS

Criminal No. 81-596-CR-ETG

Violations of 18 U.S.C. 371 (conspiracy); 18 U.S.C. 1503 (obstruction of justice); 18 U.S.C. 2 (aiding and abetting); 18 U.S.C. 1952 (Travel Act)

INDICTMENT

The grand jury charges:

COUNT I

1. From on or about September 10, 1981 until October 9, 1981 and at all times pertinent to this indictment, William A. Borders, Jr., defendant herein, was an attorney living in Washington, D.C.

2. From on or about September 10, 1981 until October 9, 1981 and at all times pertinent to this indictment, Alcee L. Hastings, defendant herein, was a United States District Court Judge in the Southern District of Florida.

Reproduced from "Appendix," Petition for Writ of Certiorari, Hastings, v. United States, No. 82-863 (U.S.).

3. At all times pertinent to this indictment, Paul Rico, a retired agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, acted in an undercover capacity for the Government and posed as Frank Romano, who, along with his brother, Thomas Romano, had been convicted by a jury on December 23, 1980 of racketeering charges after a trial before defendant Alcee L. Hastings and had been sentenced by defendant Alcee L. Hastings on July 8, 1981.

4. Beginning on or about September 10, 1981 (the exact date being unknown to the Grand Jury) and continuing until on or about October 9, 1981, in the Southern District of Florida and elsewhere, defendants William A. Borders, Jr. and Alcee L. Hastings did willfully and knowingly combine, conspire, confederate and agree together to:

(a) violate Title 18, United States Code, Section 201(c), to wit: the defendants William A. Borders, Jr. and Alcee L. Hastings did conspire and agree together corruptly to ask, solicit, seek, accept, receive and agree to receive, directly or indirectly, a sum of money for themselves in return for defendant Alcee L. Hastings being influenced in his performance of official acts as a United States District Judge; and

(b) defraud the United States of America and the people of the United States in connection with the performance of lawful governmental functions:

(1) of and concerning the right of the United States and its citizens to have the lawful functions of the federal judiciary exercised and administered free from corruption, conflict of interest, fraud and obstruction;

(2) of and concerning the right of the United States and its citizens to the conscientious, faithful, disinterested and unbiased judgments and actions of the defendant Alcee L. Hastings as a United States District Court Judge, free from fraud, corruption, partiality, dishonesty, conflict of interest, and improper influences.

5. It was an object of the conspiracy that defendants William A. Borders, Jr. and Alcee L. Hastings would agree to receive money from criminal defendants who appeared before Judge Hastings in return for promises that Judge Hastings would perform acts in his official capacity on behalf of said criminal defendants.

6. It was also an object of the conspiracy that defendants William A. Borders, Jr. and Alcee L. Hastings would perform and promise to perform acts to affect cases that were before defendant Alcee L. Hastings, including defendant Alcee L. Hastings making legal rulings and William A. Borders, Jr. giving directions to criminal defendants whom he did not represent, all acts done to facilitate improper payments made by these criminal defendants to defendants William A. Borders, Jr. and Alcee L. Hastings.

7. It was part of said conspiracy that defendants William A. Borders, Jr. and Alcee L. Hastings would receive $150,000 from someone they believed to be Frank Romano, in return for Judge Hastings reducing the sentences he had previously imposed against the Romano brothers.

8. It was further part of said conspiracy that defendant William A. Borders, Jr. would meet with someone he believed to be Frank Romano, and set the terms of the $150,000 payment.

9. It was further part of said conspiracy between the defendants that the terms of the $150,000 payment would be as follows:

(a) Defendant Alcee L. Hastings would have dinner at 8:00 p.m. on September 16, 1981 at a restaurant in the Miami area selected by the Romanos as proof of defendant Alcee L. Hastings' participation in the bribery scheme;

(b) The Romanos would make an "up front" payment to defendant William A.

Borders, Jr. on September 19, 1981 as demonstration of their good faith;

(c) Defendant Alcee L. Hastings would issue an order returning a substantial portion of property owned by the Romano brothers that defendant Alcee L. Hastings had ordered forfeited as part of the criminal penalties imposed against the Romano brothers;

(d) The Romanos would pay the remaining portion of the $150,000 payment;

(e) The Romanos would file a motion to mitigate the three-year prison sentences that had been imposing against them on July 8, 1981 by defendant Alcee L. Hastings; and

(f) Defendant Alcee L. Hastings would resentence the Ronamos and eliminate the prison sentences he had originally imposed against them.

OVERT ACTS

In furtherance of the conspiracy, the following overt acts, among others, were committed:

1. On or about September 12, 1981, in the Southern District of Florida, defendant William A. Borders, Jr. met with Paul Rico, posing as Frank Romano, and discussed the $150,000 bribe that would be paid to reduce the sentences that had been imposed by defendant Alcee L. Hastings against the Romano brothers.

2. On or about September 16, 1981, in the Southern District of Florida, defendant Alcee L. Hastings had dinner at the Fountainbleau Hotel on Miami Beach.

3. On or about September 19, 1981, in the Southern District of Florida, defendant William A. Borders, Jr. received $25,000 from Paul Rico, posing as Frank Romano, as good faith "up front" money of the $150,000 payoff.

4. On or about October 6, 1981, in the Southern District of Florida, defendant Alcee L. Hastings issued an order in which he ordered the return of a substantial portion of property belonging to the Romano brothers that he had previously ordered forfeited.

5. On or about October 7, 1981, defendant William A. Borders, Jr. telephoned Paul Rico, posing as Frank Romano, in the Southern District of Florida and requested that Rico come to Washington, D.C. to pay him the remaining $125,000 of the bribe.

6. On or about October 9, 1981, defendant William A. Borders, Jr. met with Paul Rico at a motel in Arlington, Virginia to receive the remaining $125,000 of the bribe.

(In violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 371)

COUNT II

1. The allegations of paragraphs one through three of this Indictment are realleged herein as though fully set forth.

2. From on or about September 10, 1981 (the exact date being unknown to the Grand Jury) and contining until October 9, 1981 in the Southern District of Florida and elsewhere, the defendants William A. Borders, Jr. and Alcee L. Hastings, acting unlawfully, willfully and knowingly and aiding and abetting each other, did corruptly influence, obstruct and impede and endeavor to influence, obstruct and impede the due administration of justice in that during the aforesaid period of time:

(a) Defendant Alcee L. Hastings did disclose to defendant William A. Borders, Jr. the substance of a judicial order in the case captioned United States v. Romano, 78-364-CR-ALH, that had not yet been issued by defendant Alcee L. Hastings;

(b) Defendant Alcee L. Hastings did give to defendant William A. Borders, Jr. advance notice as to when a judicial order in the case captioned United States v. Romano, 78-364-CR-ALH, would be issued;

(c) Defendant Alcee L. Hastings did issue an order in the case captioned United States v. Romano, 78-364-CR-ALH, wherein the content and timing of said order were consistent with the information defendant Alcee L. Hastings had previously given to defendant William A. Borders, Jr.;

(d) Defendant William A. Borders, Jr. did reveal to an individual he believed to be a defendant in the case captioned United States v. Romano, 78-364-CR-ALH, information that had been disclosed to him by defendant Alcee L. Hastings and described in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this Count; and

(e) Defendant William A. Borders, Jr. did instruct an individual he believed to be a defendant in the case captioned United States v. Romano, 78-364-CR-ALH, while not representing that individual and knowing that individual to have an attorney, to take various steps, including withdrawing his appeal to the Fifth Circuit, with all said acts done by defendants Alcee L. Hastings and William A. Borders, Jr. to manipulate and interfere with the judicial process in the case captioned United States v. Romano, 78-364-CR-ALH, for the purpose of advancing their own private interests.

(In violation of Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1503 and 2)

ADDENDUM B*

SPECIFIC PROFFER REGARDING FUNDAMENTAL FAIRNESS QUESTIONS

In a telephone conversation and in a letter delivered to Judge Hastings' counsel on May 23, 1988, Special Counsel's staff indicated that the Subcommittee wished to hear the views of a constitutional scholar with respect to the questions of fundamental fairness that are briefly discussed in Section Seven of the Provisional Report. Judge Hastings' counsel accordingly requested Professor Thomas G. Krattenmaker of the Georgetown University Law Center to review and address the relevant issues.

Professor Krattenmaker was approached for two reasons. First, as his attached curriculum vitae demonstrates, he is eminently qualified to render an opinion on the novel and complex constitutional questions presented by this proceeding.[1] Secondly, Professor Krattenmaker has had no previous contact with Judge Hastings, his counsel, or this case, and his opinions are, therefore, altogether unaffected by any preconceptions or biases.

After a necessarily abbreviated consideration of the issues presented, it is Professor Krattenmaker's view that the strictures of the Due Process Clause are fully and strictly applicable in an impeachment proceeding against a United States judge. He reaches that conclusion not only from textual analysis, but also from consideration of the functional requirement that impeachments be conducted in a manner that will protect the independence of the federal judiciary.

From that premise, Professor Krattenmaker concludes that the standards of proof are identical or virtually so in a criminal prosecution and in a subsequent impeachment proceeding, and that a judge's acquittal in a criminal trial, although not an absolute bar to a later impeachment, nevertheless raises a strong presumption as a matter of due process that the evidence presented to the criminal trial jury should not be reweighed and that the facts which were litigated in the criminal trial should not be redetermined, absent the discovery of proverbial "smoking gun" evidence which was not available at the time of trial.

Similarly, Professor Krattenmaker believes that due process guarantees limit the ability of Congress to base an impeachment upon stale evidence that was discovered and available long ago. Specifically, he is of the opinion that the present proceeding may well come too late, whether the measuring date is Judge Hastings' indictment in 1981, his acquittal in 1983, or the inception of the Eleventh Circuit investigation shortly thereafter.

Consequently, Professor Krattenmaker concludes that, based upon a combination of the prior acquittal and the substantial delay between Judge Hastings's indictment and the initiation of this proceeding, principles of due process raise the presumption in this case that the impeachment proceeding against Judge Hastings should not go forward, unless exceptional shortcomings are discovered with respect to the previous criminal trial.

If called as a witness or permitted the time necessary to prepare a more extended statement, Professor Krattenmaker would develop these views in greater detail.

The Magwood court characterized Professor Krattenmaker's presentation as "extraordinarily able and illuminating," and "a resounding tribute to the best attributes of the American system of justice." Id., at 1078.

[In the Senate of the United States, Sitting for the Trial of an Impeachment]

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OF THE UNITED STATES, PLAINTIFF, v. THE HONORABLE ALCEE L. HASTINGS, A JUDGE OF THE UNITED DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA, RESPONDENT

MOTION TO DISMISS ARTICLE XVIII

Respondent United States District Judge Alcee L. Hastings moves that the Senate of the United States enter an order dismissing Article XVII of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Representatives of the United States. The reasons why dismissal is required and the scope of the order that should be entered are developed below.

REASONS WHY THIS MOTION SHOULD BE GRANTED

There are two reasons why the Senate should dismiss Article XVII. First, the Senate should dismiss this article with prejudice on the ground that it fails to allege a separate "high crime or misdemeanor" within the meaning of the Constitution. Second, the Senate must dismiss this article, if it grants Judge Hasting's Motion to Dismiss Articles I Through XV Without Trial.[1] We develop these points separately.

A. Article XVII does not allege a separate offense, and the Senate should not permit the House to further dilute the protections that must be accorded an accused judge under the Constitution:

Prior to the impeachment of Judge Archbald in 1912, the House executed its function by alleging and undertaking to prove facts that stated specific and separate offenses against the United States. This practice enabled the accused to defend himself, confident that he would be acquitted unless the House proved that he had committed one or more of the specific offenses it had alleged to the satisfaction of two thirds of the Senators present on the day of judgment.

That practice clearly conformed to the intent of the framers. The framers had considered and rejected the English practice that permitted removal upon joint address by the two Houses of Parliament on the ground that such a legislative process was too political and undermined the necessary independence of officers in the other branches to whom the procedure would apply. The framers settled instead upon the judicial process of impeachment and trial for high crimes and misdemeanors as the procedure for removal that was consistent with the separation and independence necessary to assure the executive and judicial branches could exercise their constitutional functions properly.

Under that practice, the security of a judge could only be attacked if the House isolated acts of specific conduct that constituted one or more high crimes and misdemeanors within the meaning of the Constitution. This restriction did not, of course, restrict the power of the House to allege and the Senate to consider political offenses against the United States that would not have constituted crimes under statutory standards. Nor did it restrict the House from testing and the Senate from deciding whether acts that constituted specific breaches of good behavior should be also deemed offenses within the impeachment standard as it applied to judges.[2] Although this left judges vulnerable to a somewhat uncertain standard, it did protect them from impeachments based upon accumulations of dissatisfactions where no specific and substantial offense could be proved.

The traditional practice also accorded with the requirements of fundamental fairness to the accused and placed a modest, but healthy, restraint upon the House and, indeed, upon the Senate. The accused received notice of the specific offenses of which he was accused and was able to use the rules governing relevance and the use of evidence of other acts to limit the House's evidence to that which bore upon the specific offenses the House had alleged. Under that practice, the House did not allege the same offense in different forms. More important it did not combine the offenses in a manner that permitted cumulative voting in the Senate. The Senators were required to consider the specific offense alleged separately and to vote to convict or acquit on each based upon the evidence before them. Although few would doubt that a spill-over effect may have influenced some votes, the framers' intent and the accused's rights were honored in form and in substance, insofar as that was practicable.

The House has avoided these modest constraints in three impeachments it has brought to the Senate in this century. In each, it has adopted the practice of exhibiting a culminating article that subsumed and collected the specific accusations made in the prior articles and alleged them as a separate offense. The practice had no real consequences in the Archbald and Claiborne impeachments; Archbald was acquitted in any event, and Claiborne was convicted on other counts. Ritter is the only case in which the practice, albeit in a far more restricted form then here, was upheld. We submit that the consequences of the practice in Ritter, and the apparent encouragement the House drew from that success as reflected in the articles exhibited in this case, merit the Senate's attention and reconsideration.[3]

In Ritter, The House ultimately framed its accusations in seven articles. Six stated separate offenses; the seventh consolidated them all and realleged the combination as a separate offense. The Senate rejected Judge Ritter's motion to dismiss, and the case proceeded to trail. After the trial, Judge Ritter was acquitted of each of the six separate offenses. The votes of those who thought him guilty of one or more were permitted to cumulate in the seventh, and the judge was convicted and removed.[4]

In the present articles, the House has refined and expanded the practice. The articles allege only two independent offenses—that the judge was a participant in a 1981 conspiracy (Article I) and that he improperly disclosed confidential information acquired in the course of his duties in 1985 (Article XI). The fact that the judge was acquitted in 1983 of the offense alleged in Article I made it necessary for the House to allege that the testimony he provided at the trial that produced the acquittal was false. They have taken the necessity as an opportunity to convert what is essentially a single accusation into fourteen separate articles (Articles II-XV). In itself, this is not a practice the Senate should encourage.

The problems addressed here, however, focus upon Article XVII, and those are problems that the Senate can and should do something about. That article combines the prior sixteen articles in a single count and asks the Senate to consider them as a single offense.

B. Article XVII must in any event be dismissed, if the Senate grants relief under the motion to dismiss Articles I through XV:

The House asks the Senate to expose Judge Hastings to jeopardy a third time on three of the specifications included in Article XVII. Those three specifications simply reallege the matters alleged in the first fifteen articles in still a third form.

The first specification alleges that the judge did have "(1) a corrupt relationship with William Borders of Washington, DC." That simply restates in summary form the accusation made in Article I, the conspiracy article, without further particulars. The second specification alleges in summary form the accusations that the House made in Articles II through XV—that the judge presented "(2) repeated false testimony under oath at [his] trial." The third specification alleges in a new form the accusation made in Article IX—that the draft "letters for Hemp" which the judge produced reflected a "(3) fabrication of false documents which were submitted as evidence at his criminal trial", rather than constituting genuine documents as the judge had testified.

A trial on an article that includes any of those specifications is barred for the reasons developed in the memorandum that accompanied the motion to dismiss the first fifteen articles. Moreover, if that motion were granted, those specifications would have to be stricken to give effect to the Senate's order. The dismissal of the first fifteen articles and the elimination of the first three specifications would leave Article

[1] The principles that are developed in the Memorandum in Support of Motion to Dismiss Articles I Through XV Without Trial Based Upon 1983 Jury Verdict and Lapse of Time ("Article I-XV Mem.") also bear upon the issues raised in this motion. We adopted them here and will amplify their relationship at argument.

[2] The development of the meaning of "high crimes and misdemeanors" in American impeachment practice is summarized in Impeachment Inquiry Staff, "Constitutional Grounds for Presidential Impeachment," High Crimes and Misdemeanors: Selected Materials On Impeachment, 1-26 (1973).

[3] Arguments similar to those made here were properly advanced by counsel for Judge Ritter. See Proceedings of the United States Senate in the Trial of Impeachment of Halsted v. Ritter, S. Doc. 200, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., 39-43 (1936) ("Ritter Trial Proceedings").

[4] Some measure of the Senate's concern over this action is evidenced by the dispute over parliamentary procedures that erupted after the vote, Ritter Trial Proceedings at 638-41. A further indication may be taken from the fact that the Senate then unanimously voted, 76-0, not to impose the further sanction of the future disqualification, id. at 641.

XVII as nothing more than the mirror image of Article XVI. At trial, that article would be both unnecessary and improper. It would not only violate the prohibition against exposing an accused to two convictions for the same offense; it would also expose both the judge and the Senate to an unnecessary and foolish risk of inconsistent verdicts.

CONCLUSION

The foregoing summary should suffice to define the issues that should be addressed by the Senate at argument. It should also suffice to compel the conclusion that Article XVII should dismissed. If the managers can not secure the Houses objective in sixteen attempts, they should not be encouraged or permitted to insist that they are entitled to repackage their prior accusations as the basis for a seventeenth. If, as we believe, a trial is precluded upon the first fifteen articles, the managers should not be permitted to seek a conviction on a "catch-all," article, when there is nothing to catch.

More important, the multiplication of articles and the use of the catch-all technique reflect a practice by the House that undermines the integrity of the impeachment process as well as the rights of the accused. If the Constitution must be amended, the House and Senate should take the actions necessary to initiate that process. The Senate should not, however, join with the House in practices that have and will tactly undermine the integrity of the Constitution in the interim. Article XVII should be dismissed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, February 21, 1989.

Re impeachment inquiry of Judge Alcee L. Hastings.

Hon. WALTER J. STEWART,
Secretary of the Senate of the United States, Room S-208.

DEAR SECRETARY STEWART: Enclosed for filing is the Joint Statement Pursuant to S. Res. 480 and the Separate Statement of the House of Representatives Submitted Pursuant to S. Res. 480.

Sincerely yours,

ALAN I. BARON,
Special Counsel for the House Managers.

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting As A Court of Impeachment]

JOINT STATEMENT PURSUANT TO SENATE RESOLUTION 480

Pursuant to Senate Resolution 480, counsel for United States District Judge Alcee L. Hastings and the Managers of the House of Representatives do hereby report to the Senate as follows:

(1) There have been no stipulations agreed to by counsel for the parties.

(2) There has been no other agreement by counsel for the parties on matters which may facilitate the resolution of this impeachment.

On this day, the Managers for the House of Representatives have also submitted to the Senate a Separate Statement of the House of Representatives Submitted Pursuant to S. Res. 480. Counsel for Judge Hastings reserves the right to respond to that Separate Statement.

Respectfully submitted,

TERENCE J. ANDERSON,
Counsel for U.S. District Judge Alcee L. Hastings.
ALAN I. BARON
Special Counsel for the Managers of the House of Representatives.

February 20, 1989.

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting as a Court of Impeachment]

In re Impeachment of Judge Alcee L. Hastings.

SEPARATE STATEMENT OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES SUBMITTED PURSUANT TO SENATE RESOLUTION 480

Senate Resolution 480 directs counsel to the parties to the impeachment:

to work together to stipulate to evidentiary matters that are not in dispute, including stipulations as to documents, and [to] jointly report, by February 20, 1989, on the stipulations to which such counsel have agreed, and on any other matter which such counsel agree may facilitate the resolution of this impeachment.

The Joint Statement of counsel for the parties, filed this day, sets forth the absence of agreement on any such matter. However, in order to apprise the Senate of the exchange of proposals between the parties pertaining to matters that may facilitate the resolution of this impeachment, and the responses thereto, the House Managers respectfully submit the following:

(1) Proposed Stipulation of Documents, submitted by the House Managers on December 15, 1988.

(2) Proposed Stipulation of Facts, submitted by the House Managers on December 15, 1988.

(3) Statement of Respondent concerning stipulations, contained in Statement on Behalf of United States District Judge Alcee L. Hastings Concerning Procedures Necessary for a Fair Trial in the Senate in the Present Case of Impeachment at 8-9, dated January 17, 1989. (This memorandum was submitted to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.)

(4) First Request for Production of Documents and Other Tangible Materials, submitted by Respondent on December 28, 1989.

(5) Response of the House of Representatives to Respondent's First Request for Production of Documents and Other Tangible Materials, submitted on January 26, 1989.

(6) Proposal by the House of Representatives concerning Admissions, contained in Response of the House of Representatives to the December 12, 1988 Letter from the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, at 2-3.

(7) Statement of Respondent concerning admissions, contained in Testimony of Terence J. Anderson on Behalf of United States District Judge Alcee L. Hastings Before the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, at 10-11.

With respect to the House proposals on stipulations and admissions, the responses of Respondent listed above constitute the only written statements thus far submitted which relate to these matters.

Finally, the House Managers state that the original documents described in their proposed Stipulation as to Documents have been made available for inspection by the counsel for Judge Hastings, but that thus far, counsel has declined to begin that inspection.

Respectfully submitted,

THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
ALAN I. BARON,
Special Counsel.

EXHIBIT 2

[In the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment]

IN RE IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE ALCEE L. HASTINGS

PROPOSED STIPULATION OF FACTS

The House of Representatives, through its Managers, proposes that the parties stipulate to the following facts for the purpose of this action only:

1. Alcee L. Hastings was sworn in as a United States District Judge for the Southern District of Florida on October 22, 1979.

2. William Borders participated in Judge Hastings' federal investiture ceremony.

3. In 1981, William Borders was an attorney practicing in Washington, D.C.

4. As of January 1981, Judge Hastings and William Borders had known each other for eleven or twelve years.

5. As of January 1981, Judge Hastings and William Borders had a long standing personal and professional relationship, stemming, in part, from their active roles in the National Bar Association, an association of black attorneys.

6. The criminal case of United States v. Romano, Crim. No. 78-364, was assigned to Judge Hastings on October 24, 1979.

7. The Romano case was based on a 21-count indictment of two brothers, Thomas and Frank Romano. The charges against the defendants included conducting an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, investing racketeering income in a legitimate enterprise, theft and embezzlement from an employees benefit plan, wire fraud, mail fraud and income tax evasion. The charges were brought under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations statute ["RICO"] which required, under certain circumstances, the forfeiture of property illegally obtained.

8. In December 1980, Thomas and Frank Romano were tried and convicted by a jury with Judge Hastings presiding.

9. During the course of the Romano trial a proffer was made to Judge Hastings that Thomas and Frank Romano had a history of making payoffs and kickbacks.

10. During the course of the Romano trial, evidence was presented that the Romano brothers had embezzled more than $1,000,000 from an employee's benefit plan.

11. Thomas and Frank Romano waived their right to a jury on the forfeiture matter.

12. Following the conviction of Thomas and Frank Romano, Judge Hastings held hearings on December 30, 1980 and February 20, 1981 to determine whether certain financial interests of the Romano brothers should be forfeited because the interests were the product of racketeering activities and therefore subject to forfeiture under RICO.

13. On February 17, 1981, Neal Sonnett entered his appearance on behalf of Thomas and Frank Romano as additional counsel in the case then pending before Judge Hastings.

14. On February 20, 1981, Judge Hastings reserved ruling on the forfeiture in the Romano case, requested that the parties make further submissions and stated that he would schedule the sentencing after he had received the submissions by the parties.

15. On April 23, 1981, one of Judge Hastings' law clerks, Jeffrey Miller, informed James Deichert, the Assistant United States Attorney in the Romano case, that the sentencing in the Romano case would be held on May 11, 1981.

16. On April 28, 1981, a Notice of Sentencing was filed in the Romano case, scheduling the sentencing for May 11, 1981 at 1:00 p.m.

17. On May 4, 1981, Judge Hastings entered an order in the Romano case requiring Thomas and Frank Romano to forfeit a total of $1,162,016 to the United States. He adopted all of the proposed findings of fact submitted by the prosecution.

18. On May 11, 1981, Thomas and Frank Romano appeared for sentencing and their counsel, Neal Sonnet, requested a continuance in order to present additional arguments to the court. Counsel for the United States opposed the continuance on the grounds that five months had passed since the conviction and all legal issues had been fully briefed by the parties.

19. On May 11, 1981, Judge Hastings continued the sentencing of Thomas and Frank Romano to a date to be decided by the parties.

20. On June 5, 1981, Thomas and Frank Romano filed a motion for reconsideration of the May 4, 1981, forfeiture order issued by Judge Hastings.

21. On June 19, 1981, a three-judge panel of the Fifth Circuit issued an opinion in the case of United States v. Martino, 648 F.2d 367, in which the court held that in using the term "interest" in 18 U.S.C. Section 1963(a) "Congress did not intend to include . . . the fruits and profits obtained from a pattern of racketeering activity" and reversed in part a forfeiture order which had forfeited insurance proceeds received as a result of an arson.

22. On July 8, 1981, Thomas and Frank Romano appeared before Judge Hastings for sentencing. At that time the parties argued the effect of the Martino decision on the Romano forfeiture.

23. The briefs submitted by the parties in the Romano case prior to the July 8, 1981 sentencing hearing argued the effect of the Martino decision on the Romano forfeiture, and Judge Hastings stated at the hearing that he had read the briefs and was familiar with the Martino decision.

24. At the July 8, 1981 sentencing hearing, Judge Hastings confirmed his May 4, 1981 forfeiture order, stating "I will allow the forfeitures as previously set out by the Court to be maintained, and . . . a brief order will be prepared that will recite the reasoning of the Court, at least insofar as the new matters that have arisen, more specifically the cases cited by counsel up to this time."

25. On July 8, 1981, Judge Hastings sentenced each of the Romanos to three years imprisonment to be followed by a three-year period of probation and advised them of their rights to appeal.

26. The sentences imposed on Thomas and Frank Romano on July 8, 1981 were consistent with the recommendations of the United States Probation Office.

27. On July 14, 1981, Thomas and Frank Romano filed notices of appeal from the final judgement and order or conviction, and from the judgement of forfeiture issued from the bench on July 8, 1981.

28. 160. On October 9, 1981, at approximately 2:50 p.m., Cynthia Rogers called John Shorter and asked FBI Special Agent William Murphy to speak with Shorter. Murphy got on the telephone and said the FBI had a subpoena for William Borders' office records Shorter said he would tell Ms. Rogers to accept the subpoena.

161. In this telephone conversation from William Borders' office on October 9, 1981 at approximately 2:50 p.m., FBI Special Agent William Murphy told John Shorter that the FBI wanted to interview Judge Hastings and that they could not locate him.

162. In their telephone conversation on October 9, 1981 at approximately 2:50 p.m., FBI Special Agent William Murphy told John Shorter that if Shorter was able to locate Judge Hastings, he should give him Murphy's name, FBI Special Agent Dale Bird's name and the Washington FBI Field Office telephone number.

163. Later William Borders left his office on October 9, 1981 at approximately 12:02 p.m. Judge Hastings left that office, and walked to a book store, and from there to a clothes store, where he spoke with Brenda Russell, the owner, who was a friend, and used her telephone.

164. On October 9, 1981, after leaving Brenda Russell's store, Judge Hastings went to two luggage shops, and purchased a leather purse.

165. On October 9, 1981, after leaving William Borders' office and making stops at several downtown shops, at approximately 1:00 p.m. Judge Hastings returned to his room at the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel and ordered lunch to be sent up by room service.

166. Shortly after Judge Hastings ordered room service at the L'Enfant Plaza Hotal on October 9, 1981, Hemphill Pride came to Judge Hastings' room. Judge Hastings then ordered additional food from room service and the men had lunch together in Judge Hastings' room.

167. After arriving at the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel on October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings sent his suit to the hotel valet service.

168. Judge Hastings left the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel for Florida on October 9, 1981 without picking up his suit from the hotel valet service.

169. Judge Hastings left the hotel for Florida on October 9, 1981 without paying for the cleaning of his suit by that hotel valet service or for the room service charges that he had incurred.

170. Judge Hastings left the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel to go to Florida on October 9, 1981 without checking out.

171. The computer-generated record of all calls charged to rooms at the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel on October 9, 1981 reflect that only one call was made from the hotel to area code 305, which is the area code for south Florida. That call was made at "22:00" (10:00 p.m.), and was placed from a room other than the one occupied by Judge Hastings.

172. On October 9, 1981, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company ["C&P"] followed the procedure and practice of maintaining a computer record of all telephone calls from any guest's room at the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel. For each long distance call charged to a room, C&P furnished to the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel a computer run showing, among other things, the date and time of the call, the room number from which the call was placed, the area code and the telephone number called, and the charge for the call. The computer run lists long distance calls in sequential order according to the termination time of the call.

173. The C&P computer runs for October 9 and 10, 1981 show no long distance calls made from room 11229 of the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel until the morning of October 10, 1981 at 1:56 a.m.

174. The telephone records of Judge Hastings' residence and chambers, and the telephone records of Patricia Williams' residence, do not reflect any calls from the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel in Washington, D.C. on Ocober 9, 1981 being charged to those numbers.

175. On October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings was registered for room 11229 of the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel.

176. On Ocober 9, 1981, commencing at about 3 p.m. and continuing until after 3:50 p.m., Patricia Williams was interviewed by FBI Special Agents Wendy Loucks and Lawrence Harrigan. During the interview, Ms. Williams was interrupted once by the office receptionist, to tell her that she had a telephone call. The name of the caller was neither William Borders nor Judge Hastings. After taking the telephone call, Ms. Williams told the FBI Special Agents that the caller was a client inquiring about his upcoming hearing.

177. In an attempt to locate Judge Hastings, at 2:50 p.m., on October 9, 1981, FBI Special Agents left William Borders' office to go to the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel. They arrived at the hotel at about 3:10 p.m.

178. On arrival at the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel at about 3:10 p.m. on October 9, 1981, FBI Special Agent William Murphy called Judge Hastings' room. There was no answer. Murphy called several times over the next few minutes and got no answer. At 3:30 p.m., Murphy again called Judge Hastings' room. There was no answer. Murphy and the other FBI Special Agents accompanying him then proceeded to Judge Hastintgs' room, and knocked at his door. There was no response. At approximately 3:35 p.m. Murphy and the other FBI Special Agents left the hotel.

179. By around 3:00 p.m. on October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings was aware that the FBI in Washington, D.C. wanted to interview him.

180. Judge Hastings left the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel at approximately 3:35 or 3:40 p.m. on October 9, 1981.

181. On October 9, 1981, there was a 4:35 p.m. direct flight to Miami, Florida, leaving from Washington National Airport, with 14 seats available.

182. Washington National Airport is approximately four miles from the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel.

183. On October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings' car was parked at the Miami International Airport.

184. On October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings took a taxi, at a cost of fifty dollars, to Baltimore-Washington International Airport, from the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel in Washington, D.C.

185. Baltimore-Washington International Airport is 32 miles northeast of the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel and approximately an hour's drive in Friday afternoon traffic.

186. On October 9, 1981, at 4:37 p.m., Judge Hastings called his mother from a pay telephone at Baltimore-Washington International Airport and spoke for four minutes. He placed another call to her at 4:43 p.m. and spoke for two minutes.

187. On October 9, 1981, at 5:06 p.m., Judge Hastings called Patricia Williams at her home in Lauderhill, Florida from a pay telephone at Baltimore-Washington International Airport and spoke for one minute.

188. During the 5:06 p.m. telephone call on October 9, 1981, from the Baltimore-Washington International Airport, Judge Hastings told Patricia Williams to call him back at a different pay telephone.

189. When Patricia Williams called Judge Hastings back at 5:07 p.m., on October 9, 1981, at the Baltimore-Washington International Airport, Judge Hastings told her to go outside, find a pay telephone and call him back.

190. On October 9, 1981, at 5:22 p.m., Patricia Williams called Judge Hastings at a pay telephone at the Baltimore-Washington International Airport from a pay telephone in a shopping center near her home in Lauderhill, Florida.

191. After Patricia Williams called him at the Baltimore-Washington International Airport at 5:22 p.m. on October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings took her number, moved to another pay telephone at Baltimore-Washington International Airport and, at 5:24 p.m., called Ms. Williams at her pay telephone.

192. On Friday, October 9, 1981, at 5:31 p.m. Judge Hastings made a reservation to go to Fort Lauderdale, Florida on Delta Airlines flight 237 departing at 6:30 p.m. That flight was scheduled to continue on to Miami from Fort Lauderdale.

193. There is a handwritten notation on Judge Hastings' ticket for Delta flight 237 on October 9, 1981, crossing out Fort Lauderdale as his destination and substituting Miami as the final destination.

194. On October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings disembarked at Fort Lauderdale from Delta flight 237, which was scheduled to arrive at 8:38 p.m.

195. On October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings rented a car when he arrived at the Fort Lauderdale airport.

196. Prior to being interviewed by the FBI on October 9, 1981 in Lauderhill, Florida, Judge Hastings had not contacted anyone in the FBI that day.

197. When Mildred Hastings, the mother of Judge Hastings, was interviewed by the FBI on the night of October 9, 1981, at about 11:00 or 11:30 p.m., she stated that she had not heard from her son.

198. On October 9, 1981, Mildred Hastings lived with her son, Alcee L. Hastings, at 2970 N.W. 55th Ave., Apt. 1-B, Lauderhill, Florida. Two telephone numbers were provided to that residence. Telephone number (305) 486-0733 belonged to Mildred Hastings, and telephone number (305) 731-8176 was used by Judge Hastings.

199. At about midnight on October 9, 1981, FBI Special Agents John J. Simmons, Jr. and Lawrence K. Harrigan arrived at the home of Patricia Williams in Lauderhill, Florida, seeking Judge Hastings. They discovered Judge Hastings was there and he agreed to be interviewed by them.

200. When Judge Hastings was interviewed by the FBI at Patricia Williams' home late on the night of October 9, 1981, he denied any involvement with William Borders in a bribery conspiracy. He stated that he did not believe he had ever discussed the Romano case with Borders.

201. On Monday, October 12, 1981, three days after Borders' arrest, at 6:38 p.m. a telephone call was made from Judge Hastings' home telephone number to William Borders' home telephone number. The call lasted 2 minutes.

202. Grand Jury 81-1 (MIA) returned indictments against William Borders and Judge Hastings on December 29, 1981.

203. Grand Jury 81-1 (MIA) indicted William Borders on four counts. The first count charged Borders with conspiring to solicit a bribe in a pending criminal case, namely, United States v. Romano, in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 371. The second count charged Borders with corruptly influencing, obstructing and impeding justice and endeavoring to do so in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 1503. This count alleged that Judge Hastings had informed Borders of the substance and date of issuance of the forfeiture order he was preparing and that Borders had passed the information to a person, H. Paul Rico, he believed to be a defendant in the Romano case. Counts three and four alleged that Borders travelled in interstate commerce with the intent to carry out a bribery in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 201.

204. Grand Jury 81-1 (MIA) indicted Alcee Hastings on two counts. The first count charged Judge Hastings with conspiring to solicit a bribe in a pending criminal case, namely, United States v. Romano, in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 371. The second count charged Judge Hastings with corruptly influencing, obstructing and impeding justice and endeavoring to do so in violation of 18 U.S.C. Section 1503. This count alleged that Judge Hastings had informed Borders of the substance and date of issuance of the forfeiture order he was preparing and that Borders had passed the information to a person, H. Paul Rico, he believed to be a defendant in the Romano case.

205. United States v. Alcee Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr. ETG (S.D. Florida) was assigned to Judge Edward T. Gignoux on January 4, 1981, sitting by designation.

206. On January 19, 1982, Judge Gignoux issued an order in United States v. Alcee Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr. ETG (S.D. Florida), requiring the defendant to produce for the government, inter alia, those documents he intended to introduce as evidence in chief at the trial and requiring the government to produce, inter alia, all written or recorded statements made by the defendant.

207. Pursuant to the January 19, 1982 discovery order in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr. ETG (S.D. Florida), the prosecution produced various documents on January 19, 1982, including the tapes of the intercepted telephone calls between Judge Hastings and William Borders.

208. Pursuant to the January 19, 1982 discovery order in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr. ETG (S.D. Florida), the defense produced, on February 12, 1982, the documents it intended to introduce as evidence in chief at the trial.

209. No letters or any drafts of letters about or to "Hemp" or Hemphill Pride written by Judge Hastings were included in Judge Hastings' production on February 12, 1982 pursuant to the January 19, 1982 reciprocal discovery order in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr ETG (S.D. Florida).

210. During his representation of Judge Hastings, Joel Hirschhorn, counsel for Judge Hastings from January 12, 1982 to March 3, 1982, never saw any letters or any drafts of letters about or to "Hemp" or Hemphill Pride written by Judge Hastings.

211. Joel Hirschhorn withdrew as counsel for Judge Hastings on March 3, 1982.

212. On February 1, 1982, Judge Hastings filed a motion in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr ETG (S.D. Florida), to quash his indictment and dismiss the criminal proceedings against him for lack of jurisdiction on the ground that a sitting federal judge had to be impeached before a criminal prosecution could proceed.

213. On March 2, 1982, Judge Hastings' trial in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr ETG (S.D. Florida), was stayed pending the interlocutory appeal of the motion he had filed challenging his prosecution prior to impeachment.

214. On March 8, 1982, in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr ETG (S.D. Florida), Judge Gignoux granted William Borders' motion for change of venue of his trial, and ordered his case to be tried in Atlanta, Georgia.

215. William Borders was tried before a jury in Atlanta, Georgia from March 22, 1982 until March 29, 1982.

216. In the trial of United States v. Borders, (No. CR-82-75-A), neither William Borders nor Judge Hastings was called as a witness to testify.

217. The jury in United States v. Borders, (No. CR-82-75-A), convicted Borders on all counts on March 30, 1982.

218. Andrew Mavrides, an attorney then representing Judge Hastings, attended William Borders' trial in March 1982, as an observer, and ordered and received copies of the trial transcript.

219. On July 12, 1982, the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit upheld the trial court's denial of Judge Hastings' motion to quash his indictment and dismiss in United States v. Hastings.

220. In December 1982, Judge Hastings produced for the prosecution what he claimed were draft letters regarding Hemphill Pride, which he claimed to have written on October 5, 1981.

221. The letters produced by Judge Hastings in December 1982 consisted of four yellow legal pad sheets, in Judge Hastings' handwriting, comprising three letters, one addressed to Hemphill Pride, and the other two addressed to unspecified friends and supporters.

222. The following attorneys, inter alia, filed Notices of Appearance for Judge Hastings in United States v. Hastings, for the indicated time periods: Joel Hirschhorn (1/12/82 to 3/2/82); Andrew Mavrides (3/2/82) to 10/27/82); Patricia Williams (10/27/82 through conclusion of case).

223. The prosecution in United States v. Hastings submitted the letters produced in December 1982 by Judge Hastings to forensic experts in an attempt to date the creation of the letters. However, the paper and ink employed were such that it was not possible to conclude whether the letters were written on October 5, 1981, or at a subsequent time.

224. Tests conducted by forensic experts in 1982 and 1987 to reveal impressions other than visible writing on the letters produced in December 1982 by the defense in United States v. Hastings revealed nothing intelligible.

225. The trial in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-CR-ETG (S.D. Florida), was held in Miami, Florida, beginning January 19, 1983, and continuing until February 4, 1983.

226. In United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-CR-ETG (S.D. Florida), Judge Hastings was represented by himself and Patricia Williams.

227. In United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-Cr. ETG (S.D. Florida), William Borders was not called to testify.

228. In United States v. Hastings, Ho. 81-596-CR-ETG (S.D. Florida), Judge Hastings took the stand, appearing as the final witness in his defense.

229. Judge Hastings testified at his trial that he and William Borders did not agree to solicit a bribe from Thomas and Frank Romano.

230. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his criminal trial as follows:

Question: Did you agree with and conspire with William Borders to influence, in any way, the performance of your judicial duties?

Answer: No. I did not.

Question: Did you agree with Bill Borders and intend knowingly and voluntarily to participate in any kind of illegal undertaking?

Answer: None whatsoever. I did not do that, nor would I have done so, nor would I now.

231. Judge Hastings testified at his trial that he and William Borders did not agree that Judge Hastings would modify Thomas and Frank Romanos' sentences from a prison term to probation in exchange for the bribe.

232. Judge Hastings testified at his trial that he and William Borders had never agreed that Judge Hastings would set aside the May 4, 1981 forfeiture order as part of a bribery scheme.

233. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: Let me say it this way: Is not the gist of what Mr. Borders said to the man he thought was Romano was that he could eliminate their jail sentences for $125,000. As a show of proof, A, he'd produce you at any restaurant they wanted, and B, a substantial portion of property would be returned to them?

Answer: I believe that is the gist of the conversation.

Question: Of course, you had no idea that was going on?

Answer: No. I didn't.

234. The letters produced by the defense in December 1982 in United States v. Hastings, No. 81-596-CR-ETG (S.D. Florida), were never typed or sent out or shown to Judge Hastings' secretary, Betty Williams.

235. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified that William Borders telephoned and spoke to Hemphill Pride at telephone number (803) 777-7716 on July 24, 1981.

236. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: Judge, I would like to direct your attention to Item No. 11. Is there a phone call dated 7/24?

Answer: The second column. Item No. 11, dated July the 24th, is a telephone call to a number in Columbia, South Carolina, being Area Code 803-777-7716, and that call was for five minutes.

Question: Do you recognize that number?

Answer: The number is a number where Hemphill Pride may have been working. I am not certain if he was working there or not, but I have called that number myself.

Question: All right. And that call was made by Bill Borders, to Hemphill Pride on July 24th?

Answer: On July 24th, correct.

237. On July 24, 1981, telephone number (803) 777-7716 belonged to Andrew Chisholm, a business contact of William Borders.

238. In 1981, Hemphill Pride had no access to telephone number (803) 777-7716, which was in Andrew Chisholm's office.

239. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified that he telephoned and spoke to Hemphill Pride at telephone number (803) 758-8825 on May 5, 1981 and September 2, 1981.

240. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: Judge, would you tell us about the first call that I indicated with a little check on the front page, there?

Answer: The first call would be Item 2 under the second full itemization column, and it is a call . . . to Columbia, South Carolina. And the call is a five-minute call, and it is placed on September 2nd, at 11 something in the morning.

Question: And to whom was that call placed?

Answer: I know for a fact that this particular call was placed to Hemphill Pride.

Question: Did you speak with Hemphill Pride?

Answer: I certainly did.

Question: On that day?

Answer: I certainly did.

Question: All right. Now, would you seek out the second call that I have indicated on those toll records with a little check?

Answer: May 5th.

Question: May 5th?

Answer: '81. I spoke with Mr. Pride.

241. Telephone number (803) 758-8825 on May 5, 1981 and September 2, 1981 belonged to Carolyn McIver, a social acquaintance of Judge Hastings.

242. In 1981, Carolyn McIver did not know Hemphill Pride.

243. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified that he telephoned and spoke with Hemphill Pride at telephone number (803) 782-9387 on August 2, 1981.

244. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: Judge, I direct your attention to the August 2nd call.

Answer: Yes.

Question: The one for eighteen minutes' duration?

Answer: Yes.

Question: Would you tell us what time that call was placed?

Answer: 9:20 in the morning, to Columbia, South Carolina, to a place that I know is the number of Hemphill Pride, and it was a eighteen-minute call.

Question: And did you, in fact, speak with Hemphill Pride for eighteen minutes on August 2nd?

Answer: Yes I did; . . .

245. On August 2, 1981, the telephone number (803) 782-9387 belonged to Patricia Williams' former mother-in-law, Eleanor Golar-Williams.

246. In 1981, Hemphill Price had never been in Eleanor Golar-Williams' home, where telephone number (803) 782-9387 was subscribed.

247. Patricia Williams had telephoned Eleanor Golar-Williams at her home on eleven occasions between April 14, 1979 and August 2, 1981.

248. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified that he was surprised by William Borders' appearance at this Sheraton-Washington Hotel room at 10:00 p.m. on September 12, 1981.

249. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Answer: He [Mr. Borders] knocked on the door. I answered it . . . and I said words to the effect, "Some kind of surprise," without trying to remember exactly what I said, but I was surprised to see Bill . . .

* * * * *

Question: And you weren't waiting for Mr. Borders?

Answer: Oh, absolutely not.

250. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified as to why, on October 5, 1981, he told his law clerk, Jeffrey Miller, to prepare the order returning a substantial amount of Thomas and Frank Romano' property.

251. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Answer: . . . But the most pressing consideration was the complexity of the forfeiture aspect and his leaving the possibility of his not being there when I returned from the long trip with the exception of one day that I was going to come back to try a juvenile that was in jail.

And it is for that reason that I made the statement to him that I wanted the order done.

* * * * *

Question: What was the urgency to issuing the order on October the 6th?

Answer: Because Jeffrey was going to be leaving and I was going to be away for the month of October.

252. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified as to the meaning and purpose of his October 5, 1981 telephone conversation with William Borders.

253. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: At about 5:00 in the afternoon, you called Bill Borders on October 5th?

Answer: yes, I—

Question: Why did you call him?

Answer: I called him, then, because on October 4th, at some time in the afternoon, evidently he left a message for me with my mother . . . something about Hemphill.

And again it had to do with matters that he and I had been in rather ongoing discussions about . . . trying to raise money for him.

* * * * *

Question: Now when you used the word "letters," were you in fact referring to letters?

Answer: I certainly was.

* * * * *

Question: Mr. Borders goes "Ah-hah" and then what do you say?

Answer. I say "And everything's okay. The only thing I was concerned about was, did you hear if, ah, hear from him after we talked?

Question: And what are you talking about there?

Answer. I am referring specifically to the call that I received from Mr. Borders either on September 20th or 21st wherein he indicated to me he expected to see Hemphill again, and he was asking him specifically about his exact financial condition.

* * * * *

Question: And Mr. Borders, "See I talked to him and he wrote some things down for me." What did you take Mr. Borders to mean there?

Answer. The best I can think I took that he meant had to do with Hemphill's financial condition.

* * * * *

Question: Just so I am perfectly clear on your answer, you thought he was going to get some more information about Mr. Pride?

Answer: That is all I could have possibly had in my mind at that time, sir.

* * * * *

Question: Now, are these the letters to which you refer in your October 5th conversation?

Answer: Certainly.

* * * * *

Question: Judge Hastings, you said you wrote these letters on the Bench. On what date did you write these letters?

Answer: October 5th.

* * * * *

Question: All right. So we are 100 percent clear on this, you wrote these letters, Government or Defense Exhibit 29, from the Bench during the Santorelli trial on October 5?

Answer: 100 percent clear.

254. Fort Pierce is approximately 60 miles north of West Palm Beach, Florida.

255. Fort Pierce is approximately 60 miles south of Melbourne, Florida.

256. Fort Pierce is approximately 115 miles from Orlando, Florida.

257. On September 12, 1981, while in the Sheraton-Washington Hotel room of Judge Hastings, with Judge Hastings and others, Pearl Dabreau understood that they were waiting for someone before they went to dinner.

258. On September 13, 1981, while in the Sheraton-Washington Hotel room of Judge Hastings, with Judge Hastings and others, Donna Mendez understood that they were waiting for William Borders.

259. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified that he expected to meet William Borders at the Fontainebleau Hotel on September 16, 1981.

260. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: Judge, would you tell the jury why you went to the Fontainebleau Hotel on September 16th?

Answer: As I indicated, William Borders had indicated to me that he would be at the Fontainebleau Hotel during the dinner hour and for purely social purposes he and I were going to meet expressly for the purpose of socializing . . . I know for a fact that . . . William Borders indicated to me that he would be in Miami at the Fontainebleau Hotel September 16th.

And that is the primary reason I went there.

* * * * *

Question: Judge, did you dine at the Fontainebleau Hotel on September 16, 1981, to show your participation in a bribery scheme?

Answer: Absolutely not.

261. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified that on the afternoon of October 9, 1981, he called his mother and Patricia Williams in Florida from the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel in Washington, D.C.

262. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: . . . What did you do when you got down to your room?

Answer: The very first thing I did, walked straight into the room and picked up the telephone and called my mother.

Question: And when you called your mother, what did you learn?

Answer: When I called my mother, she was—I do not wish to exaggerate—I have never known her to be as hysterical as she was. It was just that simple. And I couldn't calm her down . . .

Question: Did you make any other calls?

Answer: Yes, I did.

Question: Had Hemphill arrived at your room by this time?

Answer: No he had not.

Question: Who did you call?

Answer: I called you [Patricia Williams].

Question: All right. And what happened there?

Answer: I called you at your office at the Economic Opportunities Commission here at the Dupont Plaza Hotel and I learned you had been interviewed by the FBI and the particulars, at least in part, as to what had transpired in your interview with the FBI.

And in addition to that I learned that you had called my office and had learned that the FBI was there for the express purpose, among other things, of interviewing my staff.

* * * * *

Question: You are certain that sitting in the hotel room after Mr. Pride gave you the news, that you made two long distance calls to Florida and you charged them to your room?

Answer: Right . . .

263. Patricia Williams wrote and sent a letter dated October 14, 1981, to Judge Hastings that stated as follows:

2401 N.W. 43RD TERRACE,
LAUDERHILL, FLORIDA 33313,
October 14, 1981.

Hon. ALCEE L. HASTINGS,
U.S. District Judge, 2970 N.W. 55th Avenue, Apartment 1-B, Fort Launderdale, Florida 33313.

DEAR JUDGE: I want you to know that I felt pride and joy as well as horror as a result of our telephone conversation on Friday, October 9th, when you called me from Baltimore and indicated that you required my legal assistance in confronting allegations of bribery which you had just learned were being directed towards you. I am especially pleased to know that you have since invited the legal expertise of Jesse McCrary and Delano Stewart. I feel certain that the best legal treatment conceivable will be administered to your case by this team.

Yours truly,

PATRICIA GRAHAM WILLIAMS.

cc. Jesse McCrary; Delano Stewart.

264. At his trial, Judge Hastings testified as to why, on October 9, 1981, he took a plane from Baltimore-Washington International Airport rather than Washington National Airport.

265. Specifically, Judge Hastings testified under oath at his trial as follows:

Question: Why did you not go to the airport, the nearer airport?

Answer: There was never any question in my mind but that at that time in the evening I thought that all flights that left Washington, D.C. at that particular point in time, either went through Atlanta en route to Miami, but I was absolutely certain that there was none until 10:00 p.m.

Question: Did you consider that there might be FBI agents looking for you at the National Airport?

Answer: It was of no concern to me had there been FBI agents at the National Airport, Dallas [Dulles] or at the Baltimore Airport . . . I had no desire or design to not cooperate with any authorities.

* * * * *

Question: And your thinking was there would be no flights from National Airport that would fly you non-stop from Washington National Airport—

Answer: That was my thinking.

Question: —to Miami? Even though two months ago you had taken one?

Answer: Yes, sir. That was my thinking at that particular time. I have traveled that way an awful lot, an awful lot.

266. Before departing the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel on October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings did not check on airline flight schedules to Miami or Fort Lauderdale, nor on seat availability on flights to those cities from either Washington National Airport or Baltimore-Washington International Airport.

267. On July 20, 1981, Judge Hastings had a reservation on Eastern Airlines flight 197 departing Washington National Airport at 5:30 p.m. for Miami, Florida.

268. On October 9, 1981, there were seats available on an Eastern direct flight to Miami from Washington National Airport, departing at 4:30 p.m. and arriving in Miami at 6:45 p.m.

269. On February 20, 1981, at 7:30 a.m., Judge Hastings called William Borders. The call lasted three minutes.

270. On February 20, 1981, the final evidentiary hearing on the forfeiture issue in the Romano case was held.

271. On April 8, 1981, the last of the initial set of memoranda relating to the forfeiture issue in the Romano case were filed.

272. On April 9, 1981, at approximately 10:40 a.m., Judge Hastings called William Borders' office. He left a message for William Borders to call and said he would be "at his office between 12 and 1."

273. On April 9, 1981, at 12:15 p.m., a call was placed from a pay telephone in the corridor of the third floor of the federal courthouse in Miami, Florida near Judge Hastings' chambers to a pay telephone in the lobby of the federal courthouse in Washington, D.C. The call lasted one minute or less and was charged to Judge Hastings' residence.

274. The call placed from a pay telephone in the corridor of the third floor of the federal courthouse in Miami, Florida to a pay telephone in the lobby of the federal courthouse in Washington, D.C., on April 9, 1981, at 12:15 p.m., was a call from Judge Hastings to William Borders.

275. On April 9, 1981, at approximately 12:15 p.m., William Borders' secretary made a reservation for Mr. Borders to fly to Miami the following weekend.

276. On April 23, 1981, the parties Romano were advised that the sentencing in the case was scheduled for May 11, 1981.

277. Judge Hastings called William Borders on April 30, 1981 (no time recorded), leaving a message saying, "at home at 6:30 only time he will be at home."

278. Judge Hastings called William Borders on May 1, 1981 and left no message.

279. Judge Hastings called William Borders on May 4, 1981, between 10:20 and 10:40 a.m., leaving an "urgent" message, "Will await call between 12 and 1 from you."

280. Judge Hastings called William Borders on May 6, 1981, at the home of Madeline Petty after midnight, from Madison, New Jersey.

281. In 1981, Judge Hastings was not a social acquaintance of Madeline Petty and, in fact, he did not meet her until his trial in 1983.

282. Judge Hastings called William Borders on May 7, 1981, at 4:30 p.m. and left a message for Borders to call him at 7:00 a.m. the next morning.

283. Judge Hastings called William Borders twice on May 11, 1981 before 7:00 a.m. at the home of Madeline Petty.

284. Judge Hastings called William Borders on July 5, 1981, at 8:35 p.m. The call lasted less than one minute.

285. Judge Hastings called William Borders on July 7, 1981, at 11:56 a.m. The call lasted less than one minute.

286. Judge Hastings called William Borders on July 9, 1981, at 11:50 a.m., and left a message saying, "Sat. morning Air Florida #91 at 10:45 from Key West. Will be departing at 1:00."

287. On July 11, 1981, William Borders met Judge Hastings in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, and the two of them drove to the home of Jessie McCrary where they spent the afternoon.

288. On September 20 or 21, 1981, William Borders and Judge Hastings spoke on the telephone.

289. Local 1922, located in Miami, Florida, is a chapter of the International Longshoremen's Association.

290. WAXY are the call letters of a radio station in Miami, Florida.

291. In 1986. Stephen Clark had been Mayor of Dade County, Florida for a total of 14 years, from 1970 to 1972, and from 1974 to 1986.

292. Peter Ferguson was Mayor Clark's campaign manager in 1985 and 1986, among other years. At that time he was also Marketing Director for Fiscal Operations of the Port of Miami.

293. Kevin "Waxy" Gordon was the zoning code enforcer for the city of Surfside, Florida in 1985 and early 1986, among other years. Sometime prior to 1985, Gordon had retired from his position as a code enforcement officer for the city of Miami, Florida.

294. In 1986, Mayor Clark had known Kevin "Waxy" Gordon since the late 1960s.

295. In 1986. Peter Ferguson had known Kevin "Waxy" Gordon for approximately 15 years.

296. In furtherance of an investigation into corrupt union practices at the Port of Miami, on or about July 15, 1985, the U.S. Attorney's Office in Miami, Florida applied to the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida for a wiretap pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2516.

297. In July 1985, Judge Alcee L. Hastings was the judge of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida assigned the responsibility of reviewing applications submitted pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 2516.

298. On July 15, 1985, Assistant U.S. Attorneys Roberto Martinez and Mark Schnapp and FBI Case Agent Geoffrey Santini met with Judge Hastings with respect to the application for the wiretap. A few days earlier, Assistant U.S. Attorney Martinez had submitted to Judge Hastings the affidavit accompanying the application for the wiretap.

299. The July 15, 1985 application for the wiretap and the accompanying affidavit stated that a wiretap was necessary because other investigative techniques had failed due to the suspicious and potentially violent nature of the subjects of the FBI investigation.

300. In the July 15, 1985, application and accompanying affidavit, the subjects of the proposed wiretap were identified as: the son of a leading organized crime figure in Cleveland, Ohio who was the Local 1922 member controlling bookmaking, usury and fencing operations at the Port of Miami; the secretary-treasurer of Local 1922 who was the son of the former office manager of Local 1922 (who, in turn, had been convicted of rackeetring, racketerring conspiracy, extortion and Taft-Hartley Act violations); a self-described member of La Costa Nostra; and Kevin "Waxy" Gordon, a zoning code enforcer for the City of Surfside, Florida, who asserted that through political connections he could exercise control over Local 1922 officials.

301. 18 U.S.C. 2517(5) requires judicial approval of the investigation of criminal activity discovered as a result of the wiretap if that criminal activity was not included in the original application for the wiretap.

302. The U.S. Attorney's Office presented Judge Hastings with weekly progress reports, dated July 22 and 29, and August 5 and 12, 1985, describing the information obtained from the wiretap authorized on July 15, 1985 and information obtained from other investigative techniques.

303. Assistant U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez met with Judge Hastings with respect to the First Progress Report on July 22, 1985, at which time Judge Hastings reviewed and signed the report and entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

304. Assistant U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez met with Judge Hastings with respect to the Second Progress Report on July 29, 1985, at which time Judge Hastings reviewed and signed the report and entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

305. The Second Progress Report, dated July 29, 1985, contains a description of criminal activity that involved the obtaining of illegal zoning changes and licenses for an amusement operation—a project that Johnny Rivero, a confidential source of the FBI, had discussed with Kevin "Waxy" Gordon.

306. Assistant U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez met with Judge Hastings with respect to the Third Progress Report on August 5, 1985, at which time Judge Hastings signed the report and entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

307. The First, Second and Third Progress Reports, dated July 22, 29 and August 5, 1985 respectively, contain references by the subjects of the wiretap, including Kevin "Waxy" Gordon, illustrating that they did not trust the telephones and were suspicious that certain persons were law enforcement Special Agents and cars spotted near their homes belonged to Special Agents.

308. Assistant U.S. Attorney Jon A. May met with Judge Hastings with respect to the Fourth Progress Report on August 12, 1985.

309. The Fourth Progress Report, dated August 12, 1985, sets forth a conversation in which Kevin "Waxy" Gordon told Johnny Rivero that he had Mayor Stephen Clark of Dade County, Florida "in his pocket," that Gordon had raised over $40,000 for Mayor Clark during his last election campaign, and that Gordon's buddy was the mayor's campaign manager.

310. Judge Hastings signed the Fourth Progress Report on August 13, 1985 and at that time entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

311. Assistant U.S. Attorney Jon A. May and FBI Case Agent Geoffrey Santini met with Judge Hastings with respect to the Fifth Progress report on August 15, 1985, at which time Judge Hastings signed the report and entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

312. The July 15, 1985 wiretap had been authorized by Judge Hastings for 30 days.

On August 15, 1985, in a handwritten statement on the last page of the Fifth Progress Report, Judge Hastings authorized a one day extension of the July 15, 1985 wiretap.

313. The Third, Fourth and Fifth Progress Reports, dated August 5, 12 and 15, 1985 respectively, include information that Kevin "Waxy" Gordon was working through several sources to get Johnny Rivero into Local 1922.

314. The Third, Fourth and Fifth Progress Reports, dated August 5, 12, and 15, 1985 respectively, state that Kevin "Waxy" Gordon was also attempting to find an appropriate location for the amusement operation proposed by Johnny Rivero.

315. On August 15, 1985, Assistant U.S. Attorney Jon A. May and FBI Case Agent Santini met with Judge Hastings with respect to an application for a 30 day extension of the wiretap and a supporting affidavit.

316. The August 15, 1985 affidavit in support of the application for an extension of the wiretap repeated almost verbatim the events reported in the First, Second, Third and Fourth Progress Reports, including all the statements about Mayor Clark.

317. On August 15, 1985, Judge Hastings signed the application for a 30 day extension of the wiretap and entered all the necessary orders, including an order placing under seal all the information contained in the documents that had been presented to him by Assistant U.S. Attorney Jon A. May and FBI Case Agent Geoffrey Santini on August 15, 1985.

318. On August 21, 1985, Johnny Rivero introduced Kevin "Waxy" Gordon to "Gino", an undercover FBI Special Agent posing as a Houston-based entrepreneur who wanted to set up the amusement operation. Gino was being impersonated by FBI Special Agent Richard J. Giannotti.

319. Assistant U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez presented Judge Hastings with the First Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap on August 22, 1985.

320. The First Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 22, 1985, reports a conversation, which took place on August 21, 1985, in which Kevin "Waxy" Gordon stated, when Gino expressed interest in the Hialeah area as a possible location for the amusement operation, that help from a friend of Mayor Clark who is in Hialeah might cost as much as $10,000.

321. Judge Hastings signed the First Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap on August 22, 1985 and at that time entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

322. Assistant U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez presented Judge Hastings with the Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap on August 29, 1985.

323. The Second Progress report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29, 1985, describes a meeting at the Miami Outboard Club, on August 22, 1985, during which Kevin "Waxy" Gordon introduced Johnny Rivero to Mayor Clark, Peter Ferguson and several other people.

324. The Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29, 1985, states that on August 22, 1985 Mayor Clark walked into the Miami Outboard Club, went over to Kevin "Waxy" Gordon, and hugged him, at which time Gordon introduced Johnny Rivero to "Steve Clark, the mayor."

325. The Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29, 1985, states that on August 22, 1985, at the Miami Outboard Club, after some general conversation and a game of pool, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon told Johnny Rivero that "Steve is going to take care of this Hialeah thing for us, since that's where Gino wants to be."

326. The Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29, 1985, describes that on August 22, 1985, at the Miami Outboard Club, Mayor Clark stated, "If you have any problems with that thing in Hialeah get in touch with me." Kevin "Waxy" Gordon then asked again for the name of the contact in Hialeah, and Mayor Clark gave him the name of a Hialeah councilman and added, "If you have any problems with him, get back in touch with me."

327. Assistant U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez presented Judge Hastings with the Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap on August 29, 1985 in the courtroom. Judge Hastings reviewed the report while on the bench and then asked Martinez to see him in the chambers.

328. Judge Hastings signed the Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap on August 29, 1985, and at that time entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

329. On September 5, 1985, Assistant U.S. Attorney Roberto Martinez presented the Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap to Judge Hastings in the courtoom. Judge Hastings read the report while on the bench and then called Martinez to the bench.

330. The Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated September 5, 1985, quotes Kevin "Waxy" Gordon as saying, in a conversation recorded by the FBI, that the zoning matters in Hialeah will be handled by Mayor Clarks' contact.

331. The Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated September 5, 1985, states that Kevin "Waxy" Gordon told Gino, in a conversation recorded by the FBI, that Gordon had made a connection with the Hialeah Zoning Commission through Mayor Clark.

332. The Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated September 5, 1985, states that Kevin "Waxy" Gordon reported to Johnny Rivero, in a conversation recorded by the FBI, that he had told Gino all about Hialeah and the mayor.

333. The Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated September 5, 1985, states that when Kevin "Waxy" Gordon, Johnny Rivero and Gino met to look at potential sites for the amusement operation, Gordon described a Hialeah councilman as "Steve Clark's man in Hialeah."

334. Judge Hastings signed the Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap on September 5, 1985 and at that time entered an order placing under seal all the information contained in the report.

335. The Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29, 1985, contains references by the subjects of the wiretap that they had specific concerns about Johnny Rivero.

336. The Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29, 1985, describes that when Kevin "Waxy" Gordon made contact with a union official to get Johnny Rivero into Local 1922, he was told that the official had contacted someone in the local chapter of the International Longshoremen's Association in New Orleans and had learned that the New Orleans union official had not heard of Rivero.

337. The Second Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29, 1985, states that as a result of the conversation with the New Orleans local, officials of Local 1922 became very suspicious of Johnny Rivero.

338. The Fourth Progress Report, dated August 12, 1985, states that after Kevin "Waxy" Gordon introduced Johnny Rivero to one of the Local 1922 officials, the union official called back and said he needed a "resume" on Rivero, "where he comes from and who he knows." The Union official stated that before they talk to anybody "they got to know for damn sure who they talking about."

339. The First Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 22, 1985, states that after Johnny Rivero provided the requested information, the union official stated that there were no positions available.

340. The Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated September 5, 1985, states that the day after Kevin "Waxy" Gordon met with Gino and Johnny Rivero to look at possible locations for the amusement operation. Gordon called Rivero and told him that Gino had better go back to Houston. Gordon explained to Rivero that the Hialeah councilman would be out of town for a week and that he did not know how the councilman would feel about giving someone he does not know "guarantees about zoning matters, it usually isn't done that way . . . It's an illegal act you know."

341. The First and Second Progress Reports after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 22 and August 29, 1985 respectively, explain that Kevin "Waxy" Gordon and another target of the FBI investigation had talked to Johnny Rivero about enlisting the aid of corrupt officers in the North Bay Village, Florida police department to bring in a shipment of cocaine.

342. The Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated September 5, 1985, explains that Johnny Rivero had introduced one of the targets of the FBI investigation to an undercover Special Agent posing as a cocaine smuggler interested in obtaining police protection from the North Bay Village, Florida police department.

343. The Third Progress Report after the extension of the wiretap, dated September 5, 1985, explains that Johnny Rivero had met with one of the targets of the FBI investigation and the undercover Special Agent who was posing as a cocaine smuggler in order to set the final terms for the cocaine shipment ($3,000 to each participant). Thereafter, the target of the FBI investigation introduced Rivero to one of the North Bay Village, Florida police officers.

344. The Second and Third Progress Reports after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29 and September 5, 1985 respectively, explain that Kevin "Waxy" Gordon had introduced Johnny Rivero to a boat captain who was available to bring in the cocaine.

345. The Third Progress Report, dated August 5, 1985, and the Second and Third Progress Reports after the extension of the wiretap, dated August 29 and September 5, 1985 respectively, explain that one of the targets of the FBI investigation had threatened to "blow away" a drug dealer who was later found dead on the beach, and the person who made that threat was staying at the apartment of the confidential source, Johnny Rivero.

346. Judge Hastings' sole source of the information about the actions and statements of Kevin "Waxy" Gordon and Gordon's relationship with Mayor Clark were the applications, affidavits and progress reports relating to the wiretap initially authorized by Judge Hastings on July 15, 1985 and which he extended on August 15, 1985.

347. In 1985, the Metropolitan Miami Action Plan ["MMAP"] was a community service organization promoting black-white relations in the Miami, Florida area.

348. On September 6 and 7, 1985, MMAP held its Third Annual Conference at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Miami, Florida.

349. On September 6, 1985, Stephen Clark, Mayor of Dade County, Florida, attended the breakfast meeting of the MMAP Third Annual Conference.

350. On September 6, 1985, Judge Hastings was the guest speaker at the breakfast meeting of the MMAP Third Annual Conference.

351. On September 6, 1985, the breakfast meeting of the MMAP Third Annual Conference was held in the Regency Ballroom on the Terrace Level of the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

352. According to the MMAP Third Annual Conference program, the breakfast meeting on September 6, 1985 was scheduled to begin at 8:30 a.m.

353. According to the MMAP Third Annual Conference program, registration for the conference began at 7:30 a.m. on the Terrace Level of the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

354. During registration for its Third Annual Conference, MMAP served a continental breakfast in the Promenade area on the Terrace Level of the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

355. In 1985, Monsignor Bryan Walsh was the President of Catholic Community Services and Catholic Health and Rehabilitation Services in Miami, Florida.

356. On September 6, 1985, Monsignor Walsh attended the breakfast meeting of the MMAP Third Annual Conference.

357. On September 6, 1985, at approximately 8:15 a.m., Monsignor Walsh arrived at the Hyatt Regency Hotel to attend the breakfast meeting of the MMAP Third Annual Conference.

358. On September 6, 1985, between approximately 8:15 and 8:30 a.m. and prior to the beginning of the breakfast meeting of the MMAP Third Annual Conference, Monsignor Walsh, Judge Hastings and Mayor Clark spoke briefly together on the Terrace Level of the Hyatt Regency Hotel.

359. On September 6, 1985, Mayor Clark called Peter Ferguson and asked him to get in touch with Kevin "Waxy" Gordon and to tell Gordon to meet the mayor at the Miami Outboard Club at 11:30 that day.

360. At 8:58 a.m. on September 6, 1985, the FBI recorded an incoming telephone call to Kevin "Waxy" Gordon from Peter Ferguson in which Ferguson said that Mayor Clark wanted to meet Gordon at "11:30 a.m. today at the Miami Outboard."

361. On September 6, 1985, in telephone calls recorded by the FBI, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon told Johnny Rivero and another individual that he would be meeting Mayor Clark that day.

362. On September 6, 1985, Mayor Clark and Kevin "Waxy" Gordon met at the Miami Outboard Club.

363. On September 6, 1985, at the Miami Outboard Club, Mayor Clark told Kevin "Waxy" Gordon that he had learned from an authoritative source that Gordon was using his name in Hialeah.

364. On September 6, 1985, at the Miami Outboard Club, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon denied that he was using Mayor Clark's name and denied he was doing anything wrong.

365. On September 6, 1985, at the Miami Outboard Club, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon pressed Mayor Clark to identify his source, and the mayor eventually stated that his source was Judge Hastings.

366. In a telephone conversation recorded by the FBI on September 9, 1985, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon told an individual about his meeting with Mayor Clark at the Miami Outboard Club on September 6, 1985, stating that "Steve called me over there to tell me that he heard from Alcee Hastings . . . you know a Federal Judge . . . There's some rumor that I was involved with . . . ah . . . Clark, Ferguson and a councilman from Hialeah on some deal . . ."

367. By September 6, 1985, the FBI was investigating union corruption at the Port of Miami, focusing on Local 1922 admission practices. This investigation focused on getting Johnny Rivero admitted into the union.

368. By September 6, 1985, the FBI was investigating zoning practices in the city of Hialeah, Florida. This investigation involved the undercover operation in which Gino was posing as a Houston-based entrepreneur interested in setting up an amusement operation in the Hialeah area.

369. By September 6, 1985, the FBI was investigating cocaine smuggling in south Florida, focusing on the participation of North Bay Village police officers who offered protection to the drug traffickers.

370. After September 9, 1985, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon immediately suspected that Gino was an informant or law enforcement Special Agent.

371. After September 9, 1985, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon began to investigate Gino by checking the physical location of Gino's office, by attempting to contact an individual in the telephone company in order to determine whether telephone calls made to Gino's office were being forwarded to another location, and by asking a friend, who was a banking official, to check Gino's credit references.

372. On November 20, 1985, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon executed a plea agreement in which he agreed to cooperate with the FBI and U.S. Department of Justice.

373. On December 18, 1985, at the Miami Outboard Club, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon recorded a conversation he had with Peter Ferguson in which Ferguson suggested that Johnny Rivero was an undercover narcotics Special Agent.

374. On February 17, 1986, Kevin "Waxy" Gordon died after suffering a heart attack.

375. On March 6, 1986, Mayor Clark took a polygraph test administered by the FBI. Mayor Clark was asked "Are you lying when you say Judge Hastings told you to 'Stay away from Kevin Gordon?'" Mayor Clark responded "No." This answer was determined to be truthful.

376. In March 1986, Mayor Clark and Special Agent Christopher Mazzella testified before a grand jury regarding the disclosure of confidential wiretap information.

377. On May 20, 1986, Eric Holder of the Public Integrity Section of the U.S. Department of Justice called Judge Hastings in order to interview him.

378. On May 20, 1986, in the telephone call with Eric Holder, Judge Hastings declined to be interviewed and stated that Holder would have to do whatever he planned to do without Judge Hastings' assistance and that he knew how the U.S. Department of Justice worked. Judge Hastings also asked Holder if he knew who Judge Hastings was.

Respectfully submitted,

The House managers have proposed stipulations that would have precisely that effect.[10] Moreover, many of those stipulations relate to testimony and documents gathered at proceedings other than the 1983 trial. Many are based upon testimonial assertions and documents whose foundation have never been tested by cross-examination. From the judge's standpoint, all are proposed by an adversary who has long had access to relevant materials that has been denied him. So long as those conditions continue, we cannot responsibly consider, recommend, or accept stipulations on the judge's behalf.

Against that background, we believe that it is unlikely that the parties will agree upon stipulations that can be published prior to trial. If the Senate is to impeach the jury's verdict acquitting the judge, it will only be after it has conducted a trial at which the testimony and evidence the managers now claim support the House's allegations have been presented through live witnesses who have been cross-examined in open court. Moreover, the extent of any agreement on stipulations that may be used and published at trial must necessarily depend upon the extent to which Judge Hastings and his counsel are satisfied that they have had fair access to all materials that may contain relevant information. The stakes are too high to suggest that Judge Hastings partake in a game where he does not have access to the full deck that is now in the control of his opponent. Unless and until that condition is satisfied, we could not responsibly review, recommend, or accept stipulations that might limit the judge's right to insist that the House carry its burden or to confront fully the evidence offered against him.

We have no desire needlessly to consume the time of the judge, the managers, or the Senate. We are prepared to work with the managers to achieve stipulations for use at trial that will enable both sides to prepare and the Senate to conduct a trial that is as expeditious as the demands of fairness will permit. We are not prepared to consider or recommend any stipulation that might later adversely affect any of the judge's rights during the trial, including his right to insist that the House meet the burden the Constitution imposes upon it. Until we are satisfied that we have examined all the available evidence and had an adequate opportunity to conduct such tests as may be necessary to eliminate any reservations, we must view all proposed stipulations as suspect, and we will lack the access necessary to resolve our suspicions.

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting for the Trial of an Impeachment]

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, OF THE UNITED STATES, PLAINTIFF, v. THE HONORABLE ALCEE L. HASTINGS, A JUDGE OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA, RESPONDENT

To: The Managers of the House of Representatives
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

FIRST REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND OTHER TANGIBLE MATERIAL

United States District Judge Alcee L. Hastings requests that, promptly after the 101st Congress of the United States has convened and the members of the United States House of Representatives (the "House") have qualified, taken office, and appointed managers to prosecute this impeachment on behalf of the House, the House deliver to his counsel copies of the documents and other tangible materials which are described below and which are in the possession or subject to the control of the House or its managers or staff. In addition, Judge Hastings requests that the House make all originals of such documents and other materials as are in its possession and control available to his counsel for inspection and, if necessary, testing.

I. Documents and Other Materials Obtained or Prepared as a Result of Proceedings Conducted Against Judge Hastings Pursuant to the Judicial Councils Reform and Judicial Conduct and Disability Act of 1980 (the "Act"). Judge Hastings requests that copies of the following documents and other materials be delivered and that originals be made available pursuant to this request, excepting only copies of documents delivered prior to or during the Subcommittee's hearings:

A. All documents and other materials transmitted by the Judicial Conference of the United States (the "Conference") to the House, the Speaker of the House, the House Committee on the Judiciary (the "Committee"), or the Committee's Subcommittee on Criminal Justice (the "Subcommittee"), or the regular or special staff of any of the foregoing, pursuant to the Conference's Certificate to the Speaker dated March 17, 1987.

B. All additional documents and other materials received by the House, the Speaker, the Committee, the Subcommittee, or regular or special staff from, at the direction, or on the authority of the Conference, the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit (the "Council"), a special committee appointed by then Chief Judge John C. Godbold in March 1983 (the "Investigating Committee") or its chairman or any of its members, or John Doar, chief counsel to the Investigating Committee, or his associate counsel or staff concerning Judge Hastings or matters alleged in the Articles of Impeachment or in the Answer to Articles of Impeachment. This request specifically includes, but is not limited to, the files and materials transmitted pursuant to two Resolutions of the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit Concerning the Judge Alcee L. Hastings Matter, dated September 25, 1987, and October 9, 1987, respectively, including those files, documents and other materials described in the exhibit appended to each of those resolutions. A copy of each of those resolutions and its appended exhibit is appended to this request marked "Addendum A to Request" and "Addendum B to Request", respectively.

C. All other documents and other materials concerning Judge Hastings or matters alleged in the Articles of Impeachment or in the Answer to Articles of Impeachment transmitted by or obtained from the Conference, the Council, Chief Judge Paul Roney, a special committee appointed to investigate a complaint by William F. Weld (the "Special Committee"), or the Special Committee's counsel, Sidney O. Smith and Bernard Taylor, excepting only those documents and other materials included in a volume entitled Record of Proceedings Before a Special Committee for the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit: In the Matter of a Complaint Filed by William F. Weld submitted by Judge Hastings, with the concurrence of Chief Judge Roney, at the Subcommittee's hearings.

II. Documents and Other Materials Evidencing Statements Made By Persons Who Have Testified or Could Testify Concerning Matters Alleged in the Articles of Impeachment or in the Answer to Articles of Impeachment. Judge Hastings further requests that copies of the following documents and other material be delivered and that originals be made available pursuant to this request, excepting only copies of documents or materials produced pursuant to section I of this request or delivered prior to or during the Subcommittee's hearings: All documents (including interview or other notes, rough drafts, memoranda, and transcripts) and other materials (including electronic recordings) that report, comment upon, or otherwise evidence statements made by persons who have testified or who have been interviewed or otherwise identified as having information concerning Judge Hastings or matters alleged in the Articles of Impeachment or in the Answer to Articles of Impeachment. This request specifically includes, without limitation, documents and other materials that report, comment upon, or otherwise evidence statements made by persons identified on the Composite List of Witnesses in United States v. Borders, United States v. Hastings, Investigating Committee Hearings, Special Committee Hearings, Subcommittee Hearings (Addendum C), the Revised Provisional Witness List submitted to the Subcommittee by Judge Hastings (Addendum D), and the List Other Persons Mentioned as Having Pertinent Information (Addendum E) appended to this request as well as by other persons interviewed or contacted who have never testified or been called to testify in any proceedings. This request includes rough notes, interview notes, recordings, memoranda, transcriptions of any of the foregoing, and signed or transcribed statements prepared or taken by: agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (the "FBI"); prosecutors or other persons employed by the United States Department of Justice; the chairman or other members of the Investigating Committee or of the Special Committee; John Doar, Stewart, Webb, Marta Campos, or others acting under Mr. Doar's supervision or at his direction; Sidney O. Smith, Bernard Taylor, or others acting under Mr. Smith's supervision or at his direction; Special Counsel Alan I. Baron or others employed by or acting under the supervision or at the direction of the House, the Committee, the Subcommittee, or special or regular counsel in the conduct of inquiries authorized by the House into the conduct of Judge Hastings, including those authorized by House Resolutions 128 and 499 and purported to be authorized by House Resolution 513.

III. Documents and Other Materials Gathered by or Submitted to Grand Juries in Connection with Inquiries Concerning Judge Hastings or His Conduct. Judge Hastings further requests that copies of the following documents and other materials be delivered and that originals be made available pursuant to this request, excepting only copies of documents or other materials produced pursuant to sections I or II of this request or delivered prior to or during the Subcommittee's hearings: Transcripts of statements made or testimony given by any of the persons identified on Addenda A through E or otherwise presented to Grand Jury 81-1 (Miami), Grand Jury 86-3 (Miami), or any other grand jury concerning Judge Hastings or his conduct or any other matter related to the allegations made in the Articles of Impeachment or the Answer to Articles of Impeachment; any documents or other materials presented to any such grand jury concerning any of those matters, and transcripts of colloquies and other proceedings concerning Judge Hastings or such matters before any such grand jury. This request specifically includes, without limitation, transcripts of statements, testimony, colloquies, and other proceedings before and documents and materials presented to Grand Jury 81-1 (Miami) or any successor grand jury between December 29, 1981, and February 4, 1983, or to Grand Jury 86-3 (Miami) or any successor grand jury between September 6, 1985, and the present.

IV. Documents and Other Materials Obtained from the United States Department of Justice or Other Executive Branch Sources. Judge Hastings further requests that copies of the following documents and other materials be delivered and that the originals be made available pursuant to this request, excepting only copies of documents or materials produced pursuant to sections I, II, or III of this request or delivered prior to or during the Subcommittee's hearings:

A. All documents and other materials concerning Judge Hastings or the matters alleged in the Articles of Impeachment or in the Answer to Articles of Impeachment obtained from or constituting records of the United States Department of Justice and its agencies, divisions, sections, offices, and its present or former officers, agents, and employees. This request includes, but is not limited to, surveillance logs and any transcriptions thereof, internal and external memoranda authorizing or concerning any investigations or any decisions to prosecute or not to prosecute conducted or made since January 1980 concerning Judge Hastings or William Borders and including the investigations initiated in 1985 concerning Judge Hastings and the alleged disclosure of confidential information to Mayor Stephen Clark and any other investigations or materials concerning Judge Hastings conducted, prepared, or received from January 1980 through the present. This request further includes, but is not limited to, documents and materials compiled, submitted, or maintained by the Attorney General, any Deputy, Associate, or Assistant Attorney General, or by any subordinate officer or employee of the Department of Justice, including those in the Criminal Division and its Public Integrity Section; the Organized Crime Strike Forces in Miami, Florida, and Atlanta, Georgia; the United States Attorney's offices for the Southern District of Florida and the District of Maryland; and the FBI and its field offices in Miami, Florida, Washington, D.C., and Columbia, S.C.

B. To the extent not produced pursuant to Section IV.A. above, all investigative, intelligence, or other files maintained on each of the following persons: Judge Hastings, William A. Borders, Mayor Stephen P. Clark, William Dredge, Peter Ferguson, Joseph Nesline, Hemphill Pride, II, H. Paul Rico, and Glen Whittle. This request includes files maintained by the Justice Department and any of its divisions, offices, or bureaus, including the FBI, and by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms of the United States Treasury Department.

C. Personal, disciplinary, investigative, or other files maintained on each of the following present or former executive branch employees: Justice Department attorneys Gerald McDowall, Reid Weingarten, and Robert Richter and FBI agents Anthony A. Amoroso, William J. Murphy, H. Paul Rico, Robert Foster, Thomas Dowd, Christopher Mazzella, and Geoffrey Santini.

D. All memoranda, notes, reports, photographs, sketches, or other material concerning any physical or mental examination or tests, or the results thereof, conducted with respect to any evidence, person, object, or place by or at the direction of the Justice Department or any of its officers or employees, including, without limitation, all records concerning examinations or tests of certain draft letters written by Judge Hastings and of other evidence gathered or received in connection with the investigation, prosecution, and trial of Judge Hastings and of William Borders and all records concerning any polygraph examination administered to Mayor Stephen Clark or others in connection with the investigation of the alleged disclosure of confidential information by Judge Hastings.

V. Documents and Other Materials Gathered By or Submitted to the House, the Committee, the Subcommittee, the Managers, or Regular or Special Staff. Judge Hastings further requests that copies of the following documents and other materials be delivered and that the originals be made available pursuant to this request, excepting only copies of documents or materials produced pursuant to sections I, II, III, or IV of this request or delivered prior to or during the Subcommittee's hearings: All documents and other materials concerning matters alleged in the Articles of Impeachment or in the Answer to Articles of Impeachment gathered by or submitted to the House or any member thereof, the Committee, the Subcommittee, the Managers, or regular or special staff. This request specifically includes photographs, sketches, memoranda, notes, reports, or other materials concerning any physical or mental examinations or tests, or the results thereof, conducted or performed with respect to any evidence, person, object, or place, including examinations or tests of electronic recordings or equipment, documents, and other physical materials; polygraph examinations; linguistic examinations; and examinations or tests conducted by consultants or organizations not regularly employed by the House.

VI. Documents and Other Materials Which the House Intends to Offer at Trial Which are Material to Judge Hastings's Defense, Which are Exculpatory or Favorable to Judge Hastings, or Which May Lead to Such Exculpatory Material. Judge Hastings further requests that copies of the following documents and other materials be delivered and that originals be made available pursuant to this request, excepting only copies of documents produced pursuant to Sections I, II, III, IV, or V of this request or delivered prior to or during the Subcommittee's hearings:

A. All books, papers, documents, photographs, or other tangible objects, or copies thereof, which the House intends to use as evidence in its case in chief at trial or which are material to the preparation of Judge Hastings's defense or which were obtained from, directly or indirectly, or belong to Judge Hastings.

B. All documents and other material which contain information that is exculpatory in nature or otherwise favorable to Judge Hastings or that may lead to material or information that is exculpatory or favorable to Judge Hastings.

ADDENDUM A TO REQUEST

RESOLUTION OF THE JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT CONCERNING THE JUDGE ALCEE L. HASTINGS MATTER

Whereas the judges of the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit have considered the request for Investigating Committee materials from the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives concerning the Judge Alcee L. Hastings matter;

Now therefore be it resolved that the members [1] of the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit hereby release such material to Allan Baron, Counsel to the Criminal Justice Subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee under the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 372(C)14(A).

John Doar, Counsel to the Judicial Council's Investigating Committee, is authorized and hereby instructed to transmit the materials shown at Exhibit 1 to Mr. Baron.

Done at Atlanta, Georgia, this 25th day of September 1987.

For the Judicial Council:

NORMAN E. ZOLLER,
Secretary.

[1] Circuit Judge Joseph W. Hatchett has indicated that from his reading of 28 U.S.C. 372(c) and Addendum Three of the Rules of the Eleventh Circuit (Rule for the Conduct of Complaint Proceedings Under 28 U.S.C.A. 372(c)), the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit has no further power to act regarding the Judge Hastings matter which the council heretofore forwarded to the Judicial Conference of the United States. Consequently, Judge Hatchett has indicated that he will not participate in any council action regarding matters heretofore forwarded to the Judicial Conference.

ADDENDUM B TO REQUEST

RESOLUTION OF THE JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF THE ELEVENTH CIRCUIT CONCERNING THE JUDGE ALCEE L. HASTINGS MATTER

Whereas the judges of the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit have considered the request for supplemental Investigating Committee materials from the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives concerning the Judge Alcee L. Hastings matter;

Now therefore be it resolved, That the members [1] of the Judicial Council of the Eleventh Circuit hereby release such material to Allan Baron, Counsel to the Criminal Justice Subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee under the provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 372(C)14(A).

John Doar, Counsel to the Judicial Council's Investigating Committee, is authorized and hereby instructed to transmit the materials shown at Exhibit 2 with additions to Mr. Baron.

Done at Atlanta, Georgia, this 9th day of October 1987.

(For the Judicial Council)
NORMAN E. ZOLLER,
Secretary.

EXHIBIT 5

[In the Senate of the United States Sitting As a Court of Impeachment]

IN RE IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE ALCEE L. HASTINGS

RESPONSE OF THE HOUSE MANAGERS TO RESPONDENT'S FIRST REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS AND OTHER TANGIBLE MATERIAL

Respondent's "First Request for Production of Documents and other tangible Material" is unprecedented and unwarranted. This request seeks nothing less than everything the House of Representatives examined in the course of its investigation. Even if Respondent were on trial for his life and liberty he would not be afforded anything approaching the scope of discovery sought herein. Respondent's Request is an attempt to cripple the impeachment process.

Extensive disclosure to Respondent of materials obtained by the House has already occurred.[1] Moreover, the House is willing to provide any additional materials that would tend to accomplish the legitimate objective of avoiding unfair surprise to the parties, including providing relevant witness statements and evidence, if any, that might tend to be exculpatory. This response will afford Respondent reasonable discovery of relevant materials while at the same time permitting the trial to proceed on schedule.

In assessing Respondent's Request, it first should be noted that any formal discovery in an impeachment proceeding is unprecedented. Jefferson's Manual, H.R. Doc. No. 279, 99th Cong., 2d Sess., Hind's Precedents of the House of Representatives (1907), and Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives, H.R. Doc. No. 661, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. (1977) contain no references which would support discovery by the respondent in an impeachment trial. Moreover, the Senate Impeachment Rules do not provide for any discovery practice. Finally, a review of both English and American impeachment trials does not reveal any instance in which discovery took place.[2]

In the impeachment of Judge Harry Claiborne, the respondent filed a "Motion for Discovery," asking the Senate to:

". . . compel the discovery of previously sealed reports, transcripts of grand jury proceedings and exculpatory materials. The production of such materials is necessary and appropriate for the Senate to fulfill its co-equal role in reviewing the full record and determining whether the Executive and the Judicial Branches have fulfilled their Constitutionally mandated duty of providing substantive due process to Respondent, Judge Harry E. Claiborne." [3]

In particular, the respondent sought impeaching and exculpatory evidence which he claimed was likely to be found in certain grand jury testimony and correspondence.[4]

The House Managers opposed Judge Claiborne's Motion for Discovery on the grounds that none of the materials sought by the respondent were in the possession of the House of Representatives, but rather were held solely by non-parties to the impeachment proceeding. The Managers contended that Judge Claiborne had not demonstrated that the information requested could not be obtained directly from those third parties. The Managers argued that the respondent should not be allowed to use the impeachment proceeding to obtain documents which he could not otherwise obtain from a federal grand jury or from the Executive Branch. The House further noted that the respondent had been provided at his criminal trial with material, including grand jury testimony, concerning the witnesses that the government presented at trial and upon which the House intended to place reliance during the impeachment proceedings.[5]

Judge Claiborne's discovery motion was presented to the Rule XI committee appointed to take evidence in his case. After deliberation behind closed doors, the Chairman of the Rule XI committee, Senator Mathias, noted:

". . . The motion seeks assistance in obtaining evidence which may tend to exculpate Judge Claiborne. If the motion could be understood to ask the managers, who are the prosecutors in this impeachment proceeding, to provide to Judge Claiborne any exculpatory material which they possess, then, even though the motion is unprecedented in an impeachment proceeding to my knowledge, there might be some reason to grant it. However, the motion appears to be directed at information possessed by executive and judicial authorities and overlaps, with one exception, subpoenas which Judge Claiborne has requested to establish his allegations of prosecutorial and judicial misconduct.[6]

The Chairman then ruled that a decision would be reserved on these matters. The record does not reflect that the motion was further considered. Accordingly, the Claiborne impeachment proceeding does not support Respondent's request.

As the House previously stated:

"This lack of precedent for pretrial discovery in an impeachment proceeding makes sense in light of the structure of our Government. The House of Representatives and Senate, like the House of Commons and the House of Lords, are coordinate parts of the Legislative Branch. The House of Representatives does not have the authority to order the Senate to act in a particular manner. Likewise, the Senate does not have the authority to compel the House of Representatives to take certain action, including the disclosure of investigative files to a respondent in an impeachment proceeding. The fact that the House of Representatives presents the Articles of Impeachment to the Senate for trial, as required by the Constitution, does not in any way limit its independent authority as one of the two houses of Congress".[7]

Notwithstanding the consistent history rejecting discovery in impeachment cases, the House Managers are prepared to provide Respondent with documentation he needs to avoid surprise at trial. A copy of any material falling into any one of the following three categories which has not already been provided to Respondent, will be provided by the House Managers:

A. Any document, tape or other tangible evidence the House Managers intend to use at trial;

B. Any statement of a witness to be called at trial that is sworn, adopted or approved by the witness; or

C. Any transcribed statement by a witness to be called at trial which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement by the witness and was recorded contemporaneously with the making of such statement.

D. Any exculpatory evidence.

It must be emphasized the Respondent and his counsel have had access to extensive materials for months and even years. Under Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure at his criminal trial, Judge Hastings was afforded considerable discovery, including grand jury and other witness statements and exculpatory material. In addition, the Investigating Committee of the Eleventh Circuit which investigated the allegations of bribery conspiracy provided Respondent and his counsel access to some 2,800 exhibits, as well as a 4,000 page transcript of the testimony of witnesses who appeared before that committee.

Thereafter, the House of Representatives gave Respondent copies of both the exhibits and the transcripts from the Eleventh Circuit Investigating Committee. In addition, all of the materials introduced at the House Subcommittee hearings, including a 14 volume Statement of Information with thousands of pages of documents and exhibits were given to Respondent. Finally, Respondent sought and obtained the record of the Eleventh Circuit Special Committee which investigated the allegation that Respondent leaked confidential information obtained in his capacity as supervisory judge of an authorized wiretap.

In short, Respondent already has in his possession thousands of pages of discovery materials. The documents that remain to be turned over under the proposal of the House Managers are few in number and length. Their review provides no justification whatsoever for any delay in the trial.

Respondent's Request, on the other hand, is virtually coextensive with all documents in the possession of the House of Representatives. The mere process of identifying and duplicating all these materials would take an extended time. In addition, Respondent undoubtedly will use the volume of the materials as an excuse to petition the Senate for a delay of the trial in order to examine those materials in detail. This should not be permitted, particularly in light of the fact that Respondent could have sought many of these materials from their original source at a much earlier time, but did not.[8] Moreover, the materials consist primarily of items that are not original factual information, but rather, are the analyses by investigators of material already provided to Respondent.

Respondent's legitimate interests will be protected under the proposal of the House Managers. To the extent any of the requested materials fall within the categories described above—evidence intended to be introduced, sworn or transcribed statements of trial witnesses, and exculpatory evidence—the House will disclose them. However, consistent with the principles discussed herein, the House Managers' disclosure proposal is conditioned on the imposition of a reciprocal rule requiring Respondent to provide to the House, to wit:

A. all documents, tapes or other tangible evidence Respondent intends to use at trial;

B. any statement of a witness to be called at trial that is sworn, adopted or approved by the witness; and

C. any transcribed statement by a witness to be called at trial which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement by the witness and was recorded contemporaneously with the making of such statement.

These materials are sought to avoid unfair surprise at trial and to expedite the handling of documentary evidence.

Respectfully submitted,

EXHIBIT 6

Finally, the House of Representatives proposes two procedures that would narrow the issues in dispute and, therefore, would expedite the presentation of the evidence at trial. First, the House asks the Senate to adopt a rule that would hold that any proposed stipulation of fact filed with the Senate by a party to this proceeding will be accepted as true unless the opposing party files a written objection, including a proffer as to why the proposed stipulation of fact should not be taken as true.

Second, the House asks the Senate to adopt a parallel rule addressing the authenticity of documents, which would establish that any proposed stipulation regarding the admissibility of a document filed with the Senate by a party to this proceeding will be accepted as true unless the opposing party files a written objection, including a proffer as to why the proposed stipulation should not be taken as true.

By adopting the above proposed procedures, the Senate would ensure a timely and just resolution of the pending impeachment proceeding.

EXHIBIT 7

First: The managers have submitted a last-minute proposal to further dilute the protections traditionally accorded the accused in the trial of an impeachment. Their staff has prepared voluminous proposed stipulations drawn from the Statement of Information their staff prepared before the House conducted its hearings. The managers now suggest that the burden be shifted to Judge Hastings, before the trial begins, to show what basis he has to refute their staff's claims. That will not do.

The House had its opportunity to formulate the accusations in such detail as it chose in the Articles of Impeachment. Judge Hastings has responded. The managers have replied. The facts in dispute are now defined. The managers must now recognize that they, not their staff, must carry the full burden the House assumed. They must make good the accusations by presenting competent testimony and other evidence. When they rest, then and only then may Judge Hastings be called upon to decide whether and what competent evidence should be produced in his defense.

That was the burden the prosecutors assumed the last time these accusations were tried. That is the procedure that was followed. Debi McMullen and eleven other citizens became constitutional officers and took an oath to do impartial justice there. They did. The House has already enjoyed unprecedented advantage in conducting a reinvestigation. The suggestion that they should be permitted to avoid their responsibility and dilute the accused's rights further is wrong.

If there is to be a trial, the managers must again assume the burdens the prosecutors assumed in 1983, the burden that managers for the House have assumed in trials of impeachment throughout history. If there is to be a trial, Judge Hastings must be accorded at least those protections that he was accorded in 1983 and the protections that have been accorded the accused in trials of impeachment throughout history. If there is to be a trial, the Senators must execute their oaths as fully as did Debi McMullen and her fellow jurors in 1983 and as fully as have Senators in trials of impeachment throughout history.

NOMINATION OF JOHN TOWER

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, today I will cast my vote against the confirmation of John Tower to be Secretary of Defense. For the past 10 weeks, the Armed Services Committee has scrutinized the personal and professional qualifications of Senator Tower to serve in a post that critically impacts not only our defense and national security but our budgetary soundness.

The FBI reports that we have reviewed in recent weeks in no way drew Senators to an inescapable, ironclad conclusion. The FBI reports frankly, often raised more questions than they definitively answered. The FBI reports provided information, subjective information, based upon which each Senator must make a value judgment. The White House has maintained that the FBI reports proved Mr. Tower's fitness for the job. Armed Services Committee Chairman SAM NUNN, on the other hand, found the reports quite damaging. My good friend Senator WARNER, the ranking Republican on the committee, has said that these are matters on which reasonable men of good intent can credibly differ. Mr. President, I quite agree.

Despite a lengthy investigation, questions remain about whether the candidate, once in office, could effectively lead his department while disassociating himself from the defense industry he has represented in the private sector. To avoid a conflict of interest or the appearance of impropriety, Senator Tower, as Secretary of Defense, in way too many cases would have to recuse himself, or remove himself completely from the decisionmaking process.

Many of the allegations in the FBI files, I regret to say, are rumor, innuendo, and heresay. But other allegations offer cause for considerable alarm. Of particular concern to this Senator is that for 10 weeks the firestorm of allegations against Senator Tower has not subsided. There may not be a smoking gun, but there sure is an abundance of smoke.

The continuing allegations and charges have protracted these hearings long beyond the expectations of any of us on the committee, and, even now, show no evidence of dissipating. I am concerned the continuing nature of the allegations have damaged Mr. Tower's ability to serve and would haunt his tenure as Secretary of Defense.

When I learned, some months ago, of President Bush's plans to nominate Senator Tower for Secretary of Defense, I mentioned Senator Tower's expertise and background in the defense and national security field. I have served in the Senate with John Tower and value his service. Because of Senator Tower's contributions to this country, my decision to oppose his confirmation was a particularly difficult decision for me to reach.

In conclusion, I would like to commend Chairman NUNN, the ranking member Senator WARNER, and the Armed Services Committee staff for effectively addressing the difficult issues presented this committee by this confirmation process.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1989, AND FROM MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1989, UNTIL 2:15 P.M., TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I intend to bring the Senate in for a pro forma session on Monday rather than on Friday, as I had previously indicated.

I now ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until Monday, February 27, at 12 noon and that on Monday the Senate meet in pro forma session only and that no business be in order; I further ask unanimous consent that when the Senate recesses on Monday, it stand in recess until 2:15 p.m. on Tuesday, February 28.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR MORNING BUSINESS ON TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28, 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, February 28, there be a period for morning business following leader time not to extend beyond 4 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1989

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I believe the Republican leader has no further business. Can I have a confirmation of that?

I understand, Mr. President, the Republican leader has no further business. Is there any other Senator seeking recognition?

Mr. President, on behalf of the leadership on this side, Senator MITCHELL, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 12 noon on Monday, February 27.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:25 p.m., recessed until Monday, February 27, 1989, at 12 noon.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

FAIR HOUSING PROBLEMS STILL EXIST

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, last year, Congress passed the Fair Housing Act Amendments which I strongly supported. The need for this legislation is clear. Twenty years after the enactment of the Fair Housing Act, discrimination in housing still exists. I want to bring to the attention of Members a new study which shows that vigorous enforcement of fair housing standards is still needed.

The study, "Residential Segregation of Blacks, Hispanics, and Asians by Socio-Economic Status and Generation," was conducted by two researchers at the University of Chicago. It is based on a "dissimilarity index" which measures the percentage of minority group members that would have to move in order to achieve an equal distribution across a metropolitan area. In other words, it determines the extent of housing segregation in a given metropolitan area. A dissimilarity index over 0.600 is considered high and one below 0.300 is considered low.

One conclusion of this study is very revealing: Black Americans are the only ethnic group that fail to achieve integrated housing even after moving into higher income levels. In the 20 largest metropolitan areas, black Americans earning more than $50,000 had a dissimilarity index of 0.768 while those earning less than $2,500 had a dissimilarity index of 0.806. While the figures for Milwaukee—my home city—were not publicly released, Milwaukee's profile is similar to Chicago's, where the index for blacks earning more than $50,000 was 0.863 and the index for those earning less than $2,500 was 0.911. Unfortunately, this is higher than the average for the 20 largest metropolitan areas.

Taken alone, the study does not provide de facto evidence of redlining or discrimination. However, taken in conjunction with another study published a few weeks ago by the Atlanta Journal and Constitution, the evidence of redlining and discrimination is stronger. The Journal and Constitution study found that black applicants for home mortgages were rejected twice as often as whites. Particularly troubling to me is the fact that the disparity in Milwaukee was the widest in the Nation.

I am deeply concerned about the implications of these two studies. All Americans have a right to decent housing in the neighborhood of their choice. The careful compromise of the Fair Housing Amendments will ensure that this right is reality.

Reports on the two studies from the Washington Post follow:

HIGH-INCOME BLACKS STILL LACK INTEGRATED HOUSING, STUDY SAYS WASHINGTON AREA FOUND RELATIVELY LESS SEGREGATED

(By Jay Mathews)

LOS ANGELESTI—A MAJOR STUDY OF 1980 CENSUS DATA HAS DETERMINED THAT BLACKS COMPRISE THE ONLY MAJOR ETHNIC MINORITY IN THE NATION THAT FAILS TO FIND HOUSING IN WELL-INTEGRATED NEIGHBORHOODS AFTER ACHIEVING HIGH INCOMES AND COLLEGE DEGREES.

The analysis by University of Chicago researchers also indicates that, although high-income, well-educated blacks in the Washington area remain segregated, they are less so than similar blacks in 18 of the 19 other major metropolitan areas studied.

The figures show that Hispanics and Asian Americans, unlike blacks, find homes in largely integrated neighborhoods once they reach high income and education levels.

"The fundamental cleavage appears to be between blacks and non-blacks," concluded Nancy Denton, a research associate and demographer at the university's Population Research Center, and Douglas Massey, professor of sociology and center director.

"No matter what their educational or occupational achievements and whatever their incomes, blacks are exposed to higher crime rates, less effective educational systems, higher mortality risks, more dilapidated surroundings and a poorer socioeconomic environment than whites, simply because of the persistence of strong barriers to residential integration," they said.

Denton, the primary researcher, said in an interview that the problem was underscored by a recent report in the Atlanta Journal and Constitution that the percentage of black rejected for mortgages from savings and loans nationwide was twice that of whites.

She said the relative ability of well-educated, high-income blacks to find integrated neighborhoods in the Washington area may reflect the large number of such blacks in the District and local officials' unusual sensitivity to civil rights concerns.

The study, to be published Wednesday in Social Science Quarterly is the latest in a series exposing the extent of black housing segregation through use of what the researchers call a "dissimilarity index."

The index computes the portion of minority group members who would have to move in order to achieve even distribution throughout a metropolitan area. Dissimilarity indexes of .600 and above are considered high and those below .300 low.

In the 20 metropolitan areas studied, blacks who earned more than $50,000 annually had a dissimilarity index of .768, while blacks earning less than $2,500 had an only slighly higher .806. Blacks with 17 or more years of schooling had a .702 index, compared with .803 for blacks with a fourth-grade education or less.

In the Washington area, blacks earning more than $50,000 had an index of .654, compared with .792 for those earning less than $2,500. Only Birmingham, with the traditional integrated housing pattern of some southern cities, had a lower index for high-income blacks—.452 compared with .461 for its lowest-income blacks.

REPORT SAYS S&LS SHOW LOAN BIAS—BLACKS REJECTED MORE OFTEN, ANALYSIS FINDS

(By David S. Hilzenrath)

Savings and loan institutions reject black applicants for home loans twice as often as whites, according to a newspaper analysis of 10 million loan applications during the past five years.

In parts of the country, high-income blacks are rejected at the same rate as low-income whites, the Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported Sunday.

The Journal-Constitution based its analysis on Federal Home Loan Bank Board records of $1 trillion in loan applications submitted to savings and loans nationwide from 1983 through the middle of last year. The report also showed a wide gap between rejection rates of whites and other minority groups.

Calling the findings "extremely disturbing," Senate Banking Committee Chairman Donald W. Riegle Jr. (D-Mich.) yesterday called on the bank board to explain why it had not analyzed the data itself and to offer an accounting of bank board efforts to enforce fair housing laws.

Civil rights activists and minority groups said the newspaper report confirmed what they have long asserted.

"It proves exactly what we have been saying for a long time—that there is . . . discrimination in lending," said Raul Yzaguirre, president of the national council of La Raza, a Hispanic civil rights group. "It means that the laws aren't working and we're going back to them and find a way of strengthening that legislation."

The newspaper reported that nationwide, the loan-application rejection rate was 11.1 percent for whites, 12.2 percent for Asians, 16.5 percent for American Indians, 18.2 percent for Hispanics and 23.7 percent for blacks.

The gap between blacks and whites in the Washington area is slightly narrower than the national average. While 15.7 percent of black applicants were denied mortgages here, only 8.5 percent of whites were rejected.

The disparity was widest in Milwaukee, where black loan applicants were almost four times as likely as whites to be rejected by savings and loans. High-income blacks were rejected more often than low-income whites in 85 of the 100 largest U.S. metropolitan areas during at least one of the past five years, according to the report.

Mark Clark, a spokesman for the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, an industry lobbying group, said the Journal-Constitution report does not show whether discrimination has occurred because key factors, such as the credit rating of the loan applicants, were not addressed.

As part of the settlement of a civil rights suit a decade ago, the bank board agreed to collect and analyze data on the race, sex and marital status of loan applicants at each of the 3,100 savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks in the country, the newspaper said. However, the information was not analyzed until the paper obtained it through the Freedom of Information Act.

Jerauld Kluckman, director of compliance at the bank board's office of regulatory activities, said the numbers analyzed by the newspaper should have waved a "red flag" for examiners. "I think generally we could have been more diligent in using this information," Kluckman said, but he added that the bank board has been preoccupied with the financial crisis facing the savings and loan industry.

Until recently, the federal government had virtually no means of enforcing laws designed to protect home buyers from discrimination, according to civil rights activists. Last year, however, Congress amended the Fair Housing Act to create an enforcement mechanism.

Despite federal laws, low-income minority neighborhoods continue to receive a disproportionately low share of home loans, activists said.

In 1986 and 1987, the most recent years for which statistics are available, nine major lenders extended $187 million in housing loans in the District of Columbia, according to Paul Battle, director of Washington Innercity Self Help, a nonprofit group that focuses on housing for low- and moderate-income D.C. residents. Only 12.2 percent of those loans went to low-income and minority-dominated areas of the District, he said.

Predominantly white Ward 3 in Northwest Washington received the largest sum: 998 loans worth $142.8 million, Battle said. At the other end of the spectrum, Ward 8 in Southeast Washington received 160 loans worth $4.2 million, he said.

"Banks and savings institutions must meet the credit needs of low- and moderate-income communities," Battle said. "They aren't doing it right now. They definitely aren't doing it here."

Robert A. Barton, Jr., senior vice president of Perpetual Savings Bank, the area's largest thrift, said he was surprised by the Journal-Constitution's findings but doubted that discrimination was at work.

"I think the lenders in the [Washington] area have done a very good job in meeting those needs," Barton said. "Maybe I'm too naive or too trusting, I don't think so."

SUPPORT THE REAUTHORIZATION OF THE WATER RESOURCES RESEARCH ACT OF 1984

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, today, Mr. CHENEY and I are introducing legislation to reauthorize the Water Resources Research Act of 1984 for 5 more years.

This bill passed the House last session without dissent. The Senate failed to bring this bill to a vote prior to adjournment. It is important that Congress move quickly on this legislation since the authorization for the Water Resources Research Program expires on September 30 of this year.

This is a highly successful program which deserves our support.

The program is designed to make sure that we have highly trained water resources professionals and well-planned research programs to develop practical solutions to the Nation's water and water-related problems. These objectives are accomplished through a nationwide system of water resources research institutes and a competitive national program for research grants.

This program is a cooperative effort, where State, Federal, and local levels of government come together to seek solutions to water resources issues and to jointly fund much of the work done under this program.

I urge all of my colleagues in Congress to join me, once again, to support this legislation.

ISRAEL, THE MASS MEDIA, AND THE STATE DEPARTMENT HUMAN RIGHTS REPORT

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the State Department recently released its annual country reports on human rights to the Congress of the United States. As the Washington Post commented editorially, "The State Department's country-by-country judgments have a value in focusing attention on things that need to be done, or done better, or not done." As the Democratic cochairman of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, I welcome the continued scrutiny of human rights conditions in 166 countries around the globe. The issue of human rights is not a Democratic issue or a Republican issue—it is an American issue. It is a unique American contribution to international relations.

While I welcomed the report, I was shocked and appalled by the media coverage given that comprehensive 1,500-page document. Media attention was focused on only one country—Israel. These 15 pages of the State Department report received substantially more media coverage than the rest of the entire report combined. I can only describe the media's obsession with Israel—to the exclusion of the remaining 165 countries—as a pathological preoccupation.

Mr. Speaker, it would be naive for anyone to argue that Israel's human rights record is without blemish. But at the same time, during the last year Israel has been forced to cope with a violent internal uprising, a civil insurrection, while facing the constant threat of internal and external terrorism. Israel has had to take a number of restrictive actions in order to maintain its international security and domestic tranquility. But, in spite of its problems, as the Washington Post appropriately noted, "Israel, being democratic, offers its citizens basic rights and supports a process of law by which they can claim them" and "Israel is at heart a democratic country."

In large part because of Israel's democracy and press freedom, its problems in facing the challenge of civil insurrection are on the front pages of American newspapers and on our television screens each night. In many other countries, where far more serious human rights violations have occurred, there is no freedom of the press or access for foreign journalists to document these abuses. This State Department report provides a balanced review of human rights in 166 countries, but again the media ignores the complete picture and attacks Israel.

The media have seized on the small section of the report dealing with the West Bank and Gaza—virtually disregarding the remaining 99 percent of the report, virtually ignoring some of the most outrageous human rights violations noted by the State Department since the annual reports began.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my colleagues who may not have had the time or opportunity to read the full 1,500-page text of the report, I would like to mention only a few of the most deplorable items from the reports that the media did not deem worthy of mention.

What shocked me most in the report is the widespread use of poison gas and nerve gas by the Government of Iraq against its own civilian population. But since Iraq is a ruthless, totalitarian dictatorship, access to the places where these crimes against humanity were committed was completely restricted. Thus, the report can only estimate that about 8,000 innocent children, women, and men were killed by poison gas by the Iraqi regime. Furthermore, more than half a million Kurds in Iraq were forcibly transferred from their homes and their villages were bulldozed in Iraq's campaign to suppress Kurdish efforts to win political autonomy.

I also find it intriguing that the media has not paid the slightest attention so far to the fact that in 2 days last October—in just 2 short days—the Government of Algeria machinegunned approximately 800 of its own civilian population while attempting to put down food riots.

Another country with serious human rights violations—again ignored by the media—was Sudan. Countless bits of corroborating evidence confirm that between 100,000 and 250,000 Sudanese died as a result of the unwillingness of both the Government and the rebel forces to allow food to reach starving people.

The State Department report also discusses—but again the media ignored—Syria, where there is a "pervasive denial of human rights, including widespread torture and denial of freedoms of speech, press, association, and the right of citizens to change their government." The media also said nothing about Saudi Arabia, a feudal kingdom where amputation is a standard form of criminal punishment, where the practice of Christianity is outlawed, and where conversion from Islam is punishable by death.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to examine the full country reports with great care, because the extensive media coverage hardly gives an accurate, balanced view of this comprehensive report.

A DYING BREED

HON. JOSEPH E. BRENNAN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues the following article, entitled "A Dying Breed," by Peter J. Brown. This article appeared January 19 in the Bar Harbor Times of Bar Harbor, ME. Mr. Brown's article documents the troubling decline of our merchant marine fleet and the implications of that decline.

[From the Bar Harbor Times, Jan. 19, 1989]

A DYING BREED—MDI MERCHANT SEAMEN WATCH INDUSTRY DISAPPEAR

(By Peter J. Brown)

Mount Desert Island is home to many active members of the U.S. Merchant Marine. A century ago, Maine sent countless men to sea as the great "Downeasters," and huge coastal schooners plied international waters, laden with grain, lumber from the bustling port of Bangor and other varied cargoes. Times have changed and maritime jobs are fast disappearing.

Today American seamen face what, at the end of World War II, would have been an inconceivable scenario: the U.S. Merchant Marine fleet is shrinking rapidly to a point where more ships fly the flag of the U.S. Navy than belong to the U.S.-flag merchant fleet.

The decline of the U.S. Merchant Marine has prompted the formation of a special national commission to study the situation and make recommendations. This group, known as the Bennett Commission, has issued strong and urgent warnings about the adverse consequences of this ongoing reduction in U.S. merchant ships and skilled manpower.

Maine Maritime Academy (MMA) in Castine has attempted to better prepare its graduates today for a harsh job market that shows no sign of improvement in the near future. Engineers are offered a range of courses, focusing on the operation of large land-based power generating stations. Another new program focuses on the operation of boatyards. Still, many MMA graduates elect to go to sea, filling positions that are well below their level of training.

TROUBLING TESTIMONY

Lester R. Smallidge of Pretty Marsh, MMA class of '57, is probably "the dean" of active island merchant mariners. He is the chief engineer aboard the 700-foot Farrell Lines containership, American Resolute.

"People would be amazed by the amount of cargo—general and military—that is carried on foreign ships. The American people don't realize what is happening," said Smallidge. "If this [the U.S. Merchant Marine] goes down the tubes, then the American people will end up paying for it in the future, paying a lot more than we are now."

"The American people aren't aware of what they are losing," said Norris M. Reddish of Somesville, MMA class of '58. Reddish is chief engineer aboard the USMV PFC William B. Baugh, a huge so-called "maritime prepositioning ship," operated under contract by the Maersk Line for the Military Sealift Command out of Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean. This ship carries all the necessary supplies for an entire Marine Amphibious Brigade.

"Look at Canada. They sat back until their fleet was down to only two ships. Then, the Russians and others who were carrying their freight began to demand much higher rates, saying, 'Well, if you don't want to pay these rates, then we won't haul it.' Now, Canada has a massive building program underway," said Reddish.

"Congress doesn't want anything to do with it," said James W. Corbett of Bar Harbor, MMA class of '69.

"Most other nations support and subsidize their merchant marines, ours isn't. In the event of a national emergency, a time when we're really needed, people are going to ask, 'What happened to our merchant marine?' The answer is simply that we don't have one anymore."

A DIFFERENT LIFESTYLE

Corbett is a chief engineer for Crest Tankers, Inc., aboard a 600-foot tanker called S.S. Chablis. He has always worked aboard tankers. He likes the job; he's gone for three months at a time and then stays home for two months with his wife, Suzanne, and their three children.

"I prefer seeing different places. It's unpredictable. I go all over the world," he said. "Growing up in Otter Creek, I spent a lot of time on the water. As a senior in high school, I wasn' sure what I was going to do. When the recruiters came to the high school from MMA, they emphasized the travel and the good wages, so I applied and I was accepted."

He has seen many changes in his industry over the last 20 years. He believes that the shipboard environment is much more informal and relaxed than it used to be. It is less military in nature, while at the same time, the long-term job security and the sense of opportunity is gone.

SHIPPING TRANSFORMED BY TECHNOLOGY

The great ports of the world, led by cities such as Hong Kong, Rotterdam, New York-Port Elizabeth, Yokohama and Los Angeles-Long Beach, now function like huge airports with immense containerships, tankers and bulk carriers flowing in and out. This round-the-clock activity is subject to very tight scheduling, and it is monitored by computerized traffic control points.

Fantastic amounts of cargo can be loaded or off-loaded at stunning speeds—measured in hours, not days. Rapid turnaround time is essential as immense ships must be in constant motion in order to achieve profitability. Gone almost entirely are the teeming ranks of stevedores. Machines have replaced muscle-power. Dockside, huge mobile cranes shuttle 20- or 40-foot containers around.

The shipping companies have changed as well. Some lines adapted well to the new technology and shift in trade patterns, but many more have simply disappeared, like American Export Lines and Grace Lines. Two years ago, U.S. Lines folded, a move that stunned the industry, Lester Smallidge mentioned that his company, Farrell Lines, has shrunk from 32 ships to five ships. The only major U.S. shipping companies that have survived a prolonged shakeout in the industry are Sea-Land, Lykes Lines, American Presidential Lines and Farrell Lines.

Sea-Land, for example, is the firm that introduced containerization technology, a move that revolutionized shipping worldwide. Today, Sea-Land is tied into one large "intermodal network" consisting of railroads, trucks and barges as well as a telecommunications grid, all operated by a Virginia-based transportation conglomerate called CSX.

Ships are increasingly automated, able to run virtually by themselves with a handful of men on duty. They are linked to their home offices by satellite. The crews on board the ships have, in most cases, been greatly reduced in number. It is not uncommon to find less than two dozen men running a ship as long as three football fields.

"We do things more efficiently. We move more oil quicker with less people," said Jeff Lambert of Bar Harbor, MMA class of '73. "It's been streamlined to the point where there's really no room for improvement."

Lambert followed in his brother Butch's footsteps, and currently serves as chief mate aboard a 651-foot tanker named Chevron Colorado. For years he worked in Alaska, hauling fuel oil to ports all over Alaska, and he has fond memories of that period in his life. However, like most of his fellow merchant mariners, he has become pessimistic in his view of the industry as a whole and its future.

"The job prospects are not there. The U.S. Merchant Marine is a dying breed; we're becoming obsolete. The Jones Act is keeping us alive. Soon, all you will have left is a commercial fleet serving the military," he said. "I don't know how the maritime schools are going to remain open. Things are going to get worse before they get better."

DANGER AT SEA

And a life at sea can be very dangerous; just ask David L. Bracy of Bar Harbor, MMA class of '64. He survived a spectacular collision that claimed a dozen men in New York Harbor in 1972. His entire ship was set ablaze.

A veteran of many crossings of the North Atlantic northern Europe, Bracy has seen his share of angry seas as well. Routine encounters with storms are less frequent today, thanks to a combination of much-improved weather forecasts and satellite communications that enable most ships to avoid bad weather.

"We got hit by one wave between Genoa and Barcelona, in the Mediterranean Sea. I was in the engine room at the time, on this old C-2 cargo ship (about 400 feet long), and I was afraid that the pipes were going to rupture. When we got to the dock, you could see right through this crack in the deck, right through the hull and out the other side of the ship. The wave must have been 60 or 80 feet high, and 40 feet is considered big," he said.

TOUGH ON FAMILIES

Norris Reddish thought about going in the U.S. Coast Guard, but he went to MMA instead. He goes to sea for four months and then returns to his wife, Elaine, and their two children for a two-month vacation. It is a lifestyle that many people find difficult to accept. It takes its toll on family life.

"I was very lucky. I was home a lot of holidays, a lot of summers," Reddish commented. "This kind of life is hard on the children. As for the wives, well, a woman has to be able to stand on her own two feet."

Divorce and alcoholism are often part of the picture. Paula Lambert's husband, George R. "Butch" Lambert, of Bar Harbor, has been going to sea for years, and yet, she still has a hard time adjusting every time he sets sail.

"It's upsetting. When they sail, you have to go back to being independent. People just don't understand this industry," she said.

It's tough on the men, too.

"It's two completely different lifestyles," said Jim Corbett. He describes the ship as "a lonely lifestyle," very different from a home, filled with three kids. It still takes time for him to unwind.

Jack Cunningham of Bar Harbor serves as a third mate. He graduated from MMA in 1980. He is either at sea or fishing, so he feels that things have worked out well for him. He also thinks that the job market is better now than it was four or five years ago.

He has a wife, Beth, and two kids, with a third on the way.

"My wife can adjust to my being away. It's like all of sudden she's everything. As far as the kids are concerned, my oldest seems to take it okay, but my youngest has a hard time for the first couple of weeks, then he gets used to it." He said. "I don't like being away, but I like the work. Once you're on the ship, you throw yourself into it."

Lester Smallidge sums up his feelings this way.

"The Merchant Marine has been very good to me—I've been in it for 32 years, but the romance is gone. There is not that much of a future in it now."

H.R. 128, THE HANDGUN REGISTRATION ACT OF 1989

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, at the onset of the 101st Congress, I introduced H.R. 128, the "Handgun Registration Act of 1989" which would require the States to establish a handgun registration program. The bill specifies characteristics that such a program must include, such as penalties for serious and nonserious violations. Additionally, the bill directs a Federal handgun registration program to go into effect in States which fail to establish an adequate program.

This legislation has become necessary as our country has become addicted to guns. The victims are not often criminals, and, with increasing regularity, the perpetrators had not been criminals either. Often, the simple accessibility of handguns escalates arguments into accidents. Very recently a 6-year-old Virginia boy shot and killed his 8-year-old sister after she scolded him for playing with a gun. This is just one in a string of incidents where very young children are being shot and killed as a result of playing with guns.

The proliferation of firearms is highly visible in Chicago where the numbers of weapons on the streets and resulting crimes is constantly increasing. The Chicago Police Department reports that in 1988, over 14,000 firearms were confiscated, up from 12,602 the previous year; that 10,206 aggravated assaults by shooting were committed, up about 700 from 1987; and that armed robberies increased from 12,943 in 1987 to 13,090 in 1988. These numbers are dramatized by the raids at the beginning of this month on two homes which yielded 31 handguns, 18 other guns, 24 explosives, ammunition and cocaine.

Illegally acquired guns are terrorizing our cities' schools where many youths view them as a symbol of power and glamour. In Baltimore, 64 percent of city high schoolers said they knew someone who had carried a gun in the past 6 months. Sixty percent knew somemone who had been shot, threatened, or robbed at gunpoint in their school And almost half of the male respondents admitted to having carried a gun at least once. The January bloodbath at Wilson High, here in the Washington area, is a clear instance of the catastrophic consequences that can result.

Fear snowballs the problem. Now that classrooom bullies carry guns, their victims and other classmates have started carrying them out of fear—in actuality only putting themselves in greater danger. Typically, one classmate teases another about his weight, one makes a pass at another's girlfriend, or one will try to steal another's jewelry. But instead of being sent to the principal's office, they're being sent to the morgue. In 1985, alone, there were 27,000 handgun victims between the ages of 12 and 15.

The main factor contributing to this violence in schools is the availability of guns. Newsweek reported last year that "in recent years, city streets have become flooded with unregistered and untraceable handguns, available to anyone of any age with a bit of cash. In New York, revolvers can be bought on street corners for as little as $25. Some dealers are even willing to 'rent' a gun for an evening, deferring payment until the teen can raise money through muggings and robberies. Youth gangs in Los Angeles protect their turf with black market Uzi submachineguns and Russian-made AK-47 assault rifles."

This can no longer be ignored. Over 2 million guns are being manufactured and sold annually in the United States alone. Putting tighter controls on them is just common sense. The need for such controls is well demonstrated by a recent article in the Washington Post that described the situation in Portland, ME. Police in this city are not allowed to ask the applicant why he or she wants to carry a weapon. Even when the police know an applicant to be under the care of a psychiatrist, they are not allowed to speak with that psychiatrist. In short, "anyone with a driver's license, birth certificate, and $20 dollars * * * [is] able to walk into police headquarters, complete a form and gain the right to carry a concealed weapon."

What I am proposing is to require States to have a handgun registration program. This idea has aleady proven effective in other States: One year after New York passed a law requiring anyone caught with an unregistered handgun to serve a mandatory 1-year prison sentence, murders were down 20.6 percent. One year after a similar law took effect in Massachusetts, homicides in Boston dropped 57.5 percent.

Under the provisions of the bill, the States must—within a 2-year time period—establish a handgun registration program. Anyone found in serious violation of this registration requirement would be sentenced to not less than 12 years and nonserious violations would result in not less than a 1-year sentence. In the event a State does not comply with the establishment of a registration program within the 2-year timeframe, a Federal handgun registration system would be imposed until the State has complied with the order to create its own system. As incentives for the States to comply, the specifications for the Federal system are even more stringent than those of the required State systems, and certain forms of Federal assistance will be suspended including law enforcement funding and FBI training of State and local criminal justice personnel.

This bill would assist law enforcement officials in apprehending criminals who might evade more serious crimes. Second, it would deter criminal activity in the sale of black market guns and punish those caught with an unregistered handgun. Most importantly, it would reduce the amount of handgun homicides.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has nothing to do with banning handguns. Instead, it is concerned with reining in the untamed violence and bloodshed that is destroying our country.

PHYSICIAN ASSISTANT SERVICES NEEDED

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am joining with the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa, Senator GRASSLEY, in introducing legislation to provide Medicare part B coverage of physician assistant services in all practice settings not presently covered by statute.

This is an effort Senator GRASSLEY and I began several years ago which, while partially successful, still needs to be addressed. Congress has, on several occasions, approved Medicare part B coverage of physician assistant services in a wide variety of practice settings.

Present law currently recognizes PA services provided in hospitals, nursing homes, rural health manpower shortage areas, health maintenance organizations, competitive medical plans, rural health clinics, and for assisting at surgery. However, PA services provided in a physician's office located in nonrural manpower shortage areas or for house calls, are still not covered.

It is my hope and intention, Mr. Speaker, that the 101st Congress will address this inequity. Many low income urban and rural communities, with high Medicare eligible populations are served primarily by physician assistants. But because of inconsistencies between how State laws allow PA's to practice and what Medicare will cover, these beneficiaries are treated as second class citizens.

During both the 99th and 100th Congress, Senator GRASSLEY and I were joined by over 130 of our colleagues in the House and Senate in cosponsoring legislation similar to that being introduced today. Some areas were addressed. However, because the victory was not total, we are introducing this new legislation to cover those PA services not included in the OBRA provisions.

As with past efforts, payment for PA services would be on a discounted fee basis. Specifically, services provided by a PA in the doctor's office or in the patient's home would be covered at a rate not to exceed 85 percent of the physician's prevailing charge for that same service.

Payment would be to the employer of the PA, not to the PA and the employer would be required to accept assignment for the PA's services. Because physician assistants are dependent practitioners, services would also have to be rendered under the supervision of a physician.

As sometimes happens, Mr. Speaker, considerable confusion has occurred on this issue with respect to the possible costs to Medicare of making such a change. When I first introduced this legislation approximately 3 years ago, the Congressional Budget Office determined that there would be no adverse financial impact on the Medicare Program and that such a change in law could possibly lead to long-term savings in the Medicare Program.

These findings were substantiated by an article in the spring 1987 issue of Health Care Financing Review, which included a report on a Medicare demonstration project established to examine the impact of covering PA services provided in urban clinics. This study found:

The Medicare savings on the inpatient and hospital outpatient side appeared to more than compensate for the increased expenditures for physician and ancillary services, suggesting potential overall savings to Medicare from the wavier program.

This report substantiates the Congressional Budget Office's determination on the original Wyden/Grassley bill that covering PA services would have no short-term budgetary impact and could lead to long-term savings in the Medicare Program.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should note that this past fall, the Secretary of Health and Human Services issued a report on impact of the PA provisions included in the 1987 Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, as directed by Congress. While the Secretary recommended no changes in the coverage available—either to expand or repeal—his report also points out that there have been no adverse effects.

I believe our legislation represents a reasonable approach to our common concern about improving access to health care while restraining costs. Covering PA services under Medicare will help to improve access to care for millions of Medicare beneficiaries and lead to the long-term savings we are all trying to achieve.

I urge my colleagues to join me and Senator GRASSLEY in making the coverage of PA services a reality in all settings.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MEDICARE PAYMENT FOR PHYSICIAN ASSISTANTS IN ALL SETTINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1861(s)(2)(K)(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(s)(2)(K)(i)) is amended by striking "(I)" and all that follows through "health manpower shortage area,"

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to services furnished on or after October 1, 1989.

TRIBUTE TO FLORENCE DOBROW

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, it is with admiration and respect that I rise today to pay tribute to Florence Dobrow, a 40-year resident of Fair Lawn, NJ. Florence, or Flossie, as she is affectionately known by her Fair Lawn friends, has held a special place in her community in her terms as mayor, deputy mayor, and councilwoman since 1975.

Flossie's activism on behalf of the citizens of Fair Lawn, and her sense of commitment to her borough, are qualities that we have all come to admire and respect. I, therefore, take pride in recognizing the many accomplishments of this fine friend and public servant. Flossie, besides serving in town government for many years, has also played a part in many other community projects and boasts a long list of accomplishments. She has helped to initiate a free minibus route for seniors and others in town, along with helping to create a senior citizen's recreational center. In terms of the environment, Flossie has been a true champion of this worthy cause as is evident in her work to have contaminated water wells purified, new water wells dug, the implementation of a new recycling program as well as a new yard waste program. She has also taken an active interest in the development of a new master plan for Fair Lawn.

Florence Dobrow is indeed a woman who deserves our respect and appreciation. It is with great honor and pleasure that I am able to pay tribute to her as she is honored for her years of dedication to the Borough of Fair Lawn as councilwoman. I wish her continued health and happiness in the many more productive years to come, and am proud to call her my friend.

THE 1988 REPORT TO THE NATION—BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

HON. JAMES A. HAYES

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. HAYES of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, the president and chief scout executive of the Boy Scouts of America have submitted their report to the Nation for 1988. I am pleased to include that report in the RECORD, as follows:

THE 1988 REPORT TO THE NATION—BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

Scouting has been a participant in American community life for more than 79 years. Although the basic concept of Scouting is the same today as first conceived by Robert S. S. Baden-Powell at the beginning of this century, Scouting is concentrating on meeting the needs of today's youth.

Hunger, drug abuse, child abuse, illiteracy, unemployment: We call these five critical issues the unacceptables of today's society. Scouting is not standing idly by while our society is riddled with these challenges. Scouting is making a difference in the lives of the people of this nation.

Scouting for Food, a 1988 national Scouting Good Turn, became an overwhelming success as more than 60 million cans of food were amassed by Cub Scouts, Boy Scouts, and Explorers. This was the largest collection of foodstuffs ever undertaken in the United States. The food was turned over to local food banks for distribution to the hungry in November 1988. Assisting in loading and delivering the food were the National Guard, Army Reserve, and other organizations that have trucks.

The Drugs: A Deadly Game campaign, which began in 1987, continued to fight the most serious threat to the well-being of our children: Drug and alcohol abuse. BSA antidrug materials were used by organizations nationwide. The "Boston Tea Party II," a reenactment were drugs were symbolically thrown into Boston Harbor by Explorers attending the National Law Enforcement Explorer Conference, is typical of the Drugs: A Deadly Game program. Drugs: A Deadly Game receive a 1988 Presidential Citation for Private Sector Initiatives.

Child abuse is something everyone would like to ignore. However, it is a very real concern through the nation and of the Boy Scouts of America as well. Too many of our nation's children have been victims of abuse. The Boy Scouts of America is providing youth protection training to help leaders recognize and prevent child abuse. Extensive steps have been undertaken to screen potential leaders and reject those who are unacceptable as youth leaders.

The Boy Scouts of America promotes good reading through Boy's Life magazine, the Official Boy Scout Handbook, and thousands of literature items for both youth and adults, much of which is appropriate for nonmembers as well as members. Scouting publications are carefully written for the age and/or grade level of the youth or leader using them.

Scouting teaches goal setting and self-reliance and Scouts are expected to strive toward the highest goals they can achieve—to do their best. In Career Awareness Exploring, out teenagers combat unemployment and discover the world of work through instruction and hands-on experience. Strides made in combating drug abuse, illiteracy and child abuse improve performance in the workplace.

For the ninth consecutive year, the Boy Scouts of America has announced an increase in membership. An overall 1.3 percent gain was achieved over 1987. In 130,990 units there are 5,377,493 youth members and leaders. There are 313,703 Tiger Cubs, 1,835,642 Cub Scouts, 969,685 Boy Scouts, 57,009 Varsity Scouts, 361,733 Explorers, 695,229 Career Awareness Explorers, and 1,144,492 leaders.

As a result of the New-Troop Teleconference, 6,555 new troops have been organized. Hugh Downs, of ABC's "20/20" program and long-time supporter of Scouting, hosted the teleconference held on March 10, 1988. Boy Scout recruiting skyrocketed to new heights with virtually every council participating in this colossal effort to organize new Boy Scout troops. During this telethon event, local councils obtained commitments from potential chartered organizations to organize new Boy Scout troops and telephoned them to the teleconference command center where they were tabulated by volunteer national representatives from chartered organizations.

The National Council of the Boy Scouts of America held its biennial meeting in San Diego, Calif., May 18-20. The meeting was attended by key volunteer and professional leaders. Harold S. Hook, chairman and chief executive officer of American General Corporation, Houston, Texas—and an Eagle Scout—was elected our new national president.

The Silver Buffalo Award for distinguished service to youth was presented by the National Court of Honor to 18 individuals. The 1988 recipients were: Daniel W. Derbes, La Jolla, Calif.; John M. Gibson, Drumore, Pa.; Earl G. Graves, New York, N.Y.; Eugene F. Reid, Santa Barbara, Calif.; Roy W. Hawkinson, Minneapolis, Minn.; Marion D. Hanks, Salt Lake City, Utah; Reuben Hitchcock, Keswick, Va.; James F. Gary, Honolulu, Hawaii; William C. McCord, Dallas, Texas; Marshall M. Sloane, Somerville, Mass.; Vaughn J. Featherstone, Salt Lake City, Utah; A. Gerow Hodges, Birmingham, Ala.; Henry B. Murphy, Trenton, N.J.; John W. Thomas, Jr., High Point, N.C.; Robert F. Harbrant, Washington, D.C.; Ben M. Hauserman, Cleveland, Ohio; Charles M. Schulz, Santa Rose, Calif.; and William Aramony, Washington, D.C.

The National Court of Honor also presented the following to recognize acts of bravery for lifesaving and meritorious action: 6 Honor Medals with Crossed Palms, 25 Honor Medals, 77 Heroism Awards, and 136 Medals of Merit. In 1988, 27,163 youths advanced to the rank of Eagle Scout and 12 Sea Explorers received the Quartermaster Award. The Distinguished Eagle Scout Award was presented to 86 outstanding men who had earned the Eagle Scout Award at least 25 years earlier, have excelled in their business or profession, and are exemplary citizens.

Scouting for the Handicapped continues to be a viable part of the Boy Scouts of America. It is geared to give Scout-age youth with handicaps the opportunity to be a part of Scouting so they can learn, grow, and develop to their maximum potential. Creative and innovative methods are being used to increase the opportunity for serving youth with handicaps. Presently the BSA is using three major support systems to deliver this program: mainstreaming, special organizations, and in-school Scouting for the Handicapped.

Scouting is a positive influence in today's world, while still adhering to Baden-Powell's original idea. Scouting has survived for 79 years because it is in tune with the times. The achievements recorded in this report represent only a small portion of the accomplishments of Scouting in 1988. The real impact of Scouting is seen in the adult, who was a member of a patrol or den in his youth. His life is better because he was a Scout.

DEFEAT OF THE PAYRAISE IS A FAILURE OF DEMOCRACY

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, in light of the continuing debate over the efficacy of the recently defeated pay raise for high ranking Federal officials, I thought my colleagues might be interested in a recent column written by Carl Rowan that appeared in the Toledo Blade on February 17, 1989. The headline of the article, "Defeat of the Payraise Is a Failure of Democracy," captures the essence of the article.

[From the Toledo Blade, Feb. 17, 1989]

DEFEAT OF PAY RAISE IS A FAILURE OF DEMOCRACY

(By Carl Rowan)

When democracy works, with well-informed and well-intentioned people speaking their will, it is the best form of government ever devised by man.

When democracy fails because the people become steeped in demagoguery, their visions are blurred by ignorance and jealousy, or their spleens are inflamed by the cowardice and greed of elected and appointed officials, government "by the people" can become a social and political abomination.

The dead pay-raise plan for members of Congress, federal judges, and top officials of the executive branch is a monumental failure of democracy.

A lot of Americans are rejoicing that a "public uprising" defeated "outrageous" pay increases. They would not be celebrating if they understood that they have pushed this nation closer toward a situation where the Senate, and more and more the House, become the private domains of the wealthy or the not-so-wealthy who are willing to take millions of dollars from those buying influence in the White House, the Pentagon, the Small Business Administration, and elsewhere.

The celebrators will wake up to find not only that can a cowardly Congress that won't vote for a pay raise become a corruptible Congress but that we could see an erosion of intellect, integrity, and independence in our judicial system. Oh, there will always be a surplus of people clamoring to become federal judges. But when the pay is outrageously low, those seeking the jobs are bound to lack competitiveness in the private world of law or have some suspect agendas from a simple lust for power to a commitment to protect drug honchos, money launderers, and other crooks.

Some troubled farmers in Iowa, airport skycaps in Washington, plumbers in San Bernardino may think that a $135,000 annual salary for "a bureaucrat" is thievery, but they do not understand what is done and what pay is deserved by the scientists, physicians, and others who sacrifice mightily to try to find cures for cancer, diabetes, AIDS, and other diseases that afflict in disproportion the poorest-paid people in the land.

Middle-class people ought not exult over the defeat of this pay-raise proposal. They should be mounting a crusade to separate the pay of the members fo Congress from the salaries of judges and the top executives who do the public's business at great sacrifice.

Give judges, cabinet members, and others the raises they clearly deserve and let the cowards in Congress stew in their own timidity.

Democracy is nice. But that shouldn't mean that someone bagging groceries at a Boca Raton supermarket or inspecting meat at a packing plant in Minnesota is qualified to set pay levels for people who work incredibly long hours making decisions and passing laws that affect the lives of every citizen of this nation and sometimes all who live on this planet.

So 474 members of Congress, most of whom were salivating over the expected pay raise, turned tail and fled to the high grass when they had to cast a vote. That ought not become social destructiveness that we are powerless to control.

All we need is a president and a few good men in Congress to say that the judges and the leaders of the cabinet and other agencies must get raises that are overdue. If that doesn't give backbone to a majority of Congress, the votes can decide whether they want to re-elect people who would rather hold power on the basis of speech honoraria and influence peddling rather than a straightforward statement, "This is what I'm worth, and I'll take it."

Tuesday's "triumph" by congressional wimps must not remain a curse on the quality and integrity of our government.

THE WORLD TRADE EXPANSION, DEVELOPMENT, AND FINANCIAL STABILITY ACT OF 1989

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing the World Trade Expansion, Development, and Financial Stability Act of 1989, a bill that addresses the international debt crisis. My colleague, Congressman TORRES, a distinguished member of the Banking Committee, is an original cosponsor.

THE REALITIES OF THE DEBT CRISIS

The first reality of the debt crisis is that it has thrown a monkey wrench into the international economy. The average growth rate for debtor countries has been only 1 percent from 1980–87, compared to an average of 6.1 percent from 1970–79. Because of debt service requirements and little new lending, there exists a net resource transfer from the developing to the developed world of $30 billion annually—an inherently unsustainable position for developing countries. Developing countries must have capital to grow. Since they are unable to generate the needed savings domestically, they must receive a net capital inflow from abroad.

The U.S. trade balance has also suffered. Severe import restrictions and aggressive export promotion by the debtor nations to generate large trade surpluses have seriously distorted international trade patterns. During the first 2 years of the debt crisis, imports of the 17 highly indebted less-developed countries dropped by 40 percent, and by 1986 they only slightly exceeded their 1978 level. Exports of U.S. products to Latin America have dropped by nearly 30 percent, from a high of $42 billion in 1981 to around $30 billion today. The Overseas Development Council estimates that the United States lost 1.8 million jobs between 1980 and 1987 due to the decline of exports to developing countries.

A second reality is that the debt is unlikely to be paid in full. In secondary markets, which reflect the actual value of loans, most LDC loans sell at 40 to 60 percent of face value. Although banks have raised capital reserves in anticipation of future losses, they have no incentive to forgive the amounts charged off; bank managers have a responsibility to their shareholders to collect every penny of outstanding debt.

Finally, the Baker plan is not working. The Baker plan was premised on the idea that LDC's can outgrow their debt problems if they receive sufficient new lending from the developed world and undertake market-oriented reforms. Though well-intentioned, the Baker plan has not resulted in significantly increased lending to debtor countries. No sane banker is going to lend new money to a heavily indebted LDC knowing that money lent at 100 cents on the dollar today may be discounted at 50 cents on the dollar in a few month's time.

THE URGENT NEED FOR A SOLUTION

Clearly, this is a problem that begs for a solution. A workout between the banks and the highly indebted developing countries—that is, debt relief—is inevitable. Rather than waiting for a crisis to drive this process, creditor countries should seek to manage it in the most orderly and economically beneficial fashion possible.

Increasingly, Congress is recognizing that we need to consider new options for managing the debt crisis. Senators BRADLEY and SARBANES and Representatives SCHUMER, LAFALCE and others have presented thoughtful, well-crafted plans for confronting the debt crisis. The 1988 Trade Act requires the Treasury Department to analyze the feasibility of establishing an international debt facility to serve as an intermediary between creditors and debtors, an idea that my bill promotes. Having received a 3-week extension from its February 23 deadline, Treasury will report its findings to Congress on March 16.

HOW THE PEASE PLAN WOULD WORK

My bill would establish an international debt facility in the International Monetary Fund, which would purchase debt from banks and pass discounts on to debtor countries. Because of the IMF's substantial reserves, an international debt facility would not require appropriated startup funds from the participating countries.

Specifically, my plan would require Treasury and IMF officials and economists to assess the real value of outstanding LDC debt based on the ability of countries to pay; that is, the secondary market value. In response, the banks would have two options: either increase their reserves to the level of the Secretary's estimate of discount—the difference between the face and real values of the loans—or sell LDC debt to the newly created IMF facility at the real value of the loans. If they participate, banks have the option of writing their losses off over 5 years and reaping a tax benefit.

The IMF facility would pass the discounts directly on to the LDC's. In negotiating a payment plan, the IMF would attach conditions to the loan, but the conditionality that I propose is less intrusive than that practiced currently. My plan would require LDC's to meet specific targets for balance of payments and reduction of capital flight. Only if these targets are not met would more traditional conditionality become effective.

ADVANTAGES OF THE BASE PLAN

There are numerous advantages to my plan. For the banks, the plans would remove bad debt from their books and replace it with debt of a reliable institution, the IMF. Management would be free to put the LDC debt problem behind it and move on to greener pastures. In addition, the banks would receive a tax benefit form the writeoff of bad loans, with losses spread over 5 years.

Debtor nations would get a major, immediate reduction of their debt burden, allowing them to increase imports and spur economic growth. As long as the balance of payments and capital flight targets are met, they also have flexibility in their economic policy choices, unlike current IMF conditionality.

The advantage to U.S. taxpayers is that no appropriations are required for the IMF special facility. Granted, tax revenues will fall as a result of banks writing off losses, but if we do not resolve the debt crisis soon, the costs could be much greater. A global economic downturn could lead to an LDC moratoria on debt payments and greater losses both to banks and the IMF, which would affect taxpayers greatly.

U.S. exporters would also gain. If debt service is reduced, LDC's will have greater resources for importing U.S. products.

THE TIME FOR ACTION IS NOW

Time is slipping. We need to act now to resolve the debt problem. While the Bush administration stalls, Congress is taking the initiative on the issue. The Banking Committee, led by new Chairman HENRY GONZALEZ, made international debt the subject of the first congressional hearings of the year. In this opening statement, Chairman GONZALEZ described the debt crisis as a ticking time bomb, which threatens the international financial system, costs the United States jobs, and most importantly, exacerbates the poverty already rampant in the Third World.

Clearly, it is in our best economic and foreign policy interests to reduce Third World debt. I ask the support of my colleagues to make debt reduction a reality. Thank you.

PRICE-ANDERSON FINANCIAL ACCOUNTABILITY AMENDMENTS OF 1989

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce legislation to extend a modest amount of financial liability to Department of Energy [DOE] nuclear contractors for accident damages caused by their own gross negligence or willful misconduct. This legislation will improve the safety of DOE nuclear facilities by giving DOE contractors a financial incentive to operate these facilities in a safe and responsible manner. The bill will also protect the American taxpayer from paying for accident damages caused by the carelessness of DOE contractors.

This legislation will close a gaping loophole in current law which exempts DOE nuclear contractors from any financial liability for damages that result from an accident they cause. To make matters worse, these contractors are not liable even if the accident is caused by their own gross negligence or willful misconduct. By contrast, commercial nuclear powerplant operators are liable for over $7 billion in damages regardless of whether they are negligent.

In a surprising public admission, one contractor gave the following description of a DOE nuclear contract to the Associated Press on September 11, 1987:

> You have nothing at risk, the Government provides everything, so the return on investment on that kind of business is essentially infinite.

This lack of contractor accountability contributes to the countless safety abuses committed by DOE contractors. These abuses have included: widespread and repeated violation of DOE safety rules and procedures; the failure to report serious safety problems to DOE; and, the release of significant amounts of radioactivity into the environment.

At his February 22, 1989, confirmation hearing, Adm. James Watkins, the DOE Secretary-designate, agreed that DOE contractors need to be made more accountable for the results of their own actions. In reference to a recent reactor operator errors at the Savannah River plant, Admiral Watkins stated, "I don't believe the accident * * * is solely the responsibility of the United States when the procedures the contractor agreed to were not followed. I'm not talking about willful negligence. I'm talking about negligence."

I am extremely heartened by Admiral Watkins' statement in support of increased contractor accountability. I believe that this legislation presents an excellent mechanism to achieve this goal and am hopeful that Admiral Watkins will strongly support it when he becomes Secretary of Energy.

Admiral Watkins' statements on the contractor accountability issue present a stark contrast to the views expressed by former Secretary of Energy Herrington on this issue. From my perspective, recent events have made many of the arguments made by Secretary Herrington and others against contractor liability almost laughable.

In a June 3, 1987, letter to Representative PHILIP R. SHARP, Secretary Herrington opposed increasing contractor liability on the grounds that it would disturb the "special working relationship" that DOE had with its contractors. It is now obvious that this "special working relationship" is a big part of the current problem at DOE nuclear facilities.

We now know that some contractors believed that this "special working relationship" permitted them to ignore DOE safety recommendations, release radioactivity into the environment, and to withhold crucial information from DOE.

In the June 3, 1987, letter Mr. Herrington also wrote, ". . . DOE's relationships with these contractors are founded on an understanding that the interests of the Department and its contractors in running these facilities are largely inseparable." This is a disturbing statement. The safety and environmental abuses committed by DOE contractors over the years certainly have not been in the interest of DOE and the Nation.

Under this legislation, if the Attorney General determines that a contractor has been grossly negligent or has engaged in willful misconduct, he is permitted to sue the contractor for an amount equal to the annual price of their contract. This method of determining liability would shield small contractors from large liabilities. Currently, DOE nuclear contracts range in size from about $1 billion a year to less than $50 million per year.

Because the bill would change the business conditions under which DOE contractors operate by exposing them to potential liability, it permits renegotiation of contracts with DOE. However, it does not permit the contractors to abandon their current contractual obligations.

Finally, this legislation would bar any contractor guilty of gross negligence or willful misconduct from receiving any Federal contract for a 5-year period. A contractor could be exempted from this provision only if the President determined that the contractor's services were absolutely necessary for national security purposes.

It must be noted that this legislation does not in any way affect the Price-Anderson liability law as it applies to commercial nuclear powerplant operators. I support the compromises that were made on the commercial side of Price-Anderson in Public Law 100–408 and do not intend to change that portion of the law.

Unfortunately, the parties concerned with DOE contractor liability during the 100th Congress were not able to reach an acceptable compromise on the liability issue. In light of this fact, and the recent revelations about safety and environmental abuses by DOE contractors, I believe we must take another look at the contractor liability issue.

Mr. Speaker, the Price-Anderson Financial Accountability Amendments of 1989 will significantly improve the safety of DOE nuclear facilities by giving DOE contractors a financial incentive to operate these facilities safely. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH: RECALLING THE BLACK CONTRIBUTION AND RECOMMITTING OURSELVES TO EQUALITY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of Black History Month I rise to pay tribute to the members of the black community for the many important contributions they have made to our Nation. Black History Month is also an appropriate time for all of us to take stock of the progress we as Americans have made in achieving our Nation's promise of equal civil and political rights for all Americans. But it is also a time for us to reflect on the continuing struggle to overcome longstanding barriers to economic and social equality.

Mr. Speaker, we have indeed made real progress toward assuring that black Americans are included in our political, economic, and social institutions. Our Nation has greatly benefited from important contributions and significant advances that are the result of the work of black Americans in science, the law, religion, academia and the military.

The Democratic Party stands proudly behind its new national chairman, Ron Brown, the first black American to lead a major political party. Here in the House of Representatives, Congressman WILLIAM H. GRAY III, proved to be an outstanding chairman of the critical House Budget Committee during very difficult times. Lt. Gen. Colin L. Powell restored integrity to our foreign policymaking process as National Security Advisor to the President. Black Americans are now so commonplace within the hierarchy of our religious institutions that the recent ordination of the Reverend Barbara Harris as Bishop of the Episcopalian Church proved to be a landmark event because of Reverend Harris' gender, not her race. Black astronauts have ridden into space as mission specialists and flight officers on the space shuttle, and growing numbers of blacks are rising to positions of prominence and prestige throughout our economy and society.

While we can be justly proud of the important accomplishments of black Americans and while we welcome the progress that has been made in bringing black Americans into the mainstream of our Nation's economic and social progress, there is much that remains to be done. Despite the successes, we must not settle for the state of current affairs.

Recent Supreme Court decisions and the actions of the Justice Department in the past few years raise doubts about the willingness of our Government to confront the tough issues of discrimination in employment, Government contracts, education, and housing. These issues continue to be a serious problem for an important segment of our population.

We must continue to press forward to overcome the historical vestiges of racism and inequality which still haunt our country. During the 100th Congress, we passed, over the threat of a Presidential veto, the Civil Rights Restoration Act. As we debated the issue, those of us here in the Congress heard loud and clear from the people back home that civil rights must not be rolled back.

During this historic 101st Congress, we will continue to deal with issues of racial equality and affirmative action. We must remember that equal access to education, housing, and employment are among the basic principles from which we draw our national strength. Ours is a nation that holds the promise of great rewards for an individual's best efforts, regardless of his or her family background, social status, party affiliation, or especially race.

Mr. Speaker, Black History Month is an opportunity for us here in the Congress to refocus on the fundamental values set forth in our Constitution over 200 years ago, and to assess the extent that our practice, in fact, measures up to those beliefs. Black history is the recounting of the ongoing struggle of one group of Americans to attain what is rightfully theirs. This month, as we remember the trials and triumphs of black Americans, let us also recommit ourselves to continuing the struggle to see that all Americans—regardless of race, color, or religion—fully enjoy the rights and advantages of this great Nation.

"NATIONAL TRIO DAY," RECOGNIZING A PROGRAM THAT OPENS THE EDUCATIONAL DOOR FOR THOUSANDS OF STUDENTS.

HON. JOSEPH E. BRENNAN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring attention to a nationwide program that has had a tremenous effect on disadvantaged youths across the country as well as in my own State of Maine.

February 26, is "National Trio Day." The trio programs, which include Talent Search, Upward Bound, and Student Support Services, have helped over 450,000 students in this country reach their intellectual potentials by assuring equal opportunity to postsecondary education.

I offer my sincere congratulations to the students who have participated in the trio programs, and I would like to commend the colleges, universities, and other institutions that have made such a success of the programs in 1988, and will continue to do so in 1989.

In Maine, Husson College, the University of Maine System, Unity College and Bowdoin College collectively assisted over 3,300 bright young students in their educational endeavors this past year alone.

I would also like to mention one student in particular, Mark Crosby, who received the 1988 trio achiever award in Maine. Academic experience, career success, and civil commitment were all considerations in his being chosen trio achiever for 1988, but other issues also played a part. Mark Crosby is a hard-working, committed individual. He is an inspiring role model for other students in Maine who may have doubts about their potential as students and achievers.

I remind my colleagues that our young people can and do make a difference in today's society. All students who possess the academic necessities should have the available opportunities to attend college, and to pursue their goals and aspirations. We in Congress must do our part to support successful educational initiatives such as the trio programs.

I request my colleagues to recognize "National Trio Day," and to actively support the trio programs in their respective districts. Thank you.

THE TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS MATERIALS, H.R. 53 AND 136

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, with increasing frequency, the transportation of hazardous materials on our Nation's highways, roads, streets and railways has led to calamity. Liquids have exploded, posing serious consequences for—and threatening the lives of—millions of Americans. Often, the public exposure to hazardous materials has occurred in densely populated areas such as Los Angeles and downtown Denver. During 1988 in Chicago alone there were numerous spills of substances including highly flammable morphaline, caustic potash, and toxic xylene. In one instance at a factory, a propane truck exploded, causing the evacuation of hundreds. And, who among us that work here in Washington does not remember the inferno of fuel which shut down the beltway earlier this year while contaminating our air and environs?

The time to act is now. We must not wait for further catastrophes to occur to justify our taking action. We have seen enough of the damage which can result and we have enough evidence of the capacity for future disaster. With the ever increasing volume of hazardous materials—including highly flammable rocket fuel and other propellants and fuels, explosives, and radioactive and toxic materials—being transported through urban centers, the risks are increasingly steep. All it takes is for one drunken driver to broadside one large transport vehicle at high speed for a death toll in the hundreds and a price tag in the millions to result.

At the onset of the 101st Congress, I reintroduced two bills—H.R. 53 and H.R. 136—which address these concerns. The Hazardous Materials Transportation Safety Amendments of 1989, H.R. 53, adopts a wide variety of measures toward avoiding future problems, such as designating safe parking sites and requiring that transporters conform to certain safety standards. Additionally, emergency response efforts are promoted in the bill by facilitating emergency training and equipment and the creation of an emergency response trust fund. Railroad safety is also addressed and Federal Government technical assistance to the States is made available. H.R. 3677 exclusively deals with the designation of safe routes for the transportation of hazardous materials by directing the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations giving guidance on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, these two bills take a sizable step in the right direction toward insulating our citizens from the consequences of hazardous materials. It is our responsibility to protect Americans from the needless suffering that exposure to these materials can cause.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE COVERAGE OF SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES IN RURAL HEALTH CLINICS UNDER MEDICARE

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to introduce, along with my colleagues, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. TAUKE, and Mr. SYNAR, legislation to amend the Rural Health Clinic provision of the Medicare Act in order to provide citizens of rural America with access to qualified social worker services.

People living in rural areas are often unable to obtain needed health and mental health care services because of a paucity of providers and Federal policies that exclude qualified providers even when they are available.

My bill would help correct this problem by allowing rural health clinics under Medicare and Medicaid to use the expertise of clinical social workers where appropriate. Under this legislation, the poor and the elderly will be able to obtain direct access to social work services with periodic supervision of the treatment plan by a physician.

I have been particularly concerned about reports that mental health services are difficult to obtain in rural areas. This concern grew when I learned of a recent 1988 six State survey of mental health providers, conducted by the National Center for Social Policy and Practice. In about 25 percent of the counties in the States surveyed, the only mental health providers available were clinical social workers. Most of those counties were rural.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting this effort to make quality health care services available to our Nation's rural citizens.

H.R. —

A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for coverage of social worker services in rural health clinics under the medicare program.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. COVERAGE OF SOCIAL WORKERS SERVICES IN RURAL HEALTH CLINICS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1861(aa)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C 1395x(aa)(1)(B)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" before "by", and

(2) by inserting "or by a clinical social worker (as defined in subsection (hh))" after "Secretary),".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to services furnished on or after the first day of the first month that begins 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SAVINGS AND LOAN—FRAUD AND INTERVENTION

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, in our effort to address the savings and loan [S&L] crisis, we need to thoroughly examine all the contributing factors to the present thrift difficulties in order that we craft an effective solution. It is with these thoughts in mind that I submit the following article from the February 15, 1989, Wall Street Journal. The article discusses some of the fraudulent practices and political intervention that contributed to the current S&L crisis.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Feb. 15, 1989]

THE BANK DICKS' DIRTY LINEN

(By James Ring Adams)

The thrift crisis will get worse before it gets better. It may even spread from the savings and loan ghetto to the banking system. The Bush administration's $100 billion "rescue," although worthy of praise for its comprehensive approach, still fails to confront the real cause of the disaster, the political corruption of bank and thrift supervision.

In every agency confronted with a major failure, whether state or federal, the frontline supervisors have been frustrated and demoralized by an "Iron Triangle" of political fund-raisers, corrupt bank and thrift owners and compliant senior regulators. The triangle rests on a constant flow of campaign contributions, sometimes looted directly from institutions whose collapse cost the deposit-insurance funds billions of dollars.

The problem goes well beyond the Reagan administration's confused attempt at financial deregulation. It can't simply be blamed on the weak training, low pay and inadequate staffing of the bank and thrift examiners. Supervisors had the information and, in most cases, the power to restrain the frauds and incompetents. What was lacking was the will to act, will that had been sapped by decades of political interference.

EPIDEMIC OF FRAUD

This failure of will has opened the banking system to an "epidemic" of fraud, to quote staff of the House Government Operations Committee. Robert Clarke, the comptroller of the currency, last year issued a survey of recent bank failures under his jurisdiction and found that less than 10% came solely from economic pressures.

That jibes with his experience, says William Black, former general counsel of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which supervises the thrift industry and its Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. FSLIC has been issuing "profiles" of failed thrifts as it tries to dispose of them, and these case studies almost uniformly recite a tale of looting and insider abuse by owners who took over in the early 1980s. Says Raymond Vickers, formerly the chief appointed bank and thrift supervisor for the state of Florida, "I haven't found a single bank failure that didn't involve a conscious conspiracy to defraud."

The only regulator that plays down fraud is, ominously, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which is supposed to be the white knight of the thrift rescue. In the jumble of federal financial regulation, the FDIC insures and supervises 13,000 commercial banks, but it is stepping in to close more than 200 busted but still open thrifts. The FDIC is supposed to toughen and gradually absorb FSLIC's supervision of the remaining 2,900 thrifts. This de facto merger is the most important administrative shuffle for the two agencies since their founding in the Great Depression. But it has only a slim chance of facing up to the source of the debacle.

Both agencies have been victims of "regulatory capture," where an industry comes to dominate the government body that's supposed to regulate it. In the case of the financial system, the supervisors have been penetrated by the industry's worst elements.

The FDIC, now the hero of the piece, was raising eyebrows just six years ago by its performance in the 1983 collapse of the Butcher brothers. Jacob and C.H. Butcher Jr. were busily looting 23 banks in Tennessee and Kentucky while state and federal examiners looked on with their hands tied. A coordinated FDIC exam of several of the Butcher's banks identified their insider dealing as early as 1977. But no more multibank exams took place until 1982. In the meantime, the Butchers became confidants of the Carter White House, major contributors to the Democratic National Committee and political powers in Tennessee. In an interview last year at the Federal Prison Camp in Atlanta, where he is now serving a 20-year sentence for bank fraud, Jake Butcher admitted to this writer that he had helped name one member of the FDIC board. The Butcher empire ultimately cost the insurance fund about $1 billion.

FSLIC is now paying the price of its own capture, which first came to light with the 1984 failure of Empire Savings and Loan Association of Mesquite, Texas. At the time the biggest liquidation in FSLIC's history, the case alerted the Bank Board to the network of insider construction loans and payoffs by developers that devastated the Texas thrifts. It also exposed the industry's cozy dealings with the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas, one of the 12 regional banks in the Bank Board system.

The chairman of Empire, Spencer Blain Jr., had also been president of the Texas Savings and Loan League, the industry lobbying arm, and in that capacity had been appointed director and vice chairman of the Dallas Home Loan Bank. FSLIC examiners, employed by the Bank Board in Washington, legally had to rely on the supervisory staff of the Dallas Home Loan Bank to handle disciplinary actions against Texas thrifts. The examiners, overmatched as they were, did identify many of the problems, but they were ignored. When Bank Board Chairman Edwin Gray began to see the extent of the Empire problem, one of his first measures was to fire the chief supervisor at Dallas. Mr. Blain, once the leading industry representative at the Dallas Home Loan Bank, has been indicted for bank fraud.

The damage in these cases, and many others, was magnified tenfold and 100-fold by political intervention. Losses that easily could have been cut short at $100 million or less were allowed to climb into the billions. Appropriate notoriety surrounds House Speaker Jim Wright's pressures on FSLIC, including his attempt (with a bipartisan coalition including Texas Sen. Phil Gramm) to deny it the funds to close Texas thrifts. He deserves some gratitude, however, for having so crudely made obvious what many others were doing with more subtlety.

Jim Sasser (D., Tenn.), a ranking member of the Senate Banking Committee, ran interference for C.H. Butcher with the FDIC board. Donald Riegle (D., Mich.), the current Banking Committee chairman, took dozens of contributions from a large out-of-state thrift and then intervened in its federal examination. He denied wrongdoing, but under pressure from the Detroit News returned more than $76,000 in contributions. In 1986, when FSLIC moved to close the FirstSouth thrift in Pine Bluff (which supplanted Empire as its biggest case), members of the Arkansas congressional delegation wrote letters in protest. After the size of the problem became clear, the congressmen wrote a second set of letters, asking to get the embarrassing first letters back.

Even though President Bush is earmarking $50 million to chase the perpetrators of S&L frauds, his plan does little to control the political interference that has allowed them to flourish. Even though both FSLIC and FDIC have vastly improved themselves as each struggled with its disasters, they can't be expected to cope with congressional pressures alone. The only promising solution is to enlist public opinion by throwing open the regulators' attempts at regulation.

END TO SECRECY URGED

The FDIC at one time wanted to make public its final disciplinary actions, only to back down under industry protest. But a few voices are calling for a total end to bank secrecy. Mr. Vickers, the former Florida regulator, says that bank examination reports should be released to the public as soon as they're written. (They are now kept highly confidential under criminal penalty.) At the least, the public should know the numerical ratings that the examiners give their banks or thrifts. All interventions by public officials—letters, phone calls, or personal meetings—should be kept in an open file, by law, so that the press and political challengers can track the fix.

These are measures that violate deeply ingrained habits of regulatory secrecy, habits that date to the trauma of Depression-era bank runs. But a depositor's confidence is more likely to fall when he can't tell the good banks from the bad, or the wolves from the watchdogs. The best cure for the current plague of fraud and political influence is public exposure.

FREE VACLAV HAVEL

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, last week 30 Members of the House joined in writing to President Gustav Husak of Czechoslovakia urging him and his government to immediately free the imprisoned Czech playwright, Vaclav Havel.

The following editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer of Wednesday, February 22, 1989, reiterates many of the points made in the letter to President Husak, as well as those I made in addressing my colleagues on this subject the same day, on the floor of the House.

The aging Stalinists who run Czechoslovakia may silence an eloquent and courageous playwright for a few months, but they can never still the rising clamor for freedom which is stirring people throughout Eastern Europe.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join those of us in the United States and around the world who are making life a little more difficult for the Czechoslovakian Government.

We must continue to press this case until Vaclav Havel is free.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Feb. 22, 1989]

STUCK IN TIME: IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA, REPRESSION LIVES ON

In Czechoslovakia, where writers have a special moral standing, the playwright Vaclav Havel has long been the conscience of his nation. His ideas of how ordinary people can retrieve their dignity from communist control have inspired opposition groups from Poland's Solidarity trade union to proponents of multiparty elections in Hungary. His personal decision to resist the communist authorities in his country—to "live in truth"—has caused him to spend a quarter of the last two decades in prison.

Now, at a time when Eastern Europe is reverberating from the stunning turnabout in Moscow, when freedom is again in the air, Mr. Havel is back in jail. He was sentenced yesterday to nine months in prison for allegedly encouraging a demonstration in memory of a youth who burned himself to death to protest the 1968 Soviet invasion.

The irony here is that no Soviet dissident would be jailed today for a comparable act of defiance. But the Czech leaders, a bunch of aging men who have been in power since the demise of the 1968 "Prague spring," are terrified of being ousted. And no one symbolizes their fears better than Mr. Havel, whose plays have been banned at home, even as they've been hailed abroad. (In Philadelphia, the Wilma Theater is scheduled to stage a Havel play in May.)

So the government jailed Mr. Havel, refusing to acknowledge that the time for brute repression has passed. One thousand establishment intellectuals—who have been holding their tongues for years—signed a petition before the sentencing asking for the playwright's release. The government responded by firing the editor of a cultural journal. But that approach is sure to rouse only more dissent—and, irony of ironies, might inspire the Kremlin to support the cause of Czech intellectual freedom.

More than that, the European community—whose economic assistance the Czech government badly needs—is likely to register its displeasure. After all, the Czech regime just signed a new East-West accord that is supposed to guarantee personal and political freedoms.

Jailing Vaclav Havel is a desperate act by a regime that won't recognize that both superpowers want a new, freer status for Eastern Europe. Prague's leaders may be able to stay that change for a while. But history's dustbin is waiting.

RUSHDIE'S BOOK—A SYMBOL OF FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I join today with the international chorus of writers, artists, and government leaders in condemning the actions of the Ayatollah Khomeini of Iran regarding the book "The Satanic Verses" written by Salman Rushdie.

It is imperative that, as a free society, we speak out when one of our important values, in this case freedom of expression, is threatened. Yesterday, in New York and other cities around the Nation, writers gathered to protest the death threats against Mr. Rushdie, his publisher, and the booksellers that display "The Satanic Verses." From these meetings came the important message that the battle for free expression is everybody's battle, and if one author is threatened, all people are threatened.

The columnist Christopher Hitchens reminded all of us yesterday of the prophetic words of the German author Heinrich Heine. Heine wrote, commenting on book burning in Germany in the 1800's, that "where books are burned, men will be burned." We are all familiar with the history that followed Heine's chillingly accurate statement, and which must never be allowed to repeat.

The United States must stand in solidarity with Mr. Rushdie and the international writing community against this immoral and lawless attack on freedom of expression. I invite my colleagues to join in sending a letter to President Bush expressing our concerns on this matter, the text of which I would like to include in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, the safety of Mr. Rushdie and of the principle of freedom of expression is clearly an American interest, and indeed a world interest. Let us join the many members of the international community to protect these interests and preserve artistic freedom.

FEBRUARY 1989.

HON. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the United States, The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We are writing to express our dismay over the Ayatollah Khomeini's soliciting the murder of author Salman Rushdie. We also deplore the threats against booksellers and publishers who trade in the book.

While the government of Iran has been engaged in various acts of extreme behavior for many years, until now it has not attempted to patrol the expression of the international artistic community through death threats and intimidation. All cultures and freedom-loving people have an interest in stopping this most recent example of Iran's disrespect for the norms of international behavior.

We must stand together with the international writing community in condemning this incident. On February 22nd, in public meetings in New York and other cities around the United States, American writers expressed their solidarity with Mr. Rushdie. It is crucial that we join them in this important message. With them, we urge you to recall the prophetic words of the German author Heinrich Heine, "where books are burned, men will be burned."

In recent weeks, many members of the international community have expressed their disapproval of the Ayatollah's actions in various ways. We believe it is important to work closely with all nations who have publicly declared their outrage and to assure, in every way possible, the safety of Mr. Rushdie. Clearly, his safety is an interest shared by the United States along with everyone who seeks to preserve artistic freedom.

Therefore, we respectfully request that the government of Iran be put on public notice that it is the United States' intention to postpone indefinitely any possibility of normalized trade or diplomatic relations until the threats have been rescinded and the safety of the author, publishers, and sellers of "The Satanic Verses" has been assured.

Thank you for your attention to this important matter.

Sincerely,

——— ———.

H.R. 141, TO AMEND TITLE XVIII OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT TO PROVIDE FOR COVERAGE UNDER PART B OF THE MEDICARE PROGRAM FOR ROUTINE PAPANICOLAOU TESTS

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on behalf of H.R. 141, a bill I introduced on the first day of the 101st Congress which would provide or coverage of routine papanicolaou tests under part B of the Medicare Program. A papanicolaou or pap smear tests cells to provide for early detection of cervical and endometrial—together known as uterine—cancer. The bill would extend Medicare coverage to routine pap exams performed not more frequently than once every 6 months.

The proposed law is part of a continuing movement of change from covering a Medicare patient who is seriously ill to paying for tests for the early detection of diseases. Last year, the Senate version of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act counted a wide range of preventive services toward the catastrophic cap. These services included: glaucoma screening by tonometry, cholesterol screening, a pap test, mammography screening, an immunization or booster for tetanus, influenza, or bacterial pneumonia, an occult blood stool test, and tuberculosis sensitivity testing. The final version of the Catastrophic Coverage Act included coverage for mammography or breast cancer screenings for women over age 65. I am pleased with this partial success and urge Congress to consider covering other cancer detection tests such as the one in H.R. 141.

Statistics show that early detection and treatment prevents the spread of cancer and dramatically improves the survival rate of the patient. The death rate for women diagnosed with cancer of the uterus has dropped 70 percent during the last 40 years due to the general use of pap tests and regular check-ups to discover the cancer or precancer conditions in their early stages.

Women whose cancer is detected at the earliest stages are likely to live longer. The 5-year survival rate among women who are diagnosed with cervical cancer at any stage is 66 percent. The survival rate jumps to 80 to 90 percent if the cancer is detected at stage 1, which is when the carcinoma has not spread past the cervix. Most significantly, virtually 100 percent of women whose cervical cancer is discovered in its earliest stage will live 5 years or longer. And by common definition, a uterine cancer patient who survives 5 years without a recurrence is cured of that cancer.

The lab fees for pap tests are relatively inexpensive compared to other cancer screening tests. The Medicare Program could save money by covering pap tests, instead of allowing gynecological cancers to go undetected and paying for treatment that demands much higher fees at a later date. This approach also would save medical resources, which are at a premium in our society.

Mr. Speaker, pap tests do matter for women across this country. We can save Medicare money and women's lives by enacting my bill, H.R. 141.

THE MEDICAL CARE CRISIS IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS

HON. GLENN POSHARD

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, across the Nation and in my southern Illinois district, hospitals are in trouble. They are suffering from rising medical equipment costs, soaring insurance rates, and increasing patient loads.

I am very concerned that many of my constituents are not receiving the medical care they need and others have to drive for miles to receive treatment. During the February district work period, I held a series of 20 town meetings throughout my area and I had a chance to talk with many southern Illinoisans. In every one of those meetings, health care was the No. 1 concern.

From Vandalia in the north to Cairo in the south, veterans, the elderly, and families are all concerned about the quality and availability of medical care. I certainly share their concern, as do the men and women who operate hospitals in Illinois' 22d District. We are all worried that unless Medicare and Medcaid reimbursements to hospitals are increased, more hospitals will close and medical services will further deteriorate.

Recently, one of the major daily newspapers in my district, the Southern Illinoisan, ran a story on Medicaid and area hospitals and I am including the article in the RECORD to demonstrate the seriousness of the health care crisis in southern Illinois:

MEDICAID TURNS HOSPITALS, CLINICS INTO VICTIMS, TOO

(By Beth Haller)

As influenza swept the Carbondale area recently, 31-year-old Loretta Mathis of Carbondale developed a pretty serious cough. So two weeks ago she went to the Carbondale Clinic to see a doctor.

Mathis, however, could not receive care. She is on Medicaid and had just been introduced to the new clinic policy on public aid patients.

In the spring of 1988, the clinic stopped accepting new Department of Public Aid patients for regular office visits. A new Medicaid patient is defined as someone who has not been to the clinic for six months.

For Mathis, this meant a trip to Memorial Hospital of Carbondale's emergency room for treatment of her cough.

Kay Sherman of Carbondale ran up against the same policy when she tried to see the new clinic allergist for a skin rash. She couldn't book a routine appointment with the gynecologist there, either.

"Now, I don't know what's going to happen to me," she said. "It was quite a shock when I found out I couldn't get in there. That's the one place we were all able to go."

It meant leaving physicians we trusted, too.

"I had several doctors at the clinic, none of whom I can go back to," Sherman said.

The clinic's policy still allows for new public aid patients to be seen at the clinic, but they must be routed there as emergency cases or have been referred by another physician or Memorial Hospital. The clinic houses 36 physicians and 15 specialists.

The decision by the Carbondale Clinic's board of directors to control the flow of Medicaid patients there came after losses of millions of dollars.

"The reimbursement rates are lower than half the normal fee," explained William Harris, administrator of the clinic.

And sometimes the clinic receives no reimbursement at all from the state. When the Department of Public Aid hits the middle of its fiscal year, it sometimes runs out of funds and no longer reimburses until the General Assembly appropriates new funds.

The Illinois Hospital Association has called this practice "borrowing illegally from the hospitals of Illinois." The hospital association joined a federal suit against the state over the reimbursement issue last spring. At that time, an average payment cycle of 80 days was anticipated.

Harris said sometimes the clinic must wait four to six months for reimbursement.

Because of the late and low reimbursements, the clinic wrote off $1.5 million in care for Medicaid patients in 1988. In 1987, that figure was $1.25 million.

The clinic traditionally has carried a heavy load of public aid patients, between 10 and 12 percent. The clinic averages 8,000 Medicaid visits per year.

"We felt it was inching up too high, and we have to control that," Harris said.

The clinic still sees about 80 new Medicaid patients per month. The goal is to get the number of public aid patients seen at the clinic down to 9 percent of its total patient load, he said.

Harris does not see the percentage dropping any lower than that.

"We can't ethically and morally close the doors to people," he said.

But the clinic's new policy has had a ripple effect throughout the health care community because it compounds an existing problem.

Some physicians in Southern Illinois will not take any public aid patients, and this puts a burden on those who do.

Shawnee Health Service and Development Corp. operates four health centers in Southern Illinois—in Carterville, Grand Tower, Murphysboro and the Adolescent Health Center in Carbondale.

George O'Neill, executive director of Shawnee Health, reports a 22 percent increase in Medicaid recipients at the clinics during 1988.

The clinics are seeing a number of patients who previously had health insurance, but now have nothing.

"This is a byproduct of the turndown in the economy," O'Neill said.

Obstetrical statistics aptly illustrate the rise in public aid recipients. As the total number of births remains steady, many counties are showing marked increases in public aid births. In Franklin County, for example, 40 percent of all the births are to women on public aid.

"The situation is coming to a crisis point," O'Neill said.

Clara McClure, community support program coordinator for Jackson County Community Mental Health Center, fears that if her clients cannot go to the clinic or find another physician that will take them, they must go to Memorial Hospital's emergency room, causing an overload there.

"I think it's going to get worse before it gets better," she said.

The community support program serves primarily people with major mental illnesses, many of whom are on public aid. Most of the program's clients had gone to the Carbondale Clinic, McClure said.

Mathis, who had to take her cough to the emergency room, said that in the future she probably will try to get medical care for herself and her two teen-agers at the Murphysboro Health Center. But transportation can be a problem.

"I have some transportation, but it's not dependable," she said.

George Maroney, administrator of Memorial Hospital, can attest to the strain the torrent of public aid patients to its emergency room can have on a hospital.

It is the reason the hospital is bordering on operating in the red, he said. In the past 10 years, the hospital has gone from 9 percent public aid patients to 20 percent public aid patients.

The hospital will write off $3.9 million in Medicaid when the 1968-89 fiscal year ends March 31.

"If everyone did their fair share, it wouldn't be so catastrophic," Maroney said, citing those physicians who will not care for Medicaid patients.

And better reimbursement from the state will help, too.

"It is unfortunate that the state is the principle problem, but the hospital and doctors must handle the problem," he said.

Harris of the Carbondale Clinic believes the Medicaid problem keeps physicians from Southern Illinois.

"The net effect is not only to provide limited care but to drive doctors out of the state of Illinois," he said.

Illinois' neighbors, Kentucky, Indiana and Missouri, all have higher reimbursement rates for Medicaid patients, Harris said.

But no matter what the problems, Maroney assures the region that Memorial Hospital will always treat Medicaid patients.

"We will treat all patients."

A TRIBUTE TO MRS. SHIRLEY M. FIGENSHU

HON. VIC FAZIO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mrs. Shirley M. Figenshu, who retires today after more than 37 years in the Federal service. Mrs. Figenshu has been serving for the past year as executive assistant to the commander of the Sacramento Air Logistics Center, McClellan Air Force Base, in Sacramento, CA. McClellan AFB is the largest Federal sector employer in northern California.

Originally from Ohio, Mrs. Figenshu joined the Federal service at McClellan AFB as a clerk-typist in August 1951. In July 1955, she was promoted to duties as an accountant in the accounting and finance division, beginning a 36-year period of outstanding service in what would later become the comptroller directorate.

In 1978, she received a bachelor of science degree in business administration from the California State University at Sacramento. In 1982, she was awarded a masters degree in management from Golden Gate University. Following graduation from the Professional Military Comptroller School in 1976, she was selected as chief, systems and procedures office, in the accounting and finance branch. In 1981, she assumed duties as the chief of the operations and maintenance section, and 1 year later she was named budget officer for McClellan Air Force Base. In January 1985, Mrs. Figenshu was selected to be the deputy comptroller, Sacramento Air Logistics Center, a position she held for 3 years until she became the executive assistant to the commander.

As deputy comptroller for one of the largest organizations in the U.S. Air Force, Mrs. Figenshu was responsible for over a $3 billion budget, a payroll of over 17,000 civilian and military personnel, and provided senior financial expertise to all budgeting, accounting and finance, and cost analysis functions at McClellan AFB.

As the executive assistant to the commander, Mrs. Figenshu was responsible for prioritizing all issues brought to the commander and vice commander for their action—a particularly difficult undertaking in 1988, with the budget reductions and threat of civilian work force furloughs that McClellan experienced. She coordinated all important interfunctional programs to ensure that the policies of the center commander were implemented. Mrs. Figenshu was the first woman to serve as executive assistant at McClellan and the first to serve in that position on a permanent basis at any Air Force Logistics Command Base.

Mrs. Figenshu's achievements go beyond her work at the base, and into the Sacramento community. She served as chairman of the Combined Federal Campaign Federal Sector Coordinating Committee and the Sacramento Symphony Fund Raising Committee. She was a key member of the Officers' Club and Civilian Nonappropriated Fund Advisory Committees, and she led the 1987 McClellan Aviation Museum membership drive. Mrs. Figenshu is a member of the American Society of Military Comptrollers, Association of Government Accountants, Institute of Cost Analysts, Air Force Association, Federal Managers Association, McClellan Management Society, and the International Training in Communications organization.

During her public service career, Mrs. Figenshu was named McClellan's Civilian of the Year in 1965; Air Force Association Outstanding Civilian of 1977; Sacramento Federal Women's Council Supervisor of the Year 1980; McClellan's Outstanding Business Woman of the Year in 1984; the American Society of Military Comptrollers' Outstanding Budget Officer for 1985; and the Sacramento Federal Women's Council Manager of the Year in 1988. In 1987, her ability to develop and implement management initiatives earned her the Air Force Logistics Command Distinguished and Honorary Equal Employment Opportunity/Affirmative Action Award. Over the years, she has also received numerous sustained superior performance awards.

I know my colleagues join me today in sincere congratulations and appreciation to Mrs. Shirley Figenshu on the occasion of her well-earned retirement from Federal service. Her devotion, skills, and extraordinary contributions to the public sector are a shining example to all in our country's service. I would like to extend my best wishes for the future to Mrs. Figenshu and her husband, Jack.

H.R. 867

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, on February 6, 1989, Congressman DOWNEY, Congressman MILLER, and Congressman ROYBAL joined with me to introduce three bills, which, taken together, would make the Supplemental Security Income [SSI] Program fairer and more responsive to the truly needy it is intended to serve. The following is a section-by-section summary of the provisions of the second bill in this SSI reform package, H.R. 867.

SUMMARY OF "SSI TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS OF 1989"—H.R. 867

TITLE I. CHANGES IN THE TREATMENT OF INCOME AND RESOURCES

Section 101. Treatment of workers' compensation and unemployment compensation as earned income for SSI purposes

This provision changes the way in which workers' compensation and unemployment compensation benefits are treated. Instead of treating these benefits as unearned income, the benefits will be treated as earned income. The result of this change is a more helpful treatment of the benefits because earned income is subject to more substantial disregards than unearned income. There is a $20 income disregard for unearned income, while with earned income, the statute provides that the first $65 plus ½ of the remainder is deducted.

Section 102. Eligibility determinations for certain months in the cases of individuals with weekly or biweekly income

In cases where a person has earned income and he or she is paid on a weekly or biweekly basis, problems currently arise when there is a fifth weekly payment or a third biweekly payment in the month. Currently, the SSI benefit of the person (or the child or spouse who is receiving SSI and who has income deemed from other family members) will be reduced or terminated as a result of the extra payment. This provision will require the Secretary to avoid this problem by considering the annual income of the person and using the average monthly amount in calculating the amount of the SSI benefit.

Section 103. Disregard of certain in-kind gifts

This provision will permit an SSI recipient to receive a domestic air, bus or train ticket without having it counted as income and resulting in a reduction in the person's SSI benefit. The Secretary currently counts the value of the ticket as income unless it was paid for on the credit card of another person.

Section 104. Reduction in time during which the income and resources of separated couples must be treated as jointly available

Currently, if a husband and wife who are an eligible couple separate, the statute requires the Secretary to treat them as if they are still together and sharing their income for six months after the separation. This works a hardship on the spouse who has little or no other income in her name. This section provides that an individual and a spouse will be treated as individuals for SSI purposes after they have been separated for one month. In addition, if the Secretary determines that the person is faced with a financial emergency, the Secretary is required to waive the one month rule and pay benefits immediately.

Section 105. Disregard of certain interest and dividend income

Effective January 1, 1990, the Secretary would disregard $120 per year of interest and dividend income in determining eligibility for SSI. This disregard would increase by $12 each year after that until it reached $180 in 1995.

Section 106. Increase in face value of life insurance policies whose cash value is disregarded and increase in allowable burial fund

This provision increases the amount of the face value of a life insurance policy which a person can have and not have the cash value of the policy counted for SSI purposes. The face value is increased from $1500 to $2500.

In addition, the law currently provides an alternative to the life insurance rule which permits a person to have a burial fund which does not exceed $1500. This figure would also be increased to $2500. The amendment would also provide that the rules which apply to recovery or waiver of overpayments generally in the SSI program will apply in cases where the person mistakenly uses a portion of the burial account.

TITLE II. SPECIAL PROVISION RELATED TO SSI FOR THE MENTALLY ILL

Section 201. Continued SSI suspension status for certain residents of public mental institutions

Under present law, beginning with the first full month that an individual is a resident of a public mental institution, an SSI recipient is no longer eligible for benefits. [There is an exception for certain cases where the individual is expected to stay for no more than three months and needs to maintain a residence.] An individual who loses eligibility for this or other reasons is placed in a suspension status for up to twelve months and is not required to file a new application for SSI benefits if he or she is once again eligible for benefits within the twelve month period. This provision changes the rule to provide that the time during which a person is in a public mental hospital will not count toward the twelve month suspension status limit.

TITLE III. CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS CONSIDERED TO BE RECEIVING SSI BENEFITS FOR PURPOSES OF MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY

Section 301. Retention of Medicaid when SSI benefits are lost upon entitlement to Social Security spouse benefits or retired workers benefits prior to age 65

Currently, when a person is receiving SSI disability benefits, the Secretary requires the person to apply for all other benefits—including Social Security—for which the person may be eligible. Certain individuals may not be eligible for Social Security disability benefits because of the stricter definition of disability or "recency of work" requirements. However, they may be eligible for SSI disability benefits and thus Medicaid. Two groups of disabled SSI recipients lose their SSI and Medicaid at age 62: Individuals who become eligible for early retirement benefits at age 62; and individuals who become eligible for a spouse's benefit at age 62 on the Social Security record of an insured worker who is eligible for disability or retirement insurance benefits.

Despite the fact that such individuals are disabled, they have no health care coverage under Medicare until they become age 65. This provision will permit these individuals to be considered to be receiving SSI benefits so that their Medicaid eligibility can continue until they turn 65 and become eligible for Medicare. Such individuals will continue on the SSI rolls in a non-cash payment status and SSA will be responsible for determining ongoing eligibility.

Section 302. Retention of Medicaid for certain additional disabled adult children

Under current law, any SSI recipient who first becomes entitled to Social Security disabled adult child's benefits on or after July 1, 1987, and as a result is no longer eligible for SSI, is deemed to be eligible for SSI so that he or she can continue to receive Medicaid. This provision will extend this same benefit to former SSI recipients who lost their SSI eligibility when they began to receive disabled adult child's benefits, if they first became entitled to the disabled adult child's benefits on or after January 1, 1981 (and before the current provision's starting date, July 1, 1987.) However, they will not be eligible for Medicaid benefits under this provision until July 1, 1989.

Section 303. Amendments affecting individuals considered to be receiving SSI for purposes of the Medicaid program

This section addresses the problem which currently exists when a person loses SSI cash benefits but is in one of the categories of people who are deemed to be still receiving SSI so that they remain eligible for Medicaid. There may be a gap in their coverage until they actually go to the state Medicaid office and apply for benefits or their benefits may end if, for whatever reason, they fail to file that application.

This section provides that these individuals will be presumed to have filed a Medicaid application and that their eligibility for Medicaid will continue unless a determination is made that they are not eligible for Medicaid. For a determination of ineligibility to apply back to the date of the change in status, the determination must be made within 45 days of the change. If it is made after that date, the decision will be effective prospectively only.

This section also clarifies that the provisions in current law which protect categories of disabled individuals from loss of Medicaid when they begin to receive Social Security benefits apply in all states, including those states which have chosen the "section 209(b)" option under Medicaid.

SALUTE TO DONALDSONVILLE, LOUISIANA'S, 'PARENTS AS PARTNERS' PROGRAM

HON. CLYDE C. HOLLOWAY

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise here today to highly commend children, parents, teachers and those committed to working for educational excellence through Donaldsonville, LA's Parents as Partners Program. Yes, the program is about teaching. It is also a program from which communities across our Nation can learn. This highly successful program should serve as an example of the can do attitude and dedication to excellence so important to a good education.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to report that the success of Parents As Partners, founded by Louisiana State University professor Patricia Edwards, has recently attracted the attention it deserves. The Washington Post, in a front page story published in its Tuesday, February 21, edition, described the program, along with the many contributions made to its success by parents, children, church leaders and civic minded citizens of the Donaldsonville, LA, area.

The program's story is one of love and concern. Parents As Partners teaches parents how to read to their children. Its goal is to improve the literacy rate among poor families. Families attend classes together; the parents read to their children while classmates observe. Then, classmates and teachers commend them on their reading strengths while advising how to improve those skills. Everyone is involved—a proven method of success.

Professor Edwards' efforts to establish the program weren't easy. As The Washington Post described, and I quote:

Her first task was the most difficult: persuading low income parents to participate. Her method was controversial but successful. With help from (Donaldsonville Elementary) School's assistant principal, Marva Matthews, she first persuaded community leaders to take an interest in the project and pressure parents to attend. Matthews and Edwards used a Saturday night and Sunday morning approach. The two most important community leaders they enlisted were Ray Jacobs, owner of a popular Donaldsonville tavern, Jonelle's, and the Rev. William D. Hogan of St. Catherine's, a predominantly black Roman Catholic church. Jacobs, who hosts a popular local talent show in his bar, started telling mothers who patronized the establishment that they no longer would be welcome unless they put as much time into learning how to read to their children as they spent enjoying themselves at the saloon. He took his commitment one step further, driving women to the weekly class and participating himself. He is one of two men who regularly attend, among an average of 30 to 40 women. Father Hogan, a Josephite priest who has served black Catholics during his entire 37-year career, preached about the benefits of the reading program during his Sunday sermon, saying literacy is an important tool of faith."

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent Donaldsonville. The emphasis which the people of Donaldsonville have placed on their children's education, and on their children's future, deserves our admiration. Among other things, the people of Donaldsonville are sending a message to their children. The message is, a good education is not simply a fundamental necessity; a good education is everyone's concern.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the parents, grandparents, teachers and volunteers who have made Parents As Partners such a resounding success.

I reserve special thanks for Professor Patricia Edwards, founder of Parents As Partners and Marva Matthews, assistant principal of Donaldsonville Elementary School. Their concern for the families and children of Donaldsonville should serve as a valuable lesson to us all.

PROVIDENT SAVINGS BANK MARKS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, on February 27, 1989, the Provident Savings Bank, New Jersey's oldest mutual savings bank, will celebrate its 150th anniversary. Gov. Thomas Kean and the New Jersey Legislature, which granted the Provident its original charter in 1839, will cite the bank for its outstanding contributions to the economic growth of New Jersey at a joint session of the legislature to be held in the Senate on Monday, February 27.

The Governor's proclamation will recognize the Provident as the first savings bank in the State, a thrift institution which literally started New Jersey saving and which has, in effect, been imitated ever since, Kenneth F.X. Albers, chairman and chief executive officer, and the bank's board of managers, distinguished members of the State's business community, will be on hand to witness the commemorative ceremonies.

The Provident opened for business in Jersey City in October 1843 with first day's deposits of $227.00. Ten years later, bank growth warranted the erection of its own building at Plymouth and Washington Streets. On December 31, 1988, the bank listed 34 offices throughout the State with assets of over $1.4 billion. The bank has just paid its 290th consecutive semiannual dividend and, since 1839, not one depositor has ever lost one penny at "The Old Beehive," the bank symbol of thrift and industry for a century and a half. It is a record few banks in the country can equal.

The Provident makes no foreign loans, but does invest in the State of New Jersey. Today, mortgage, consumer and commercial loans outstanding to New Jersey people and businesses amount to over $850 million. In the last 10 years alone, Provident depositors were paid over $714 million in dividends.

The bank's new corporate headquarters, recently completed in Jersey City is an architectural landmark, and a very substantial investment that is representative of the confidence, vitality and economic leadership the bank provides in New Jersey communities.

As a mutual savings bank, the Provident is different from other banks in ways that are important to the public. It pays all earnings to its depositors after meeting obligations for operations, taxes, and protective reserves. By law, those who direct the Provident operations may not profit from the bank or its investments. In effect, it is the bank's depositors and the communities they serve who stand to benefit from the bank's operations.

At a time when many banks in this country are in financial difficulty, the Provident continues to be a financially strong institution, a direct result of the bank's own sound, unique principle "to maintain the highest degree of safety and to pay the highest dividends consistent with that aim."

In today's rapidly changing financial markets, the Provident, as a member of the First Nationwide Network of Independent Financial Institutions, is uniquely set up to provide New Jersey savers with a wealth of opportunities to handle their finances intelligently. In addition to CD's, savings, and checking accounts, Provident customers have access to mutual funds, trust advisory accounts, and other traditional bank services. More than ever, the bank's enviable 150-year-old safety record seems to say, "If you bank in New Jersey, you can bank on The Provident."

The history of the bank is so interesting. The three were born at the same time—the city, the county, and the bank. Jersey City was incorporated in 1838. Two years later, in 1840, Hudson County—until then a part of Bergen—was created as a separate entity by the State legislature. In 1839, the year between these two events, the Provident Institution for Savings was granted its charter.

PRESIDENTS OF THE BANK—1839-1975

John F. Ellis, 1839-1841.
Dudley S. Gregory, 1841-1874.
Andrew Clerk, 1874-1886.
David Smith, 1886-1889.
Isaac I. Vanderbeek, 1889-1894.
Freeman A. Smith, 1894-1896.
Edmund W. Kingsland, 1896-1910.
George F. Perkins, 1910-1916.
James B. Throckmorton, 1916-1940.
George R. Beach, 1941-1956.
Karl A. Schwotzer, 1957-1958.
William Neumann, Jr., 1959-1967.
Kenneth F.X. Albers, 1968- .

Provident was the first bank of any kind in Hudson County and the first savings bank in the State of New Jersey. John F. Ellis was the bank's first president, but it was not until the administration of his successor, Dudley S. Gregory, in 1843, that the bank opened for business.

The delay was due in part to the public's distrust of all banks at the time. The panic of 1837, and the widespread distress of the ensuing years in which hundreds of commercial banks collapsed, had caused ruin to thousands of businesses and individuals. The idea of a "mutual savings bank" in which "the income and profit thereof shall be applied and divided among the persons making deposits therein" was a new one.

When Mr. Gregory became president of Provident, John Tyler was President of the United States, and the Nation was fast approaching war with Mexico. During Mr. Gregory's 33-year administration of the bank, Tyler was succeeded by Presidents Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln, Johnson, and Grant. The Mexican War came to an end, slavery proved to be an issue that could not be resolved peacefully, and America was plunged into the agony of its great Civil War. Lincoln was assassinated, the Union was saved, and the Nation entered a period of unprecedented growth and change. The railroads forged a connection between the east and west coasts with Jersey City as its eastern terminus—and America became a great industrial Nation.

In Mr. Gregory's final year as president, another major event shook the nation: the panic of 1873. Many fortunes were lost in this disaster, but the Provident survived and prospered.

If any one man may be said to have been the architect of Provident Savings Bank, that man was Dudley S. Gregory. More than anyone else, he built the bank and made it strong and established the precepts from which it has never deviated. Mr. Gregory played an important role in the growth of the community as well, serving for some time as mayor of Jersey City. When he retired, after 33 years, the bank boasted assets of $3,500,000—no mean sum in the year 1874.

In 1910 the makeup of the population of Jersey City and Hudson County—and the makeup of the bank's depositors—had undergone a profound change. This was the great age of immigration. From Ireland, from Italy and Germany and from the nations of Eastern Europe a great wave of immigrants came to the United States. As they waited at Ellis Island, one of the great sights the newcomers could see most clearly was Hudson County. Many liked what they saw and many stayed.

The corporate headquarters is a historical landmark, nine stories tall, on Bergen Avenue, and has a 30-foot high clock tower which is operational and illuminated from within. The four-sided clock has been a Jersey City landmark for many years, and has been recently restored to its original beauty.

Kenneth F.X. Albers, a career banker since 1948, joined Provident Savings Bank in October 1966 as vice president, assistant to the president. He became president and chief executive officer in January 1968 and chairman of the board and chief executive officer in February 1983. Under his leadership the Provident has continued to grow.

I ask my colleagues here in the House of Representatives to join me in extending congratulations to Kenneth F.X. Albers and all those affiliated with the Provident Savings Bank on its 150th anniversary and best wishes for its continued success and prosperity.

ESTONIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, Americans of Estonian descent will note with both joy and sorrow, the 71st anniversary of Estonian Independence Day; joy in remembering that day in 1918 when independence was first declared, and the years that followed which saw the flourishing of Estonian culture and heritage. The sorrow followed when that independence, was forcibly usurped in 1940, when the tiny nation of Estonia was annexed by the Soviet Union.

This past November, the Estonian Parliament took a bold step by declaring their sovereignty within the framework of the Soviet Union. Although ruled by Soviet leader Mikhal Gorbachev to be invalid and unconstitutional, the declaration is nonetheless clear and convincing evidence that the love of freedom and desire for independence prevails throughout Estonia.

Only a few days ago, it was announced that the politburo has consented to give the Soviet Union's 15 constituent republics more independence in making economic decisions, a compromise that is apparently targeted at republics such as Estonia. This overture, meant to assuage some of the discontent brought about by the earlier condemnation, will perhaps ease some of the frustration and anguish. In Estonia, both party members and independent movements have called for complete economic sovereignty from Moscow. Let us continue to hope that they achieve this, as well as the independence for which they so dearly long.

Estonian Independence Day will most certainly bring out hundreds of thousands of supporters, and with them, our own hopes for their future. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, we acknowledge this anniversary of Estonian independence, certain that this national feeling cannot be stifled.

NATIONAL BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA WEEK

HON. WILLIAM H. NATCHER

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to again recognize the Boy Scouts of America as they celebrated their 79th anniversary this month.

The year 1988 marked the eighth consecutive year of total growth for the Boy Scouts of America, and the membership at the end of last year totaled 4,233,001 youth.

The Boy Scouts of America has identified five unacceptables in today's society: Functional illiteracy, youth unemployment, youth protection, drug abuse, and hunger. To this end, the Boy Scouts of America is promoting reading through Boys' Life magazine, Scout manuals, and other literature. The public service theme is "In Scouting You Do What You Read." Skill and character development is recognized as necesssary in order to produce a more employable youth, and a strategy has been developed to keep undesirables out of the Scouting program through education, leader selection, barriers to abuse, promotion of reporting and swift removal.

"Drugs: A Deadly Game" was launched in 1987 and since that time more than 8 million youth booklets have been distributed to young people in and out of Scouting.

More than 20 million Americans go hungry each month. The National Good Turn "Scouting for Food" in November produced 75 million cans of food which were turned over to local food banks for distribution to those in need. A similar project is scheduled for this year.

Other programs in 1988 on the national level included a new videotape training series for adult leaders, the introduction of Cub Scout resident camping, emphasis on encouraging more Boy Scouts to reach first class rank, national conferences for Explorer past presidents and Law Enforcement past presidents, and a nationwide satellite New Troop Teleconference with commitments to organize new Boy Scout Troops.

In my home State of Kentucky, more young people than ever were served by Scouting in western Kentucky. This is the sixth straight year that this has occurred, and over 4,700 boys and girls participated in Scouting in 1988. The summer Scouting program continues to improve and last year 747 Scouts went to camp, with over 1,000 preregistered for camp this summer. The office trading post was enlarged by 100 percent so that volunteers with the Scouting program could be better served.

Thirty-one Scouts in western Kentucky attained the rank of Eagle Scout last year. This is a record number, and I would like to especially commend these young people.

The year 1988 was another banner year for Scouting, not only in western Kentucky, but all across the Nation. At this time I would like to congratulate everyone associated with the Boy Scouts of America for their accomplishments and I wish them continued success in all their future endeavors.

BILL TO PROHIBIT PURCHASE OF SOVIET URANIUM ENRICHMENT SERVICES BY U.S. UTILITIES

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill indicating that nuclear electric power utilities in the United States should not purchase uranium enrichment services from the Soviet Union.

The United States operates a Uranium Enrichment Program through the Department of Energy, and it is intended to be fully self-sufficient through revenues it generates from the customers it serves. In the recent past, the demand for uranium enrichment services has been substantially reduced causing a significant retrenchment in the Government's program and the closure of one of the Government's three uranium enrichment plants in the United States.

In its desperation for hard currency, the Soviet Union does not apply fair trade practices. The Soviet Union does not operate its uranium enrichment business on the principles of a free market society. They offer their enrichment services at a discount from whatever level is established as the price of enrichment services in the United States. While this may be beneficial for the short-term to purchasers of uranium enrichment services in the United States, in the long term it is detrimental to the national security and other interests of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I can remember when the United States objected to the Europeans purchasing natural gas from the Soviet Union. We did that because we feared they would become reliant upon the Soviet Union and reluctant to support the policies of the United States when they contradict those of the Soviet Union. When United States citizens become dependent upon the Soviet Union for the supply of fuel for nuclear powerplants, it provides a potential lever to influence United States policies.

In the long term, it is also potentially detrimental to have domestic electric utilities and others procure Soviet enrichment services because such purchases impair the ability of the United States to continue its Uranium Enrichment Program, which the United States operates for the benefit of electric ratepayers.

The United States operates its uranium enrichment program solely on a cost recovery basis. No profit is obtained for the Government. As the number of customers which are supplied by the Government declines, the unit price of the enrichment services goes up to the detriment of all U.S utility ratepayers. Although competition with European suppliers of enrichment services has also diminished the market for the U.S. enrichment services, the competition based on free market principles has been healthy for the domestic program. This competition has lowered near-term costs and focused the efforts within the program on supplying the least cost enrichment services over the long term.

However, the Soviet Union is an unfair competitor and enrichment service sales to United States citizens detract from the national energy security of the United States.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this legislation and in expressing the sense of the Congress that dealing with the Soviet Union for these services is something that should be avoided by all domestic customers of the United States Government's Uranium Enrichment Program.

DESIGNATING THE CALIFORNIA AND PONY EXPRESS TRAILS AS COMPONENTS OF THE NATIONAL TRAILS SYSTEM

HON. NORMAN D. SHUMWAY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which amends the National Trails System Act to designate the California National Historic Trail and the Pony Express National Historic Trail as components of the National Trails System. As drafted, this legislation reflects, pursuant to Public Law 98-405, the final recommendations of the eligibility study and environmental assessment for the California and Pony Express Trails prepared by the National Park Service at the Department of the Interior which were formally submitted to Congress on January 30, 1989. These two trails closely parallel one another across the West, and at points in the Great Plains region, become a single pathway.

The Pony Express Trail ran between Saint Joseph, MO, the western terminus of the railroads in 1860, and extended to Sacramento, CA, for a total distance of about 2,000 miles. Upon arrival in Sacramento, the letters and important dispatches were taken by steamer to anxious recipients in San Francisco. The route left Missouri and followed the well-traversed Oregon Trail through Kansas and along the Platte River in Nebraska. Before leaving Nebraska, the route dipped south into Julesburg, CO, then headed north into South Pass, WY. At Fort Bridger, WY, the Pony Express Train left the emigrant trail and swung south to Salt Lake City, UT, before running due west across the salt desert and badlands of Nevada, over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and down into Sacramento.

Pony Express service began on April 3, 1860, and continued until October 24, 1861, when the first transcontinental telegraph line was completed. During the Pony's 18 months of glory, 318 runs were made each way for a total of approximately 600,000 miles. The mail was lost only once.

Although the Pony Express was a financial disaster for its proponents, it proved that correspondence could be delivered in 8 to 12 days over the central route. Like the transcontinental telegraph and railroad which succeeded it, the Pony Express provided an improved communications link between the widely separated eastern and western segments of the country. It heightened the demand for expedient transcontinental linkage prior to the outbreak of the Civil War. In fact, the fastest time recorded by the Pony Express occurred in November 1860 when news of President Lincoln's election victory was carried from Fort Kearny, NE, to Fort Churchill, NV, in 6 days. It is interesting to note that the Pony Express route is generally followed by the interstate highways and airplane flight paths of today.

The historical significance of the California Trail is no less impressive. The trail was one of the major thoroughfares used by settlers and prospectors in their movement to the West during the mid-1800's. The trail breaks from the Oregon Trail—already included in the National Trails System—at the Raft River, in Idaho, and heads southwest toward Sacramento, CA. There were many branches and side trails which were all heavily utilized, particularly by prospectors. First and foremost, though, the California Trail was the main emigration artery to California and eventually, the Gold Rush. In fact, more than 125,000 men, women, and children trod this trail to settle or prospect on the west coast in 1818 alone.

Mr. Speaker, my legislation is a simple, straightforward confirmation of what the many bipartisan proponents of the original study provisions included in H.R. 3787 considered during the 98th Congress already knew: that the acknowledgment of these two trails is a national priority in order to preserve our American heritage. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this legislation and see to its swift enactment.

CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO HON. WALTER J. JASINSKI ON 40 YEARS OF SERVICE TO PACKANACK LAKE, NJ, FIRE CO., NO. 5 AND THE WAYNE TOWNSHIP FIRE DEPARTMENT

HON. ROBERT A. ROE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest admiration that I rise today to salute a truly outstanding civic leader and public servant from my hometown of Wayne, NJ, whose community is truly a better place for his unceasing and dedicated efforts in all aspects of civic life.

I am speaking of the Hon. Walter J. Jasinski, the former mayor of Wayne Township who, on March 3, 1989, will be honored for his tireless and devoted efforts to protect his community through 40 years of outstanding service to Packanack Lake Fire Company No. 5 and the Wayne Township Fire Department, with a testimonial dinner at the Regency House in Pequannock, NJ.

Mr. Speaker, I know this event will be a great source of pride to Walter Jasinski's multitude of colleagues and friends, but most especially to his loving family; his wife, Ruth; his sons, John, David and Jim Jasinski; his daughters, JoAnn Shoemaker and Katie Odom; his daughters-in-law, Sharon, Nancy and Marilyn Jasinski; his sons-in-law, Ritch Shoemaker and Randy Odom, and his nine grandchildren, Tyler, Reed, Hope, Danny, Christopher, Andrew, Ryan and Travis Jasinski, and Sally Shoemaker.

Mr. Speaker, the litany of Walter J. Jasinski's accomplishments, achievements and contributions to his community is, indeed, legend among those who have been fortunate enough to know him. A highly respected engineer by profession who was educated at Tri-State University, Carnegie Tech and the University of Wisconsin, Walter Jasinski has worked to protect his community through his more than four decades of service to the Wayne Township Fire Department and Packanack Lake Fire Company No. 5.

During his long and fruitful tenure, he has served the company in a multitude of capacities, including Wayne fire commissioner and chief of Fire Company No. 5. He has continued his long association with the fire department, currently serving as its assistant treasurer and delegate to the North Jersey Volunteer Fireman's Association.

Mr. Speaker, taken alone, Walter Jasinski's service to the Wayne Township Fire Department would be enough to make anyone proud. But that is only part of the story of his contribution to his community. For a 20-year period beginning in 1964, Walter Jasinski served Wayne as a member of the Township Council (1964-77) representing the municipality's third ward, and as mayor (1977-84).

Among his many other offices, activities and memberships that have provided a great benefit to the people of Wayne Township, Walter Jasinski served as Wayne police commissioner; as a member of the Wayne I-287 River

Route Committee; as a Boy Scout scoutmaster and merit badge counselor; as township baseball commissioner and director of umpires; as a member of the Wayne board of directors of the American Red Cross; as a member of Wayne Elks Lodge No. 2181; as a member of the Wayne Knights of Columbus Council No. 6354; as a member of the Sportsfriends Soccer Club; as a member of the board of trustees of Greater Paterson General Hospital; as a member and president of the Passaic County League of Mayors; as a Passaic County delegate to and vice president of the New Jersey Conference of Mayors; as a member of the Central Basin Flood Committee; as a member of the Pompton Lakes, Oakland and Wayne Organization to Revive Pompton Lakes; as a member of the Polish-American Republican Caucus; as a sustaining member of the New Jersey Republican State Committee, and as a parishioner of Immaculate Heart of Mary Church.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, while Walter Jasinski is being honored on March 3 for his four decades with the Wayne Township Fire Department, all of those attending this truly special event will be ever mindful of all of Walter J. Jasinski's invaluable contributions to his community and will recognize him for the outstanding public servant and civic leader he is and always has been.

It is with great pride, then, Mr. Speaker, that I ask you to join me in saluting a great New Jerseyan and a great American, the Honorable Walter J. Jasinski of Wayne, NJ, who has truly made his community, his State and his Nation a better place to live.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a compaign finance reform bill that limits spending for House campaigns and curbs PAC influence by providing for partial public financing of congressional campaigns.

Clearly, the cost of congressional campaigns has escalated dramatically. In 1986, $210.3 million was spent by House candidates in general elections. Thirty-seven percent of this came from PAC's, up from 29 percent in 1980. Since the last major campaign reform initiative was undertaken, individual participation has declined and reliance on political action committee money has increased significantly. It is time to take steps to reverse this unhealthy trend.

My bill would give taxpayers the option of indicating a contribution of $1 or more on their tax return form, similar to the Presidential campaign checkoff. However, it is important to note that the money would come from the individual at no cost to the Federal Treasury. Taxpayers would have the opportunity to designate that their dollar fund Democratic candidates, Republican candidates, or all participating candidates. Candidates who choose to participate in this program would be limited to spending $300,000—$350,000 for challengers—no more than half of which may come from PAC's. In addition, my bill would restore the tax credit for political contributions for up to $50 per individual or $100 for a joint return as a way of encouraging small individual contributions.

Mr. Speaker, the bill follows:

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971 RELATING TO LIMITATION ON TOTAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO GENERAL ELECTION CANDIDATES FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES WHO AGREE TO ACCEPT AMOUNTS FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CAMPAIGN TRUST FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title III of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"LIMITATION ON TOTAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO GENERAL ELECTION CANDIDATES FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES WHO AGREE TO ACCEPT AMOUNTS FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CAMPAIGN TRUST FUND

"SEC. 324. A general election candidate for the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress may, in such manner as the Commission shall prescribe by regulation, agree to accept amounts from the appropriate account of the House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund under section 9511 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. A candidate who so agrees may not accept contributions from all sources (including funds from the House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund) with respect to such election totaling in excess of $300,000 ($350,000 if the candidate is not an incumbent of the office involved), of which not more than one-half may be accepted from nonparty multicandidate political committees or from separate segregated funds of corporations, labor unions, and national banks.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to elections occurring after December 31, 1991.

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986 RELATING TO CONTRIBUTION OF AMOUNTS FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CAMPAIGN TRUST FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter A of chapter 61 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to returns and records) is amended by adding at the end the following new part:

"PART IX—CONTRIBUTION OF AMOUNTS FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CAMPAIGN TRUST FUND

"Sec. 6097. Contribution.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—With respect to each taxpayer's return for the taxable year of the tax imposed by chapter 1, such taxpayer may include with such return a cash contribution for any account of the House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund.

"(b) MANNER AND TIME OF CONTRIBUTION.—A contribution under subsection (a) may be made with respect to any taxable year only at the time of filing the return of tax imposed by chapter 1 for such taxable year. Such contribution shall be made on the 1st page of the return.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of parts for such subchapter A is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"Part IX. Contribution of amounts for the House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 3. AMENDMENTS TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986 RELATING TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CAMPAIGN TRUST FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to trust fund code) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 9511. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CAMPAIGN TRUST FUND.

"(a) CREATION OF TRUST FUND.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the 'House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund', consisting of such amounts as may be appropriated or credited to such trust fund as provided in this section or section 9602(b).

"(b) ACCOUNTS.—The trust fund shall consist of accounts as follows:

"(1) One account for all qualified candidates. The amounts in such account shall be divided equally among such candidates.

"(2) One account for each major party (as defined in section 9002). The amounts in such account shall be divided equally among the candidates of such party.

"(3) One account for each minor party (as defined in section 9002), if, not later than May 30 of the taxable year involved, such party submits to the Federal Election Commission petitions signed by at least 20,000 registered voters from each of at least three-fourths of the States and declaring that the signers desire the party to be eligible for payments under section 324 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. The amounts in such account shall be divided equally among the candidates of such party.

"(4) One account for each new party (as defined in section 9002), if, not later than May 30 of the taxable year involved, such party submits to the Federal Election Commission petitions signed by at least 20,000 registered voters from each of at least three-fourths of the States and declaring that the signers desire the party to be eligible for payments under section 324 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. The amounts in such account shall be divided equally among the candidates of such party.

"(c) TRANSFER OF CONTRIBUTED AMOUNTS.—There are hereby appropriated to the House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund amounts equivalent to the amounts received in the Treasury pursuant to contributions under section 6097.

"(d) EXPENDITURES.—Amounts in the House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund shall be available to carry out the purposes of section 324 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. Expenditures from the Fund shall be made, in such manner as the Federal Election Commission may prescribe by regulation, to each candidate who, not later than September 1 of the year of the election, certifies to the Commission that such candidate and the authorized committees of such candidate have received contributions, during a 2-year election cycle, aggregating not less than $25,000, in contributions of $100 or less from individual contributors.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such subchapter A is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"Sec. 9511. House of Representatives Campaign Trust Fund."

SEC. 4. AMENDMENTS TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986 RELATING TO THE CREDIT FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO CERTAIN CANDIDATES FOR THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 23 the following new section:

"SEC. 24. CONTRIBUTIONS TO QUALIFIED CANDIDATES FOR CONGRESS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 50 percent of the qualified political contributions which are made by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for a taxable year shall not exceed $50 ($100 in the case of a joint return under section 6013).

"(2) VERIFICATION.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) shall be allowed, with respect to any qualified political contribution, only if such contribution is verified in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulations.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED POLITICAL CONTRIBUTION.—The term 'qualified political contribution' means any contribution or gift of money to—

"(A) an individual who is a qualified candidate for election to the office of Representative in any general election for use by such individual to further his candidacy for election to such office; or

"(B) any authorized committee (as defined in section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431) of a qualified candidate for election to the office of Representative.

"(2) QUALIFIED CANDIDATE.—The term 'qualified candidate' means, with respect to the office of Representative, an individual who—

"(A) publicly announces before the close of the calendar year following the calendar year in which the contribution or gift is made that he is a candidate for election to such office, and

"(B) is a candidate for election to such office within the meaning of section 301 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 431).

"(3) OFFICE OF REPRESENTATIVE.—The term 'office of Representative' means the office of Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 642 of such Code (relating to special rules for credits and deductions of estates or trusts) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(j) CREDIT FOR POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS NOT ALLOWED.—An estate or trust shall not be allowed the credit against tax provided by section 24."

(2) The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the time relating to section 23 the following new item:

"Sec. 24. Contributions to qualified candidates for the office of Representative.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 5. PROHIBITION OF CONTRIBUTIONS BY MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND CANDIDATES FOR THAT OFFICE TO OTHERS WHO ARE SUCH MEMBERS OR CANDIDATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 315 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441a) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(i) An authorized committee of any individual who is a Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner, to, the Congress, or a candidate for such office may not make any contribution to an authorized committee of any other individual who is a Representative in, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, the Congress, or a candidate for such office.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to elections occurring after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 6. AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971 RELATING TO IDENTIFICATION OF CANDIDATES INTENDED TO BENEFIT FROM INDEPENDENT EXPENDITURES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 318 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 441d) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) Any person who, during the period beginning 30 days before an election and ending on the day of the election, makes an independent expenditure in the form of an advertisement (including any radio advertisement, television advertisement, newspaper advertisement, sign, or billboard) or an informational mailing shall include in the advertisement or mailing the name of the candidate in the election intended to benefit from the advertisement or mailing.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to elections occurring after December 31, 1989.

FEDERAL TORT CLAIMS ACT

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, today I am reintroducing legislation designed to correct a serious inequity in the Federal Tort Claims Act. I am pleased to be joined again in this effort by a bapartisan group of cosponsors, including my distinguished colleague, Representative TOM LUKEN.

As you know, in recent years there has been considerable controversy and litigation concerning the role of the Federal Government in the unnecessary exposure of citizens to risks associated with a number of safety and health hazards. In numerous instances, there is considerable documentation of negligence on the part of the Federal Government. This is particularly true in cases of unnecessary exposure to asbestos, but it is also applicable to incidents involving atomic testing and the development of the polio vaccine.

For example, in cases involving asbestos exposure, it has been documented repeatedly that the Federal Government violated its own safety and health standards at the time of the Second World War, and that it failed to warn, or provide protection for, workers in government and contract shipyards. The courts have found that government officials and safety inspectors were aware of the hazards associated with asbestos exposure and of the dangerous conditions in the shipyards under their control.

Unfortunately, citizens pursuing their cases in the courts have found that the Federal Government can escape any liability for violating its own safety and health standards by exercising a technical legal defense. By invoking the defense of discretionary function provided under section 2680(a) of title 28, United States Code, the Federal Government effectively is able to avoid responsibility.

The case of Shuman versus United States highlights the current problem for citizens seeking redress through the courts. In a 1984 decision, a Federal district court found that the Government had negligently caused the injury and death of a man, exposed to asbestos dust, who worked in a contract shipyard in 1942 and from 1950 to 1953. The court ordered the Government to pay his widow $145,013 in damages. On appeal, the first circuit court overturned the decision, not on the merits of the case, but on the grounds that the Government was able to exempt itself from liability. Private concerns, in similar cases, have been found liable and ordered to compensate plaintiffs.

In its previous term, the Supreme Court considered two cases which were effected by the general issue of Government liability. In Berkowitz versus United States, in spite of the discretionary function defense offered by the Government, the court unanimously held that the Government was partially liable when the Food and Drug Administration wrongfully approved for release to the public an oral polio vaccine. The Court determined that the Government could not shield itself from immunity for all acts arising out of its regulatory programs. However, the court did find that the Government could be insulated from liability in selected cases, but only when its actions and decisions involve an element of choice and are based on public policy considerations.

The second case, Boyle versus United Technologies, Inc., focused on the relative liability of a contractor when a product—in this case, a helicopter—is manufactured to Government specifications. Although the Government was able to maintain its exemption from liability in the case, the Court held that the Government had created the risk which led to a pilot's death and that it was unfair to make the contractor liable.

These examples reflect the uncertainty over who is responsible and who shall bear the appropriate burden for liability in similar situations. In my view, the Federal Government should not be able to hide from its responsibilities in this area. The legislation I am introducing would make it possible for citizens who are injured as a result of the Government's violation of occupational safety and health standards, or by its negligence in workplaces under its control or supervision, to seek to recover damages for those injuries.

I want to stress that the legislation makes no judgment about the merits of the numerous cases currently pending before the courts. It merely asks that the Government be able to prove its case on the merits. If the Government did not act negligently, I am certain the courts will recognize that fact. However, if the Government did act in a negligent fashion, it is irresponsible, unjust, and unacceptable for the Federal Government to absolve itself of any responsibility for its actions.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation addresses fundamental questions of equity, fairness, and justice. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting these principles and this legislation.

TRIBUTE TO MR. MAURICE J. CONNELL

HON. LAWRENCE J. SMITH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to call to the attention of my colleagues the selection of my very good friend Maurice Connell as the recipient of the Greater Hollywood Chamber of Commerce's 1988 Community Service Award. The award, to be presented at a dinner on February 11, 1989 in Hollywood, FL, is given annually in recognition of long and continued service to the community.

Maurie epitomizes the American ideal—that you can accomplish anything you want with hard work and perseverance. His life's accomplishments are a tribute to that belief. An excellent baseball player at the University of Toledo, he went on to try out with the Detroit Tigers. Later, Maurie served his country in the Army as an officer in the Pacific in World War II. Upon returning from the war, Maurie decided to try his hand at three quite different enterprises—a high school basketball coach, a partner in a Ford agency, and in the insurance business. However, Maurie was always drawn to politics, and abandoned his other pursuits to serve as right hand man to former Ohio Gov. Mike DiSalle and followed DiSalle to a position in the Kennedy administration.

At the age of 68, Maurie has not slowed down his hectic pace, serving as president of Maurice J. Connell Enterprises, an intergovernmental consulting firm. He is also the grant coordinator for the city of Hollywood. In this capacity, Maurie has acquired over $100 million in public funding for parks and land for municipal parking and sewers. In recognition of Maurie's contributions, the Hollywood, FL, City Commission dedicated the Maurice J. Connell parking facility on Hollywood Beach on June 6, 1985. While securing grants for Hollywood takes a great deal of his time, he continues to be a prominent leader in the community, serving on a variety of boards, including the Orangebrook Country Club, Memorial Hospital, Chaminade-Madonna College Preparatory School, the Greater Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwannis Club, and the Rotary Club. In addition, while most people use the game of golf for recreation, Maurie uses it as an opportunity to organize charity events for the chamber of commerce, the Sheridan House for Girls, and the Celebrity Tournament of Pembroke Pines.

Maurie's life has taken him to many different venues and to many different occupations. Through it all, Maurie has never lost his good humor or his uncanny ability to tell a story. While there is no doubt that Maurie has gained success through his interpersonal skills, he is a competitive man who knows how to achieve what he sets out to accomplish. He is admired and loved by everyone who knows him.

It truly is an honor to call Maurie Connell my friend and I am sure that my colleagues join me in congratulating this extraordinary man on his most recent honor.

TRIBUTE TO MARY AND JAMES CASHMAN, JR.

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor two preeminent civic and community leaders of southern Nevada, James and Mary Cashman, Jr. On Monday, March 6, 1989, Bishop Gorman High School will be honoring Mary and Jim at the seventh annual "Knight of the Gael." They will be recoginzed at the Palace Station Hotel in Las Vegas for their outstanding contributions and loyalty to the school. They are both truly deserving of this honor.

James Cashman, Jr., is a member of a family traditionally dedicated to the development of southern Nevada and to service to the people of the area. Jim's father arrived in Las Vegas in 1907 and went on to found a business that, with Jim and Mary's help, has grown to include Cashman Cadillac, Inc., Cashman Equipment Co., J&M Aviation, Inc., and James Cashman Co.

After serving in the U.S. Air Force from 1943 to 1945, Jim, a native of Las Vegas, returned to help run the family business and to marry his childhood sweetheart, Mary. Jim and Mary have continued to lend their considerable talents to a number of worthwhile activities. Their commitment to helping others has benefited the Las Vegas community and the State of Nevada.

Jim has always been recognized as a leader in our community. In the Las Vegas Junior Chamber of Commerce—now the Las Vegas Jaycees—he was director of the local chapter, State president, and national director. He has served in every elective and appointive position with the Las Vegas Chamber of Commerce including being its president for two terms. He has been active in key positions with the United Way of Clark County, Boys and Girls Club of Southern Nevada, the University of Nevada, the Elks Club, Rotary Club, and the Boy Scouts of America. He presently serves as president of the Nevada Taxpayers Association. He was a member of the Governor's Higher Education Advisory Committee and also served as an advisor to the Governor's Conference on Manpower and Economic Education.

Mary, born in Whitetail, MT, coming to Las Vegas as a youngster, has been an active member of the board of directors and the State board of trustees of Catholic Community Services of Nevada for over 16 years and served as president of the board of trustees from 1977 to 1979. She was a founding member of the Service League—now Junior League. She has also served as a member of the Regina Hall Auxiliary since its inception in 1972, the Home of the Good Shepherd Auxiliary and the Sun Youth Forum.

Mr. Speaker, by any standard—be it community service, civic leadership, or professional contributions—Jim and Mary Cashman, Jr., represent the finest in southern Nevada's commitment to excellence. I ask my colleagues to join me today in commending the Cashman's in their well-deserved recognition for outstanding contributions and loyalty to Bishop Gorman.

STEEL AND COAL TRADE RECIPROCITY

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, recently, legislation was introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, JOHN MURTHA, and other steel caucus members, to extend the Steel Import Stabilization Act for an additional 5-year period. I was pleased to join as an original cosponsor of this legislation.

Today, I am introducing a bill which compliments the Murtha legislation. The purpose of my legislation is to provide a formula under which imported steel market shares would be determined under extended or renegotiated voluntary restraint agreements.

The Steel and Coal Trade Reciprocity Act of 1989 would award those countries which are good customers of U.S. metallurgical coal with greater shares of the U.S. imported steel market within the overall quota ceiling set by the Steel Import Stabilization Act should it be extended for an additional 5 years. In effect, it would explicitly link the metallurgical coal trade with the steel trade.

This type of linkage makes good sense in light of the fact that metallurgical coal is an essential ingredient in the steelmaking process. While many countries have quantities of steel products they would like to continue exporting to the United States, we similarly have vast tonnages of metallurgical coal we would like to export.

Under this legislation, the amount of steel product imports within the overall ceiling set by the restraint agreements that would be allowed from any given country under any extension of the Steel Stabilization Act Program would be the same ratio that country's purchases of U.S. metallurgical coal bore to the overall level of U.S. metallurgical coal exported to countries subject to the voluntary restraint agreements during the first 5 years of the program, the period from October 1, 1984, through September 30, 1989.

It is indeed time that we as a Nation begin to seek trade reciprocity of the type suggested by this legislation, not only in the area of our steel and coal trade, but for other commodities where direct linkages can be made.

LYME DISEASE DEMANDS NATIONAL ATTENTION

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues the importance of a quickly spreading infectious illness called Lyme disease. As an original cosponsor of the "Comprehensive Lyme Disease Act of 1989," and of "Lyme Disease Awareness Week," I hope to see bipartisan support for enhanced research into a cure.

The serious nature of this illness was first brought to my attention by a constituent of mine, Karen Forschner of Tolland, CT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate Karen for her persistence and hard work in the field of Lyme disease. Karen is the director of the Lyme Borreliosis Foundation in Tolland. The foundation serves as a national information and referral center for those who fear they are afflicted with the disease or those who would like to find out more about this illness. Karen's interest in Lyme disease was sparked after she contracted the disease while pregnant. Unfortunately, her baby developed severe disabilities as a result of Lyme disease. Karen now devotes her time to promoting public awareness and helping others afflicted with this problem.

Lyme, CT, the town where Lyme disease was first discovered in 1975, is in my district. But my concern does not stem from a purely parochial interest. Lyme disease has been reported in over two-thirds of the States in our country, and has even permeated the Halls of Congress. Our former colleague, Berkley Bedell, who represented Iowa's Sixth District for 12 years, contracted the disease while fishing in Virginia and was forced to retire early from Congress due to complications from the disease.

Lyme disease is transmitted by the deer tick. Early symptoms of the disease include a skin rash around the bite and flulike symptoms such as fever, headaches, body pains, and fatigue. About a month after being bitten by the infected tick, 20 percent of the patients suffer from weakness on one side of the face or dizziness and fainting, caused by the slowing of the heart rate. Arthritis also plagues many Lyme disease patients. In its most severe form, the disease is characterized by chronic fatigue, short-term memory loss, and numbness or shooting pain in the limbs.

Public awareness of the symptoms of the infected tick bite is extremely important. If diagnosed early, the disease appears treatable. That is why education is vital if we are to minimize the effects of this rapidly growing and painful disease. The Comprehensive Lyme Disease Act, offered by Representative HOCHBRUECKNER, would provide funding for research and treatment, allocated by the National Institutes of Health, as well as grants through the Centers for Disease Control to promote public education. The American people must know what to look for if they are to take precautions against Lyme disease.

Lyme disease is not just a Connecticut problem. Although our State has taken a lead in researching this disease, it has become a national problem which demands national attention. I urge my colleagues to learn all they can about this disease and to cosponsor Mr. HOCHBRUECKNER's bill.

CONGRATULATING THE SCOTTSBLUFF JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL BAND AND ITS DIRECTOR GEORGENE DIERS

HON. VIRGINIA SMITH

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Scottsbluff Junior High School Band and its director, Georgene Diers, of Scottsbluff, NE, on the band's selection as the winner of the Sousa Foundation's "Sudler Cup."

This prestigious award is given each year in recognition of outstanding excellence in concert performance by a junior high school band. It was awarded to only one junior high school band from the entire country this year. Only nine junior high bands in the entire Nation have received the award during the 5 years the program has been in operation.

This honor was extremely well deserved, and I congratulate the hardworking, talented, and bright young students who made it possible.

The reward reflects the value of Nebraska's educational system and Mrs. Georgene Diers, the band's director, deserves a great deal of credit and thanks for her efforts. She is an admired, respected, and genuinely well-liked teacher who has been inspiring youngsters in the Scottsbluff school system since 1948. Over the past 41 years, hundreds and hundreds of students have had the opportunity and privilege to learn from this remarkable woman.

It is clear that the education Nebraska students receive is good preparation for the challenges of the future. Nebraska students have consistently scored exceptionally high marks in college entrance examinations and have won top prizes, such as the "Sudler Cup," in national competitions. I have no doubt that the high quality and value of Nebraska's educational system is, in large part, due to teachers like Georgene Diers.

Teaching is one of the most challenging careers a young person can choose. I believe teachers have the most fundamental, important, and difficult jobs in our country. Georgene is an example of "the best."

Her efforts have contributed to making Scottsbluff Junior High School a leader in Nebraska, and the Nation, in the drive toward excellence in education. She has worked hard and succeeded in striving for raising academic standards and goals and setting higher expectations for her students.

I am very proud to claim her as my constituent and join her family, friends, students, and colleagues in wishing her the best of luck for many more successful and productive years in the Scottsbluff school system.

And I am privileged to boast of the achievement of the young people in the Scottsbluff Junior High School Band. They have my congratulations and admiration.

A TRIBUTE TO JAMES P. CAPITAN

HON. BILL SCHUETTE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. SCHUETTE. Mr. Speaker, it is with admiration and respect that I rise today to pay tribute to James P. Capitan, mayor of Owosso, MI. Jim has been named the "1989 Citizen of the Year" by the Owosso-Corunna Area Chamber of Commerce for his contributions to the community over a period of many years.

A native of Owosso, Jim graduated from Owosso High School in 1943 and attended Michigan State University. He joined his brother Alex in the family business which was founded in 1903. Alex has retired and now lives in Arizona. Jim has been married to his wife, Maxine, for 39 years and they have three children: Mrs. Joseph (Nancy) Gingras of Union City, MO; Tom of Ionia, MI, and Rich, who is a senior at Owosso High School. Jim's wife Maxine was the foster daughter of the late William A. Seegmiller, an Owosso attorney who served as mayor and postmaster of Owosso.

The mayor's first venture into politics was his election to the Shiawassee County Board of Supervisors in 1970. He was board chairman in 1973 and finance chairman in 1971, 1972, and 1974.

In 1980, Jim was appointed to fill a vacancy on the Owosso City Council and was elected mayor in 1983.

Jim and his family are members of Owosso's First Congregational Church where he was a member of the board of deacons and Maxine served for 20 years as the director of Christian education.

Jim is a member of the Owosso Masonic Lodge and has been active as a fundraiser for the Shiawassee United Way and the Shiawassee chapter of the American Red Cross.

I am proud of the work that Jim has done for the people of Owosso. I am pleased to call Jim a friend and to have had the pleasure of working with him. On behalf of the citizens of Shiawassee County who have benefited from his many years of public service, I want to extend my congratulations on this outstanding award.

"NATIONAL DUCKLING MONTH" RESOLUTION

HON. W.G. (BILL) HEFNER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to my colleague's attention a resolution I am introducing today to proclaim May "National Duckling Month."

Duckling is a centuries-old delicacy that is rising in popularity in the United States among all people, and not just ethnic groups. The U.S. duckling industry—which is nearly 100 years old—produces over 130 million pounds of duckling annually and generates over $176 milion in revenue. The industry employs over 1,000 U.S. citizens and contracts with over 250 family farms.

My colleagues may not be aware of it, but the U.S. duckling industry is now exporting its products by the thousands of tons to over 40 foreign countries—including the nations of the Far East—thereby helping to reduce our national trade deficit.

In addition to recognizing the industry's achievements, my resolution seeks to educate the consumer on the nutritional value of duckling, which is an excellent source of protein as well as being low in sodium and saturated fats.

Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage my colleagues to join me in this effort by cosponsoring "National Duckling Month."

TRIBUTE TO BLACK CHURCHES IN THE UNITED STATES

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I stand today during this month that was specifically designated as a time to honor African-American history, and black individuals, organizations, and institutions that have contributed to the development of American society, to pay tribute to the one group that embodies the dedication and drive of those who have contributed so much to African-American history and culture—the black churches of our country.

This month, we recognize the role of the black churches as the focal point for religious practice and social interaction as well as their role in stimulating the development of organizational experience, self-government, and leadership within the black community.

We recognize the contributions of the black church leaders in their ongoing campaign for civil and human rights: From the founders of the black churches in America, to the Reverend Oliver Brown whose lawsuit brought the historic Supreme Court decision in Brown versus Board of Education, outlawing segregation in public schools, and from the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., whose words and deeds stirred the conscience of a nation, to the thousands of black ministers across the Nation who continue to carry on the dreams of their forefathers.

This month, we join the many organizations around the country that are recognizing and honoring black churches and African-American history and culture. Let us take the extra time this month to pause and think about the many contributions of the black churches of America. We truly owe them a great deal. I ask the House to join me today in paving tribute to this special and treasured part of our American society.

LEGISLATION TO CLOSE LOOPHOLES IN FEDERAL TRANSPORTATION

HON. CURT WELDON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be joined by nine of my colleagues in introducing legislation which will close a loophole in Federal transportation law. I am amazed that there is no statute which prevents a railroad employee from leaving the scene of an accident.

The bill I am introducing today will prevent a railroad employee from leaving his post after an accident unless relieved by the proper authorities or unless the safety of the worker is jeopardized by remaining at the post.

I offered this bill last year, as H.R. 4067. It was incorporated into the Railroad Drug Abuse and Prevention Act of 1988, which was passed by the House. The Senate, however, failed to act on the bill before adjournment of the 100th Congress.

This is not a punitive measure. It does not increase the punishment for those who cause an accident. The bill, instead, is designed to better protect the rail traveler. Further, the bill could substantially increase rail safety. If railroad workers know that they cannot run from the scene of an accident, they may be less likely to use alcohol or drugs while at work.

Like many of my colleagues, I am a frequent rail traveler. This small amendment to Federal transportation policy will help improve the safety of a system on which so many Americans rely everyday. I hope that we can work quickly to make this important change in Federal transportation law.

RAISE THE MINIMUM WAGE TO $4.35

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced legislation to raise the minimum wage. The Congress must act quickly to raise the wage of the poorest paid workers. Full-time, year round minimum wage workers earn only $6,968 per year. Since the wage was last increased in 1981 inflation has eroded its purchasing power by over 30 percent. Increasing the wage would save millions of Americans from poverty while reinforcing the values of hard work and self-reliance that we so greatly value.

Inflation has had a particularly devastating effect on minimumn wage workers who support families. Currently the yearly earnings of a minimum wage worker with two children provide a standard of living more than 24 percent below the poverty line. Increasing the wage would help these families to pull themselves out of poverty.

The growth of low wage jobs across the country and in my home state of Wisconsin makes it particularly important that we raise the minimum wage. It is certainly true that our economy has expanded in the last few years and many new jobs have been created. But the fact remains that in Wisconsin since 1979 there has been a net loss of high wage jobs and a positive explosion in the numbers of low wage jobs.

An astonishing 73 percent of the increase in employment in Wisconsin from 1979 to 1988 was in the low wage sector of the economy. For instance, more than one-quarter of the increase in jobs was in the retail trade industry which paid an average of just $9,350 per year. How can anyone raise a family on this? It's impossible.

Given the enormous growth in low wage jobs it is particularly important that we raise the minimum wage. The key to U.S. economic success has always been the large U.S. middle class. Its purchasing power has stimulated increases in productivity and consumer demand. Unless we raise the minimum wage, the proliferation of low wage jobs will continue and the wages of middle class Americans could be undercut. Raising the minimum wage can help guarantee a bright economic future for all Americans.

Just over 50 years ago Franklin Roosevelt asked the Congress to enact our first minimum wage laws. In his message to Congress Roosevelt said "Our Nation so richly endowed with natural resources and with a capable and industrious population should be able to devise ways of insuring to all our able-bodied working men and women a fair day's pay for a fair day's work." This is no less true today than it was 50 years ago. We must raise the minimum wage.

HONORING COAST GUARD PETTY OFFICER KELLY M. MOGK

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Aviation Survivalman Third Class Kelly M. Mogk for her citation for heroic achievement as a rescue swimmer aboard H-65 helicopter 6515 on the morning of January 3, 1989.

Kelly was born June 7, 1966 in Minneapolis, MN. She graduated from high school in 1984 before entering the Coast Guard. In October 1986 she completed emergency medical technician training, thereby becoming fully qualified for all rescue swimmer duties. She had the distinction of being the first woman graduate from the Navy's rescue swimmer school in Pensacola, FL.

Mr. Speaker, Kelly Mogk on January 3, 1989 committed a truly heroic act. While serving as a rescue swimmer aboard H-65 helicopter 6515, an urgent distress call was received from an F-4 Phantom which had just ditched 35 miles west of Tillamook Bay. The pilot and navigator had ejected.

After battling violent winds and breaking waves, Petty Officer Mogk eventually reached the downed pilot. With the pilot barely conscious, suffering compound fractures of both legs, a broken shoulder, and severe hypothermia, Petty Officer Mogk freed the pilot from his entanglement.

While the wounded pilot was taken out of danger and flown to the nearest hospital, Petty Officer Mogk was left waiting in the sea for the next available helicopter. She was returned to Astonia where she was treated for exhaustion and hypothermia.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend Petty Officer Mogk for her courage, judgment, and devotion to her duty. She is just a fine example of the Coast Guard's motto Sempre Paritos which means "always ready." Without her being "always ready," those downed airmen may not have survived to continue to serve their country. Kelly Mogk has portrayed the dedication and excellence that has been continuously exhibited by the U.S. Coast Guard.

LEGISLATION PROHIBITING OPEN ALCOHOL CONTAINERS IN VEHICLES

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to encourage States to take a stronger stand against drunk driving. As you may know, 24,000 people are losing their lives to drunk driving each year. As the most widely abused drug in America, alcohol continues to kill an average of 65 people per day on our streets and highways. That is why I feel such an urgency about promoting effective countermeasures to deal with the problem.

Do you know that it is possible to drive—following a reasonably direct route—from the New Hampshire-Canadian border south to Pensacola, FL, and then west to Reno, NV—approximately 4,000 miles, drinking all the way?

In 15 States you can actually drink while driving without violating the law. In 23 States passengers can drink in the car. Allowing open containers in automobiles is senseless.

This is why I am introducing legislation to require States to enact laws prohibiting open alcohol containers in vehicles. Similar to the law setting 21 as the legal age for purchasing alcohol, this bill would withhold 5 percent of the State's highway funds if it does not comply.

Sure withholding State highway moneys is a serious penalty, but drunk driving is a serious nationwide problem; a problem that must be addressed now.

WELCOME TO 40 NEW U.S. CITIZENS

HON. TOM SAWYER

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to extend a warm welcome to 40 residents of my district who took the oath of allegiance as U.S. citizens on November 18, 1988, in Akron, OH.

These 40 new Americans have come from Europe, Asia, South America, Canada, India, and the Middle East. All enrich our Nation with the cultures and traditions from which they came. I would like to include their names in this RECORD so that my colleagues can join me in offering our congratulations to each of them on this special occasion:

Abraham Anthony Boom, Jr., Evangelos Kamvouris, Maria Kamvouris, Rudy Caezar Rio, Wonna Sehzue, Ythamar Grose, Thongsouk Vilaivong, Esmail Hosseinarab, Lorraine Ann Blackman, Stavros Theophilos Constantinou, Abdelghani Fares, Xuan-Mai Thi Tran, Sumana Montri Sarkar, Douglas Lamont Leavitt, Ling Quang, Yan Lu Chuang, Oanh Yen Truong, Jean Ann Parsons, Sun Pong Kim, Aurelia Gordon, Yeou-Cheng Suen, Hamedah Saleh Yahia, Saleh Ahmed Yahia, Urte Kurlich, Paul Mascarin, Mohammed Suietman Natour, Rola Mansour Muakkassa, Ziad Hikmat Najib, Nathan Ida, Vera Ida, Grace Feng Wang, Donald Leo Tri in behalf of Jenny Irene Tri, Nickolas Peter Neckar, Cveta Minev, Alexander Emil Minev in behalf of Julia Renee Ninev, Korn Sriphan, Satkari Jash, Eugene and Linda Rohrbough in behalf of Zachary William Rohrbough, Dale and Mary Jean Leonhardt in behalf of Don-Tomis Leonhardt.

There are few in this world who are able to choose the Nation to which they will pledge their allegiance, yet these individuals have chosen to become citizens of the United States of America. As a nation, the United States has always drawn its greatest strengths from the many diverse backgrounds and traditions of its people, and I am sure that these new citizens will add to the strength and prosperity of the Nation we all share.

A TRIBUTE TO UKRAINIAN INDEPENDENCE

HON. JIM SAXTON

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, last month, Ukrainian-Americans celebrated the 71st anniversary of the proclamation of Ukrainian independence. It is indeed an honor for me to pay tribute to the unswerving spirit of the Ukrainian people. I would like to take this opportunity both to plead support for the Ukraine and its peoples and to encourage the Soviet leadership to relax its iron fist and grant individual's rights to freedom of religion and cultural practices.

The history of Ukrainian cultural suppression has been brutal. In an effort to centralize all aspects of Soviet life, Josef Stalin, outlawed Byzantine-rite Ukrainian Catholics, and violently ordered the Ukrainians to merge their culture under the umbrella of the forcefully created Soviet life.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, life in the Ukraine has gone through many cycles of oppression. The American people do not forget the notorious famine and purges and other episodes of misrule during the reigns of Josef Stalin and his successors. Despite this subjugation, the dream for freedom of the men and women of the Ukraine has demonstrated its unshaken determination to survive. It has lived through seven decades of domination.

The marking of the Ukrainian 70th anniversary should energize all in encouraging the Bush administration to address freedom and amnesty issues with the Soviet Government. If the Soviet Union is indeed genuine in its efforts of glasnost and perestroika, then, I believe the individual's right to freedom of culture and religion must undeniably be observed.

DR. DEWAYNE WHITTINGTON: AN INSPIRATION

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, Congress has always recognized the value of education in America. With this in mind, I rise today to honor one of the great educators from Maryland's First District, Dr. Harrison DeWayne Whittington. Dr. Whittington is superintendent for Somerset County schools, and the first black superintendent on Maryland's Eastern Shore. He is an inspiration to all of the students in the county and to all of us who appreciate dedication to public service.

Known by family and friends as a modest man, Dr. Whittington doesn't boast about his accomplishments, but lives by his aunt's advice: "Let the works I do speak for me." His works speak loudly. He has led or served on 29 education-related committees and 45 community organizations, while still finding time to be active in the Shiloh United Methodist Church. He has received 39 honors and awards, including Community Leader of America, Personalities of the South, and the Martin Luther King Achievement Award.

Dr. Whittington's dedication to community service is exemplified by his efforts with Shore Up!, Inc. Shore Up! is a community action agency involved in service projects such as the Head Start Program, full assistance for low-income families, employment, and food distribution. In his 15 years with this organization, Dr. Whittington has been a powerful advocate for children and youth. He was instrumental in getting facilities for the food assistance program, and for distributing this food to some 3,500 Somerset County residents. As a member of the training and employment advisory council, he has used his business knowledge to help participants find and keep jobs, jobs that might never have been found without his help.

But for all of these accomplishments, Dr. Whittington is most known as an educator. He has served as title 1 coordinator, director of Federal programs, coordinator of special programs and supervisor supporting services, and assistant superintendent for Somerset County Schools. In 1974, he was coordinator of human relations for the Maryland State Department of Education. Now he has added to his credentials by being named superintendent of Somerset County Schools.

Dr. Whittington is an inspiration for all of us, but especially to our Nation's youth. He was not born with the advantages that many of us can claim. His mother died when he was only 9 days old. He was raised by his grandparents. Education was something he had to work hard to obtain. Throughout high school he served as a custodian in the Somerset County school system, the same system he now leads. He worked his way through Morgan State University, and later earned his master's degree in education from Pennsylvania State University. Dr. Whittington has proven that vision and a commitment to hard work can overcome some of life's most formidable obstacles.

Mr. Speaker, I proudly salute Dr. Whittington. He could not point to a better example for our Nation's youth. His accomplishments will continue to grow, and our educational system and communities will continue to benefit from his work.

ESTONIA'S INDEPENDENCE

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, February 24, 1989, marks the 71st anniversary of the proclamation of the independence of Estonia.

Estonia's independence was hard won. In the years that followed their 1918 proclamation, the people of Estonia had to fight off the occupations of both Germany and Russia. But the Estonian love of freedom prevailed, and the Estonian Constitution of 1920 is testimony to the Estonian commitment to human rights and the dignity of the individual.

Catastrophically, tragedy struck Estonia's people in 1940 when Estonia, along with Lithuania and Latvia, were forcibly incorporated into the Soviet Union. A reign of terror followed in which an estimated 60,000 Estonians were arrested, imprisoned, and then herded into freight cars and sent to the far reaches of the Soviet Union. Next, the people of Estonia endured what amounted to martial law for 3 years under the Nazis. In 1944, the Soviets reoccupied Estonia.

The people of Estonia have suffered greatly but they have not and will not give up hope for their homeland, nor will they give up their culture and their language. The United States has never recognized the Soviet occupation of Estonia. We applaud the people of Estonia for their unwavering commitment to freedom and the dignity of each individual.

Listening to the claims of glasnost, the people of Estonian are demandng greater cultural and national autonomy. Glasnost has brought some hope to all of those who live under the yoke of Soviet oppression. Here in this country we share in that hope for a better life for the people of Estonia hoping that glasnost is much more than rhetoric.

Mr. Speaker, I join Connecticut's Estonian Society in their observance of the 71st anniversary of the proclamation of independence of Estonia. I believe all of us in this Chamber hope, along with free people across the world, that someday soon, the people of Estonia will once again be free.

TRIBUTE TO BEN AND DOTTY KAUFMAN

HON. EDWARD F. FEIGHAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, on February 20, Ben and Dotty Kaufman of Cleveland, OH, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate them on reaching this milestone.

Ben and Dotty are native Clevelanders, one from the southeast side and one from Cleveland Heights. Just after World War II, the Kaufmans met and married. Together, they decided to settle on Cleveland's eastside and raise their family.

In 1951, Ben took control of the Brothers Printing Co. What started as a small "Ma and Pa" operation has blossomed into one of the most respected businesses in the area. Ben put to use his background in printing as Dotty sharpened her secretarial/bookkeeping talents. Many a late night was spent getting the new business on its feet. Despite their success and passing years, one can still find Ben working well past midnight.

Over the years, Mr. and Mrs. Kaufman have given so much back to their community. Through 50-plus years with organizations such as the International Typographical Union, Ben has won the respect of his colleagues. In addition, Ben was recognized as Mason of the Year for the Forest City Masonic Lodge and Man of the Year for the Heights Jewish Center Synagogue. Mrs. Kaufman chairs the Heights area Red Cross and is a member of B'nai B'rith.

Perhaps their most notable achievement is the terrific family that they have raised. Ben and Dotty instilled the value of a college education in each of their four children; Rosean, Laura, Jay, and David. All four graduated from Ashland College.

Ben and Dotty serve as a shining example through their deep love, strength, and sense of family. Their 50 years of marriage give us all a little more hope and reassurance that it can be done. Congratulations, 50 years and still going strong.

ESTONIAN INDEPENDENCE: MICHIGAN ESTONIAN COMMUNITY KEEPS THE FLAME OF HOPE ALIVE

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of my colleagues to a celebration of hope and freedom, the 71st anniversary of the proclamation of Estonian independence.

On February 24, the Estonian community of Detroit and Michigan will mark this historic occasion with a church-service program in Farmington Hills, MI.

The winds of change are blowing in the Baltic. Freedom is in the air. In recent months, the Baltic Republic of Estonia reaffirmed its recent assertion that it has the right to veto Soviet law. This clearly underscores its intention to seek greater autonomy from Moscow. The Estonian Supreme Soviet also adopted an amendment to the constitution declaring Estonian the official language of the Republic.

I commend the determination of the Estonian people in their struggle for greater independence to include cultural and religious freedom. Estonia has led the way in calling for more political and economic autonomy for the three Baltic Republics. We all remember that the Baltic Republics, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania had but a brief moment in the light of freedom. Their independence between the world wars was brutally ended when the Soviet Union annexed those countries in 1940. The Estonian people have never abandoned their struggle to regain that lost liberty.

I want to commend the Estonian community of Detroit and Michigan for keeping the flame of hope alive. They never forgot the sufferings and the aspirations of their friends and relatives in that closed police state. To a large degree, the progress that is now being made in winning greater freedoms for the Estonian people is due to the support of the Michigan Estonian community and its commitment to liberty for all people.

I urge all of my colleagues in the Congress, as well as the administration, to keep up the pressure for greater freedoms in the Soviet Union. We must support the legitimate nationalistic aspirations of the Estonian people.

FAMILY LIVING WAGE ACT OF 1989

HON. THOMAS E. PETRI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, February 23, 1989

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Family Living Wage Act of 1989.

The Family Living Wage Act would increase the earned income tax credit [EITC] and vary it by family size. Its objectives are to supplement wages according to need, as determined by family size, to help people support families by working rather than on welfare, and in particular to help with the costs of child care, which are heaviest for preschool children.

Under current law, low-wage workers with children will receive, in 1991, a maximum earned income credit of about $1,000 per year which can be added to their regular paychecks as "reverse withholding" if they don't have enough tax liability against which to take it. As their incomes rise from $11,000 to $21,000, the credit phases down to zero.

Starting in 1991, the Family Wage Act would provide workers at or near the minimum wage a base credit of $1,050 per year plus $700 per preschool child and $350 per school age child, for up to four children. The maximum credit, for a family with four preschool children would be $3,850 per year which is equivalent to an extra hourly wage of $2.08. A low-wage worker with two preschoolers would receive $2,450, equivalent to a wage of $1.32. These amounts are fully indexed to inflation.

As family income rises above $8,000 per year, the credit phases down gradually until a minimum credit of $200 per preschooler and $100 per school-age child is reached at incomes in the midtwenties, depending on family configuration. This minimum benefit applies to all middle-class families with incomes up to $40,000, after which it phases out by $45,000.

Although the Family Living Wage Act repeals the current dependent care credit [DCC], its minimum EITC benefits actually cost slightly more than providing the DCC for middle-class families in the relevant income range. The EITC just spreads the money fairly across all these families, rather than giving all of it to the minority of families that pay others for child care. Under the bill, all the following types of middle-class families will be better off: Those who forgo income in order to provide child care themselves, those who use relatives or other unpaid sources of care, those who pay small amounts for care, and some who pay substantial amounts for care but have large families. A minority of families will be somewhat worse off but still receive significant benefits.

The bill meets all the basic tests of a sound approach to helping families care for children. First, all the money spent is given directly to parents. None is wasted on bureaucracy. Second, it allow the parents to decide what kind of care their children will receive, not anyone else. Third, it concentrates the available help at the low end of the income scale. Fourth, it provides equal amounts of help to all families with any given set of characteristics.

Finally, it does not discriminate against people who care for their own children in favor of dual earner couples and others who pay other people to care for their children. Those who care for their own children forgo income to do so, work just as hard as those who work outside the home, and often make the greatest economic sacrifices. Any program to help people with children that discriminates against those who work in the home denies the value of that work and is fundamentally unfair. Since the current dependent care credit is not only unfair in this way but also highly regressive—most of its benefits go to the highest income families, it is far better policy to eliminate it and fold its cost into the EITC as is done by the Family Living Wage Act.

Of course, the bill can help families with any of the costs associated with having children, not just the need to look after them, and its benefits are not limited just to families with preschoolers, for whom the child care need is greatest. By directly supplementing the wages of low-income workers with children, it achieves the broader objective of providing general help to these families based on economic need as determined by family size. It thereby achieves the same objective as an increase in the minimum wage but does it in a far better and more targeted way, while avoiding the job losses and inflation associated with minimum wage increases. In particular, it helps millions of family heads already earning more than $4.65 per hour or any other level to which the minimum wage might be raised. A minimum wage boost, by contrast, helps mainly young, single, entry level workers who still manage to find jobs. It is a far cruder tool.

The child care issue and the minimum wage issue are both concerned with the same basic objective, helping low-income working families with children. By achieving that objective with direct wage supplements geared to family configuration as provided in the Family Living Wage Act, we also achieve another goal—helping low skilled family heads earn more working than they would receive on welfare, and thereby helping them get into the work force. This is welfare reform, round II. It advances the principle that one's basic income should be what he or she can earn working, and then if society determines that more is needed, society should supplement those earnings.

By enabling some people to move off welfare into the work force, the bill should help us achieve significant savings in welfare costs. Exclusive of any such savings, the bill's net cost is projected at about $3 billion per year, which will be scored for budget purposes as starting mostly in fiscal year 1982. The overall cost of the EITC will move up from about $6.3 billion under current law to about $13.3 billion, with $4 billion of the increase paid for by the repeal of the dependent care credit. Of the $4 billion saved from the dependent care credit, about $2 billion is used to provide the minimum EITC benefits for middle-class families.

While welfare savings should lower the real cost of the Family Living Wage Act far below $3 billion, the cost of alternative child care oriented proposals tends to be about $2.5 billion and the real Federal budget cost of raising the minimum wage to $4.65 is projected by the Council of Economic Advisers at $2 to $6 billion. Clearly the bill is a cost-effective approach to addressing a number of needs in one package.

Mr. Speaker, at this point in the RECORD I would like to insert a copy of the bill and a summary of the Family Living Wage Act:

H.R. 1104

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Family Living Wage Act".

SEC. 2. INCREASE IN EARNED INCOME TAX CREDIT.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to earned income tax credit) are amended to read as follows:

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an eligible individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle for the taxable year an amount equal to the credit percentage of so much of the earned income for the taxable year as does not exceed $7,000.

"(2) LIMITATION.—The amount of the credit allowable to a taxpayer under this subsection for any taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the credit percentage of $7,000, over

"(B) the phaseout percentage of so much of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeds $8,000.

"(b) PERCENTAGES.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) CREDIT PERCENTAGE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The credit percentage is the percentage equal to the sum of—

"(i) 15 percent,

"(ii) 5 percent for each school age qualifying child, plus

"(iii) 10 percent for each preschool age qualifying child.

"(B) NOT MORE THAN 4 CHILDREN TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—Not more than 4 children shall be taken into account under subparagraph (A), and preschool age qualifying children shall be taken into account before any other children are taken into account.

"(2) PHASEOUT PERCENTAGE.—

"(A) PHASEDOWN TO MINIMUM BENEFIT.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The phaseout percentage is the percentage determined in accordance with the following table:

"If the combination of qualifying children taken into account under paragraph (1) is—	The phaseout percentage is—
1 S	10
2 S, or 1 P	11
3 S, or 1 S and 1 P	12
4 S, or 2 S and 1 P, or 2 P	13
3 S and 1 P, or 1 S and 2 P	14
2 S and 2 P, or 3 P	15
1 S and 3 P	16
4 P	17.

"(i) SYMBOLS USED IN TABLE.—For purposes of clause (i)—

"(I) S means school age qualifying child, and

"(II) P means preschool age qualifying child.

"(B) MINIMUM BENEFIT FOR TAXPAYERS WITH INCOMES BELOW $40,000.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C), subparagraph (A) shall not apply so as to reduce the credit allowed by this section to a taxpayer to less than the minimum benefit determined in accordance with the following table:

"If the phaseout percentage applicable to the taxpayer is—	The minimum benefit is—
10	$100
11	200
12	300
13	400
14	500
15	600
16	700

"(C) PHASEOUT OF MINIMUM BENEFIT.—If the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year exceeds $40,000, the minimum benefit determined under subparagraph (B) shall be reduced by 15 percent of such excess.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR INDIVIDUALS WHOSE ONLY CHILDREN HAVE ATTAINED AGE 16.—For purposes of this section, in the case of an individual who is an eligible individual solely by reason of children each of whom has attained age 16 as of the close of the taxable year—

"(A) the credit percentage shall be 14 percent,

"(B) the phaseout percentage shall be 10 percent,

"(C) '$11,000' shall be substituted for '$8,000' in subsection (a)(2)(B), and

"(D) subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (2) shall not apply."

(b) QUALIFYING CHILD, ETC., DEFINED.—Subsection (c) of section 32 of such Code is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) QUALIFYING CHILD.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualifying child' means any child (within the meaning of section 151(c)(3)) of the eligible individual if—

"(i) such individual is entitled to a deduction under section 151 for such child or would be so entitled but for paragraph (2) or (4) of section 152(e), and

"(ii) such child has the same principal place of abode as such individual for more than one-half of the taxable year.

"(B) PRESCHOOL AGE QUALIFYING CHILD.—The term 'preschool age qualifying child' means any qualifying child who has not attained age 6 as of the close of the taxable year.

"(C) SCHOOL AGE QUALIFYING CHILD.—The term 'school age qualifying child' means any qualifying child who has attained age 6 but not age 16 as of the close of the taxable year."

(c) ADVANCE PAYMENT PROVISIONS.—

(1) Subsection (b) of section 3507 of such Code is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting ", and", and by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) states the number and ages of qualifying children (as defined in section 32(c)(3)) of the employee for the taxable year."

(2) Paragraph (2) of section 3507(c) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "14 percent" in subparagraphs (B)(i) and (C)(i) and inserting "the credit percentage",

(B) by striking "subsection (b)" in subparagraph (B)(ii) and inserting "subsection (a)(2)", and

(C) by adding at the end the following new sentence: "For purposes of this paragraph, the credit percentage shall be determined under section 32(b) on the basis of the number and ages of qualifying children specified in the earned income eligibility certificate and the determination of the amounts referred to in subparagraph (B)(ii) shall be made on the basis of the number and ages of qualifying children so specified."

(3) Clause (i) of section 3507(e)(3)(A) of such Code is amended by inserting before ", or" the following: "(or changing the percentages applicable to the employee under section 32(b) for the taxable year)".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (2) of section 32(f) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "subsection (b)" each place it appears in subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting "subsection (a)(2)", and

(B) by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Separate tables shall be prescribed for each of the phaseout percentages specified in the table contained in subsection (b)(2)(A)(i)."

(2) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 32(i) of such Code are amended to read as follows:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after 1991, each amount referred to in paragraph (2) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(A) such amount, multiplied by

"(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins by substituting '1990' for '1987' in subparagraph (B) thereof.

"(2) AMOUNTS.—The amounts referred to in this paragraph are—

"(A) the credit percentages used for purposes of subsection (a),

"(B) the $8,000 amount contained in subsection (a)(2)(B) and the $11,000 amount contained in subsection (b)(3), and

SEC. 3. DEPENDENT CARE CREDIT LIMITED TO HANDICAPPED DEPENDENTS AND SPOUSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 21(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining qualifying individual and employment-related expenses) is amended by striking subparagraph (A), by redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively, and by adding at the end the following new sentence: "In the case of an individual described in subparagraph (A) who has not attained age 15 as of the close of the taxable year, such individual may be treated as a qualifying individual for purposes of this section only if the taxpayer elects not to treat such individual as a qualifying child under section 32 for such year."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subparagraph (B) of section 21(b)(2) of such Code is amended by striking "care of—" and all that follows and inserting "care of a qualifying individual who regularly spends at least 8 hours each day in the taxpayer's household."

(2) Paragraph (2) of section 21(d) of such Code is amended by striking "subsection (b)(1)(C)" and inserting "subsection (b)(1)(B)".

(3) Paragraph (5) of section 21(e) of such Code is amended—

(A) By striking "is under the age of 13 or" in subparagraph (B), and

(B) By striking "subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b)(1) (whichever is appropriate)" and inserting "subsection (b)(1)(A)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 4. ELIMINATION OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN TREATMENT OF EARNED INCOME CREDIT IN DETERMINING CERTAIN WELFARE BENEFITS.

Paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of section 402(c) of the Family Support Act of 1988 are repealed.

FAMILY LIVING WAGE ACT

Summary: Restructure existing earned income tax credit (EITC) as follows:

In 1991, for families with children, provide refundable credit against up to $7000 of annual earned income at percentage rates differentiated by family size as follows: base credit—15% ($1050 maximum base); each pre-school child (age 0 to 5)—extra 10% (extra $700 maximum); each school-age child (6 to 15)—extra 5% (extra $350 maximum).

Four child limit; maximum benefit for family with 4 preschool children is $3850 ($1050 base plus $700 for each child).

Reduce credit by 10% (for lowest credit level) to 17% (for highest credit level) of the amount of total income that exceeds $8000.

Minimum credit of $200 per pre-school child and $100 per school-age child extends from mid-twenties up to $40,000 income, then phases out at 15%.

Repeal current dependent care credit (which is highly regressive and unfair to people who forgo outside income in order to work in the home).

Index phase-in percentages and phase-out starting point for inflation.

People whose only children are over 15 receive only current law EITC.

Cost: $3 billion, starting in FY '92.

Minimum benefit plateau accounts for $2 billion, and costs about the same as retaining the dependent care credit for those families, but speads that money fairly across all families in the relevant income range, not just the minority currently eligible for the dependent care credit.

Purposes: Increase work incentives for welfare families according to the need for incentives, as determined by family size and welfare payment size.

Achieve the same objective as minimum wage increases (to help low skilled workers support families) directly and efficiently, targetting help to those who need it in proportion to their need, including millions already earning more than a $4.65 minimum (reached under H.R. 2 in 1992), without the inflation and job losses associated with minimum wage hikes.

In particular, help families with the costs of child care (heaviest for preschool children), independently of whether others are paid to provide care or one family member forgoes income in order to provide care, and concentrating that help at the lowest income levels while retaining maximum parental freedom to make appropriate arrangements for care.
